The members of our merchant marine have been great in the valorous struggle for freedom they have made and will continue to carry on until the last man has been returned from his fighting post. Not a ship has failed to sail and these civilians, who have given their all for the ideals of our Nation, have been the necessary element in the successful conduct of the war. It is well to remember that the millions of tons of shipping of which we boast would be but empty hulls in turbulent waters if there were not a healthy, able, and willing merchant marine to man the vessels and direct their course.

The declaration of policy of Congress, set forth in the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, reads:

> It is necessary for the national defense and development of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine * * * composed of the best-equipped, safest, and most suitable types of vessels, constructed in the United States and manned with a trained and efficient citizen personnel. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to foster the development and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine.

The United States Maritime Commission and War Shipping Administration have followed the mandate of this congressional policy and have striven zealously to accomplish the objective therein contained. The President, speaking of the merchant seamen, stated last September:

> They are making an all-out effort and a vital contribution to the preservation of our freedom. We—and all other liberty-loving people of the world—are deeply indebted to them for their devotion and heroism.

The millions of shipyard workers, their executives and associates, have all performed their duties, day after day, in the American way for our American triumph on the seas.

The congratulations of a grateful nation is due the maritime industry on this day while we pause in our deliberation to pay tribute to the more than 5,000 seamen who have died in the service of their country and to be mindful of the service for mankind being rendered by those who live by the sea.

The School-Milk Program

REMARKS

OF

HON. REID F. MURRAY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the following official table is from table 601, page 519, of the 1943 agricultural statistics:

TABLE 601.—Quantities distributed and amount of payments made by the Food Distribution Administration under the relief-mi' and school-milk programs, fiscal year ended June 30, 1942, and totals for earlier years

State	School milk
	Quantity	Cost
	Quarts
Arizona	13,054	$4,814
Colorado	33,852	2,280
Illinois	1,531,095	71,786
Iowa	233,536	12,923
Kansas	2,579	128
Maine	54,669	3,723
Massachusetts	1,488,652	105,836
Michigan	26,895	1,508
Minnesota	143,528	8,069
Missouri	418,908	22,912
Nebraska	37,097	1,908
New Hampshire	191,321	12,884
New York	18,385,059	1,136,164
North Carolina	1,569	130
North Dakota	24,312	1,185
Ohio	28,737	2,005
Texas	773	50
Vermont	23,156	1,344
Wisconsin	429,765	23,171
District of Columbia	881,094	60,921
Total, 1941-42	24,029,651	1,473,801
1940-41	12,541,401	592,103
1939-40	25,556	756

You will note the following facts revealed by this official report:

First. That one State, New York, receives over 75 percent of the milk and over 75 percent of the funds appropriated from Federal funds for this project.

Second. That no one of the States of the United States with low per-capita incomes were included in the project.

Third. That about 90 percent of the expenditures went to three States, Illinois, New York, and Massachusetts.

Fourth. That if the present time table is used and the present formula is followed the program will eventually be harmed. To be permanent, any Federal program must go straight across the board, otherwise accusations of being Santa Claus to the few and Shylock to the many will be made.

Fifth. That Washington, D. C., where there has been twice the national per-capita income, participates, though the States with low income are not included.

The foster homes of our country, with an enrollment of 242,000 in 2,240 homes, are entitled to first consideration when preparing a program for milk or general food distribution. If allocated on the basis of enrollment, fairness would be insured. No thoughtful person could object to this method of distribution. No vote bribing charges could be made, as there are not votes to be obtained.

There is another angle of this school-milk problem and that is the skim milk with a little chocolate added which when sold is being distributed at 20 cents per quart. These children are entitled to natural milk with the vitamin A in it, and the school-milk program should not be used as a method of disposing of excess skim milk after the fat has been removed from the milk. It is hoped that the base will be broadened if the program is continued.

Maritime Progress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, on this National Maritime Day 1944, the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the day when the Savannah crossed the Atlantic Ocean, it behooves us to take stock of the present and individually as well as collectively to plan for the future.

Certain data compiled by the Maritime Commission and War Shipping Administration is illuminating. It is as follows:

Dead-weight tonnage of American merchant marine end of 1941	11,000,000
Dead-weight tonnage built Jan. 1, 1942, to Apr. 1, 1944	31,444,300
Number of ships built Jan. 1, 1942, to Apr. 1, 1944	3,052
Number of workers in Maritime Commission yards	616,000
Number of ships under control of War Shipping Administration	8,100
Number of men employed aboard ships (add 10 percent shore reserve)	130,000
Long tons of cargo moved out of the United States in 1943	62,000,000

I submit also other material worth our study. It is the Shipping Outlook, an editorial appearing in the New York Journal of Commerce on April 4, 1944, written by Stanley Ferguson.

THE SHIPPING OUTLOOK

(By Stanley Ferguson)

A MATTER OF DISCRIMINATION?

No matter from what angle the subject is approached, it is difficult to avoid the impression that the shipping industry is once again becoming the victim of political discrimination in Washington.

Between 1941 and the end of last year corporate earnings generally increased by more than 40 percent while those of railroads and other domestic transportation groups increased more than 100 percent. During the same period earnings of ship operators declined approximately 66 percent. Twenty-eight representative shipping lines earning $149,000,000 before taxes and $114,000,000 after them, in 1941, earned last year $56,000,000 and then had $32,000,000 left after making deductions for estimated taxes. If this trend continues the financial resources of the shipping industry will be skimpy indeed by the time the war ends.

It is difficult to find a rational explanation for the disparity in the earnings of these different industries. Corporate and railroad earnings went up because the volume of business expanded greatly in that period. So, however, did the volume of business handled by ship operators. While it is true that sinkings and requisitioning have cut the commercial earning power of privately owned fleets, it is also true that most lines are now handling far more ships than they ever handled before. As general or time charter agents for the War Shipping Administration, private operators are handling nearly twice as many Liberty ships alone than there were vessels in our pre-war fleet, more ships all told than those of all the rest of our allies combined. There was never a time when the shipping community had as much work to do, or when its experience and resources were more urgently required to do it. Why, then, the sharp decline in earnings?

For more than 2 years the question of ship values and earnings have been passed around Washington from agency to agency and from committee to committee without once arriving in any office where anybody will accept full responsibility for it. W. S. A. wanted to adopt a certain scale of values, but the Comptroller General declared it was too high. The Comptroller did not have the authority to disallow payments and therefore he could not take the responsibility for it, but merely complained to Congress. W. S. A. felt it did have the authority, but hesitated to flout the Comptroller and entered into inconclusive negotiations with him instead. Three eminent judges were finally called in by the President to advise on the matter, but there is still no agreement on their own conclusions and the trend of earnings is still downward.

Surely it is time for Congress to look into the matter and find out what is wrong. If it is the law, the law should be changed. If it is a question of authority, the authority should be clarified. The Maritime Commission is already wondering why operators are unwilling to commit themselves to buy new ships. The situation will have to be cleared up soon and responsibility for it established if operators themselves are to be assured they will actually have anything with which to buy them.

Our production from and including 1936, and to and including March 1944, is as phenomenal, and is as follows:

	Number of vessels	Dead-weight tonnage
1936	9	107,938
1937	18	194,788
1938	25	289,765
1939	28	341,219
1940	55	641,656
1941	99	1,137,163
1942	746	8,089,732
1943	1,896	19,238,626
1944:[1]
January	124	1,204,730
February	134	1,372,864
March	152	1,538,357
Total, 1936–44	3,280	34,156,238

[1] Production decline in early 1944 reflects conversion of high production yards to Victory ships and military types.

Our record is not phenomenal alone in ships, but also in our distribution of seamen whose estimated record has been beyond the power of language to describe. The following estimate as of April 25, 1944, tells the story:

Estimated distribution by States of seamen in the United States merchant marine, or engaged in seafaring activities (based on selective-service files totaling 140,000 registrants reporting such skills)

I include in my extension of remarks the following statement by Rear Admiral Emory S. Land (C. C.), United States Navy, retired, Chairman, United States Maritime Commission and War Shipping Administrator:

National Maritime Day, May 22, takes on a significance this year beyond the commemoration of the sailing from the port of Savannah on May 22, 1819, of the Savannah, the first vessel with steam power to cross the Atlantic.

This year our country is awake to what our merchant ships are doing in the United Nations war effort. Thousands of men and women, particularly in the area between the Allegheny and Rocky Mountains, who heretofore had little, if any, knowledge of the merchant marine, now have a close association with this great arm of our national defense. This present national-defense arm in normal times can play a most important part in our national economic life.

This close association has arisen from the extent to which different equipment, fittings and part of the vast fleet of vessels which we have built and are building have been manufactured and fabricated throughout the entire Nation. In addition it has arisen from the knowledge gleaned from the men from these areas serving on our merchant vessels on all seven seas, and the men of our armed forces who are traveling to far-flung battlefields on these ships—perhaps the very ships on which some of the equipment these men and women had a part in manufacturing is installed.

Consequently, the United States, as a Nation, is far more interested in its merchant marine than it has been since the days of the clipper ships which carried such a large portion of the Nation's foreign commerce and made such a wonderful reputation for speed and service.

Following out the declaration of policy regarding the maintaining of an adequate merchant marine made by Congress in the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, it is the duty of each and every one of us to work to maintain, and even intensify the interest that exists today in the merchant marine, so that never again will the country be without an adequate fleet of merchant vessels; first, to serve as auxiliaries to our armed forces in case of emergency such as exists at the present time; and, second, sufficient to carry all of our domestic water-borne commerce and a substantial portion of our foreign water-borne commerce.

We, however, must not lose sight of the fact that our merchant vessels are but the tools which we use to carry to the buyers the merchandise that we sell, and to bring home for our own use those raw products and finished goods which we either must obtain abroad, or which we can find abroad in a quantity that will enable us to improve our living conditions.

Under normal circumstances, we produce in this country approximately 10 percent in excess of the needs of our own people. If that excess production is kept here, it tends to force the prices down with a consequent reduction in pay rolls and a lowering of living standards. If we sell that excess abroad, we can maintain our living standards, and in exchange for what we ship abroad we can bring home the products of other countries that will still further improve our living standards.

To maintain the adequate merchant marine we must develop and expand our waterborne commerce. To maintain that adequate merchant marine at the lowest possible cost to the country, we must see that American-flag ships sail full and down.

National Maritime Day, 1944

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I include the proclamation of the President of the United States of America declaring this day to be National Maritime Day, 1944:

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA—A PROCLAMATION

Whereas the Congress by a joint resolution approved May 20, 1933 (48 Stat. 73), designated May 22 of each year as National Maritime Day, in commemoration of the sailing from Savannah Ga., on May 22, 1819, of the Savannah, the first steam-propelled vessel to cross the Atlantic, and requested the President to issue annually a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe that day; and

Whereas the Congress, in the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, approved June 29, 1936 (49 Stat. 1985), has declared it to be the policy of the United States to foster and encourage the development and maintenance of a merchant marine "(a) sufficient to carry its domestic water-borne commerce and a substantial portion of the water-borne export and import foreign commerce of the United States and to provide shipping services on all routes essential for maintaining the flow of such domestic and foreign water-borne commerce at all times, (b) capable of serving as a naval and military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, (c) owned and operated under the United States flag by citizens of the United States insofar as may be practicable, and (d) composed of the best-equipped, safest, and most suitable types of vessels, constructed in the United States and manned with a trained and efficient citizen personnel"; and

Whereas many thousands of American men and women have toiled through long hours in shipyards and factories in order to construct in the shortest possible time the fleet of vessels needed to carry out not only the long-range program envisioned in the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 but also the emergency program necessitated by the global war in which we are involved; and

Whereas many men have already given their lives, and thousands of others are daily risking their lives, on our ships traversing dangerous seas to carry men and materials to the far-flung battlefields; and

Whereas it is fitting that the patriotism, courage, sacrifice, and labor of these men and women, ashore and afloat, be publicly recognized:

Now, therefore, I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, do hereby call upon the people of the United States to observe May 22, 1944, as National Maritime Day by displaying the flag at their homes or other suitable places, and I direct that the flag be displayed on all Government buildings on that day.

I add the following remarks by Admiral Land on the subject How About Our Post-war Ships?

HOW ABOUT OUR POST-WAR SHIPS?

(By Rear Admiral Emory S. Land)

No one knows how many ships we can maintain in profitable post-war service. Two obvious post-war economic phases are involved: one, the period of transition from war to peace—two, the era of resumption of normal world-trade conditions. In the transition we will be called upon to play a leading part in the rehabilitation and restoration of much of the rest of the world. This will mean more ships than our merchant marine has ever required in peacetime.

The Merchant Marine Act of 1936 isn't my bible; but it does provide me and my associates with a working theology and a directive to do specific things. This world-wide war has served to accelerate the tempo of a big job and it is bringing us closer to a goal that should benefit every man, woman, and child in the United States.

This is a war of transportation. It has established us as one of the world's strongest maritime powers. Our merchant marine now the largest in its history, and rivaling any other for size and quality, is primarily a war-created resource. We have, however, at the same time amplified the long-range ship-construction program inaugurated in 1938, so that when the war is over we should have a fleet of merchant vessels composed of the best-equipped, safest, and most suitable types of cargo vessels for our commercial needs. Our problem now that our shipbuilding industry has reached its production peak and is fully capable of meeting its goals, is to continue our merchant marine in the post-war future as a basic resource. If we are to keep our merchant fleet up to full efficiency we must make normal replacements each year. We must not repeat mistakes made in the wake of the last war.

We of the merchant marine have often stated that our objective should be to merchant ships to carry a substantial portion of our Nation's foreign commerce, both import and export—a greater portion than ships under the American flag have carried for many years. Since 1900 there have been times when they have carried as little as 8 percent, and seldom have they exceeded the 30-percent mark.

The Merchant Marine Act of 1936 says specifically:

"It is necessary for the national defense and the development of the foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine sufficient to carry its own domestic water-borne commerce and a substantial portion of the water-borne export and import foreign commerce of the United States."

What is a "substantial" portion? Webster defines the word a meaning "of real worth, or considerable amount." All I can say is, that if a man promised me a "substantial" piece of an apple, and then gave the core and bit of the skin, I would consider myself cheated.

The suggestion has been made that a sound merchant marine of from 15 to 20 million deadweight tons would fully meet with our mounting economic and security demands. Opponents of a strong and unswerving merchant-marine policy have countered with a statement that a merchant fleet of the proposed strength would be entirely out of line and would be responsible for the creation of much international jealousy and discord.

The critics, with the best of intention, have failed, however, properly to appraise the arithmetic and the denominators involved. These must be clearly defined, otherwise, a distorted viewpojnt is inevitable.

Not all of the proposed merchant-marine fleet would be engaged in foreign service. Normal peacetime requirements incident to domestic transportation necessities alone would absorb no inconsiderable volume of the proposed tonnage. Ships in this category are always the first to be utilized in case of national emergency.

Great Lakes shipping would have a peacetime requirement of approximately 3,500,000 deadweight tons; our great rivers now have about 6,000 miles of navigable water and would need about 2,500,000 tons of shipping, while 3,800,000 deadweight tons of shipping could be used in coastal and intercoastal transportation, leaving about 7,500,000 tons more or less to be used in foreign shipping, certainly not an alarming proportion. During a normal peacetime year, less than 4,000,000 deadweight tons of American shipping were engaged in foreign trade. Is it impractical to say this would be increased approximately 50 percent in the post-war years? Our own domestic shipping requirements will never impinge upon our relations with other nations.

The future of the merchant marine will be subject to international policies and adjustments. Ships which go abroad are instruments of foreign policy and must be treated as such. The United States has no desire to thwart the legitimate operations of other nations at sea. Shipping is more important to some nations than to others. We, for example, have learned by experience that a sizable merchant marine, backed by a healthy and virile shipbuilding industry, is essential to our economic life and national security. We try to understand the necessities and urgent needs of our friends in other lands—and I think we have earned the right to expect that they will do the same for us.

There should be a mutual appreciation for each other's needs and some frank and friendly collaboration. This happens to be one of those things which everyone favors in principle, but few support in practice. In other words, everybody wants to cut the pie but no one wants to take a small piece. There are only so many pieces in the pie. The only alternative to taking smaller pieces than we would like to have is to increase the size of the pie. We have not scratched the surface of our foreign-trade potential. I recommend that we bake a bigger pie. American industry has a great productive capacity for making things the world will need; it can provide much that should be in strong demand for many years by other nations.

Our schedule for 1944 calls for approximately 1,700 merchant ships at least half of which will be fast ships that can serve most effectively and economically in the post-war world. We will need more of these ships if we subscribe to the practical theory that this Nation cannot survive and prosper without an adequate merchant marine and the facilities and personnel to build and repair our ships. We cannot meet our world-wide obligations, particularly those we are incurring during this war, without sufficient ships—fast, efficient, modern ships—in operation under our flag, and under private ownership and operation.

In resuming normal trade relations with other nations, we may well profit by the example set by our great merchandising establishments in expanding and developing their trade. The progressive grocer, baker, and brewer have proved an efficient delivery eyetem of their own—an adequate fleet of trucks—to be a prime essential in building their business and expanding it. If we, as a great industrial and agricultural nation, support a merchant marine which can render that type of service to other nations, it stands to reason we can profit from the service we render.

The clipper ships of a century ago proved that to be true; the trade and prestige resulting made a great contribution to the rapid and healthy growth of a young nation where free competitive enterprise was proving to be a dominent and constructive force.

The expansion and stability of our merchant marine and the maintenance of a substantial share of our vast and highly efficient shipbuilding industry will be, in part, dependent upon our international trade agreements. It would not be amiss, however, to point out that it will be equally dependent upon the measure of support given by the American people themselves. It is regrettable that for many years neither the Government nor the shipping industry made any intelligent, intensified effort to win support for our ships. It is time we did so.

It took the tragedy of a global war to bring home to America the importance of ships and a shipbuilding industry in being, ready to produce ships in a hurry and when an emergency exists. We must not forget this lesson. We need a broader and more sympathetic public understanding that ships and shipbuilding have strong and essential importance in peacetime. I want America to be deeply and acutely conscious of these things.

We can never be too ship-minded.

War Manpower Commission—City of New Orleans

REMARKS

OF

HON. F. EDWARD HÉBERT

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, the more I hear about the War Manpower Commission and its ludicrous floundering in its sorry public effort to convince somebody that they really know what it is all about the more I have before my mind the picture of the country boy who came to the big city driving his broken-down flivver and got caught in a traffic jam on a one-way street going in the wrong direction.

That is the best description that I know of the War Manpower Commission and the manner in which it functions, and I say "functions" with a great degree of charity.

The War Manpower Commission is the strange driver in the big city going in the opposite direction on a one-way street.

How it can be extricated from such a jam only time will tell, if it can be extricated at all.

I have observed the War Manpower Commission in action for a long time but have held my peace until the blow struck home.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, it is like death. None of us realize how terrible a thing death is until it strikes in our own home. That's the way it is about the War Manpower Commission. I did not realize just how bad it was until its stupidity rung the bell in my own city of New Orleans.

Right now the War Manpower Commission, headed by a group of local misfits unfit to handle so important a problem, is warning the citizens of New Orleans that they will be placed in a group L classification because of the lack of available manpower in that area.

While the voices of these warnings are still ringing in the ears of New Orleanians, their eyes are reading in the daily newspapers huge advertisements placed with the authority of the United States Employment Service, urging labor in New Orleans to go to the Pacific coast and other areas.

It would take more than a Solomon to reconcile such policies.

That is typical of the confusion which reigns in the War Manpower Commission.

Although there is some shadow boxing going on in New Orleans about placing that city in group 1, the fact is that the city has already been placed in that group by regional experts from Dallas and the official announcement is only being delayed because the War Manpower Commission has been caught red-handed with the goods that they do not know what it is all about.

There is supposed to be a 30-day suspension in order to soothe the New Orleans people. It is going to take more than a 30-day soothing sirup to soothe the tempers of my people in New Orleans, and the War Manpower Commission had better realize it now and look the situation squarely in the face. They had better start cleaning their own house before they make any attempt to place New Orleans' labor house in order.

Anybody who knows anything about labor conditions in New Orleans are fully cognizant of the situation there.

Only today I received a letter from E. J. Foster, chairman of the manpower committee of the Central Trades and Labor Council, who tells me that W. H. O'Kelley who is the acting area director of New Orleans, admitted to him that he knew of no labor shortage in New Orleans at this time but anticipated one during the latter part of the year.

If the War Manpower Commission in New Orleans and the Dallas region had been on their toes as they should have been they would have known and anticipated the situation months ago. They attempted to bluff their way through, however. I think the time of bluffing has stopped and it is now Paul McNutt, Administrator of the War Manpower Commission, or somebody else to do something about.

In the face of this supposed manpower shortage the War Manpower Commission, after suspending recruiting of New Orleans labor for 1 day for work elsewhere, the recruiting was thrown wide open, in fact it was opened on an even larger scale.

In the beginning recruiting was limited but now the Hanford Engineer Works, Pasco, Wash., a subsidiary of the du Pont Co., is being allowed to recruit for all types of workers in New Orleans while the War Manpower Commission cries from the housetops that there is an impending shortage of labor in New Orleans.

As a matter of fact some "expert" recruiters were sent to New Orleans from Dallas to put on a house-to-house recruiting campaign in all Negro neighborhoods for workers for Hanford. This has never been done for New Orleans establishments badly in need of Negro labor.

In addition a representative of the Civil Service Commission has appeared on the scene in New Orleans recruiting skilled workers and helpers to send to Pearl Harbor and navy yards on the west coast. All this, Mr. Speaker, in face of the War Manpower Commission's alarms about a critical labor shortage.

There could be a lot said about this Mr. O'Kelley, the so-called expert who is in charge of the New Orleans office. The facts surrounding him, and his liquid extracurricular activities, is common knowledge among his associates if it is not known to his superiors. That is only natural because the regional directors and executives of the War Manpower Commission seem to be the last ones to learn anything about matters of which they should be first informed.

Mr. O'Kelley, in trying to impress New Orleans' industrialists, talks glowingly about "expert technicians" who are making a study of the situation.

Mr. Speaker, it is a high-sounding term, but these so-called expert technicians are in truth nothing but a bunch of ex-country school teachers and social workers who have never had industrial experience in their lives. The employees of the War Manpower Commission in New Orleans have what they refer to as the Gold Brick Club. You may draw your own conclusions as to what they mean.

The absentee and turn-over rate in the War Manpower Commission and the United States Employment Service, which is a branch of the War Manpower Commission, is much higher than in any private industry in the city of New Orleans. How can such a set-up advise industry as to proper personnel management?

All figures produced by the War Manpower Commission as to labor supply and manpower are purely guesses. I know because I know some of the people who were asked to make these guesses, later published in the Labor Market Report put out by the War Manpower Commission.

It goes even further than that, Mr. Speaker. The field men who go out and get these screwy figures have always referred to themselves as the crystal gazers, and one of them went so far as to buy a crystal ball and keep it on his desk to the great glee of the rest of the boys.

And this, Mr. Speaker, is the kind of efficiency which speaks ex cathedra for the manpower of this Nation.

O tempora! O mores! Is there any wonder that there is such confusion and chaos in the manpower situation in this Nation if what is going on in the Dallas regional office and the New Orleans area is typical of the rest of the country.

What is Mr. McNutt's reply to this going to be?

I asked him about it the other day in the following letter:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 17, 1944.

Hon. PAUL MCNUTT,
Chairman, War Manpower Commission, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MCNUTT: My attention has been called to the fact that the War Manpower Commission in New Orleans has stated that the labor conditions there is so acute that unless there is a change New Orleans will be classified as a group 1 area.

In spite of this statement, I am informed, large newspaper advertisements by the United States Employment Service are appearing daily in New Orleans endeavoring to recruit laborers and skilled workers of all kinds for transfer to the Pacific coast. It is my understanding that these advertisements are published on the authority of the Washington office of the War Manpower Commission. I don't know how you can reconcile such actions which is further evidence of the lack of cooperation and coordination in connection with the administration of the War Manpower Commission during this emergency.

If the New Orleans situation had been placed in capable hands and a better understanding given to the problem we would not be confronted with the acute situation with which we are confronted in New Orleans today. As far back as January the War Manpower Commission organization in New Orleans and the regional headquarters in Dallas, were fully cognizant of the situation but did nothing about it.

My information is that you have already decided to name New Orleans as a group 1 area, and all this fanfare and conferring is merely a lot of shadow boxing. Don't you think the time has come when the War Manpower Commission should adopt some policy of decisiveness as well as understanding in local communities, and not permit a situation as now exists in New Orleans?

I don't see how you or anybody else can defend statements that the labor situation in New Orleans is acute and at the same time authorize advertisements in newspapers urging labor to leave New Orleans and transfer to the Pacific coast.

Sincerely yours,

F. EDWARD HÉBERT.

Of course, I have not received a reply yet. I will probably get an answer next month or so which will be as confusing as what is going on down in New Orleans.

The Central Trades and Labor Council of New Orleans of the American Federation of Labor advises me that if Mr. McNutt will have qualified and adequate people make a real survey of New Orleans a surplus instead of a shortage of labor would be found.

I am not alone in my position, Mr. Speaker.

The New Orleans Association of Commerce, composed of New Orleans business leaders, are as perplexed as I am.

The New Orleans Item recently published the following editorial which I believe sums up the entire situation, and I submit to you it expresses the opinion of all right-thinking people in New Orleans.

What is Mr. McNutt's answer?

What is the answer of the War Manpower Commission to such conditions and policies?

What defense can the Dallas regional office make for allowing such conditions in the New Orleans area?

What justification can the War Manpower Commission officials in the New Orleans area have for drawing their salaries from the taxpayers of the United States?

They are all $64 questions in my book.

Here is the editorial from the New Orleans Item:

THAT LABOR SHORTAGE

We have been reading the War Manpower Commission's ideas for getting 20,000 more workers for Orleans industries by next fall, and statements that unless these are adopted our city will be declared among those to which their present contracts are not extended and new ones are not awarded. We have also heard considerable discussion of the plan among manufacturers, large and small, who would be seriously affected by it. But the more we have read and heard the less we seem to understand about it or to grasp the necessity for it.

The proposal, for instance, to put all industry in the city on a compulsory 48-hour week is beyond our digestion. In the case of a wide range of small enterprises and some large ones, that would not expand the labor supply available for use in other plants but it would certainly impose severe inconvenience and losses on many of them. This and perhaps other considerations commend it to us as a very dubious expedient indeed.

Meantime, if anybody can throw any real light on this question we should be glad if he would do so.

And, incidentally, since labor is so scarce in New Orleans that the Federal Manpower Commission is threatening it with dire measures, we wish it would inform us why its Federal Employment Service is trying its best to drain labor away from here to the Pacific coast. Why is advertising in our newspapers this week the most seductive inducements to take skilled labor workers in half a dozen lines away from us? Is the Commission not marching in opposite directions at the same time? Why is it not trying to bring men workers into New Orleans instead of lure them away?

A Future for the Armed Forces With the G. I. Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOSEPH M. PRATT
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. JOSEPH M. PRATT. Mr. Speaker, today in most homes throughout this broad land there is a vacant chair at the dining-room table. These represent a youth or a man and in some cases a girl, a son, a husband, or daughter who have forsaken family and fireside in the defense of their country. Some day, and, please God, it may be soon, the young manhood and womanhood of America will return. And so I would like to talk especially to those who are fighting our battles for us and to their parents, wives, and families.

The purpose of this G. I. bill of rights is to enable the returning veteran to help himself. It proposes to help him back to school, to a job, to the ownership of a home or a farm. The need arises the day he is mustered out. This measure, it is hoped, will bridge the gap between separation from service and the return to a place in the home community.

The inspiration for this comprehensive measure was furnished by the American Legion. It is endorsed by the Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

This legislation has been drawn up and passed in the American way, and bills such as this one provide the continuance of our constitutional form of government. Our boys want rehabilitation—not charity. They want to be independent and self-sustaining. You cannot pay for patriotism with dollars and cents, but you can pay to educate a man and place him in a position where he can depend on his own efforts. Under this bill a soldier can borrow the money in his own home town at the loaning agency he chooses and at the lowest rate of interest available. It is my belief that most of the returning soldiers will borrow from their local banks at a lower rate of interest than the Government agencies charge at this time.

To many returning veterans the need for a job will be of paramount importance. Even though the Selective Service Act assures the man his former job, standing alone this is insufficient. Some types and places of employment will no longer exist. In many cases new skills will have been developed in the individual as well as maturity and qualities of leadership. In these cases the old job is not the answer. The bill establishes in the Veterans' Administration full responsibility for job counseling and employment placement.

Under this section of the bill the Administrator of Veterans Affairs is directed to place a representative in every State to work with the public employment service of that State. These men and women have fought for the right to work in a free land. It is our duty as a Nation and the responsibility of this service to assist in securing suitable employment without delay.

There has been considerable discussion concerning unemployment compensation for veterans, particularly as to the number of weeks the returning veteran should be entitled to receive it. Also there has been criticism of the payment of any unemployment compensation, with the suggestion that all returning service men and women should receive 6 months' base pay whether or not employed.

It is the opinion of many that the question of adjusted compensation or bonus, as it has been termed by some, should not be considered at this time. The war is still in progress. No one can say how many men and women will see service. Likewise no one can accurately forecast the financial condition of the Government 2 or 3 years hence. Finally, the returning veterans themselves should have a voice in determining this important question which so vitally affects the economy of the Nation and their own welfare.

But it is only just that the man and woman who has served this country in uniform should be entitled to receive compensation if he is unable to obtain suitable employment on his return. Those who have remained at home and worked in factories and elsewhere have had an opportunity to establish unployment benefits for themselves under existing law. The serviceman has been denied this right. For his service to his country he should not be penalized but rewarded. I am satisfied that as finally passed this measure will provide that the returning soldier if qualified will receive unemployment compensation and will not be a subject of charity while looking for a job. A grateful nation can do no less.

This is not an adjusted-compensation or bonus measure. And it provides that the value of all benefits received by a veteran under it shall be deducted from any amount which may hereafter be authorized for payment to him as adjusted compensation.

What will it cost? The best available estimate is that of the Veterans' Administration based upon 15,000,000 returning veterans. That estimate for the entire period of time that the bill will operate is $6,000,000,000.

It is in no sense a reward. The military service of the manhood and womanhood of America is not for sale. The bill is, we hope, a bridge over which the returning soldier and sailor may pass to his normal, rightful place in his home community.

Even as they fought for freedom and will have preserved it, so in the years to come will the destiny of America remain in their hands. Ours is a republic. We pledge allegiance to the flag they have followed and to them the redemption of an obligation, that they may be better able to hold aloft, in peace as in war, the torch of human freedom and liberty.

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce Sets an Example Other Chambers of Commerce Should Follow

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. COMPTON I. WHITE

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, there is no class of people that have more at stake in stable government and a sound national economy than the people represented by the chambers of commerce of our towns and cities. The larger the city the more their businessmen have to lose in the collapse of credit and business in times of financial depression. There is an old saying, "Forewarned is forearmed," and businessmen of Los Angeles are to be congratulated on the foresight of the leaders of its chamber of commerce in recognizing and bringing to our attention the unfavorable trends in business management and government finances, and in presenting these facts to its members and the country at large by publishing and distributing illuminating articles on business and finance for the information and guidance of the people of this country.

There is inserted herewith for the consideration of the Members of Congress excerpts from an address of General Manager Leonard E. Read, of the chamber, which is one of a series of articles which has been distributed by the Los Angeles Chamber:

It is a function of government to insure an honest money system. Counterfeiting, for example, increases the volume of money, but the increment is money which does not originate out of a need for more money in the productive and distributive process. Counterfeiting is, therefore, suppressed by government. This is as it should be.

Let us consider counterfeiting and see what happens. To make an example simple let us assume that the population be composed only of us in this room. We have instituted a money system which honestly accommodates itself to the exchange of the goods and services which we severally produce or perform. Now, assume that one among us, who produces nothing in the way of goods and services, prints counterfeit bills to the tune of $25 per day. He takes those bills and buys your eggs and my shoes and the other things he wants and we make. Can we not describe what would happen by the introduction of these counterfeit purchase orders, counterfeit not merely because they were illegal but because they also were unrelated in any honest or economic way to our exchange system and its requirements?

Before the counterfeiter invaded our premises, our purchase orders (money) increased or diminished as our production fluctuated in volume and as our distribution speeded up or slowed down. Our money system being sound, our purchase orders were related quite accurately to the exchangeable goods and services and to the rate of their distribution among us. But now along comes a counterfeiter who has produced nothing and performed no service yet has purchase orders for which he can secure our goods and services.

COUNTERFEITER EPITOMIZES INFLATION

In the first place an injustice is done. This fellow who has earned nothing and made no contribution succeeds in sharing the fruits of our labor. We are penalized to the extent of his counterfeiting while he is benefited to the same extent. Purchase orders gradually come to be more abundant than available goods and services. We find ourselves with more and more money and with less and less goods and services. Supply decreases; demand increases; prices rise accordingly. If we leave counterfeiters among us long enough, they will own a substantial part of our homes, our farms, and our factories.

We are doing legally just what the counterfeiter does illegally. We are issuing purchase orders which have no sound relationship to the production and distribution of useful and exchangeable goods and services.

Actually, what we are doing, regardless of the wisdom of doing it, is more harmful and uneconomic in its effect than what the counterfeiter does. The counterfeiter only introduces into the economy purchase orders manufactured out of thin air. Nothing is lost to the rest of us by what he does, except the goods and services he receives for which nothing is given in return. The purchase orders the American people are now introducing into the economy arises from the fabrication of great quantities of our resources designed for destruction. Or, if they are not destroyed they will have little, if any, value as useful or exchangeable goods and services (wealth). These purchase orders, thus issued, have precisely the same claim on such useful items as food and clothing as do the purchase orders (money) received for producing food and clothing.

This money, as we shall some day discover, is not purchasing power as we have known it. Neither are comparable funds held by corporations and individuals.

The normal effect of inflation, that is, the normal effect of purchase orders increasing disproportionately to the production and distribution of exchangeable goods and services, is for prices to rise. If the purchase orders are in great abundance in relation to available goods and services moving in the channels of trade, the price rises will be sharp and pronounced. The franc had one-tenth its value following World War No. 1. The mark lost all its value.

These so-called surplus moneys are, for the most part, the creations of inflation. They would not exist had inflation not been practiced on a gigantic scale. The genesis of these moneys has provided the desert air which will bring about their own evaporation. For, in the post-war period, we shall find that prices for goods and services will rise so greatly that these "surpluses" soon will cease to exist. This will be true unless we take the ration and price-control route, in which case these moneys will, for the most part, be as useful as last year's gas coupons. We shall still have them in our portfolios, but they will be exchangeable only for those limited goods and services available to control boards for priority disposition.

There appear to be several attitudes and ways of thinking worthy of consideration:

Look the fiscal situation squarely in the eye. Remember that inflation is the "nursery of tyranny, corruption, and delusion" and that many men made prominent in easier times have, in all inflations, advised wrongly and led into ways of error the millions who listened. Plan only on identifiable facts.

Buy long-term War bonds—all you can. And insist that the Government permit War bond interest rates to seek a more natural level.

We must learn to say "No" quickly, loudly, and often to proposals for adding to the duties, and powers of the various local, State, and Federal agencies of government. In fact, we must go further and begin demanding the dismantling of the bureaucracy which has already been created.

Don't fall into the trap of blaming post-war personalities, confusions, and behaviors for the difficulty. Put the blame where it belongs, on the war and the inflation we thought we had to have to conduct it.

Look not to government but to thyself for America's strength.

St. Lawrence Seaway Power Project

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, the able representative of the Washington bureau of the Watertown Daily Times, Mr. George Daly, recently paid high tribute to my colleague, Congressman WILLIAM A. PITTENGER, of Duluth, Minn.

In the Daily Times for May 18, 1944, the following news item appeared and has some very interesting comment in connection with our colleague [Mr. PITTINGER].

The item reads:

WASHINGTON, May 18.—Congressman WILLIAM A. PITTENGER, to whom opponents of the St. Lawrence seaway project are "infidels," has a primary fight on his hands back home in the Eighth Minnesota District that is of interest to northern New Yorkers.

Congressman PITTENGER is the seaway's champion in the House of Representatives today, having picked up the cudgels when Judge Francis D. Culkin, long-time seaway advocate and defender, died. The seaway bill introduced originally by Judge Culkin was introduced at the current session by Congressman PITTENGER and consequently his political fate is of major concern to northern New York.

Once the seaway is cleared through the Senate under the guidance of Senator GEORGE D. AIKEN, of Vermont, sponser of the bill in the upper House, Congressman PITTENGER will become the leading figure in the fight in the lower House and around him will gather the forces attempting to make the big project one of the Nation's first post-war developments.

Pathfinder, a weekly publication devoted to the Washington scene, has this to say regarding Congressman PITTENGER and the seaway in its current issue:

"Representative WILLIAM PITTENGER, Republican of Minnesota, is running around the halls of Congress these days with a handful of colored maps sticking out of his pocket. They are not war maps but sketches of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway. It's the Congressman's pet project and he's a happy man because of it. Says things are looking up and prospects for the seaway are brighter than ever before."

Congressman PITTENGER's advocacy of the seaway goes back to the days when he first entered politics as a member of the Minnesota House of Representatives in 1917. He has been in the thick of the fight for the project since.

Judge Culkin always conferred with Representative PITTENGER on matters pertaining to the seaway and for years the Minnesota Member was regarded as the second in command to Judge Culkin in the House on the seaway. Since Judge Culkin's death he has emerged as the strongest advocate of the measure in the lower House and today he is in constant contact with Senator AIKEN on the progress of their joint bill to make the project a reality.

The Republican primaries in Minnesota will be held on July 10. Representative PITTENGER is being opposed by two opponents, Mrs. Marjorie Johnson, active in Duluth women's clubs, and Warren Moore, a real estate operator.

Asked what the issues were in the primaries, Representative PITTENGER declared:

"Golly, I don't know. So far nothing has been said."

It is questionable if Representative PITTENGER will take any extended time away from Washington for campaigning. He remained here through the Easter recess because of the press of his legislative duties, and if he returns home to any campaigning it will only be for a week or so.

"My record here speaks for itself. The folks at home know where I stand on every issue and it is up to them to decide if they want me to continue in Washington," he declares.

Representative PITTENGER's defeat in either the primaries or the election would be near tragedy for proponents of the seaway as there is a very good chance that if the Republicans capture control of the House this fall and he returns he will become chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, the committee of key importance in the fight for passage of the seaway bill in the lower House. Representative PITTENGER is now the third ranking Republican on the committee but the two members ahead of him are both believed slated for other committee chairmanships in the event of a Republican victory.

An easygoing, affable Member of Congress, Representative PITTENGER becomes caustic and sharp when dealing with opponents of his pet project on the floor or in the cloakroom.

Once recently he was interrupted on the floor while speaking on the seaway by an opponent of the measure.

"Will the gentleman yield for a question," asked the seaway opponent.

"Yes, for a question but not for a speech," replied Congressman PITTENGER sharply to head off an antiseaway speech.

Another time when the figures on the cost of the seaway were challenged, Representative PITTENGER jumped to his feet and declared:

"I do not like for anybody to challenge the integrity of the War Department engineers," thus putting the opposition in a position of contesting the good faith of the War Department itself.

The result of this type of tactics has been that few opponents of the seaway will get to their feet to challenge the seaway while he is in the House. They have learned that he has figures at his fingertips and can quote sources of such integrity that the opposition usually limps away from the battle licking its wounds.

"I want you all to get acquainted with the War Department engineers, because they are a great bunch of boys. They do not report favorably on a single project that is not in the interest of this country," he told opponents of the seaway in a recent debate on the question.

A graduate of Harvard Law School, Representative PITTENGER is regarded as one of the ablest parliamentarians in the House. Few men in the House are able to trap him by parliamentary rules or tricks, as many have found to their sorrow.

A veteran of 23 campaigns, Representative PITTENGER is not particularly worried about this year's primary contest. He has come through too many political battles to permit one more or less to upset him. He was first elected to Congress from the Eighth Minnesota District, with a population of 290,000, in 1928. He was reelected in 1930, but was swept out of office in the first Roosevelt landslide of 1932. He returned in 1934, but was turned out again in the second Roosevelt sweep of 1936. He came back in 1938 and has been steadily reelected since.

Keep an Eye on Mr. Fly

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 16, 1944

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Washington Times-Herald of Sunday, May 21, 1944, comes an article as follows:

One of the most important men in Washington is James Lawrence Fly, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission. Mr. Fly is smart, tough, and he knows what he wants.

You can judge what he wants by what he does.

And what he does is to bully people who come within his reach.

Mr. Fly's latest bullying hasn't worked out altogether according to plan, however, and deserves a little thoughtful attention both for what it shows about him and about ways of dealing with him. To begin with, some background about Mr. Fly himself.

This gentleman came to the Federal Communications Commission from the Tennessee Valley Authority, where he had worked himself up to be general counsel.

Before joining T. V. A. he was just another obscure, small-size governmental lawyer, but with that outfit he had made himself a considerable reputation as a legal sharpshooter in the cause of the Government as against private power companies.

Now, on the other hand, consider the Federal Communications Commission. It was created in 1934 for the purpose of regulating radio, telephone, and telegraph "in the public interest, necessity, and convenience."

Noble-reading words, indeed, but, as you can easily see, wide and vague enough in meaning to accommodate just about any kind of interpretation.

The F. C. C., from its very first days, was a flop. It had enormous powers, but no idea how to use them.

Result: Chairman and members fell by the wayside in a steady stream. Congress complained and the people doing business with the F. C. C. were baffled. By 1939 the demand for a really able chairman was universal.

And through the influence of Thomas Gardiner Corcoran, the all-over-the-place handy man of the New Deal in his day, up to Washington came Mr. Fly, September 1, 1939.

On the whole people were glad to see him. He was young, as men of his rank go, vigorous, and positive. Radio and the telephone and telegraph business hoped he would knock the Commission into businesslike condition.

He did. But what kind of business?

Mr. Fly knows only one kind of business—the Government harassing the businessman. He knows that all too well.

So he began to put on pressure. He lectured the radio companies as to the kind of programs they should use. For instance, he hates "soap operas," the universally popular radio serial dramas that run night and day because the public likes them, and has told the radio industry to cut that kind of thing down if it hopes to hold its place in the "public interest, necessity, and convenience."

So, what with one thing and another, the House of Representatives finally decided Mr. Fly's administration of the F. C. C. needed investigation. It appointed a select committee to do the job.

Incredible as it may seem, Mr. Fly licked that committee to a standstill by sheer generalship. He is smart.

But he didn't lick its collection of testimony, not quite.

And that is where the business of beating Mr. Fly comes in. A publication called Reader's Digest sent a reporter down here to get the committee's evidence and Fly's rebuttal, put the two together, and see what would come out in the way of a balanced analysis of Fly's career.

The Reader's Digest story hasn't yet been printed in Reader's Digest, but last week it got considerable publicity.

For it was disclosed before the House committee aforementioned that Fly has been nailed in an attempt to kill the story.

You may have read about all that, but, in brief, it was disclosed by the Digest reporter that she got one set of facts from the committee files, tried to check them with Fly, and that he refused to see her.

Then, having refused the reporter that chance to present him with the charges, he threatened dire consequences to Reader's Digest if it should print the story he himself admits he had never read.

That, friends, is bullying in high fashion.

The way to combat it is to keep pulling Mr. Fly out into the open and onto the record. Let his actions speak for themselves.

But don't go to sleep at the job. Keep your eye on Mr. Fly. He believes in governmental control of radio—which means, when it goes through to its final stages, the end of free speech in America.

Tribute to Hon. John H. Overton, of Louisiana

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY D. LARCADE, JR.

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] for yielding to me for unanimous request to extend my remarks in regard to the appeals being made to our senior United States Senator, the Honorable JOHN H. OVERTON, of Louisiana, to reconsider his announcement that he would not be a candidate to succeed himself. Mr. Speaker, while in Louisiana I issued a statement on March 20, 1944, calling to the attention of the people of my State what an important matter this was to our beloved State as well as to the entire United States, and outlined to them the great work that Senator OVERTON had done for Louisiana, not only in flood-control matters, not only by bringing many important war industries to our State, not only to the establishment of naval and Army installations in Louisiana, but to the many other important services which Senator OVERTON performed for the State and its citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I pointed out that Senator OVERTON was one of the most influential and powerful Members of the Senate due to his seniority and long experience, that due to his ability, independence, loyalty, and consideration for his colleagues, that he was one of the most esteemed and respected Members of the Senate of the United States. That due to that fact it would take many years for a successor to attain this position, and to be of the value to our State and the Nation as that enjoyed by Senator OVERTON, and that due to the great knowledge of Senator OVERTON with respect to national and world affairs that in these crucial times his withdrawal from the Senate would be a great loss to our Nation, as well as to the State of Louisiana.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad to say that I understand that for the first time in many years, the people of Louisiana are casting aside political factionalism and are requesting Senator OVERTON to reconsider his intention of not becoming a candidate for the Senate, and in addition to the thousands of personal solicitations and pledges of support by letter, many of the most prominent and influential newspapers of the State of Louisiana have published editorials paying tribute to the service of Senator OVERTON and calling upon him to reconsider and file for nomination in the forthcoming primary.

Mr. Speaker, one of the finest tributes, and one of the most unusual, paid to a colleague by the Members of the United States Senate was the petition signed by all of the Democratic Members of the Senate in Washington when the same was circulated by Senator MCKELLAR, of Tennessee, calling upon Senator OVERTON as a patriotic duty to remain at the helm, and with your permission I wish to include an article from the New Orleans Times-Picayune, dated May 18, which includes the petition of the Senators, the reply of Senator OVERTON, and a statement by Senators ELLENDER, of Louisiana, and MCKELLAR, of Tennessee, to wit:

MAKE RACE AGAIN, OVERTON URGED—PLEA MADE IN PETITION BY 46 SENATORS

(By Paul Wooton)

WASHINGTON, May 18.—A petition urging Senator JOHN H. OVERTON to reconsider his decision not to run again for the Senate has been signed by 46 Democratic Members of the Senate.

Senator OVERTON, in expressing his gratitude for the action taken, says the suggestion will receive his thoughtful consideration.

Senator ALLEN J. ELLENDER states that in his opinion Senator OVERTON will not be willing to fight to retain his seat. He says Senator OVERTON made known to him 2 years ago that he was contemplating retiring at the end of this term. He thinks the only way Louisiana will continue to have the benefit of Senator OVERTON'S seniority and experience is for the political factions to get together and agree to support him. He suggests that this is the best way for Gov. James Houston Davis to implement his often reiterated preelection statement that Louisiana should have political peace. He calls attention to the fact that his chairmanship of two Senate subcommittees, which are of great importance to Louisiana, should be taken into consideration and that everything should be done in Louisiana to induce him to reconsider his decision.

Senator ELLENDER'S reference is to the Naval Affairs Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce which handles flood-control and river and harbor developments.

GIVEN CREDIT

"Senator OVERTON must be given credit," Senator ELLENDER adds, "for the fact that so much of Louisiana is safe from flood at a time when so many are suffering heavy losses on streams which have not been so well harnessed as the Mississippi River."

The petition is in the form of a letter written Senator OVERTON by Senator ELLENDER. The text of that letter reads:

"We, your colleagues in the Senate, are very much concerned over the decision you made some time ago not to offer as a candidate for reelection in the Louisiana primaries next September. We hope that you will reconsider your action and remain in the Senate.

"Because of your long experience in the Senate and your intimate knowledge of our Nation's affairs during this the most perilous period in her history, it is your patriotic duty to remain at the helm. We urge you to run, and we feel that the people of Louisiana will rally to your support because we believe they feel, as we do, that your services to our country are invaluable."

The letter then was signed also by Senator KENNETH MCKELLAR, who circulated it among the Democratic Members of the Senate.

There are 57 Democratic Members of the Senate; that is, 56 in addition to Senator OVERTON, Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL, of Texas, did not sign because he is crusading for legislation which would limit all senatorial terms to 6 years. Senators CARTER GLASS, of Virginia; HOMER T. BONE, of Washington; and JAMES G. SCRUGHAM, of Nevada, are absent from the Senate because of illness. Senator CHARLES O. ANDREWS, of Florida; ELMER THOMAS, of Oklahoma; D. WORTH CLARK, of Idaho; MON C. WALLGREN, of Washington; JAMES E. MURRAY, of Montana; and HARRY S. TRUMAN, of Missouri, are absent from Washington.

Senator ELLENDER states that the idea of the petition originated with Senator MCKELLAR.

M'KELLAR'S VIEW

Senator MCKELLAR, in a statement today, said:

"I was one of the first to urge Senator OVERTON to reconsider his determination not to run for the Senate again. Senator OVERTON and I serve on the Appropriations Committee together, and he is the head of the subcommittee on naval affairs. We have seen eye to eye together on building up a great navy, and we still see eye to eye together in the matter of holding that navy intact after the war is over. I think it would be a great loss to our committee and to the best interests of the Navy for Senator OVERTON to withdraw from the Senate now. Without knowing, I should think the people of Louisiana would be tremendously interested in the Navy too.

"In addition, Senator OVERTON and I see similarly about the Mississippi River and flood control, and he is chairman of another subcommittee on flood control. I certainly hope he will change his mind and run for the office."

The full text of Senator OVERTON'S acknowledgment, addressed to Senator MCKELLAR, follows:

"It is with a sense of gratitude and pride, unequalled in any other happening of my public life, that I have read the letter written to me by you and other Democratic colleagues in the Senate, conveying to me your regret that I have decided not to offer for reelection and expressing the hope that I shall, upon further reflection, conclude to present my candidacy to the electorate of Louisiana.

"Permit me to say that I prize this evidence of your esteem for and confidence in me above any tribute that has been, or could possibly be, paid to me by my colleagues, and very earnestly and sincerely do I express to you the great admiration and warm affection I entertain for you and my other fellow Senators.

"This unsolicited and generous joint action by you and other Democratic colleagues is, I am informed, without precedent in the Senate, and your suggestion unquestionably merits and will receive my thoughtful consideration."

Those whose names were signed to the petition are:

ALLEN J. ELLENDER, Louisiana; KENNETH MCKELLAR, Tennessee; TOM CONNALLY, Texas; LISTER HILL, Alabama; SHERIDAN DOWNEY, California; JAMES M. MEAD, New York; JOSIAH W. BAILEY, North Carolina; EDWIN C. JOHNSON, Colorado; DAVID I. WALSH, Massachusetts; ELMER D. THOMAS, Utah; J. H. BANKHEAD, Alabama; TOM STEWART, Tennessee; A. B. CHANDLER, Kentucky; DENNIS CHAVEZ, New Mexico; RICHARD B. RUSSELL, Georgia; BURNET R.

MAYBANK, South Carolina; ABE MURDOCK, Utah; ALBEN W. BARKLEY, Kentucky; WALTER F. GEORGE, Georgia; JOHN L. MCCLELLAN, Arkansas; BENNETT CHAMP CLARK, Missouri; PAT MCCARRAN, Arizona; CLAUDE PEPPER, Florida; JOSEPH F. GUFFEY, Pennsylvania; GEORGE L. RADCLIFFE, Maryland; E. D. SMITH, South Carolina; MILLARD E. TYDINGS, Maryland; JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, Wyoming; THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN, Rhode Island; HATTIE W. CARAWAY, Arkansas; BURTON K. WHEELER, Montana; ERNEST W. Mr. Speaker, I ask further permission to include an excerpt from a front-page editorial from the Shreveport Times, of Shreveport, La., entitled "Let's Forget Factions and Think of Louisiana," wherein the editor says in part: "We, therefore, unhesitatingly cast aside all past political affiliations to request fellow Louisianians to join with us in urging Senator OVERTON to reconsider his announcement not to seek reelection." I would like to quote further from the editorial mentioned above, as follows:

LET'S FORGET FACTIONS AND THINK OF LOUISIANA

The magnificent tribute paid to Senator OVERTON by nearly 50 Democrats in the United States Senate in signing a personal appeal to him to reconsider his decision not to be a candidate for reelection probably is unprecedented in American history. Certainly no Louisianian ever before has been accorded such unsolicited and unanimous recognition, for services to his State and his Nation, by so large and so important a group of public officials.

That appeal must not be permitted to go unheeded in Louisiana, either among the people or among politicians.

It is not merely an appeal from fellow Senators to Senator OVERTON.

It is a wartime, patriotic appeal from the entire Democratic Party in the United States Senate to the people of Louisiana not to deprive their Federal Government of the wartime and post-war services of a man whose proven capabilities are looked upon by those Senators as essential to their part in conduct of the war and establishment of the peace.

It is an appeal that comes from Senators who are the elected representatives of Democrats in 35 of the Nation's 48 States—from all of the States having Democratic representation.

It is not an effort to interfere in Louisiana politics, but an earnest appeal that Louisiana politics should not be permitted to interfere in any way with the proven competency of the State's wartime representation, in the person of Senator OVERTON, in one of the Nation's highest governmental branches.

Against this background, what political aspirants now can offer themselves, regardless of past political factionalism, as opponents to Senator OVERTON and still contend that their only ambition is to serve their State and their Nation? When placed beside the studied evaluation of Senator OVERTON by the entire Democratic membership of the United States Senate, any such contentions by opponents of the Senator wither and vanish in a fog of plain political hypocrisy.

Senator OVERTON'S services in the Senate are essential to Louisiana at this time. He is chairman of the commerce subcommittee on flood control. Under it comes legislation vital to every square foot of Louisiana soil from the north Louisiana area of proposed lateral Red River canals to the intracoastal canals down on the Gulf; from the Boeuf Basin areas in east Louisiana to the Sabine sections in the west.

No matter how capable any successor to Senator OVERTON might be, he still would be a Senate rookie, requiring years to gain the committee seniority that Senator OVERTON now has. Those who thoughtlessly have cried for Senator OVERTON'S scalp had better start thinking of some of these things—had better start thinking of Louisiana.

Senator OVERTON naturally has agreed to give careful thought to the appeal from the Democratic Party in the Senate. If a similar appeal goes to him, dispassionately and without thought of political factionalism, from the people and the political leaders of Louisiana, he undoubtedly will cast aside his personal desires for the quiet of retirement and agree to reelection.

We believe that Louisiana should give Senator OVERTON quick and wholehearted assurance that no political leader in this State will place his own ambitions above his State's welfare and his Nation's needs, as stated in the appeal of nearly 50 Democratic Senators.

We believe that Senator OVERTON should be assured at once that if there is any opposition to his reelection it will not be from organized political machines or factions, but that it will be no more than the usual opposition of petty publicity seekers who make a practice of running in every race for every office.

We believe that such a course is the true course of political loyalty and patriotism to State and Nation in such times as these.

As for our own position, we reiterate the statement published on this page on March 18, signed by the editor and publisher of the Times, which closed with these words:

"Like all of us, Senator OVERTON is human and has perhaps made mistakes, but he has been a good Senator, and such a record should be continued, not ended. * * * We therefore unhesitatingly cast aside all past political affiliations to request fellow Louisianians to join with us in urging Senator OVERTON to reconsider his announcement not to seek reelection."

We urge that all with the wartime welfare of Louisiana at heart join in this appeal to Senator OVERTON. We urge—even more—that they appeal to their own political factions and factional leaders here in Louisiana to follow the same course.

Mr. Speaker, I further beg leave to include in my remarks an article from the Washington Times-Herald of May 19, 1944, in regarde to Senator OVERTON reconsidering his decision to retire from the Senate and indicates the interests of Washington in his behalf.

Mr. Speaker, this further shows the interest in Senator OVERTON'S decision and the article states that "Senator OVERTON, Democrat, of Louisiana," is recognized as "one of the District's stanchest friends in Congress." The article follows:

OVERTON STUDIES COLLEAGUES' PLEA, MAY REMAIN IN SENATE

Senator OVERTON, Democrat, of Louisiana, one of the District's stanchest friends in Congress, hinted yesterday that he may reconsider his decision to retire from the Senate at the end of his present term on January 3.

OVERTON intimated that he might change his mind and enter the Louisiana primaries next September after 46 of his Democratic colleagues joined in an unprecedented appeal to him to remain in the Senate.

Senator MCKELLAR, Democrat, of Tennessee, who circulated the joint letter to OVERTON, said it was signed by every Democratic Senator who was in Washington on May 13, the day on which it was written.

"Because of your long experience in the Senate and your intimate knowledge of our Nation's affairs during this perilous period in her history, it is your patriotic duty to remain at the helm," the letter stated.

In expressing his gratitude for the expression of esteem and confidence by his fellow Democrats, OVERTON stated in a letter to MCKELLAR:

"This unsolicited and generous joint action by you and other Democratic colleagues is, I am informed, without precedent in the Senate, and your suggestion unquestionably merits and will receive my thoughtful consideration."

A Mail Carrier Resigns as Protest Against Hounding by Investigators

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. COFFEE

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Speaker, a talented and able young mail carrier in the city of Renton, in my congressional district, in the State of Washington, was recently the victim of a series of investigations in which it was charged he was subversive and a "red." This mail carrier resented very much the fact that Government officials impugned his patriotism. He has expressed indignation in his letter of resignation which I am appending herein below. This letter reveals a condition which should be corrected.

I have repeatedly complained against the unjust treatment accorded liberals in the Federal service. Apparently in the minds of some reactionaries, it is criminal offense for a Federal employee to entertain a liberal viewpoint. Tories apparently regard anyone who is not a conservative Republican as disloyal, dangerous, subversive, yet we are told we are fighting this war for the "four freedoms," one of which is free speech. Why do not these investigators manifest some interest in pro-Fascist activities on the part of Federal personnel? It has reached the point where a Federal employee feels he should never say a word in commendation of the courage, military prowess and grim determination of our Soviet allies, yet the U. S. S. R., the most powerful of our allies, is contributing mightily to the defeat of the Axis. On the other hand, a certain Connecticut industrialist, who was exposed as carrying on a correspondence with a Nazi agent—seeking advice from him, was befriended by the reactionary press of America and those who had the temerity to expose her were reviled, insulted, and libeled in the American press. These conservatives were not alarmed that an industrialist who was manufacturing secret equipment for the Army and Navy, who refused to pay her own income tax and advised fellow industrialists to do likewise, was in close association with an agent of the Nazi government. In fact many newspapers showed great solicitude for this Nazi and referred to him only as a "German businessman," though he has been blacklisted by many of our Allied Governments. The privacy of the correspondence of this lady was what was concerning these conservatives. Here we have an amazing contrast—liberal Americans being insulted while those in close association with Nazis are defended.

But let the letter from the mail carrier speak for itself. Here it is:

RENTON, WASH., April 30, 1944.

Mr. JOHN LOTTO,
Postmaster, Renton, Wash.

DEAR MR. LOTTO: As you know, I have been working in the Renton post office for something over a year. I think you will certify that I have given good, conscientious service. Since I am too old to serve in the armed forces in this war, as I did in the last, I have been proud to work here for Uncle Sam. Furthermore, I have enjoyed working under your supervision and with the fine corps of assistants you have in this office. I join with them in their admiration of you, in their appreciation of your fairness and intellectual honesty, as well as your aim at efficiency without officiousness. I say it has been a pleasure to work with these fine people under you. Therefore, I regretfully feel forced to write this letter.

I am a thorough American. My ancestors have all lived in this country since about the time of the Revolution. We were brought up in full admiration of those valiant men under General Washington who left their bloody footprints on the frozen roads of New Jersey and in the snows of Valley Forge. With admiration also for Thomas Paine, Jefferson, and Andrew Jackson, all my life I have been a student of the basic meanings of democracy, and have been passionately partisan to the intendments of the preamble to our Constitution. I believe that it heralds the true philosophy of our Government—a philosophy devoutly to be cherished and preserved. I believe that the Bill of Rights was calculated largely to give all Americans who love fundamental democracy a chance and a right to preach and practice that philosophy.

To me, a poor man, one of the dearest intendments is the promotion of the general welfare of all citizens. This I believe is the basic plank of every philosophy of true democracy as well as the basic aim of our Government. Consequently I have always been receptive to any idea or suggestion, no matter whence the source, which might further that end. I have never been afraid of an idea, no matter however much it jarred my previous prejudices or preconceived notions. I have therefore tried ever to avoid being blinded overmuch by prejudice or made stupid by old-fogyism. Openmindedness is the only true attitude when investigating opinions of others.

In this frame of mind I have read many books, among them The Federalist; the lives of many Presidents, including Lincoln and William McKinley; the works of Paine, Jefferson, Marx, Parrington, Rousseau, Laski, Stuart Chase, James Truslow Adams, Charles Beard; and I have gone to public meetings to listen to William Howard Taft, Eugene V. Debs, William Jennings Bryan, Woodrow Wilson, Charles E. Hughes, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and even Earl Browder when he came to Seattle. So far as I know, all these speakers had a legal and constitutional right to expound their various theories of government. In other words, I have read the same books and heard the same speeches and lectures that millions of other American citizens have read and heard.

Nevertheless, with that diversified background I made the mistake of taking a job under the Post Office Department of this great Nation. Although my small pay of about $100 a month as mail carrier on the streets of this small city is barely enough these days on which to live and I have to attend strictly and solely to the wearying duties of my small job; though I am a veteran who saw service in France and am somewhat broken in health; though I keep my mouth shut and attend to my own business, I have recently been singled out by the F. B. I. and post-office inspectors as a dangerous man. I have been required to answer a thousand questions about what I have done in the past, what I have read, whom I have listened to, where I have gone, who my relatives are, what persons I associate with, and so forth. I have undergone this third degree not once but several times. I have been required even to go to Seattle to be further quizzed and subjected to trick questions. No; not because I have committed any such simple crime as theft, robbery, or murder, but solely because I am suspected by somebody—I don't know whom—of being a Communist.

I am not a Communist. I have never been. Nor have I ever attended a single Communist meeting except to go and listen to a public speech of Earl Browder, if such can be called a Communist meeting. It is true, of course, that I have read some of the literature they have distributed from house to house or sent through the mails, just as I have read the stuff of Gerald K. Smith sent through the mails. This, I presume, makes a synthetic culprit of me. And I now realize that attending that single public meeting of Earl Browder's was a most heinous crime in the eyes of the civil service hierarchy in the Post Office Department in Washington. Oh, yes; one other heinous crime is that I have a sister who is alleged to have attended a Communist Party meeting.

In other words, in recent weeks I have been hounded for the same reasons and in pretty much the same manner as Germans who were suspected of having Jewish blood. The only difference is that this to which I have been subjected is aimed at Communists (though really in fact at lovers of democracy) not at Jews. Only the brutal beatings were lacking to distinguish it from that of the Nazis; only the rack and the screw were lacking to distinguish it from those of the Middle Ages.

I know, Mr. Lotto, that you have not been a party to this in any manner whatsoever. You are too noble an American to resort to such unwarranted practices. But I realize nevertheless that you are necessarily governed by the system under which you hold office. If you tried to be just to me, you would call down upon your own head all the sinister influences which caused these polite gentlemen of the F. B. I. and postal inspection to be parties to these obvious Gestapo methods. They and you are probably as ignorant of the source of this secret and truly subversive un-Americanism as I am.

Who are my accusers? I have never been given their names. I have not had the lawful right to have them face me, nor a chance to cross-examine them. I am as much in the dark as you are as to their character, their standing, their motives, their prejudices. All I know is that I was accused by somebody either of being or having been a member of the Communist Party or had attended its meetings or, at least, that I have relatives who are accused of it. I have had no chance to be heard in any court, to have counsel, to be faced by my accusers. It is all underground, but I realize that if I do not resign the chances are that orders will come to you from Washington requiring you to discharge me. God forbid that I should, by my own selfishness, bring down upon your head the evil frowns of the type of Prussianistic mind behind all this, yet, if I were to be concerned only by my personal inclinations, I would fight this thing to the bitter end.

I have written this letter of resignation at length because I know that hundreds of other devout Americans who believe in genuine democracy as I do instead of corporate feudalism, who believe in free enterprise for the lowly individual and not for the rich corporations, who are opposed to exploitation and oppression of every form, are probably being subjected to this same infamous treatment; and if I and they take it, without remonstrance, soon thousands will be similarly hounded, harassed, and victimized until the only logical ruler of this country will be some man of the breed of Lawrence Dennis or Gerald K. Smith.

Appreciating your many kindnesses to me while in your service, I hereby tender my resignation.

Sincerely yours,

L. PERRY WOOD.

Playing Politics

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, through the press and sometimes in letters we are admonished to stop playing politics. Almost invariably those who give that advice advocate political policies of their own, thus demonstrating once again that many oppose the very thing they do themselves.

The President, a candidate for a fourth term, has frequently appealed to all to forget political issues, but he has taken a part in political campaigns. He sought to purge members of his own party; he took an active part in the New York election for Governor.

Just last week Chester Bowles, head of the O. P. A., found it necessary to order some 258,000 O. P. A. employees to keep hands off the forthcoming national election or face instant dismissal. He said, "We have been very tough on the question of politics, and we can be a hell of a lot tougher. We have had to dismiss some of our people for engaging in controversial political activities. We probably will have to let more go." But Bowles is the exception and no doubt other administrative agencies will continue to use their power for a fourth term.

Perhaps all that should be expected from those who seek to establish a dictator dynasty, but there is no reason why we who believe in a constitutional government should not protest, criticize, and attempt to defeat that effort.

DISTRACTED

Aside from political issues directly connected with the fourth term, altogether too many other issues are distracting our attention from the main, the vital, issue—which is the winning of the war—as speedily as possible and that with the least possible loss of life.

Almost every mail brings to my desk requests and demands that I devote my efforts to some objective which, however desirable, does not directly contribute toward the winning of the war.

For example, there are powerful lobbies here demanding now anti-poll-tax legislation, post-war planning, establishment of a United States of the world, equal rights for women, national prohibition, enactment of the Townsend plan, increased compensation for certain classes of civilian employees, enactment and enforcement of fair employment and practices legislation, the adopting of technocracy, and a dozen or more other plans or theories.

Why at this time, when every single day brings us a long list of those who have died, of those who are missing, or are prisoners in the hands of the enemies, argue controversial issues which may well wait until the war has been won? Why quarrel among ourselves over things which, however good or desirable, can well wait the decision on the issue which is all important to every individual in this land, as well as to us as a nation?

Labor and management have performed a miracle in war production, but war production has been hindered and hampered by unjustifiable strikes. For example, a union at Muskegon, protesting, of all things, the high rate of production of a union member, went on strike because the company would not discharge him.

Three C. I. O. union stewards at Detroit were discharged because they threw out of the plant an A. F. of L. driver of a truck delivering soft drinks. Because of the discharge, 3,000 workers who would have produced war materials went on strike.

In Detroit 64,000 war workers went out on strike, and Under Secretary of War Patterson and Secretary of the Navy Forrestal said that on the "eve of our greatest battle" the lives of American soldiers and sailors were being endangered by that strike.

Cannot the question of whether the man who delivers soft drinks to the workers join the A. F. of L. or the C. I. O., of whether a war worker produces too much, wait until the war is over? Must the pilots in the air over Germany lack planes for reinforcement just because someone in Detroit gets angry?

It is my judgment that our whole attention, our every thought, and our every act should be given to the defeat of our enemies, and that there will be ample time when that task has been accomplished to settle these other issues.

Bus Problem for Negroes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HERMAN P. EBERHARTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by Orrin C. Evans from the Philadelphia Record:

HOW ONE GENERAL SOLVED BUS PROBLEM FOR NEGROES BY DEAL WITH COMPANY

(By Orrin C. Evans)

The bus drivers around Petersburg, Va., didn't like Negroes any more than those in any other part of the South.

They refused to pick them up, threatened them for not saying, "Sir," and otherwise made life miserable.

The 6,000 Negroes at Camp Lee, some 3 miles from the town, had as tough a time getting to and from Petersburg as did those in Maxwell Field, who still stand hopelessly on street corners while busses pass them up.

Now, things are different. Any Negro soldier who is in town can always get a bus back—with no Jim Crowism and no more than ordinary delay, such as happens on busses everywhere.

SOUTHERNER RESPONSIBLE

The "revolution" was accomplished by white-haired Brig. Gen. George Horkan, a West Pointer, a Georgian and a man whose name will be treasured in the hearts of many northern Negroes all their lives.

On my 3,400-mile tour of seven southern States, I spent a full day in Petersburg, talking to Negro civilians and soldiers. I found morale unusually high, and virtually no evidence of race friction.

It was one of the first camp towns I visited, and—in view of the stories I had heard from soldiers and their relatives in Philadelphia—I was amazed at the friendly atmosphere.

I called the public relations officer at the camp. He suggested I come out to see him. Within 5 minutes of my arrival, I was talking with General Horkan himself.

"I want you to be my guest at the camp for a day or two," said this Georgia officer. "You can have my car and driver; go anywhere you want and see anything you want."

It didn't take me long to find out that Negro soldiers at Camp Lee were high in morale, proud and snappy. And I learned the reasons.

GENERAL TOOK ACTION

A major one was this:

General Horkan, within a few days after he took command, learned about the intolerable bus service—that Negro soldiers were jammed into inadequate Jim Crow seats, or passed up altogether and forced to walk to and from camp. There had been a few minor fracases on busses, the general told me—the kind of thing that leads to deep resentment, if not to race riots.

"I knew something had to be done," the general said. "Also, I knew I couldn't do anything about the State (Jim Crow) law."

So, he simply made an agreement with the Petersburg-Camp Lee bus company under which an adequate number of vehicles were operated between town and camp exclusively for soldiers. He established a depot in the Petersburg business section, equally convenient for white and Negro soldiers.

There is no segregation on the busses. The rule is first come, first served—and there has been no trouble.

NO COMPLAINT ON FOOD

General Horkan simply will not have race friction in his camp, although he follows the general rule of dividing the post into white and Negro areas.

Incidentally, I didn't hear one complaint about the food given Negro soldiers at Camp Lee. I mentioned it to a mess sergeant.

"You're damned right, we have good food," he said. "The general's apt to walk in and inspect the kitchen any minute."

This general, in fact, seems to have a way of getting things done right by direct action.

DICIPLINES FIVE WHITES

One day his car stopped for a light on a Petersburg street. Five white noncoms were shouting insults to two Negro soldiers.

General Horkan called the white men to his car, took their names. Back at camp he gave them their choice: Court martial or discipline by him. They chose the latter. He handed them a knife, and, one after another, they stripped off their own chervons.

Within 24 hours, every soldier in camp had heard what happened. The pace was set.

It didn't take any act of Congress, or War Department order let alone a miraculous elimination of southern race prejudice to accomplish what General Horkan did. He simply exercised his leadership.

As he said to me: "You can only exercise leadership when you're right inside. Whenever you find a camp or camp area where there's constant racial friction, you know the man at the top isn't right."

In the entire South, I found only one other camp area where any direct, intelligent effort was made to solve the intolerable bus problem.

That was at Hattiesburg, Miss., in whose Camp Shelby there are some 9,000 Negro soldiers, including many from the North.

SPECIAL SERVICE ARRANGED

Hattiesburg was the scene of some dangerous clashes between Negro soldiers and bus drivers in some of which white soldiers from the North sided with Negroes.

Maj. Gen. George M. Halloran, a Mississipian, has arranged for special busses for Negro soldiers. The Tri-State Bus Co. operates special trailer-type vehicles from a depot in the Negro area.

That keeps the undesirable Jim Crow aspect of travel, but it does provide transportation.

Moreover, the Army has set up a Negro M. P. station in the town—the only real Negro M. P. outfit I saw on my travels. The Negro M. P.'s carry arms, halt white soldiers attempting to enter the Negro section, and otherwise have full authority. I personally saw one stop and search a white man.

NATIVES RESENT "YANKEES"

It will be noted that the commanders of these two camps which I regard as the best, from a racial standpoint, of any I visited are Southerners.

I made some inquiries as to the reasons for their success. One answer was that the civilians of the towns "take more" from a Southerner than from a "Yankee." He can make them treat Negroes decently without arousing animosity. I throw that in for what it's worth. I do know that in one camp a New Englander aroused deep resentment by removing large "off limits" signs which kept Negroes out of certain areas. His Southern successor refused to put them back and the population took it with a shrug.

In Hattiesburg, one finds, incidentally, a strange potpourri of the old and the new, of blind prejudice and intelligent effort at racial cooperation. Perhaps what I saw and experienced there is a sort of microcosm of the South as it is today.

The Negro M. P.'s weren't forced on the town. They are there partly at the insistence of Dr. B. D. Blackwelder, the city health officer, who happens to be a native of Georgia. There is an excellent U. S. O. for Negroes.

Prominently displayed in business establishments in the Negro area are signs reading: "Approved for military patronage. Inspected by the United States Army."

CAB DRIVEN BY WHITE

I saw no such signs in Negro sections anywhere else. Also, it was only in Hattiesburg that I was permitted to ride in a cab driven by a white person—and, it happened, the driver was a woman. I understand white cabs will take Negroes in some other areas, but I saw none.

In Hattiesburg I found enlightened white men like Frank Tatum, operator of a saw mill and veteran of World War No. 1, who is credited by Negroes throughout the community with a major share in bringing about racial tolerance.

But in a tour of the city I found only seven Negro homes which could be classed as better than slum dwellings.

And, I learned, a lieutenant—a white man—recently was beaten by a mob of rural hoodlums, for no other reason than that he was a Yankee. He was attacked as he stood on the station platform waiting for his mother.

CONDITIONS INTOLERABLE

In every camp community I visited except Hattiesburg and Petersburg I found the bus conditions intolerable. My tour included Camp Claiborne, Alexandria, La.; Camp McCain, Grenada, Miss.; Fort McClellan, Anniston, Ala.; Fort Benning, Columbus, Ga.; Craig Field, Selma, Ala.; Camp Sibert, Gadsden, Ala.; Camp Wallace, Houston, Tex.; Maxwell Field, Montgomery, Ala.

At Anniston a Negro staff sergeant from Jersey City told me: "I don't come into town much, because I'll be damned if I can bring myself to say, 'Yes, sir,' and 'No, sir,' to those ignorant bus drivers. And I don't want to get my head whipped by one of them. So I walk."

At Houston I found Negro soldiers, civilians, police, and bus drivers at daggers' point. Negroes are virtually banned from busses.

An extraordinary, almost incredible, practice prevails at Camp Wallace. Army trucks take soldiers, white and Negro, into Houston on a Jim Crow basis. The trucks for white soldiers also provide return transportation. The Negroes are left to get home the best or worst way they can, which is usually on foot or piled up in expensive taxicabs.

As I stood on Milan Street watching a group of Negro soldiers three busses passed them by.

THREATENED BY DRIVER

As the fourth approached, the soldiers fanned out in front of it.

The driver, club in hand, opened the door.

"I've got a club and I'm goin' to whup some —— —— nigger's haid," he said.

"Please, mister," said one of the soldiers, "don't go crazy and lose your head."

They piled on then as the driver decided to give in.

Those particular men got a ride that particular time, but none of them is going to be writing a cheerful letter home—or is likely to feel any too enthusiastic about being a good soldier.

They are more likely to share the feelings of a young Negro soldier who said to me at Camp Pickett, near Blackstone, Va.:

"Being in this man's army has given me a dying complex. I feel that if I go on to the other side I'm going to die anyhow, and since I have this stuff on (his uniform) I'd just as soon die here and take a couple of these 'pecks' with me, where it might do some good."

Certainly, a simple solution of the bus problem—which, as General Horkan proved, isn't a real problem at all—would do more than any one thing to help make life more tolerable for Negro soldiers in the South.

School-Lunch Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK B. KEEFE

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, the House will shortly be called upon to vote on an appropriation providing funds for the continuation of the school-lunch program. In order that I might obtain information as to the acceptance of this program in the district which I have the honor to represent, letters were addressed to various school authorities in my district requesting information as to what extent the school districts are participating in the program and as to the attitude of school administrators in reference to the same. This inquiry provoked a variety of answers. I desire to quote from the letters received:

1. From my observation I can say: (a) Cities and villages do none, except in one high school where lunch is served for a charge. (b) Rural schools vary—20 percent prepare a hot lunch; 50 percent follow the "pint can" method; 30 percent do little or nothing.

2. The grade principal informs me that the consumption of milk has, in fact, not materially increased since the introduction of the 1-cent milk program.

3. We have tried several times to get the school-lunch program going effectively in the county. Originally it was intended to be set up with W. P. A. labor preparing meals. Our rural areas never had much W. P. A. labor and our relief department couldn't furnish any. About 60 percent of our schools received surplus commodities 3 or 4 years ago and used these for lunches in schools. Now, I would say less than 10 percent have lunches under a meal subsidy plan. The so-called penny milk subsidy program is going in three of our city schools with desultory results. The plan sounds appealing from the health standpoint, but I think, and I know the other schoolmen in the county are less than lukewarm to the plan at present.

4. I am sorry to say that the schools of our city are not participating in the school-lunch program. I feel the program is a good thing if facilities for carrying it on are present.

5. We have been able, with the help of Federal subsidies, to serve from 140 to 170 rural boys and girls who are attending our high school with a hot lunch consisting of a vegetable, meat or a meat substitute, bread and butter, a dessert, and milk, for 15 cents. If we had to finance this lunch ourselves, we would have to charge at least 35 cents to make ends meet. About 90 percent of our rural children participate in this hot-lunch program, and I feel that it has been an excellent thing. I am very much in favor of the continuance of this program.

6. We have conducted these programs just as before when Government aid was not available, but now receive $300 to $400 per month from the Government as a subsidy. This covers more than the usual increase due to increased labor and food costs. We do not use Government subsidized food in any of the six school domestic science rooms. As far as the need of Government aid goes for our city, we could get along just as well without it. We realize that other cities have their baskets out to catch whatever may drop from heaven, so our basket is out, too.

7. I wish to state that a program promoting better nutrition for school children is both desirable and needed. The county nurse, supervising teacher, and I should like to go on record as favoring the continuance of the school-lunch program. However, for best results as a school activity, we feel that its administration should be through each State department of public instruction rather than through an agency apart from the schools, as I believe it has been in the past. Our latest records show that 59 of the 84 schools in the county have, in varying degrees, promoted participation in hot-lunch programs.

8. The public grade schools of our city are using for the second year the Government penny-milk program. In this project pupils pay a penny a day toward the cost of a half pint bottle of milk. The balance of the cost is distributed between the board of education and the Government. This project is worth while, especially in those cities in which the board of education could not carry the whole load. In the high school we took part in the surplus commodities program as long as that program continued, and felt in general it enabled us to help feed some children who would otherwise not get a good lunch. My reaction in general is that the idea of helping school systems to give suitable lunches to pupils is fundamentally sound. My criticism of the program as now conducted is that the set-up is too complicated, involves too much red tape, and is too narrowly applied.

9. I wish to advise you that we feel the school-lunch program is worthy of continuance.

10. We have had a milk program at our school this year which has been quite successful. About 200 children are participating in the program. We do not offer any other lunch program. We have tried to do that but the children of our community have not been interested in it and it seems that parents do not particularly like to have a hot lunch. We are anxious, however, to sponsor such a program.

11. We have sponsored the school-milk program, but have not served lunches. There have been no problems involved, and we consider the distribution of milk successful and quite favorable.

12. Personally, I do not favor the program as it has been operated in the past. I believe, too, that this opinion would be shared by the majority of parents, teachers, and children of our county. The schools under my jurisdiction are all rural or small village situations. There are already three or four local organizations that are working in the interests of proper nutrition and school lunches. These organizations are: My own office, the home demonstration agent, and the county nurse's office. Besides these, there are local organizations such as P. T. A. that sponsor lunch programs. Few of our schools have facilities for preparing lunches according to the Federal program of the past. One-room schools need kitchens and utensils to carry on the program. These are unobtainable at present. We feel that this is a local problem. We also believe that our boys and girls are well fed and healthy.

13. We have used the Federal school-lunch program for several years and find it highly satisfactory. We serve about 150 pupils each noon and the parents are very happy about the arrangement.

14. The public schools in our city participated in a school-lunch program for a year or two during the depths of the depression. As soon as the employment situation improved, we no longer took advantage of this Federal program. Frankly, I cannot see why the Federal Government should underwrite a program of this kind during good or even normal times. When there was a large surplus of foodstuffs and fathers were out of work and unable to buy the proper foods, I believe that we were justified in receiving this Federal aid in the form of a school-lunch program. I cannot justify the program at any other time.

15. May I say that throughout the elementary grades our schools have participated about 90 percent in the school-lunch program. In the junior and senior high schools the participation has been about 33⅓ percent, consisting primarily of those from rural areas and those in town living a considerable distance from school. I am quite positive that the lunch program has increased the number taking milk by quite a considerable amount and has also provided hot lunches for a number of students who otherwise would not take lunches. For these reasons I believe that once having been started, it should be continued—at least for the duration of the war. In general, I am opposed to the Government doing this type of thing, or rather was opposed to it at the time it started, but like so many other services which the Government renders, once it is begun it is almost impossible to discontinue, and I doubt that it could be discontinued now without serious results. My second reason for believing that it should be continued is that it seems to me that so much money is being wasted and spent so foolishly by the Government that the expenditures of a little more for a type of program which provides food for many needy individuals is probably as wise a use of public money as can be made.

Mr. Speaker, I am offering these quotations from letters received on this subject in order to demonstrate the wide variety of opinion with respect to this program. I think it is fair to say on the basis of the replies received that the opinion is generally shared that the program has been worth while and should be continued.

Farm Security Administration

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BROOKS HAYS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter and an article from the Atlanta Constitution of May 13, 1944:

EMERGENCY COMMITTEE FOR FOOD PRODUCTION,
Washington, D. C., May 20, 1944.

Hon. BROOKS HAYS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN HAYS: The Emergency Committee for Food Production, whose sponsors are representatives from the following organizations: National Child Labor Committee; American Federal of Labor; National Board of the Y. W. C. A.; National Catholic Rural Life Conference; Association of Railway Labor Executives; National Consumers League; Congress of Industrial Organizations; National Farmers Union; National Federation of Settlements; Domestic Mission, Protestant Episcopal Church; and other men and women prominent in church and civic affairs makes this request of you.

Please have inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the attached article on the Farm Security Administration by Mr. Ralph McGill. Mr. McGill is the editor of the Atlanta Constitution and this article appeared in his paper on May 13.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. M. E. TILLY,
Acting Director.

A House committee in Congress has recommended abolition of the F. S. A. (Farm Security Administration), the one Government agency with the fewest mistakes to its credit and the most successes; the one agency which has sincerely devoted itself to those covered in the original statement about "the forgotten man."

In all States, more especially in the Southern States, the landless family, destitute, ragged, sick, shiftless, "no-accounts" were familiar figures.

The F. S. A. found that these people were, for the most part, of good Anglo-Saxon stock and could be rehabilitated. Many could, and have, become farm owners.

Now comes the House committee recommending abolition. It states that the F. S. A. actually controls its clients to the extent of telling them "how to raise his children" and "how to plan his home life."

Well, my goodness, we should hope so.

A great many housewives go to housekeeping, homemaking schools to learn how to manage their home life. It is an important thing to know. The tenant family should be no exception.

The F. S. A. prides itself that by teaching its families how to raise their children, by caring for diet and schooling, the children have ceased to be sickly and "dull." They make grades as good as any other children and their health is as good.

In other words, the families become assets, not liabilities.

They become citizens, not charges.

The plain truth is, the foes of the F. S. A., who do not want the so-called little people helped, have seized on a few errors and on a few catchword phrases in an effort to destroy it. It is to be hoped that Congress will not be led astray and burn down the barn to kill a few mice.

THE RECORD

Only stubborn prejudice or greed can face the F. S. A. record and not admit that it has worked and is working. The records for 1943, showing increases over 1942, record one of the finest contributions made to the war insofar as food is concerned.

The survey represented 311,880 active standard rehabilitation borrowers of the Farm Security Administration who operated farms both in 1942 and 1943. They constitute about 5.1 percent of all farmers. Total sales of livestock and livestock products in 1943 from the farms of these families, and the percent increase over their sales in 1942 were:

Hogs, 532,361,500 pounds; 56-percent increase.

Cattle and calves, 432,360,700 pounds; 43 percent.

Sheep, 62,777,800 pounds; 30 percent.

Milk, 571,116,000 gallons; 18 percent.

Chickens, 66,069,700 pounds; 47 percent.

Eggs, 126,333,300 dozen; 32 percent.

In addition, these families produced for home use 149,146,500 pounds of hogs, 29,371,100 pounds of cattle and calves, 1,049,900 pounds of sheep, 163,089,200 gallons of milk, 35,683,000 pounds of chickens, and 42,916,200 dozen eggs.

In the principal war-needed food and oil crops, the total production in 1943 and the percentage increases over 1942 were:

Soybeans, 5,049,200 bushels; 37-percent increase.

Peanuts, 156,776,400 pounds; 22 percent.

Dry beans and black-eyed peas, 84,185,000 pounds; 15 percent.

Irish potatoes, 20,996,800 bushels; 65 percent.

Sweetpotatoes, 5,972,700 bushels; 14 percent.

In the name of the best interests of this country; in the name of common decency and honesty, what do they want the F. S. A. clients to do?

Until the Congress can answer, those opposing the F. S. A. must stand convicted of caring only for the persons who would keep the tenant farmer and the sharecropper in the status of a laborer instead of helping make him a landowner and a citizen in the real meaning of the word.

Polish Government Misuses United States Funds

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EMANUEL CELLER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, the Polish government in exile has misused funds received from the United States Government, according to reliable information which has reached me.

These funds were turned over to the Polish Government for the specific purpose of supporting the underground movement in Poland against the Nazi occupation forces. These funds were turned over in United States currency to the Polish Government. It is now established that at least part of these funds never left the United States. The Polish Government violated the agreement to use the funds exclusively within Poland when it diverted the funds to finance activities within the United States.

Fifty-dollar and one-hundred-dollar bills, part of the funds earmarked for Poland's underground workers, have been found circulating within the United States. According to the agreement between the Polish Government and the United States, this currency was to be carried by Polish diplomatic pouch to London and from London through Polish Government channels into Poland. The presence of these bills in the United States is a clear-cut violation of its agreement with our Government.

Already there is evidence that the activities of the Polish Government in the United States are illegal. This is not the only case where the Polish Government-in-exile has violated the laws of the United States. For example, when officers of the Department of Justice recently examined the books of the Polish Information Center in New York, they discovered that that agency was paying out funds to American citizens and to an American organization not registered with the Department of Justice as foreign agents.

Furthermore, the Justice officials discovered that the Polish Information Center was spending sums far in excess of the moneys they had reported to our authorities.

The Polish Government maintains a huge propaganda machine in the United States. In addition to the Polish Information Center, the Polish Government supports several press agencies, subsidizes a number of publications, uses its consulates in the United States for propaganda purposes, and even goes so far as to have operating on American soil a military intelligence of its own.

It has been apparent for some time that these instruments of the Polish Government have created confusion and promoted disunity among our people.

In the light of these developments: First. The huge propaganda machine maintained within the United States; second, the payment of funds to American citizens not registered in accordance with the law; third, the diversion of American moneys to purposes in violation of the aforesaid agreement, it is indisputably clear that an explanation is very much in order and must be forthcoming.

A Myth Exploded

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. STEPHEN A. DAY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. DAY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Fort Wayne (Ind.) News-Sentinel of May 19, 1944:

A MYTH EXPLODED

The gratuitous prattle of most advocates of so-called "international cooperation" regularly features the theme, the utterly mythical theme, that the United States withdrew from the world after World War No. 1, and decided to crawl into a shell and to go it alone.

One of these globalist pleaders, the other day, said: "After the other war, we refused to take any part in any program of international agreement and cooperation designed to stop future wars."

The plain facts of history will prove that that simply is not so.

But our globalists, taking a leaf from Hitler's Mein Kampf, seem in innumerable instances committed to der fuehrer's theory that any falsehood will be believed if it is only big enough and is repeated often enough.

Now, we hate to see any really well-intentioned person fall for any such falsehood as is embodied in the globalists' myth of American isolation after World War No. 1.

So we avail ourselves of this opportunity to list a few elementary historical facts which, together, refute all such contentions.

Surely America was not going it alone when she took a prominent part in promoting the far-eastern settlements embodied in the Washington treaties of 1922. Those settlements were unquestionably faulty. But we were not standing aloof from the deliberations which produced them. And we made a reasonably earnest effort to reduce the faultiness to a minimum.

Nor were Americans "going it alone" when they committed themselves to the administrative and territorial integrity of China, some 20 years ago. It is open to debate whether such American commitments should have been made, but it is not open to debate that they were made.

Nor was this country "standing aloof from world affairs" when it gave Europe the Dawes plan, the Young plan, and the Hoover debt moratorium to ease the harsh burdens imposed under the unrealistic settlements made at Versailles.

Could anybody honestly or sanely contend that Americans were "isolationists" when they gave as no other nation on earth, to relieve famine and to bring aid to the victims of other disasters in China, Russia, Armenia, Greece, Japan, and other countries?

Was America being "isolationistic" when millions upon millions of her people's dollars were loaned for investment in all sorts of developments in foreign lands?

And how about America's firm stand against Jap aggression in Manchuria—a much firmer stand than was taken by any other nation on earth?

And how about our initiative in the advocacy of sanctions against Italy when Mussolini invaded Ethiopia, in the midst of Anglo-French dickerings with Il Duce, which evolved the Hoare-Laval agreement?

Was President Franklin D. Roosevelt guilty of a misstatement when, with unconcealed pride, he declared, just a few short years ago:

"Today the United States is cooperating openly in the fuller utilization of the League of Nations machinery than ever before"?

Was the President guilty of "isolationism" when he immediately followed up that statement with this one:

"We are not members of the League; and we do not contemplate membership. We are giving cooperation to the League in every matter which is not primarily political and in every matters which obviously represents the views of the good of the peoples of the world, as distinguished from the views of the good of political leaders, of privileged classes, and of imperialist aims."

Was President Roosevelt guilty of building an evil "Chinese wall" around America when he declared:

"Political profit, personal prestige, and national aggrandizement attended the birth of the League of Nations and handicapped it from its infancy."

As for the stupidly sentimental argument that America, by declining to get mixed up in the League's promotion of imperialist power politics, made Hitler the military menace that he ultimately became, let London's liberal-internationalist journal the New Statesman and Nation bear witness that "the power of Britain and France in Europe was absolute."

They could have stopped Hitler cold if they had had a mind to do so. They could have stopped him before he ever got a good start.

Let the London globalist magazine, above quoted, speak further:

"Until Hitler reoccupied the Rhineland in 1936 (3 years after he came to power) the combined powers of the League could have kept Germany disarmed without adding a gun to their armaments. They failed to do so, not for lack of arms, but because they preferred a strong Germany as a bulwark against the Soviet Union. No one doubts today that, in 1935, they could have upset the ramshackle empire of Mussolini if they had desired. In fact, however, they approved fascism and praised the words of the Duce."

Indeed, those praises were widely echoed in America—even in Fort Wayne, if you please—by leaguist ladies and gentlemen who now, however, declare that if we had only been members of the League we could have thwarted the aggressions of dictators whom they once admired.

And these same ladies and gentlemen now praise the Roosevelt-Hull philosophy of foreign policy and fanatically support New Deal globalism—neglectful of the fact that Mr. Roosevelt himself once said that we were not isolationists except insofar as we strove to isolate ourselves from foreign wars and intrigues.

As for the Europeans, he said, and said wisely—

"We want to help them all that we can; but they have understood very well that help is going to be confined to moral help, and that we are not going to get tangled up with their troubles in the days to come."

Well, we did get tangled up, but it was not because we had ever been isolationists.

Let's get that straight—once and for all!

In All Fairness

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN J. COCHRAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, May 18, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE] spoke in reference to a newspaper article and picture that depicted two men pouring gallons of milk down the drain in Atlanta, Ga. I saw the picture, and on the side of the picture was a smaller one showing a child starved to death, lying in a gutter in India. That picture was published in the Washington Daily News. In Saturday's Daily News was an editorial on the subject, and under the title "In All Fairness" the picture was published again, together with an editorial from the Atlanta (Ga.) Journal of May 16. I commend the Washington Daily News and Atlanta Journal for showing that no Government agency was responsible for this.

Under the permission granted me, I include the editorial as part of my remarks:

Perhaps you saw these two pictures in our paper last Wednesday in dramatic juxtaposition; milk being dumped in Atlanta, and a child starved to death, lying in a gutter, in India. They were an obvious and ironical commentary on the limitations of human society and our over-all human stupidity, so we said in the caption, "Write your own editorial * * *." Well, Representative GEORGE GILLIE, Republican, Indiana, did yesterday, on the House floor, taking as his text a line in the caption which stated that the milk dumping followed an O. D. T. order forbidding Sunday deliveries. We don't know how deeply Representative GILLIE has inquired into the matter, but we don't want to be guilty of causing any misapprehension on his part or your part. Therefore, we print below an editorial from the Atlanta Journal of May 16, commenting on the event.

POURING OUT MILK

The pouring into the gutter of 1,000 gallons of milk Monday afternoon was an act of propaganda. It was a stunt planned and carried out in the intention of shocking public sensibilities and modifying or controlling public opinion.

All the circumstances of the act confirmed the fact. Signs were to be prepared and displayed indicting the Office of Defense Transportation for responsibilities for the wanton waste. The act was to be performed in front of the O. D. T. offices. Newspapers were informed.

The fact that the act was made a sort of Roman holiday, the fact that it was executed with the glee of a press agent staging a publicity stunt can hardly add to the dignity and the worthiness of the position taken by the Milk Producers' Confederation.

The essence of the conflict of opinion and of will is this: The Office of Defense Transportation nearly 2 years ago laid down rules governing the delivery of milk. Retail deliveries were confined to every other day; Sunday deliveries by wholesalers were banned.

The purpose of the Nation-wide order was to conserve tires and manpower.

On the whole, the Nation-wide order has worked well. There has been tremendous conservation of rubber and manpower.

The Georgia Milk Producers Confederation, a cooperative enterprise, which has served its members with considerable effectiveness, has been insisting for several months that the no-Sunday delivery works a special hardship on it and has sought to have the Nation-wide regulation excepted from application to it. The O. D. T. has held protracted and presumably thorough investigations and reports that "the milk cooperative has made no effort to rearrange its delivery schedules and operating practices in an effort to conform to the O. D. T. order."

The O. D. T. further says that "every major processor in Atlanta has informed the O. D. T. that they would gladly take a portion of any surplus milk at current market and ceiling prices."

The milk producers, on the one hand, and the O. D. T. on the other have one duty far more important than self-interest. That duty is to serve the good of the public.

How that good may be served in the present controversy is a matter to be determined by cooperative action and by the elimination of anger and stubbornness. Certainly it is not served by such an exhibition as was staged in Atlanta Monday afternoon.

Said Representative GILLIE: "This horrible occurrence must not be repeated. I am not frequently moved by an almost uncontrollable rage, but I can find no other words to express my reaction—reaction to two pictures I am sure you all noticed. * * * The caption said the milk was being destroyed because orders of O. D. T. forbade Sunday delivery, and it stated further that this 1-day milk ration would have provided a quart of milk for 4,000 children. What can be the reaction of the country * * * to build up food-production goals they have been called to meet, when they learn of such outrageous waste brought about by Government red tape and regulations? Surely, someone with common horse sense could have found a way to use this milk."

Well, the News also has been told that a Government official in Atlanta offered to dispose of the so-called surplus milk on a few minutes' notice, but the cooperative refused, and insisted on staging its dumping show.

Our pictorial commentary still stands, of course; its a lopsided world when children starve as milk is dumped. However, the Atlanta Journal seems to be pretty sure the O. D. T. isn't the sole villain in the piece, to put it mildly.

Veterans and Closed Shops

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THAD F. WASIELEWSKI

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. WAISIELEWSKI. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Milwaukee Journal of May 20, 1944:

VETERANS AND CLOSED SHOPS

The House rejected an amendment to the G. I. veterans' rehabilitation bill intended to free the returning veteran of the necessity of ever becoming a member of a labor union in order to get a job. The amendment would have permitted a veteran to hold a job in a closed shop without joining the union—in other words, without meeting the conditions which every other worker there had to meet.

If the closed shop is not sound socially and economically, then it should be unlawful for labor to demand or the employer to grant such a contract, and then no man should be required to join a union to get any job, or to hold it.

But if we sanction a closed shop anywhere, under any conditions, then the veteran should meet the union requirements in that shop as any other employee does. The veteran is entitled to aid in his rehabilitation and certain preferential treatment from the Government that called him to service, but when he again becomes a civilian, dealing with other civilians, he cannot expect, and we think does not expect, to live and work under an entirely different set of rules.

The House was sound in defeating this anti-labor amendment, because it was one of the many wrong ways that have been proposed to pay our debt to the servicemen. We must never set up two classes of citizenship in America.

Rent Control

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ERRETT P. SCRIVNER

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to insert excerpts from a letter written by J. F. McCarty, of Ottawa, Kans., together with an editorial and news items from the Ottawa (Kans.) Herald, calling attention to the effect of rent control as it is being administered in that community.

Attention is invited especially to the inequalities as between privately owned properties and housing facilities constructed by the Federal Housing Administration. In one instance the revenue from rentals for 10 months are required to pay the cost of repairs alone, to say nothing of taxes, insurance, and other expenses; but public housing properties which are being built to be sold for but $6,000 are renting in a nearby community for $50 per month.

As is indicated in the excerpts from the letter which are here inserted, agents of the O. P. A. all over the country are admitting to the owners of properties that ceilings are too low but that they are powerless to afford any relief. If that authority does not now exist it would seem appropriate that the Congress grant the authority in the legislation now being considered to extend the life of the O. P. A. If O. P. A. can order the reduction of rentals to conform to its determination of the fair rental in the area where property is located, it should likewise have authority to order an increase of rentals where because of extraordinary circumstances the existing rental is below that fair rental.

The letter, editorial, and news items follow:

OTTAWA, KANS., May 16, 1944.

Hon. ERRETT P. SCRIVNER,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SCRIVNER: Enclosed are articles from the local paper here which will give you some idea of our situation relative to housing conditions.

As probably has been called to your mind, we were caught by the O. P. A. ceiling rent situation with the lowest rents in this part of the State, so far as we have been able to learn. Labor was short here after the shops were moved, factory closed down, and we could take what people offered for properties or let them set idle. So houses were anyway 25 percent below any other like town in this part of the State when the ceiling came on.

We had been advised to paper, roof, repair and make the places attractive for the tenants who were to come here as the result of the plant at De Soto. Many did that and then we were not permitted to get rent comparable to the improvements.

Other towns have been given priorities for units and have made such improvements. In most cases the rents are so much higher than we can get here that people continue to live here and go 35 to 40 miles to work.

People who have places for rent are holding them, when vacant, for sale, and the situation is becoming acute. I had the house here where the O. P. A. rentman went in with a pass key, and we did not like that sort of thing.

To be specific, I have a good 6-room house on North Main, full bath up, half down, half basement, double garage, screen in back porch, on which the ceiling is $15. I spent $133.39 this year to home some repairs and improve the accommodations, and the O. P. A. cannot grant any increase. These men admit there is an injustice there but they have no power to remedy it. What we want to know is, where do we have an appeal? Is it possible that some set of men can set up a regulation and admit there is injustice, yet we have no recourse? Can our Congress give us no relief? I realize this is a small matter to be considered while you men have such problems as you do to handle with reference to the war and home problems, but when there is money to be raised they ask us for our proportion just the same as the other places.

In a block here are two houses: One, the more desirable house, with a ceiling of $15; the other, which was occupied by the owner when the ceiling was put on. The owner worked with the O. P. A. and finally got a top of $40. Accommodations are not anything like—yet the difference in rent income. Both houses are priced for sale now at practically the same dollar.

Is there no place for us to appeal?

Very truly,

J. F. MCCARTY.

UNFAIR RENT CONTROL

Under Secretary of War Patterson has gone to bat before Congress against a change in current rent regulations "which might involve weakened controls over rents and evictions." He says it would endanger the Nation's wartime price structure and adversely affect War Department interests.

The owners of rental properties in thousands of communities like Ottawa have no quarrel with the principle of rent control. But they have had a grievance since the start of rent control against abuse of the principle to the point of depriving many of them of a fair income. It is the red tape and unjust administration of rent control that has brought the demand for easing the restrictions. When a property owner is prevented from increasing rents to permit of a just increase of income to offset improvements and maintenance, he has a right to kick. There ought to be some way of enforcing rent control without forcing the property owner to close his property or sell it short to avoid further loss. A property owner under the democratic system certainly is entitled to a hearing of his grievances, but under rent control he is ignored. His petitions are pigeonholed. Those who boast of how they hold down prices during this war hadn't better have the nerve to mention the autocratic manner in which they have administered rent control.

TO BUILD 33 NEW HOMES IN TOPEKA

TOPEKA, KANS.—Authorization for priorities for the building of 33 new homes at a total cost of $198,000, to be occupied by essential war workers, was granted by the Federal Housing Administration. The houses will be of the 5-room bungalow type, built of frame construction, and will be 33 by 24 feet. The cost will be $6,000 each. Ten will be offered for sale to war workers at $6,000 each. The rest will be rented for a ceiling price of $50 per month.

O. P. A. COMPLICATES RENT SITUATION

Low rent ceilings, imposed by the O. P. A., which is causing many owners to sell, has complicated the problem of finding homes to rent, according to Ottawa realtors. The O. P. A. rule giving the renter 90 days before he has to move after the house he occupies is sold adds to complications.

Martin Strafuss, of the Mansfield Land Co., pointed out that owners who have brought their grievances to him contend that the costs of maintaining houses have doubled, while low rent ceiling prices have been set by the O. P. A. Reasoning that they must rent the house at an infinitely small profit—if not at an actual loss—the owners say the only way they can get value received for the house is to sell it.

Justice J. F. McCarty said rent cases before him in justice court have increased about 75 percent since the first of the year. Before O. P. A. rules entangled themselves with Kansas rent laws, cases of that kind were completed within 10 days on most occasions, McCarty said, and cited a recent case that went on for weeks because of continuances. He pointed out that stubborn renters can drop behind on rent payments during the 90-day interval and that the owner may have to bring the case to justice court before getting the rent, while he is still unable to evict the renter.

In the final analysis, Strafuss said that most of the renters and owners do not blame one another. The renter usually finds it difficult to find another place and, in some cases, circumstances do not warrant the purchase of a home. The owner, realizing that he may rent the house at a loss, often close it up until he finds a buyer. Observers say that several men in the armed forces who rent homes near their camps and move their wives and families there close up the vacant homes here in order to avoid the rent mix-up.

Observers commented that the population probably will not decrease, due to the fact that workers at the Sunflower ordnance plant near De Soto prefer to live in Ottawa, where the prices of rent, food, clothing, and utilities are at reasonable low levels.

Servicemen's Benefits

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM H. STEVENSON

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article written by me, which was published in the Republican Journal, Darlington, Wis., for May 4, 1944:

WASHINGTON NEWS FROM OUR CONGRESSMAN WILLIAM H. STEVENSON

SERVICEMEN'S BENEFITS—PROVIDE TRAINING FOR DISABLED VETERANS

In a series of articles appearing in this column during the next few weeks, I propose to outline what Congress has done for our men in the service, their families, and their dependents. In this news letter I wish to discuss servicemen's benefits and training for disabled veterans. Preference should and will be extended to veterans, whether disabled or not, by both public and private employers. As a matter of public conscience, over 11,000,000 of our young men and women cannot be taken from their normal pursuits and asked to make every kind of sacrifice and then be cast aside to shift for themselves, deprived of previous jobs and new opportunities after the war has been won.

FEDERAL PLEDGE

The Selective Training and Service Act specifies that persons who have left positions in the Federal service and have entered the armed forces shall be restored to the positions they left or to like positions of seniority status, and pay. This is the obligation of every appointing officer of any Federal agency and there is no question that this obligation will be carried out conscientiously and honestly. The act specifies that the veteran who formerly worked for the Government has a right to return to his old position or to a position with similar seniority, status, and pay, if he is still qualified to perform the duties of such position.

NEW TRAINING

This means that in many instances disabled veterans will have to be trained to do things which they have never done before. Fortunately, this training will be provided by several agencies; for instance, the Veterans' Administration through its vocational rehabilitation program, which is already functioning in Wisconsin, the Federal Security Agency, the Army, the Navy, and the War Manpower Commission. All these are by law required to see to it that the disabled veteran is given some type of special training to utilize his skills and background in the best possible manner so that the veteran may take up his peacetime way of living without serious disruption. Other enabling laws will doubtless simplify and coordinate these efforts. For some time past, the Civil Service Commission has been working on the rehabilitation phase of the veteran's problem. Over 2,500 different positions in the Government embracing millions of job opportunities have been examined and surveyed to find out what jobs can be filled by handicapped persons.

This survey has disclosed just what abilities and what faculties are needed in particular jobs. Already civilian persons who are handicapped, have been placed in many of these positions on the basis of war-service appointments, and there is no question that these people are making a magnificent contribution to our war effort. Since October 1942, more than 15,000 physically handicapped persons have been placed in the Federal Government as the result of this special rehabilitation activity of the Civil Service Commission.

REAL SERVICE

There is no question but that our disabled veterans will be able to take over these and many other positions in the Federal Government without interfering with the status of faithful and efficient regular employees. Armed with factual information obtained by various surveys, the Commission will be in a position to render real service to all former Government employees who have been disabled as a result of their war service. The Government will work with the handicapped veteran in finding jobs which can be filled by persons with the abilities and faculties which he possesses, even though he may be regarded at the same time by the Veterans' Administration as a physically handicapped person. There is no question but that the handicapped veteran will be given preferential treatment once it has been demonstrated that as a result of special training he can do the job required. Appointing officers who pass over veterans must now submit in writing their reasons for so doing.

It is evident that in pursuance of long-established congressional policies our administrative practices are being shaped to accord to returning veterans, especially the disabled, decisive preferences and widespread employment opportunities for training and placement.

Please direct your inquiries for further detailed information to the United States Civil Service Commission, the Veterans' Administration, your county veterans' service officer, or write to me, Congressman WILLIAM H. STEVENSON, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

A Strike Helps the Dairymen

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THAD F. WASIELEWSKI

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. WASIELEWSKI. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Milwaukee Journal of May 20, 1944:

A STRIKE HELPS THE DAIRYMEN

Last October, A. F. of L. union employees of Milwaukee dairies asked the War Labor Board to authorize certain wage increases which already had employer approval. On Thursday the regional W. L. B. at Chicago granted the raises, retroactive for 6 months. The decision, so long delayed, finally came only after a strike by some of the dairy workers in protest at the failure of the W. L. B. to act.

Why does it happen so often that strikes bring decisions more quickly from this War Labor Board? Why is it that the Board permits itself to get into a situation where the strike, which should be definitely banned for the duration, remains the one seemingly effective weapon that labor has?

Admittedly the War Labor Board has more work than it can handle. Despite real effort, it has been getting further behind every month. But does it have to penalize those who play the game by giving first attention to situations where a strike is in progress or is threatened? And if it must, does it have to reward the strikers by making their pay raises retroactive to the time the petition for wage adjustment was filed?

It seems to us proper that a general policy should be developed whereby, in the final adjustment of wage cases, a retroactive adjustment would be made only if the petitioners had a record of uninterrupted work during the period needed for investigation and decision.

If it were generally understood that existence of a strike would not speed decision, and that it would operate to bar recovery of raises back to the date of application, then the strike, instead of being the effective pressure it now is, would become the liability it should be in time of war.

In most cases the strikers now lose nothing from having struck. In most cases they gain at least to the extent of having a more immediate adjudication of their demands. If we are serious in our desire to bar striking for the duration, we certainly are not showing it in the way we handle these cases.

Life Insurance in America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. VICTOR WICKERSHAM

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, here is how America's 68,000,000 owners of life insurance are helping to preserve the financial health of every American, whether or not he is a policyholder.

First, they are fighting rising prices. By putting their wartime money into life insurance they are doing one of the things our Government recommends. They are making their dollars work for our national welfare instead of spending them on today's scarce civilian goods. Spending in wartime makes prices go up like bidding does at an auction and rising prices mean "less and less for your money."

Then, too, in behalf of these policyholders and the general public, life insurance companies in America last year published messages every 2 weeks in newspapers throughout the entire country. These messages showed what makes prices go up and what every American could do to help keep prices down.

This fight against run-away prices has been won thus far, and the American public deserves much praise for the sensible way it is handling its wartime money. But the danger of rising prices is still with us and even more critical days may be ahead unless every citizen continues this fight.

Besides helping to keep wartime prices down, these 68,000,000 policyholders are making important social and economic contributions to America through their life insurance. Here is the simplified story of how these contributions benefit you and your country.

Life insurance owned:

1939	113,977,000,000

This is the greatest financial security ever achieved by any people in the world through their own initiative. However, fine as this record is, it can still be greatly improved because the amount of life insurance owned in 1943 was only about as much as the national income for that year.

HOW LIFE INSURANCE DIVIDES UP

Number of policy holders:

1943	68,000,000
1942	67,000,000

In 1943 an average of $65 per person was put into this form of protection. When you stop to think that each of these 68,000,000 policyholders named one or more beneficiaries, then you begin to grasp what a great number of people life-insurance benefits directly.

Average amount per policyholder:

1942	1,945

The number of policies for $1,000 or more bought in 1943 was almost one-third larger than in 1942. Americans each year become more aware of their need for more adequate life-insurance protection. Today, America's workers are buying larger life-insurance policies.

Average amount per family:

1942	3,907

Life insurance is constantly being made more available to people in all walks of life through broader and more flexible policies designed to fit every different family need, every set of financial circumstances. This has helped to increase the average amount owned per family.

Life-insurance assets:

1942	34,931,000,000
1939	29,243,000,000

These are funds held by life-insurance companies to guarantee payment of obligations to the policyholders. Meanwhile, they are put to work to earn what they can with safety. This makes your insurance cost less, and provides a flow of money that helps keep up America's standards of living.

HOW THESE ASSETS WORK FOR YOU

In U. S. Government bonds:

1943	$12,730,000,000
1942	9,390,000,000

Over one-third of all life-insurance assets are invested in United States Government bonds. Your life-insurance dollars protect both you and your family and at the same time they also help to provide planes, ships, tanks, and guns for our national security.

In business investments:

1942	10,200,000,000

While life insurance greatly increased its investments in Government bonds, it also increased its investments in business and industry—maintaining its financing aid on the home front for factories, railroads, light and power. These investments improve the public welfare.

In real-estate mortgages:

1942	6,680,000,000

This total shows further how well life insurance maintained its flow of capital into the home front while buying more Government bonds. The balance of assets not pictured here are accounted for in policy loans, State and municipal bonds, real estate, and cash.

Total received by American families:

1942	2,365,000,000

These payments cover the many purposes for which you own life insurance—income, education, retirement, disability, and emergencies. An average of $6,480,000 was paid out every day. These payments plus the increase in policy reserves amounted to about 3 percent more than the total premiums paid in.

HOW THESE TOTAL PAYMENTS WERE DIVIDED

Payments to beneficiaries:

1943	$1,098,000,000
1942	1,003,000,000

Death benefits were paid out on 1,180,000 policies. These payments not only helped the families receiving them; they were also a stabilizing force in your community. Most of this increase was due to the fact that there was a greater amount of life insurance in force.

Living benefits—Disabilities annuities, matured endowments, dividends:

1942	953,000,000

Last year $318,000,000 were paid out on matured endowments alone—$167,000,000 in annuities, $89,000,000 on disability contracts. These payments are "living benefits" that the policyholder himself can make use of and enjoy during his lifetime.

Emergency calls on policy funds:

1942	447,000,000

Every life insurance policy, other than term insurance, develops a cash surrender and loan value that generally increases as the premiums are paid. These values help families confronted by emergencies. This shows that the need for financial aid was less during 1943.

The foregoing figures represent the United States business of over 300 legal reserve life insurance companies in America.

With a Song and With a Smile

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WALTER E. BREHM

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following poem by Horace C. Carlisle:

WITH A SONG AND WITH A SMILE

In these times of war and worry,
To distress and to destroy,
With so much hurrah and hurry,
To disturb and to annoy,
With restrictions interfering
With all business all the while,
Let us help things by veneering
All these troubles with a smile.

In these times of grief and sorrow,
Suffering, and real regret,
Terrified by heartless horror,
Tho "The worst is coming yet"—
So 'tis said—and, tho we fear it
May be true, however wrong,
Let us, from our hearts, veneer it
With a hope-inspiring song.

In these times of lamentations,
That suppress the voice of prayer,
When it seems that all the nations
May be verging on despair,
Thru the rainbow, we inherit
God's own promise, most worth while—
Let's revere it, not veneer it,
With a song and with a smile.

Button Your Lip, Mr. Babson—Tight!

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS G. ABERNETHY
OF MISSISSIPPI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I read with deep concern a succinct editorial which recently appeared in the Memphis Commercial-Appeal. The subject matter is of such extreme importance it should be called to the attention of the people and the Congress particularly. The editorial follows:

BABSON SHOULD EXPLAIN

Roger Babson, well-known economist, wrote in a column printed in the Commercial-Appeal and many other newspapers on or about Friday, May 12, that "Churchill will not let Germany crack until after the November elec' ons. If the European war so continues, there will then be a Republican Congress and a Democratic President. Hence, there is probably no use of now discussing Willkie, Dewey, Bricker, or anyone else. The Republicans' opportunity will come in 1948."

What Mr. Babson has said in effect is that Prime Minister Winston Churchill of Great Britain is keeping Germany in the war against Germany's will. The charge as he phrases it is far worse than it would have been if he had claimed Mr. Churchill was deliberately holding the hand that could crush Germany now, but in either case the indictment is of a gravity that cannot be overestimated. The distinct, inescapable conclusion to be drawn from what Mr. Babson says is that Mr. Churchill is deliberately sacrificing lives, maintaining millions of people in the occupied lands in misery, keeping countless millions of the relatives and friends of allied fighting men in agonized suspense, and needlessly spending substance, all for partisan political advantage.

The Commercial Appeal has never had even the slightest tinge of sympathy with the rumors that have crept about that Mr. Churchill would prolong the war to assure the reelection of President Roosevelt, and it does not believe for one fleeting second that Mr. Roosevelt would be a party to an arrangement for delaying victory, no matter who proposed it or for what end. There is nothing in the record of either man to suggest that they would jointly or severally be guilty of such infamy, and there is every sign that they have worked with every energy to produce a complete allied victory at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Babson should explain the grounds on which he makes this charge, or else he should apologize from the housetops for having made a statement of fearful significance without adequate reasons and irrefutable proof. This indictment of Mr. Churchill should be cleared up one way or the other, and without the loss of a minute.

I thoroughly agree, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Babson should explain. On several occasions I have heard the most verbose utterances made that Prime Minister Churchill and President Roosevelt were acting in concert to deliberately prolong the war for political reasons. The evil, alarming statements are without even the slightest foundation and should be allayed. Undoubtedly they are inspired by underground enemy propaganda for the singular purpose of undermining the Nation's morale. It is to be regretted that some of our people have unwittingly allowed themselves to be duped into the dissemination of such iniquitous gossip.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that I have been no rubber stamp for the President. On several occasions I have found it necessary, in keeping with the dictates of my best judgment, to disagree with him. These statements are not made in a sense of chesty boastfulness. It is a simple truth that there are no two men in the country who see eye to eye on each and all of the thousands of issues which have confronted the Nation, nor will there be any two individuals who will see eye to eye on the thousands of issues that will confront us in the future. That, I repeat, is a simple truth supported by the fact that the Creator of man made no two alike. On the other hand, I have supported and shall continue to support the program for prosecuting the war as outlined by the President, as Commander in Chief, and high military and naval personnel. Who will question the fact that the job to date has been well done? Since it has been well done, whereof is the evidence that the President's or Mr. Churchill's war aims for tomorrow do not point to the same effort and success?

Mr. Speaker, the President has three sons in this war—in uniform; Mr. Churchill one son and two daughters. To say nothing of many other good and sufficient reasons which they, as any other citizen, have for an early victory, but giving consideration only to the inherent fatherly love which they as all men have for their own children—their own flesh and blood—is overwhelmingly sufficient to refute the scandalously smearing charges that they would for even 1 single hour delay the war's end.

Mr. Speaker, a deliberate delay of the war by Mr. Roosevelt or Mr. Churchill for any reason is indeed a very, very grave charge. And when it is charged that they would do so for political reasons that in no sense alleviates the gravity but aggravates it. To drive a wedge between us and our British allies and another between the people of our own land is precisely what loose lip talk of this kind is calculated to do. This is indeed a very dangerous thing. In the first instance, there is not even the slightest foundation for such charges. They are dangerous, damnable falsehoods.

As has been well said, there is every sign that Mr. Churhill and Mr. Roosevelt have worked with every energy to produce a complete allied victory at the earliest possible moment. Results as of this date prove it beyond any peradventure of doubt.

Let these stupid charges against Mr. Churchill and Mr. Roosevelt be allayed.

Yes; let Mr. Babson explain or apologize. Better still, he should button his lip and keep it buttoned—tight!

A Local Citizen Answers Criticisms of the Administration's Policy as to the Japanese

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN M. COFFEE
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Speaker, one of my valued constituents has written me a letter in which he discusses newspaper criticism of the administration's war, domestic, and foreign policies, which is worthy of insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The author of the article discusses the Japanese foreign policy and Japanese history. He reveals a profundity which entitles his views to respect here. Here is the letter:

PUYALLUP, WASH., May 6, 1944.

Hon. JOHN COFFEE,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. COFFEE: DeWitt MacKenzie's War Today column, in a recent issue of the Oregon Daily Journal, Portland, Oreg., advances this view: We must treat with great respect the Mikado of Japan, and be especially careful of our remarks about his Divine Majesty, because he is not only their supreme temporal ruler but the spiritual head of the state, and his people worship him as a divine being. But nevertheless, as far as temporal affairs are concerned, he is a figurehead who only speaks the words put into his mouth by the warmongers of his country, led by Tojo. This religious belief in the divinity of their ruler having become an integral part of their patriotism, Mr. MacKenzie believes that it would be very impolitic to criticiz' him from any angle for that would only make his people and his soldiers venerate him the more and cause them to hate and fight us more fiercely. Also their fraudulent imitation of a God may be very useful to us in helping to educate his people against the evils of militarism which has controlled them for so long. These views he claims are also supported by the British Broadcasting Co., and our own Office of War Information.

However that may be, whoever supports that view is making a serious error in judgment that may well delay and make our victory more costly.

Judging from the treacherous furiosity with which the Japanese have prepared and prosecuted this war, nothing we may do or say can cause them to be more implacable than they have shown themselves to be. The religious beliefs of a people in the true sense of the word have to do with the spiritual aspirations and moral well-being of its followers, and are on a higher plane than the temporal affairs of men. The Mikado of Japan is not the head of a religion, but the hereditary ruler of a nationalistic and racial cult which seeks the domination and exploitation, not only of its own, but of all other peoples. Treachery, robbery, rapine, and murder are the avowed tenets of this cult. When such an organization has grown to be a world menace and we are compelled to go to war with it in our own defense, its leader becomes a major military objective.

There is no evidence that the Mikado is a figure head, but is the active intelligent, aggressive, and willing leader of a militaristic class that has always dominated Japan all down through its long and piratical history ever since its emergence from the darkness of time. Through ages of education to that end, the masses of Japanese do believe that their Mikado is the direct descendant of the Sun Goddess Amaterasu and that he is not only their temporal ruler and the high priest of the nation, but also a god, and as proof thereof they point with fanatical pride to the historical facts that they are the only nation in the world which has been ruled by one unbroken line of rulers for over 2,600 years and that they have never been defeated in war. Why this should be accepted as proof that their Mikado is divine and they the chosen darlings of the gods is not explained. The Japanese also believe that they are destined to rule the world and all other peoples will be as dust under their feet. The fanatically loyal Japanese seek no higher aim in life than to serve their divine master whose commands are their highest law, to lay down their lives at his feet the greatest joy, and their reward, immortality in the palaces of the sun.

Whether the Mikado believes in palaces in the sun we are not informed. He does believe in having palaces on earth, and has one covering 10 acres on the crest of a hill in the heart of Tokyo, where he lives in purpled ease and plots the plunder of his peaceful neighbors. As to using the Mikado as an instrument of educating the Japanese people against the evils of militarism, that can be done best by dropping a few blockbusters on his palace, preferably with him in it, laying his cities in ruins, sinking his fleet, destroying his armies, shooting the last Zero from the sky, and allowing his people to feel the unmeasured wrath of an outraged democracy.

Then, after Tojo and his clique, in an attempt to save face, draw their bejeweled swords and ceremoniously cut their guts out, the Japanese people will have a chance to commence to be civilized, and themselves and the world to profit from the genius of a remarkable people.

Down through all the annals of Nippon, the land of Yamoto, there is not a single gleam of democracy. Learning the first arts of civilization from China, they absorbed none of China's democratic ideals, produced no democratic philosophers of their own, nor learned any of the democracy taught by those immortal teachers of China—Lao Tze and Confucius—but carefully preserved all the paganism of their remote past, presented it to their people of today as their most cherished heritage armed with all the modern weapons of war.

The imperial Empire of Japan is a political monstrosity. It belongs with the prehistoric reptiles of the past, is a menace to the peace of the world and a curse to its people, and its exit is long overdue. Twenty-six hundred years is far too long for it to have encumbered the earth. Anyone who seeks to preserve its very foundation for any purpose is making a grave mistake.

A. E. APPLEGATE.

Price Control Week

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHET HOLIFIELD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the importance of the proper extension of Price Control cannot be exaggerated.

Price Control Week has been launched throughout the country by proclamations from mayors in approximately 50 large cities in the United States, ranging from Hartford, Conn., to Santa Clara, Calif., including St. Louis, Mo.; Kokomo, Ind.; Detroit, Mich.; Camden, N. J.; Minneapolis, Minn., and so forth.

Farmer-Consumer-Labor Committees, whose chief purpose is to see that the Price Control Act is continued without weakening amendments, are organized in such cities as Detroit, Madison, Minneapolis, New York, and so forth.

In my own State the California Farmer-Labor-Consumer Committee to Combat Inflation, having representatives from San Francisco, Alameda, Sonoma, Santa Clara, Fresno, San Bernardino and San Diego Counties includes members of several Granges, American War Mothers, the California State Federation of Labor, Congress of Industrial Organizations, the Townsend Club of Sonoma County, the Western Cooperative Dairymen's Union composed of 3,000 members operating dairies in the San Joaquin Valley. Together they are supporting Price Control Week, and state:

High food prices, even in years of relatively high wages, do not solve farmers' market problems. We oppose every effort to open the floodgates of inflation and favor the policy heretofore adopted by Congress to stabilize all living conditions for the duration.

Observations on the Coming Campaign

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. NOAH M. MASON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker—

THE REAL CAMPAIGN ISSUE

The real issue confronting the voters is centralization of government in Washington versus States' rights and local home rule. This issue cuts across party lines; it overshadows platforms, and it divides voters into two camps. The one camp is composed of voters who believe that our form of government, under which this Nation has achieved a standard of living far above that of any other nation in the world, should be preserved and retained. The other camp believes we should scrap the form of government our fathers established because they claim it is outgrown and no longer usable, and should adopt in its place a collectivist form of government that would provide a planned economy, with regimentation, restriction, and control from Washington, similar to the plan of government now in effect in Russia. We used to call such a philosophy of government socialism or communism, but now it masquerades under the New Deal banner.

The campaign will not be a campaign between Republicans and Democrats as we have known them in the past, but rather it will be a battle royal between those citizens who want a benevolent ruler to look after them and regulate their affairs and those citizens who prefer to govern themselves under our American form of government, based upon the principles of liberty, justice, equality of opportunity, and religious freedom and tolerance, as laid down and defined in the greatest charter of human rights ever written, our Federal Constitution.

During slave days there were a few benevolent slave owners, but that did not make slavery either right or desirable. In olden days there may have been a few benevolent kings, but what American would prefer a kingdom to a republic? There may yet appear upon earth a benevolent dictator, but none of us want to be ruled by one.

Note: The above is an exact quotation from a speech made by me during the campaign of 1936. It is more true today than it was 8 years ago.

DEWEY AND DIRKSEN

I recently attended a dinner conference of some 50 Republican House Members. The group was unanimous in its opinion that Governor Dewey would be nominated for President on the first ballot cast at the Republican Convention. In a discussion of the possible candidate for second place on the ticket, the name of Congressman DIRKSEN was a 9 to 1 favorite. DIRKSEN has initimate knowledge of congressional procedure, has the confidence and respect of the Members of both the House and the Senate, and has perhaps a better grasp of the problems that confront the Nation today than any other Member of Congress. These qualifications, together with the fact that he has a tremendous capacity for work and is unsurpassed as a platform orator, make him the leading contender for second place on the ticket. As Vice President he would insure close cooperation and teamwork between the executive and legislative branches of the Government—something that has been sadly lacking during the past 4 years. Dewey and DIRKSEN would make a great team, an unbeatable team.

Post-War America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday May 22, 1944

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday afternoon, May 21, I addressed the graduating class at Waynesburg College, Waynesburg, Pa. This was the ninety-third graduation exercise of this classic institution of learning. Upon this occasion, I was honored with having conferred upon me the degree of doctor of laws. My remarks to the graduates were as follows:

President Stewart, members of the graduating class and guests, not only am I conscious of the high honor paid me, but I am deeply impressed with the responsibility that comes to the one chosen to deliver parting words to the graduates of this historic and classic institution. As you go forth into a confused and groping world, I hope you may be inspired by a sincerity of purpose and a willingness to freely offer your unselfish service to an age that so sorely needs your vision. I never stand before a graduation class that I do not recall the somewhat impertinent utterances of our educator President, Woodrow Wilson, who to a group of rich young college men once bluntly said:

"Most of you fellows are doomed to obscurity. You will not do anything. You will never try to do anything, and with all the great tasks of the country waiting to be done, probably you are the very men who will decline to do them. Some man who has been up against it, some man who has come out of the crowd, somebody who has had the whip of necessity laid on his back, will emerge out of the crowd, will show that he understands the crowd, understands the interests of the Nation, united and not separated, and will stand up and lead us."

We expect of you much more than that. Today there is the clarion call to you for leadership. Vast, baffling problems challenge us. Problems international and problems domestic—challenges to our political freedom and to our economic security. The future of our country is at stake.

POLITICAL FREEDOM

When our forefathers came to live in this western world they formed a new government, fashioned along new lines. They were primarily concerned with securing and perpetuating political freedom and liberty. There was fresh in their minds at that moment the oppression which they had borne from the rules of the Old World—of an old order—which this New World determined in its heart to throw off forever. So they laid out a pattern of government along broad and comprehensive lines, based upon firm and fundamental principles of right and justice.

Naturally, they were concerned principally with securing for themselves and their offspring the right to choose their own rulers, to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience, the right to trial by jury, due process of law, security of property, freedom of speech, a free press, freedom of the ballot, and, all in all, a government which in its essential principles would be a representative democracy, where the will of the majority of the people should govern in all important matters. In later years we have added to these tenets the rights of labor—the right to bargain collectively and to have the protection of the law against exploitation; freedom of enterprise—the right of a citizen to engage in competitive business, with the assurance from his Government, so far as that assurance can be lawfully given, that he will have a fair break in the scheme of things; the right to work—to labor and to acquire and own property; indeed, the distinctively American right to start at the bottom and go to the top. These are precious rights. Our forefathers fought to attain them, and we fight now to preserve them.

In these essential principles of liberty and freedom and of a representative democracy America has grown and flourished. This temple of representative government, where the will of the people is supreme, stands today in its beauty and grandeur upon the foundation erected by the forefathers without a "pillar fallen or a marble fractured." The blessed heritage of this new political order has been preserved through the years and today America stands in the vanguard of the great nations of the earth as the outstanding shining example of the right and capacity of a people to govern themselves, and in all essential respects to order their own lives.

Today a world conflagration gravely threatens the peace and security of America. We have come to recognize in this disturbance much more than a periodic contest between two contending nations of Europe. We see it as a challenge by the undemocratic, un-Christian dictators against the Christian democracies. In the outcome of this epochal struggle the fate of liberty and freedom among the peoples of the earth may well depend.

STATUS OF THE WAR

At this critical period in the world conflict, Americans can feel a sense of satisfaction that our armies in every theater of the struggle are making a great contribution to its successful conclusion. As we look forward to the day of final victory we are cheered. If we look backward, we see a tortuous path over which we have struggled to our present state of high perfection, against great difficulties and handicaps. It is not the time nor place to talk too much of the past, but one cannot help recall that almost every effort of our farsighted leaders to prepare America prior to Pearl Harbor met the most stubbon and persistent opposition. We have overcome those difficulties and have practically accomplished the impossible. In the raising of an army and navy, the building of merchant and battleships, the manufacture of munitions and war supplies, and in the production and transportation of food, America has set a record that history will record as phenomenal. It is a tribute to the unity and spirit of our people.

WAR AND PEACE

We are impressed at every turn of the road with the unspeakable horror of war. Its pathway down the years has been strewn with the wreckage of men and nations. Its blighting breath has withered the hopes and aspirations of mankind. Its mailed fist has impeded progress and has destroyed morale. It is the only game at which men play where everyone is the loser. Ever in its wake there is devastation, suffering, heartaches, and death. Therefore, we turn with eyes lifted heavenward and with a fervent prayer upon our lips for the dawning of that blessed day when the battle flags will be furled, and when the war-weary nations of the earth will turn away from their killing and destruction and set about again upon the slow and tedious process of rebuilding the world.

The ideal of peace is comforting. The millennium would be here if we could banish the cause of war. If we could expel from the hearts of men and nations jealousies, thirst for power and territory, and ancient hatreds and intolerance, no doubt there would dawn the day when men could live together in peace and tranquility. That would be a glorious era. Until, however, we can remove these causes and irritations we must be prepared to protect ourselves. The poet has said, "Only he deserves liberty who is prepared to win it for himself every day."

"FREEDOM

"O freedom! Thou are not, as poets dream,
A fair young girl with light and delicate limbs,
And wavy tresses gushing from the cap
With which the Roman master crowned his slave
When he took off the gyves. A bearded man,
Armed to the teeth, art thou; one mailed hand
Grasps the broad shield and one the sword; Thy brow,
Glorious in beauty tho' it be, is scarred
With tokens of old wars; thy massive limbs
Are strong with struggling. Oh, not yet
May'st thou unbrace thy corselet nor lay by Thy sword; nor yet, O freedom, close thy lids
In slumber; for thine enemy never sleeps,
And thou must watch and combat 'till the day
Of the new earth and heaven."

Now let us turn to the home front for a moment:

FISCAL AFFAIRS

"Peace hath her problems no less renowned than War."

American citizens would be most shortsighted, and those of us in authority would be derelict in our duty if we did not feel grave concern over the fiscal status of America from now on out. We will emerge from this war with a stupendous debt, probably $300,000,000,000, most of which went for war purposes, but it's a debt just the same. We will have outstanding billions of dollars in War bonds. These solemn obligations of the Government will be found in banks and in the lock boxes of our citizens in every walk of life. In many cases they will constitute the life savings of the individual. Any impairment of these bonds or Government obligations would be a shock to the financial structure of the Nation of the most far-reaching and disastrous proportions. We must not let that occur. In addition to the above, we will be called upon in the post-war period, certainly for years to come, to support and maintain a military establishment, for our security, vastly larger than anything we have ever had in peacetime. This will call for large expenditures. All of this points up to one conclusion—we must cut down the overhead costs of government; war agencies must be liquidated immediately the war is over: regular Government establishments must be streamlined and curtailed; we must stop the parade to the Public Treasury; we must insist upon the States assuming their fair and proper proportion of the responsibility and costs of social and reform activities. We must not only talk about these things, we must do something about it. If we should fail in this duty, in my judgment, chaos and disaster will come upon our people. We will for a while stagger along under a back-breaking tax burden and then finally collapse under its weight. With that collapse, we will see again long lines of the unemployed asking for work when there is none. Again, we will hear in the market place and on the farm the chilling cry of the auctioneer as he sells business, home, and farm for debts that cannot be paid. The American people must arise in their might and demand of their representatives that the fiscal house of this Nation be set in order.

WAR CONTROLS MUST END WITH THE WAR

I think most of us realize that the gigantic undertaking of this Nation in the field of industrial mobilization for war and food production has made it necessary to have certain controls and regulations relating to business as well as individuals. Many of these necessary controls have been most irritating—some that have been necessary have been poorly administered. In any event, it should be the purpose of the Government to release these controls and regulations just as rapidly as may be possible consistent with an orderly transformation from our present high-geared war economy to a peacetime era. Government by executive decree and regimentation are not only distasteful to the American people but are essentially contrary to our way of life. Such procedures can only be justified as a war necessity. When the war ends, these controls must end.

POST-WAR AMERICA

When we look beyond the present conflict there are certain things that immediately come to mind.

1. I think it can be said that the decisions which will have more to do with the future peace of the world, and the future welfare of the American people, will be made not on the battlefields but at the peace table. It will be from these decisions that our course over the next generations will be chartered. It is, therefore, most important that the American policy in the international field be definite and positive, and that it be supported by a united home front.

2. If we have learned one lesson from this war it should be that we must have in the post-war period, for our security as well as our prestige, a strong military establishment, on the land, on the sea, and in the air. We must not repeat the blunder of World War No. 1 when we dismantled our Navy and demobilized our Army. Certainly for many years to come America must be in a formidable military posture.

3. On the home front the post-war period will be a challenge to America's economic leadership. Of all the nations engaged in the war, at its conclusion our economic position will be the most favorable. We will have wealth and natural resources; unlimited highly trained manpower, a greatly expanded industrial system, and a vast fleet of ships capable of bringing to us needed raw materials and of carrying to other nations the products of our factories and fields. There will be plenty of customers. American citizens will be in the market for the purchase of every manner and type of consumer goods. There will be much building to be done, and many municipal improvements to be made. In the foreign field, a devastated world will look to America for tools, machinery, manufactured products, and everything necessary for its rehabilitation. If the economic leadership of America has the intelligence and the wisdom to move in and chart the course for this critical area, there should be ahead of us in the post-war period a decade of unprecedented prosperity and well-being.

NO GROUND FOR PESSIMISM

I have spoken of the war and its effect and recounted some of the problems that lie ahead of us. I cannot overestimate or emphasize too strongly the many difficult and perplexing problems that this Nation will have to meet. It is truly a critical period. There is plenty of ground for grave concern, but I would not be true to my own feelings if I did not say that I belive there is no doubt about our ultimate triumph, over not only our enemies on the battlefield, but over our economic and social ills on the home front. There are two words that need to be our watchwords as we face the future: Courage and faith. These will bring us through; and let us remember if you please, that our Nation has many times before faced very critical periods and each time has emerged greater and stronger for the test.

If the hour looks dark, and we feel discouraged, I would like to bring you just a word of consolation. May I read you a short article from a popular magazine:

"TODAY

"It is a gloomy moment in history. Not for many years—not in the lifetime of most men who read this—has there been so much grave and deep apprehension; never has the future seemed so incalculable as at this time.

"In our own country there is universal commercial prostration and panic, and thousands of our poorest fellow citizens are turned out against the approaching winter without employment, and without the prospect of it.

"In France the political caldron seethes and bubbles with uncertainty; Russia hangs as usual, like a cloud, dark and silent upon the horizon of Europe; while all the energies, resources, and influences of the British Empire are sorely tried, and are yet to be tried more sorely, in coping with the vast and deadly disturbed relations in China.

"It is a solemn moment, and no man can feel an indifference—which happily, no man pretends to feel—in the issue of events.

"Of our own troubles (in the U. S. A.) no man can see the end. They are, fortunately, as yet mainly commercial; and if we are only to lose money, and by painful poverty to be taught wisdom—the wisdom of honor, of faith, of sympathy and of charity—no man need seriously to despair.

"And yet the very haste to be rich which is the occasion of this widespread calamity, has also tended to destroy the moral forces with which we are to resist and subdue the calamity." (From Harpers Weekly, vol. 1, p. 642, issue of Oct. 10, 1857.)

If you are disturbed about political trends, I would like to quote from a prominent newspaper:

"We saw the Executive power grasp in one hand the sword and the purse of the Nation, and in the other the legislative and judicial authority, and hold them in a relentless grip to the complete annihilation of our constitutional rights.

"We saw trade disordered, Government finances ruined, an enormous debt piled incalculably high, intolerable taxes. We saw the superb Constitution, under which our country has grown great and respected, torn to shreds." (From Salem (Ill.) Advocate, November 13, 1863. In the middle of the first term of Mr. Lincoln.)

SPIRIT OF AMERICA

Courage, faith— these are the watchwords that will take us through. The spirit of America that guides us today—that spirit to be found in civilians on the home front, and in the unconquerable hearts of our men on the fighting fronts—that spirit will lead us to victory.

A great Virginian, the late John Goode, was fond of telling this story:

When he was in London in the eighties he was the guest of the American Ambassador at a dinner given to foreign ambassadors and their attachés. At this dinner there had been "flows of richest wines and richer flows of wit and repartee."

One member of the French Legation exhilarated beyond discretion, and remembering the deep wound which Germany had made into the side of France by the cutting away of Alsace and Lorraine, proposed thi- toast:

"Here's to the French Republic: Bounded on the south by Spain, Portugal, and Switzerland; bounded on the west by the Atlantic Ocean; bounded on the north by the English Channel, and—"

Here he paused, and glaring angrily into the face of the German Ambassador—

"Bounded on the east by the River Rhine."

The American Ambassador gasped with amazement at this breach of social etiquette, but a young Englishman with rare presence of mind sought to interpret it as a bit of harmless braggadocio by prosposing:

"Here's to the British Empire: Bounded on the north by the North Pole, on the south by the South Pole, on the east by the rising sun, and on the west by the setting sun."

When old Rodley D. Evans, of the county of Floyd, in the State of Virginia, then a captain in the United States Navy, rose slowly and deliberately to his feet, and in his deep, sea voice exclaimed: "Here's to the American Republic—not her physical boundaries, for she wants no more than she has, but here's to the spirit of America: Bounded on the north by the Aurora Borealis, on the east by the creation of man, on the south by the procession of the equinoxes, and on the west by the day of judgment."

And, my friends, what Rodley Evans said was true. For the spirit of America has taken of the earth old hopes and hungers of the human soul, builded of them a structure of society and government rising full high above the corruption of selfish, and the confusion of reckless, thought, and in the structure, as in a temple of human liberties, has lighted an enduring flame which shall, in God's providence, grow brighter and brighter unto the perfect day.

Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE E. OUTLAND

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. OUTLAND. Mr. Speaker, some criticism has been heard on this floor and elsewhere concerning certain actions of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. John Collier. Convinced as I am that all of us wish to hear both sides of such a controversy, I am inserting here as part of my extension of remarks a report from Mr. Collier to the Secretary of the Interior, which should help to clarify this whole picture:

MARCH 24, 1944.

Memorandum for the Secretary:

I am informed that my last summer's field trip has been criticized by one Purl Willis, who appeared before the House Appropriations Committee while I was in Chicago. I have requested of the committee that I be heard, but in the meantime I supply you full information.

My trip took me from here to Chicago, and I spent 1 day at the office, and from Chicago I went to Albuquerque by overnight flight. From Albuquerque I went to the pueblos of Isleta, Laguna, and Acoma, en route to Window Rock. At Window Rock I met for 2 days with the Navajo Tribal Council, thence I flew to Las Vegas, Nev., where I was met by Superintendent Foster and the extension agent of the jurisdiction. Explanatory of the use of air transport, I point out that rail connections with southern Nevada are indirect and slow; that if I had not flown it would have been necessary for Superintendent Foster and his staff member to meet me somewhere along the Santa Fe Railway, probably at the Walapai headquarters, using 2 days and nights of their time and some five to six hundred miles of automobile travel, and using approximately 3 days of my time.

Departing from Las Vegas, we went to the Moapa Reservation for the day, and thence on to Stewart, through the Walker River Reservation. Arriving at Stewart, our agency headquarters, I made this place my center, occupying guest quarters there, and from Stewart for the next 3½ weeks, I visited at different reservations of Nevada, going over all of the types of problems and meeting with the tribal councils. By the end of that time I had visited all of the Nevada reservations, except McDermitt and Western Shoshone, which is to say more than a dozen of them. During this same time I worked through the problems of the agency, rather systematically, i. e., the school and health programs, the extension and credit programs, meeting with the staff and, indeed, with all of the personnel, and incidentally addressing the Lions and Rotary Clubs at Carson City.

I should have continued this active duty for another week or so, but on August 4 I developed a streptococcus infection of the right eye which involved the other eye sympathetically and which all but blinded me and, indeed, but for sulfa drugs, I should have lost the eye. This infection continued from August 4 to August 18, and for this period I took sick leave. Actually, I worked pretty steadily through this time, likewise receiving my office correspondence and having it read to me and dictating the responses. After sick leave ending on August 18, I took annual leave consecutively until September 12, and my leave extended for a total of 37 days.

During this time, i. e., on August 23, I obtained a divorce at Reno, and thereafter I remarried.

Resuming active duty on September 12, I proceeded to complete my inspection of the Indian areas, going with Superintendent Foster to McDermitt for a day and a night, and thence on, by Government car, to the Hopi Reservation in Arizona for 2 days, and thence to the Navaho Agency for a day, and thence in another Government car to Albuquerque. Superintendent Foster drove me to Keams Canyon and then departed on official business which he had to transact at Phoenix, Pima, and Poston, Ariz.

At Albuquerque I worked 2 days at United Pueblos, meeting with various of the Pueblo groups, and I departed by train on the 21st for Chicago, and thence, after 5 days at the office in Chicago, on to Washington by train.

I am unable to decipher clearly the basis of complaint about the above record. Nevada is one of our important Indian areas, and the latest of my previous inspections meetings there had been as much as 4 years ago. I had never visited Moapa and McDermitt before. In successive years I had held out to the Indians hope that I would come, but had not taken the time because of the demands of other areas. The Indian area of Nevada represents a considerably wide area of Indian country, i. e., the whole region where relatively small groups of Indians, islanded within white populations, are being rehabilitated through the mechanisms and resources being made possible by the Indian Reorganization Act. Perhaps nowhere else has the happy transformation from Indian life been achieved as in five or six of the Nevada reservations like McDermitt, Duckwater, and Reese River. Also, Nevada is an area where certain of the Indian groups, through the reorganization act, have progressed so far that the withdrawal of much Government supervision is possible and is in fact planned and in one case being achieved now.

Nevada also is a State where public relations are of first importance; hence I made contact while there with the Governor, with Senator SCRUGHAM, with the attorneys in charge of our water adjustments at Walker River and along the Truckee River, and with the press.

During my time in Nevada, I obtained a divorce. That circumstance I take it concerns nobody, the only question being whether, during the fraction of my time that I was on active duty in Nevada, I was on genuine and important public duty. Manifestly I was.

Due to the loss of time through the eye infection, I could not get to western Shoshone, but instead Superintendent Beck came to see me, and I promised the Western Shoshones that I would make a visit there this year if it were humanly possible.

JOHN COLLIER,
Commissioner.

P. S.—I failed to include mention of the item, called attention to by the Comptroller General, that my plane trip from Window Rock to Las Vegas was charged against Navaho Agency funds. That was done because it is the Navaho Agency which has the contract with Mr. Cutter's plane. The charge has been, or will be as a matter of routine, shifted to our headquarters travel fund, being properly a charge against that fund; the Navaho Agency being reimbursed from that fund.

Post-War Federal Taxation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FRANK CARLSON
OF KANSAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I am including a speech I made at the seventh annual meeting of the Institute of Accounting at Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio, on Saturday, May 20, 1944:

I hope you will forgive a Kansas farmer and livestockman for presuming to come here and speak to you Ohioans about government. Your Buckeye State has produced seven Presidents, and manages to keep a contingent of Senators and Representatives of outstanding caliber in Washington. Virginia has given us eight Presidents and I see by the papers you've got a Governor who is willing to have Ohio tie this record.

It is my private opinion that I was asked here for an infusion of your higher learning; that you folks decided after looking over the tax situation to do something for the Nation and quietly bring in someone from the Ways and Means Committee of the Congress for indoctrination in some of your own hard-headed, time-worn principles which make for progress and wel' being.

In all seriousness I am honored by your invitation to come and speak to you. It is a most serious assignment. I wish I had the eloquence to inflame this whole Nation to the vital importance to all of us, collectively and individually, of planning right now the tax program we shall require for peacetime happiness and prosperity.

Why is this so important?

Here's why: All those warm, delightful freedoms that we talk about and preach about—economic freedoms and personal freedoms—can be as completely destroyed by vicious and short-sighted tax policies as they would be by the rule of a conquering Tojo or Hitler.

For instance, in our Federal tax structure we allow tax credits for gifts and contributions to churches, educational institutions, and philanthrophies. Now just suppose the Congress changed this sound policy. Suppose that tax laws made it practically impossible for our churches and other private institutions to exist.

What, then, happens to our cherished freedom of worship?

Suppose we let some of our professional business baiters have their way about taxing private industry. Suppose rates which now range up to 95 percent are carried over into the post-war period.

How then could our business concerns make up the gap in our economic life which will come about when Government spending drops from a war level of more than $100,000,000,000 to an anticipated peacetime level of eighteen to twenty billion dollars?

If we make it impossible for our factories, our arms, and our stores to busy themselves in peacetime activities, what then happens to our freedom of opportunity and the job holders freedom from want?

The point is, with the war on its way to being won, this is no time to grow careless of our national economy. It has had a terrific shock, with taxes reaching toward the point of diminishing returns. But, after all, our American economy is one of the very things we are fighting for.

Our national policy in taxation, as well as in other matters, must clearly encourage our people to depend upon themselves first and upon Government second. I hold that government is the servant of the people, unless as Thomas Jefferson said, we can find an angel in the form of a king.

When government uses its power to levy and borrow in reckless manner, the pattern traced throughout all history is of government becoming the master of the people, and inevitably a decline in national strength with lowered standards of character and living. The great mass of people ultimately have suffered from unsound fiscal policies.

Look down the centuries—Jerusalem, Babylon, Athens, Rome. Old glories buried in rubble, empires broken down by tax loads, skeletons in history's closet that rattle in our ears.

Today the rubble is piling up again in Italy, also in Germany. Let's look at their mileposts to infamy.

They began with bewildered, muddled statecraft and a confused, desperate national economy. Comes the depression and a dictator who knows all, does all. The people barter freedom on a false altar of security. Then came juggled deficit financing, huge public works, big armies, bitterness between labor and capital. They called it National Socialism. Inevitable social unrest must be blamed on something, so minorities are persecuted and finally a nation sees an answer in the spoils of war.

More and more we hear discussions of a post-war world where peace is to be fostered by international harmony and economic stability. Yet these things must begin at home. International relationships never can be satisfactory unless internal conditions are sound. One of our greatest contributions to the future peace of the world can be to put our own financial house in order by establishing a national policy of wise Government spending, a stable currency, balanced budgets, and a positive program of debt retirement.

This is our traditional fiscal policy. With its help these United States grew fast and strong so that today the world almost takes for granted that we shall not only perform a modern miracle of war production, but that we shall be strong enough to underwrite the peace as well.

This year the Federal Government has a budget of $104,000,000,000, mostly for war purposes. We will pay in only about $45,000,000,000 of taxes. The difference is a big deficit, yes; but $45,000,000,000 of taxes is more in volume and more per capita than any nation under the sun is paying or ever has paid.

One hundred and four billion dollars going out; forty-five billion dollars coming in. That is the way this year's books do not balance. We are just borrowing that balance. It can be called deficit financing, although plain people simply refer to it as going in the red.

I don't have to tell you we couldn't raise even close to $104,000,000,000 by taxation. If we tried to raise that amount by taxes, our war effort and everything else would stop functioning. Taxes, even in wartime, reach a point of diminishing returns. In a way it is good that they do, for it is a constant reminder that the precious things bringing us victory today—labor, enterprise, industry, and national muscle—grew on a land relatively free of taxes, and I don't think they will grow in any other soil.

Let's take a look at our rising tax thermometer. At the turn of the century, taxes were 5 percent of the national income. Taxes were 14 percent in 1920. In 1944, the economists predict they will amount to 38 percent of the national income. Only patriotism in time of war will tolerate such great diversion of income to government.

One of the most effective ways of improving the Treasury's position is to carefully scrutinize the expenditure side of the budget. Every dollar that can be saved means one less dollar of present or future taxes. I am afraid we have become too careless with hundreds of billions and other astronomical figures in recent years. Fifty million taxpayers are awakening to the fact it is their money that is being so loosely tossed about.

So much for the immediate problem, which is only a small taste, only a beginning of the critical days ahead. In considering the post-war tax program, we are trying to determine what our needs will be, for it will be a tragic travesty on a glorious and costly victory if that program is not wisely planned and soon.

We shall come out of the war with a debt of $300,000,000,000. You have to put down some figure. That's the one I put down. The debt is not all for war; it is the accumulation of 14 years of deficit financing. We haven't had a balanced budget since 1930.

Now, if we pay 2-percent interest on that $300,000,000,000 debt, we shall have $6,000,000,000 to pay in interest annually. Not many years ago, $6,000,000,000 would have carried the whole Government cost.

So we'll have interest on the debt, and we must try to write off the principal as we go along. If we should set aside as much as $10,000,000,000 annually for debt and interest repayment, it would take three generations to get a clean slate.

Here are some other major items that will be saddled onto the Nation's taxpaying power in the coming days of peace.

We are going to maintain a big Army and Navy.

We are committed, with our allies, to help rehabilitate destitute nations.

We are committed to muster-out payments for our sons and daughters coming home from war.

We are committed to the hospitalization and rehabilitation of veterans and their dependents.

We have made extensive investments abroad in facilities for war and trade—South America, Canada, Egypt, and elsewhere—to maintain—or liquidate.

The cost of our post-war economy, including these major items, is variously estimated from $18,000,000,000 to $30,000,000,000 annually. But this figure is not nearly so important as the figure it must derive from—our national income.

Today we are able to collect $45,000,000,000 in taxes simply because our national income is around $150,000,000,000. Had we tried to collect $45,000,000,000 in 1932—it would have been necessary to confiscate practically every cent of income.

Right here is the major point of everything I have to say. Government, with its tax policy, must be as eager to promote a constructive peace as it was a destructive war. The soundest maxim we can follow is the American device of low rates and high volume. This is the only way to avoid subterfuges of inflation or debt repudiation. It is the American way. No imported false economies here. And it will bring us the volume of tax revenue needed to pay our bill like freemen; to thus preserve our savings, our insurance, our pensions, the buying power of our wages.

Suppose for a moment we just consider the opposite conception of taxation from our time-proved way. Suppose we say, Let's have high tax rates and low volume. What happens then? Why, the American family car will become a sharecroppers' mule, and the missus will go back to the washboard and spinning wheel of her grandmother's day. The guy who holds the mortgage this time will be Uncle Sam and his crew of tax collectors.

High rates and low volume is nothing more than government of the Government, by the Government, and for the Government.

How do we pay off? I offer you a constructive program of six points.

1. By stimulated civilian production, freed of governmental control. Farms, factories, mills, utilities, trains, steamships, stores must earn money to pay taxes. They won't have income to tax, if government continues directives, regulations, priorities, and confiscatory taxes. Some controls, I grant, are needed to hold back inflation and black markets until production can more nearly meet the pent-up consumer demands at the close of war. But production must be freed of restrictions at the earliest moment.

I like to think that tomorrow's peaceful world will hold tremendous opportunity. The opportunity system made our Nation great. It can make it great again. And it can bring it nearer to a sound position more quickly than any other system which has sprung from the mind of man. Let's have no more of class legislation that stifles ideas for production and keeps idle the wealth that should be producing national income and making jobs.

2. Small companies and new enterprises should be spared at least a part of the tax responsibilities of established concerns until they achieve footing in the economic life. The automobile, the radio, and the airplane all came out of small shops. Continued progress is inseparable from free enterprise of the individual, which of necessity starts from small beginnings.

The war has played havoc with small concerns. A Department of Commerce study showed 273,000 firms, mostly small ones, went out of business from June 1940 to June 1942—an average of 450 each working day.

Small business not only brings vigorous growth to our economic life, it also has a profound social significance. The small businessman is an important part of our community existence. Many of our returning veterans will establish their own enterprises as a way of life as well as a means of earning a living. The independence and vigor of small companies shall be encouraged by definite tax concessions.

We Kansas farmers think we particularly have common cause with the small-business man. A livestockman is just as much in the meat business as your corner butcher or the meat packer. We stockmen are small-business men. And that it why I know that all business, big and little, needs only the chance to prove that economic and national progress are one and the same thing.

3. Obstructions to the flow of capital into productive industry should be removed. So it is a healthy sign to hear so much discussion of eliminating all or part of the double taxation on corporate dividends. The workingman has a great stake in this, for it takes about $6,000 of plant, machinery, and working capital to provide one person with a job. A wise tax structure will bring venture capital into productive, employment giving enterprises.

Many of you no doubt noticed Ralph Robey's article in Newsweek of what happens to investments for venture capital for new business. Mr. Robey analyzes what happens if 10 men, each with a taxable income of $50,000, should put up $100,000 for a million-dollar corporation and it should have the luck to earn $100,000 the first year before taxes. The minimum Federal tax such a corporation would pay would be $40,000 leaving $60,000 to be paid in dividends, apparently a return of 6 percent to the stockholders. But as each stockholder is in the $50,000 income-tax bracket he would have to pay a tax of $4,500 out of each $6,000 dividend. This would leave each stockholder a net return on his $100,000 investment of $1,500, or 1.5 percent. This stockholder would no doubt figure that a return of 1.5 percent would hardly compensate him for taking the risk of putting his money into new ventures. Now, if he had a lower taxable income of say $14,000 a year his return would net him a glittering 3 percent. But, if his income was $14,000 he probably wouldn't have $100,000 to invest in this new enterprise.

I suggest we revise our tax structure so that individuals will be encouraged to put their savings to work in post-war America, as savings have been put to work in this Nation since its beginning.

4. The pending tax bill, the so-called simplification bill, goes a long way toward wiping out taxpayer perplexities. But the tax law should be simplified even more. As you know, the simplification bill deals only with personal taxes—business taxes are still to be considered. The entire code on Federal corporate taxes must be scrutinized, and unproductive but bothersome tax levies eliminated. For instance, the declared value tax and the related capital stock tax, which actually produce only an extremely small net revenue, should be eliminated.

Please do not think I am here trying to inject personalities or politics, but I feel it my duty to tell you quite frankly that we Republicans anticipate having to carry the weight of the responsibility in meeting the coming historic fiscal crisis of staggering debt and post-war tax problems. That is the reason our minority leader, Representative JOSEPH MARTIN, has named a committee on taxation of which I am a member. We are preparing for the job. And I am particularly anxious concerning the future of the corporate income tax, for it is my special duty in this Republican group, as chairman of the corporate tax subcommittee, to formulate an incentive tax program, And if any of you can help a Kansas cattleman, I urge you to give me the benefit of your ideas.

Also, at the close of war we should terminate the excess-profits tax. In this country and in foreign countries the excess-profits tax has been used primarily to capture war profits, but the very nature of the tax has made necessary various optional methods and innumerable relief provisions which have added reams of confusing technical provisions to our tax statutes. In dropping the excess-profits tax when peace comes we can simplify our tax law and regulations in very substantial degree.

5. Hand in hand with simplification, our future tax policy must contemplate an improvement in the administration of the tax laws. We must encourage tax officials of the highest caliber and make it worth while to remain in public service and free them of domination by political forces.

The cost of tax compliance in the United States is tremendous. Business taxpayers particularly feel the impact of more than 175,000 tax collecting bodies. The Federal Government is, of course, the number one tax collector, and the administration of the Federal tax statutes involves billions of dollars of manpower and effort on the part of both taxpayers and Government. I believe we have a serious responsibility in the Congress to examine the matter of tax administration and to write tax statutes which will foster certainty and equity.

The intent of Congress must be made so plain there will be little chance of inequity or misinterpretation. As a matter of principle the executive branch of Government should not be empowered to determine income, deductions, and taxes within its own discretion, for it will be only a question of time that such powers will be used for political or punitive purposes.

6. And, finally, when we have our house in order and our economy at work on a truly democratic basis, we must intelligently gage our earning power, set our tax sights on the maximum business and trade and employment—and cut the cloth accordingly.

I believe some economists hold that if taxes go beyond 25 percent of the national income, they begin to reach a point of diminishing returns. That is to say, a 40-percent rate might produce less money than a 20-percent rate simply because business production and taxable incomes would begin falling off under such a tax load.

Well, we are now taxing the Nation about 38 percent of its national income. That's more than economic law allows. The only reason we get by with it is because Uncle Sam is underwriting practically every major industry and service. When he steps out of this responsibility and releases those controls, my friends, we must cut the tax rate.

If our national income after the war runs at a rate of about $125,000,000,000 yearly, it is my belief that we would be foolhardy to attempt to levy more than $10,000,000,000 in State and local taxes and about $18,000,000,000 to $20,000,000,000 in Federal taxes. If this is our post-war tax limit, we must keep the expenditure side of the budget within governmental income.

We would do well to remember that $18,000,000,000 to $20,000,000,000 of Federal Government is a lot of government. We used to get along quite well in the 1920's, for instance, on one-sixth as much. There is no magic in large-scale spending by Government. If it has any virtues at all, they lie within narrow and temporary limits.

I have a great faith in our future. I know there are those who look to Government as the cornucopia from which all blessings flow. But that frame of mind is a foreign importation. When our young manhood returns from the four corners of the earth they will bring with them—and to us—a better appreciation of American standards of self-dependence in a framework of self-government.

Why, we've had some professors tell us we'd be better off with trillions instead of puny millions of debt. But, as a friend of mine says, those fellows have upside-down brains. I'll venture they have a hard time running a farm or grocery store on that theory.

Our eternal hope, now as always, is the moral fiber of America. We spent hard dollars; we borrowed hard dollars, we will pay back hard dollars. What's done cannot be undone—as Lady Macbeth said—and so with honest purpose, let us get on with the job of making our own future.

Sewell Avery Versus the People

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WRIGHT PATMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, permission having been granted, I am inserting in the RECORD the sixth and last article of a series of articles which have appeared daily in the Chicago Sun under the title "Sewell Avery Versus the People." This article appeared in the May 20, 1944, issue, is entitled "W. L. B. Records Show High Job Turn-over in Ward's Plants," and is as follows:

SEWELL AVERY VERSUS THE PEOPLE—W. L. B. RECORDS SHOW HIGH JOB TURN-OVER IN WARD'S PLANTS

(Last of a series)

(By Thomas F. Reynolds and Charles O. Gridley)

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Montgomery Ward & Co. has not passed a dividend on its common stock since 1933. In the years since Sewell L. Avery took command of the mail-order house, Ward has piled up net profits totaling $197,470,000.

In the same period, Avery's operating policies in his own plant were of a nature that caused a War Labor Board investigating panel to report "a wage scale which is very low" and "an abnormally high [personnel] turnover, indicative of employee unrest."

"The Montgomery Ward turn-over, however," this W. L. B. panel reported officially on September 6, 1942, "is excessive and not to be explained by seasonal lay-offs and rehirings alone, or even by inductions into the armed service. Almost half of the regular workers in the [Chicago] retail store, the Schwinn warehouse, and more than one-fourth in the mail-order house have been with the company less than 6 months. Further, 57 percent, 62 percent, and 44 percent of the workers in the three establishments, respectively, have been with the company for 1 year or less."

In explaining its statement that Avery's wage scale was "very low," the official report said that a wage study had shown that 81.7 percent of the workers in the mail-order house and 83.7 percent of those in the warehouse were paid less than $27 a week. As a result of this report the W. L. B. unanimously ordered an increase of 5 cents an hour for 6,800 of Ward's Chicago employees.

In that year, Ward's had net sales of $635,006,979, and was able to pay a dividend of $3.65 per share on its common stock, out of net income totaling $20,437,583.

For the last 12 years Avery's compensation has never been less than $140,000 a year, the bulk of which came from Montgomery Ward & Co. Records of the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission, however, show that his stockholdings in Ward and other companies boost his annual income far above the $140,000 figure.

The latest proxy files of the S. E. C. show Avery's salary scale for 1934 as follows: Ward, as chairman of the board and director, $100,600; Armour & Co., of Illinois, as director and member of the executive committee, $1,060; Pullman, Inc., as director, $500; United States Steel Corporation, as director, $1,400; the Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co., as director, $800; Pure Oil Co., as director, $200; United States Gypsum Co., as chairman of the board and director, $40,000; he was also listed as a director and member of the executive committee of Armour & Co., of Delaware, a wholly owned consolidated subsidiary of Armour of Illinois, but the company's annual report does not show any director's remuneration.

The S. E. C. files also revealed his stockholdings as follows: Ward, March 1, 1944, 67,547 shares of common, then quoted at 44½, and 200 shares of class A unbuoted; Armour & Co. of Illinois, December 1943, 100 shares of $6 par preferred, quoted at 68, and 200 shares of common quoted at 4½; United States Steel, February 1, 1944, 1 share of preferred quoted at 120½, and 400 shares of common, quoted at 53; Pullman, Inc., reported February 25, 1944, 200 shares of common quoted at 41½; Peoples Gas Light & Coke, December 31, 1943, 101 shares of common quoted at 53⅞; Pure Oil Co., February 1, 1944, 500 shares of common quoted at 15½; United States Gypsum Co., January 18, 1944, 26,040 shares of common, quoted at 73¾.

Representatives of industry have in some cases strongly condemned Ward's methods.

Harry L. Derby, president of American Cyanamid & Chemical Co., and a director of the National Association of Manufacturers, bitterly assailed Ward on December 8, 1942, after the company had used full-page ads to criticize the board for it, decision in favor of the union. Derby was then an employer member of W. L. B.

"When this board, constituted as it is on a tripartite basis (representing the public, management, and labor) can't decide these things in the light of justice, the way we see it, without being subjected to untruthful attacks, then * * * this form of government is seriously jeopardized," Derby said for the record. "* * * In my humble opinion, Montgomery Ward has done the greatest disservice to industry and the private enterprise system of any concern in the United States, and I feel that just as strongly as I can.

"The ads that you [Wards] put in the papers and broadcast Nation-wide were statements of untruth or half-truths, and the statement that you make this morning that you want to comply with the order of the President of the United States because Ward is so terrifically interested in doing that in time of war doesn't square with the attitude that is expressed here today and * * * I don't care whether Montgomery Ward thinks I represent the viewpoint of industry or not.

"Now, if it is the intent of Montgomery Ward to embarrass this board and the President of the United States, that is all right. We can deal with that, and I have no doubt the President can deal with it. If that is the purpose of all this, taking up the time of this board, when we have such terrifically heavy burdens on our shoulders to carry in this time of war, if that is good citizenship, then perhaps I don't know good citizenship."

On December 25, 1942, Roger D. Lapham, board chairman of the American Hawaiian Steamship Co., then an industry member of the board and now mayor of San Francisco, directly accused Avery of bad faith. In a letter to Avery, Lapham said:

"On November 13 you said you would accept the orders of the President of the United States as Commander in Chief in time of war; on November 18 the President directed you to do so; on November 21 you said you would promptly comply; on December 8 you refused compliance, unless a clause of your own wording was inserted in the agreement. This I hold to be a breach of faith for by your first letter you had committed yourself to a certain course of action and failure to live up to that commitment in spirit if not in actual fact was, I repeat, bad faith. That was my opinion on December 8, and I have had no reason to change it since then."

Criticism of Avery's policies, however, was by no means limited to members of the National War Labor Board. It has been widely voiced by scores of former high executives of Ward's, who resigned or were fired when their views clashed with those of the "boss" upstairs.

They include such highly placed business leaders as Walter Baumhogger, president of United Cigar Stores, Inc.; Raymond Fogler, whom Avery disposed of as president of Ward's without giving him advance notice, who is now president of the W. T. Grant chain of stores; Walter Moving, president of Lord & Taylor, New York department store; Howard Jordan, president, Pennsylvania Rubber Co.; Howard Hudgins, president, Slone Blabon Co.; George W. Vaught, first vice president, Goodrich Tire & Rubber Co.; Frank Folsom, vice president, R. C. A.-Victor Co.; John C. Wilson, vice president, United Wallpaper Factories, Inc., Chicago, the Nation's largest wallpaper manufacturers; Brig. Gen. A. J. Browning, chief of purchases for the Army services, and thus the world's greatest buyer (Browning is president on leave of United Wallpaper); and John Donaldson, vice president of Butler Bros., of Chicago.

These are just a few of the group which calls itself the Montgomery Ward Alumni Association and whose critical opinions of Avery are as voluminous as the Montgomery Ward catalog.

When Folsom, once vice president of Ward's, in charge of merchandising at $71,000 a year, was under consideration for vice president of R. C. A-Victor, Folsom relates, Avery used every ounce of his not inconsiderable financial influence to prevent his former executive from getting the job. But Folsom got it.

Not Tomorrow But Today

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARENCE CANNON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, under leave just granted to extend remarks in the RECORD, I include a timely and pertinent editorial from the Kansas City Star on one of the most pressing domestic problems of the day. It is not only one of the major post-war problems confronting the Nation, but it is a problem of the immediate present. We will not be able adequately to meet tomorrow's emergencies unless we begin today.

It is not a new problem. It is as old as the white man's occupancy of the Missouri Valley. And we are not without enlightening and admonitory information on the subject gained through the expensive and agonizing school of practical experience.

Our colleagues are urging the adoption of flood-control plans involving the development of a vast acreage of marginal lands. It has a familiar ring. During the last depression when we were plowing under the pigs and desperately seeking an outlet for mountainous surpluses, these same interests were advocating reclamation projects to bring into profuse production empire-like areas which had never produced a blade of marketable grass.

That is precisely the situation confronting us today. With every warehouse and cold-storage plant filled to capacity; with a total of $2,000,000,000 worth of surplus food on hand which must be loosed on the open market when the armistice is concluded in either the European or Asiatic theater of war, we are asked to bring into cultivation and production 4,000,000 excess acres of land—and do it at the expense of the Federal Government—with no promise or prospect of reimbursement. This is the subject discussed in the accompanying editorial from the Kansas City Star, published in the geographical and financial center of the bread basket of the Nation.

May I earnestly urge the careful consideration of the following editorial by all who are interested in practical flood control and the welfare of American agriculture:

WHY ADD 4,000,900 ACRES

Now that the purpose of the irrigationists and land development companies upriver to control the waters of the Missouri for their own local developments has been brought into plain view, it is time to stop and ask ourselves a question which is highly important but has not much entered into the discussions so far.

What is the need of 4,000,000 extra acres of irrigated land? And especially, what is the need of it when these lands are of such secondary nature that the Governors of the upper Plains States have admitted that these lands cannot of themselves bear the cost of irrigation, and must therefore get free water from reservoirs built by the people's money for other purposes, if they are to be irrigated?

In an address delivered at Chicago late in March, Secretary Claude R. Wickard had some things to say which are very pertinent to these questions. "One of the biggest problems facing American agriculture after the war," he said "will be to find a good market for all the American farmers want to produce and can produce within the limits of sound farming methods."

Estimates by the Department of Agriculture indicate that with high prices and intensive educational campaigns, the farmers of the Nation can, within the next 6 years, on lands now under cultivation, increase their production to 60 percent above the average of 1935–39. Even with moderate prices and only the usual educational methods, this production can be increased up to 40 percent above the pre-war level.

On the other hand, population estimates indicate that by 1950 there will be not more than a 10-percent increase over the average for 1935–39. In other words the agricultural production per capita could be immeasurably beyond any figure comparable in the past.

We did not have the right answer to the farm surplus problem before the war. Looking to the period after the war, the problem remains one which will cause headaches for agricultural and economic leaders.

Under these conditions, a critical condition could be created by the addition of crop surpluses produced on 4,000,000 acres of land which would be made productive only at the expense of the Nation at large. The reclamation bureau estimates an annual raw crop value of $130,000,000 for this acreage—considerably more than one-third of the total value of all Missouri crops in 1942, which was a year of abnormally high acreage yields.

These are all estimates on the conservative side, but they illustrate the competitive weight against the present crop total which would be thrown by such a project as the irrigation interests are advancing. And this added weight is greater when the small list of irrigated products is considered—grains, sugar beets, legume hay, and perhaps flax. Competition in these categories would be excessively punishing.

The total crop production of the new irrigated land might amount to only 1 or 2 percent of the national production—but virtually all of this would be surplus. After the last war, be it remembered, when the wartime production hit the peacetime reduction in demand, a reduction of only 3 or 4 percent in the exports of our surplus rapidly created an unmanageable domestic pile of farm products. The result—the farm depression of the early twenties.

The situation would be different if the farmers of the upper river States were going to expand their irrigation farming by their own efforts. At least there would not under such circumstances be ground for a reasonable objection—even though the rest of the farmers of the Nation did not like it and knew it was affecting directly their own pocketbooks and the living standards of their own families.

But what is being proposed here by the up-river interests is, in a nutshell, a form of parasitism. They desire to levy upon the free water impounded for other purposes, to develop these potentially disastrous competitive areas. Further, they propose to obtain priorities on all up-river waters, even when the rights to the use of them down river have been established by many decades of use for antedating the claims of the dry-land development companies.

The old State rights cry has been raised—a convenient red herring. Senator WHEELER cried "States' rights" in a recent speech—and yet demanded Federal money to carry out his program of irrigation development. In this instance, obviously, the aegis of State rights is meant to apply only to Senator WHEELER's little bloc of States. It is a poor principle that works only one way. There are State rights also involved in the necessities of the down-river States—rights every bit as cogent as those of the Senator's bailiwick.

To return again to the question of the 4,000,000 acres of secondary, public-expense, free-water irrigation land proposed by the Reclamation Bureau, the land companies, and the immigration companies of certain railroads, it may be of interest to note that there are far cheaper and better ways of increasing national food production, whenever we shall need it in the future, than this method. It can be done at comparatively small cost by protecting the bottomlands from flood and by improving the uplands of the present established farm area.

Already there is enough farm land available for the next several generations. The values of this land are established, and the equities therein. The opening of a great new area of farm land could very easily cause loss to the people who have been working this soil for decades, and create serious economic dislocations.

We have a surplus of food now in the midst of war. We have had a prodigious experience in the past of striving to meet periodic peacetime surpluses. We know we can, if need be, greatly increase our present crop production. Why, therefore, the necessity of an additional 4,000,000 acres of land which could never support the cost of being brought under irrigation? And particularly in view of a comprehensive river plan such as the Pick plan which is not a sectional plan, not an irrigation plan, not a navigation plan, not a flood-prevention plane alone, but a fair combination program for advancing the interests of all sections, in relation to the combined interests of all.

The Real Truth and Facts Behind Montgomery Ward & Co.'s Defiant Position Obscured From the Public

REMARKS

OF

HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] has called attention to the fact that the Government was obliged to take over another Montgomery Ward & Co. plant, the Hummer Manufacturing Co., at Springfield, Ill., of which Mr. Sewell Avery is president, and where gun mounts and other essential war products are manufactured. When the company's Chicago plant was taken over and Mr. Avery insisted upon being carried out by uniformed soldiers so that photographs might be taken for campaign purposes, it was charged that the President had exceeded his authority and that the Montgomery Ward & Co. was a mere mail-order house. At that time Mr. Avery and the company officials, as well as the press if it had the information, withheld from the public the fact that the company controlled quite a number of manufacturing plants which are part and parcel of the great Montgomery Ward institution.

I mentioned then that the company and its divisions not only manufactured but handled many hundreds of articles needed in the prosecution of the war. I repeat, these facts were withheld from the public and the Republicans were using this incident for political purposes, and I reiterate my statement now. Not only was the President charged with exceeding his authority but the opinion strongly voiced by many on the other side of the aisle that no business, however small, was safe from being taken over by the Government, and many other ridiculous charges were made. To these statements I replied that the President had jurisdiction under the Constitution, saying nothing as to the various acts of Congress which gave him authority to act. Today, after having read the opinion of an outstanding jurist of a United States court in Kentucky, handed down a few days ago, I am fully satisfied that the action of the President in the Montgomery Ward & Co. matter was entirely in keeping with the powers granted him under the Constitution and the several laws enacted by Congress. For the information of the House and the country I shall include the decision of the learned Judge MacSwinford as part of my remarks and a reading of it by any fair-minded person will satisfy him beyond the question of a doubt that the President did have jurisdiction in the Montgomery Ward & Co. matter as in the cited case of the Ken-Rad Tube & Lamp Corporation, of Owensboro, Ky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for leave to insert the opinion of the court at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The opinion referred to is as follows:

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY, OWENSBORO DIVISION, NO. 132; KEN-RAD TUBE & LAMP CORPORATION, OWENSBORO, KY., PLAINTIFF, V. CARROLL BADEAU, DEFENDANT

OPINION

This case is before me on the plaintiff's motion for a permanent injunction and on the defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint. The record is complete and it is finally submitted for determination on its merits.

The plaintiff, the Ken-Rad Tube & Lamp Corporation, of Owensboro, Ky., seeks to permanently enjoin the defendant, Carroll Badeau, from placing in effect, in any of its plants, an order of the National War Labor Board, pertaining to certain wage readjustments in the plaintiff's plants and to permanently enjoin the defendant from seizing, or holding possession of, or operating any properties of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff is, and has been for many years, successfully engaged in the manufacture of radio tubes and incandescent lamps, with plants located at Owensboro and Bowling Green, Ky., and Tell City, Huntingsburg and Rockport, Ind. It employs approximately 5,000 people.

The defendant, Carroll Badeau, who is a colonel in the United States Army and acting under orders from his superiors, has seized possession of the plaintiff's properties.

The entire plants and properties of the plaintiff, insofar as this lawsuit is concerned, have been, were at the time of the seizure, and are now and will continue to be admittedly devoted exclusively to the manufacture of essential war material.

The source of the authority claimed by the defendant for his action in seizing the property is an order of the President of the United States, dated April 13, 1944, and addressed to the Secretary of War. The order is preceded by the following recital:

"Whereas after investigation I find and proclaim that there is a threatened interruption of the operation of the plants and facilities of Ken-Rad Tube & Lamp Corporation and Ken-Rad Transmitting Tube Corporation, located at Owensboro, Ky., as a result of a labor disturbance, and that the war effort would be unduly impeded or delayed by such interruption: Now, therefore,

"By virtue of the power and authority vested in my by the Constitution and laws of the United States, including section 9 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, as President of the United States and commander in chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, it is hereby directed as follows:"

It is contended by the plaintiff that the seizure is without authority of law; that the order of the President was based primarily upon a report to him of the War Labor Board that the labor conditions in the plaintiff's plants were in an unsettled state and that production would be hampered, retarded, or stopped by labor disputes and threatened strikes; that all of this was caused by the fact that the plaintiff had refused to put into effect an order of the War Labor Board.

The plaintiff admits that it declined to abide by the order of the War Labor Board but states that the order was void and of no effect, because of the failure of the Board to accord the plaintiff a hearing, the unlawful assumption of the rule-making power by the Board, the unlawful reduction of the beginner's training period, the unlawful retroactive effect of the order, the unlawful participation of employee representatives in the Board's order, and the imposition of confiscatory wage rates, which did not comply with the provisions of the act that any order of the Board should be fair and equitable.

To summarize the plaintiff's position in this effect, it reasons that since the order of the President directing the seizure of the plant was based upon a fear of threatened strikes and the threatened strikes were the result of the failure of the plaintiff to abide by an order of the War Labor Board and the order of the War Labor Board was invalid because of the above-enumerated reasons, then the order of the President was invalid and there could, therefore, be no seizure.

I do not think that the determination of this case depends upon whether or not the order of the War Labor Board was valid or invalid.

The decision must be based upon either constitutional or statutory authority vesting in the President a legal right to issue such an order. If he had that right, by statutes, or in the absence of adequate statutes, the right under the Constitution, the plaintiff has failed in the case and its complaint should be dismissed. Or if it be determined from the record that, even though he might have had the right, he acted arbitrarily and without cause in issuing such an order, then the prayer of the plaintiff's complaint should be sustained and an equitable order entered.

It is my judgment that this case, and all others like it, may be reduced to a simple formula: Did the President act arbitrarily in ordering the facilities to be taken over by the Army? Proof that he did so act shall be upon him who asserts it.

If this seems to be an extreme view, it should be called to the attention of those who so claim that, with the country at war, fighting for its very existence, extremities are commonplace. No war hysteria should prompt the adoption of basically unsound legal reasoning; neither should blind complacency or a false sense of the country's security cause the court of the land to grant to those charged with preserving the Nation less than the full measure of constitutional and legislative authority.

Before going into the determination of this case on its merits it is necessary to consider and pass upon certain defenses. It is first contended that the suit here is one against the United States to which the United States has not consented. In support of this position the defendant cites: New Mexico v. Lane (243 U. S. 52); Louisiana v. Garfield (211 U. S. 70; Minnesota v. Hitchcock (185 U. S. 373); Nagenab v. Hitchcock (202 U. S. 473). I do not believe any of these cases warrants the court in dismissing this proceeding. While I of course, acknowledge the general rule as laid down in each of these cases, it is a well recognized exception, that where the Government acquires property from a party to a pending suit, its rights in such property are subject to the result of the litigation the same as would be those of an individual. Re Ward et al. v. Congress Construction Company (99 F. 598); Philadelphia Company v. Stimson (223 U. S. 605); Miguel v. McCarl (29 P. U. S. 442); Payne v. Central Pacific Railway Co. (255 U. S. 229).

In the case of Work v. Louisiana (269 U. S. 250), the Secretary of the Interior was proceeded against for injunctive relief by the State of Louisiana to present the rejection of a claim to land upon what was alleged to be an erroneous interpretation of the law. The opinion stated:

"It is clear that if this order exceeds the authority conferred upon the secretary by law and is an illegal act done under color of his office, he may be enjoined from carrying it into effect. Noble v. Union River R. R., (147 U. S. 165, 171, 172), Garfield v. Goldsby (211 U. S. 249, 261, 262), Lane v. Watts (234 U. S. 525, 540), Payne v. Central Railway (225 U. S. 228, 238), Santa Fe Pacific Railroad v. Fall (259 U. S. 197, 199), Colorado v. Toll (268 U. S. 228, 230). A suit for such purposes is not one against the United States, even though it still retains the legal title to the land, and is not an indispensable party. Garfield v. Goldsby, supra (p. 260, 262); Lane v. Watts, supra (p. 540)."

In the recent case of Ickes, etc., v. Fox (300 U. S. 82), it was sought to enjoin the Secretary of the Interior from enforcing an order, the wrongful effect of which was to deprive respondents of vested property. The question was made that the United States was an indispensable party, but the Supreme Court held that such a suit could be maintained without the President of the United States and that its proceeding rests upon the authority of many cases from that court. Certain cases were cited among which were some of those to which I have referred.

It is further contended that the suit should be dismissed for lack of indispensable parties. It is urged that Carroll Badeau, the defendant, had no choice other than to comply with the order of the President and that he was acting purely in a ministerial capacity and that if the injunction would lie, it should have been brought against his superior, even to the extent of making the President a party.

I think the action here is one in which the right of the parties may be determined, where the injunction is sought against the agent with as much propriety as if it were thought to restrain the principal, had he been within the jurisdiction of the court. Osborn v. Bank (9 Wheat. (22 U. S.) 738).

In the case of Ryan v. Amazon Petroleum Corporation (71 F. (2d) 1), and more particularly identified as the now historic "hot oil" case, the circuit court of appeals said:

"(1) 1. The Secretary of the Interior is not personally doing or threatening the acts of trespass and of prosecution which are thought to be enjoined. Although the actors may be authorized and incited by him so that he would be a proper codefendant if he were within the court's reach, the court has power to stop the trespassing by those within its jurisdiction, irrespective of their claim that they are acting for others (Osborn v. Bank of the United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204; State of Colorado v. Toll, subt., 268 U. S. 228, 45 F. Ct. 505, 69 L. ed. 927). This is not a bill to cancel the Secretary's regulation, but only to test their efficacy to protect defendants in their alleged trespasses against complainant's right. There is no more need to make the Secretary a party for this purpose than to make the President a party because he promulgated the code or of the Congress because it enacted the statutes."

It should be pointed out that in this case, or cases, since it embraced also the Panama Refining Co. case, the Supreme Court reversed the circuit court of appeals in its decision, but not on the jurisdictional grounds to which the language above quoted is addressed.

I must conclude that the jurisdiction of the court must be sustained.

We now come to the determination of the case on its merits. I must confess that the position of the plaintiff is somewhat obscure and it is not entirely clear to me just what it is seeking to have done. The original complaint asks, among other things, that the defendant be permanently enjoined from "holding possession of or operating any properties of the plaintiff." In the brief which was filed after the oral argument the plaintiff seems to undertake to convey to the court the idea that it has no serious objection to the using of the property so long as the present occupant does not put into effect and force the order of the President as it directs incompliance with the wage increase and back-pay provisions of the order of the War Labor Board.

It must be obvious to the plaintiff that these two things cannot be separated in a proceeding of this kind, and it cannot expect to resort to the general equity powers of the court on its prayer for general equitable relief. If the President, by reason of the statutes or by his constitutional powers, has authority and is justified in the exercise of that authority, to take over the plant, he would certainly have authority to determine and designate the basis on which it was to be operated.

This plant is at present being operated by the Government with Government funds. The method of the Government in operating any business which it has the right to operate cannot be questioned on the basis of a complaint which attacks its right to operate business at all.

The War Labor Disputes Act, by section 3, amends section 9 of the Selective Service and Training Act of 1940. For the purpose of clarity, I think it is best to quote this section in full:

"SEC. 3. Section 9 of the Selective Service and Training Act of 1940 is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'The power of the President under the foregoing provisions of this section to take immediate possession of any plant upon a basis to comply with any such provision, and the authority granted by this section for the use and operation by the United States or in its interest of any plant of which possession is so taken, shall also apply as hereinafter provided to any plant, mine, or facility equipped for the manufacture, production, or mining of any article or material which may be required for the war effort or which may be useful in connection therewith. Such power and authority may be exercised by the President through such department or agency of the Government as he may designate, and may be exercised with respect to any such plant, mine, or facility whenever the President finds, after investigation, and proclaims that there is an interruption of the operation of such plant, mine, or facility as the result of a strike or other labor disturbance, that the war effort will be unduly impeded or delayed by such interruption, and that the exercise of such power and authority is necessary to insure the operation of such plant, mine, or facility in the interest of the war effort:

"'Provided, That whenever any such plant, mine, or facility has been or is hereafter so taken by reason of a strike, lock-out, threatened strike, threatened lock-out, work stoppage, or other cause, such plant, mine, or facility shall be returned to the owners thereof as soon as practicable, but in no event more than 60 days after the restoration of the production efficiency thereof prevailing prior to the taking of possession hereof.

"'Provided further, That possession of any plant, mine, or facility shall not be taken under authority of this section after the termination of hostilities in the present war, as proclaimed by the President, or after the termination of the War Labor Disputes Act; and the authority to operate any such plant, mine, or facility, under the provisions of this section shall terminate at the end of 6 months after the termination of such hostilities as so proclaimed.'"

If this is a constitutional enactment and there is no showing that the President acted arbitrarily, coupled with the acknowledged fact that the plants in question were engaged exclusively in the manufacture of essential war materials, the defendant's position must be sustained.

It is not claimed that this act is unconstitutional. The records fail to disclose any grounds upon which the court could find that the President, in issuing the order, acted arbitrarily or without cause. He was not bound by the finding of the War Labor Board that even though they might have been based upon erroneous procedure or wrongful construction of facts, the President may have had other facts on which he determined his course. It is certain that there is ample evidence in the record that there was a threatened strike and a serious threat to production by reason of that fact, that even had the records not conveyed that, it is my judgment that section 9 does not confine the President to any one field of information but that he may make his own independent investigation and, subject to the determination by the courts that his action was not arbitrary, may act to prevent a cessation of operation of any plant or business or other agency which might be utilized to contribute to the war effort.

I further conclude that without an act of the Congress there was sufficient authority by the terms of the Constitution itself to justify the action of the President in this case. The President has no power to declare war, that belongs exclusively to Congress. But when war has been declared and is actually existing, his functions as Commander in Chief become of the highest importance and his operations in that connection are entirely beyond the control of the legislature. There develops upon him by virtue of his office a solemn responsibility to preserve the Nation and it is my judgment that there is specifically granted to him authority to utilize all resources of the country to that end.

The Constitution is nothing more than a charter of rights and authority from the people to their Government. That Government consists of the individuals who as officials are in charge of its affairs at a given time. In order to determine what the people had in mind when they made this specific grant of power we must necessarily consider it in the light of circumstances as they existed at the time of the grant. We must recall that at that time the Nation was very weak. Its preservation from invasion or occupation by a foreign power was uppermost in the minds of the people. Although the Government was weak, it ruled a vast and rich country which attracted the dictators and excited the avarice of war lords of that day as it does now. It should be borne in mind that while modern instruments of warfare make America more vulnerable than in times past, then what is now the territory of the United States was actually occupied by armies of foreign powers.

I mentioned these things merely to emphasize that it must surely have been uppermost and foremost in the minds of the writers of the Constitution of those whom they represented and those who later adopted it, that the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States was not to have to resort to a lengthy procedure in order to defend at a moment's notice the very agencies which he might be seeking to use.

Charged with the grave responsibility of preserving a government which guarantees the property rights of individuals, the Chief Executive as Commander in Chief must not be hampered in the prosecution of the war effort. His exercise of authority to this end is subject only to the review by the court that his actions are not arbitrary or without reasonable justification. With this limitation there need be no fear that constitutional government as we know it in these United States will be abolished, destroyed, or impaired.

The prosecution of the war is the business of the executive branch of the Government. What is necessary to that end must necessarily rest in the authority of the officials of that branch of the Government. Their decisions must necessarily, in many instances, be based upon facts which they cannot make public or submit to debate. There has never been a time in the history of the world when such a policy was more properly applied than in this present emergency, with the United States engaged in prosecuting a defensive war on many fronts scattered over all parts of the world and with implements of modern warfare subjecting her territories and mainland to imminent danger of actual invasion in the course of a few hours, and with a part of her possessions occupied by enemy forces. It is sheer folly to say or pretend that the Government should admit of the slightest delay for any cause of the production of war materials made by the plants involved in this lawsuit.

This position is not only substantiated by reason and principle but is merely a restatement of what has always been accepted as the correct judicial interpretation of the functions of the President in times of war or emergencies.

It is well said in a recent case, Alpirin v. Huffman (49 Fed. Supp. 337): "Defensive measure which a century ago might have awaited deliberation and the orderly course of judicial process, must now be taken resolutely and immediately. Science has changed not alone the methods of formal warfare, but also and especially the relationship to it of the civilian population."

In the old case of United States v. Russell (80 U. S. 623, 13 Wall. 623), the court said: "Private property, the Constitution provides, shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, and it is clear that there are few safeguards ordained in the fundamental law against oppression and the exercise of arbitrary power of more ancient origin or of greater value to the citizen, as the provision for compensation, except in certain extreme cases, is a condition precedent annexed to the right of the Government to deprive the owner of his property without his consent. Extraordinary and unforeseen occasions arise, however, beyond all doubt, in cases of extreme necessity in time of war or of immediate and impending public danger, in which private property may be impressed into the public service, or may be seized and appropriated to the public use, or may even be destroyed without the consent of the owner. Unquestionably such extreme cases may arise, as where the property taken is imperatively necessary in time of war to construct defenses for the preservation of a military post at the moment of an impending attack by the enemy, or for food or medicine for a sick and famishing army utterly destitute and without other means of such supplies, or to transport troops, munitions of war, or clothing to reinforce or supply an army in a distant field, where the necessity for such reinforcement or supplies is extreme and imperative, to enable those in command of the post to maintain their positions or to repel an impending attack, provided it appears that other means of transportation could not be obtained, and that the transports impressed for the purpose were imperatively required for such immediate use."

Who can say that at this time such an emergency, as contemplated by the language of this opinion, does not now exist? See also, Mitchell v. Harmony (54 U. S. 115, 13 How. 115); Marbury v. Madison (5 U. S. 137, 1 Cranch 137); Mississippi v. Johnson (71 U. S.

474, 4 Wall. 475). The case of Alpirin v. Huffman, supra, is an excellent opinion and has an accumulation of authorities on this and related points of law.

The Attorney General of the United States has recently made the following pertinent statement in an opinion on a similar situation. I quote:

"The fact that the initial impact of these disturbances is on the production or distribution of essential civilian goods is not a reason for denying the Chief Executive and the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy the power to take steps to protect the Nation's war effort. In modern war the maintenance of a healthy, orderly, and stable civilian economy is essential to successful military effort. The Congress has recognized this fact by enacting such statutes as the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942; the act of October 2, 1942, entitled 'An act to amend the emergency Price Control Act of 1942 and to aid in preventing inflation, and for other purposes'; the small business mobilization law of June 11, 1942; and the War Labor Disputes Act."

In addition to the long and unbroken chain of authorities for what I believe to be a most rational view of the situation presented by the record in this case, the Supreme Court in the now famous case (decided June 21, 1943) of Hirabayaski v. United States (320 U. S. 81), on page 93 of the opinion said:

"The war power of the National Government is 'the power to wage war successfully.' See Charles Evans Hughes' War Powers Under the Constitution (42 A.B.A.Reports 232, 238). It extends to every matter and every activity so related to war as substantially affect its conduct and progress. The power is not restricted to the winning of victories in the field and the repulse of enemy forces. It embraces every phase of the national defense, including the protection of war materials and the members of the armed forces from injury and from the dangers which attend the rise, prosecution, and progress of war. Prize cases, supra: Miller v. United States (11 Wall, 268, 303–14); Stewart v. Kahn (11 Wall 493, 506–7); Selective Draft Law cases (245 U. S. 366); McKinley v. United States (249 U. S. 197); United States v. MacIntosh (283 U. S. 605, 622–67, 623). Since the Constitution commits to the Executive and to Congress the exercise of the war power in all the vicissitudes and conditions of warfare it has necessarily given them wide scope for the exercise of judgment and discretion in determining the nature and extent of the threatened injury or danger and in the selection of the means for resisting it. Ex parte Quirin, supra (28–29; cf.). Prize cases, supra, 670; Martin v. Mott (12 Wheat 19, 29). Where, as they did here, the conditions called for the exercise of judgment and discretion and for the choice of means by those branches of the Government on which the Constitution has placed the responsibility of war-making, it is not for any count to sit in the view of the wisdom of that action for substitution of its judgment for theirs."

I am of the opinion that the President's order was valid, that the motion for a permanent injunction should be denied and that the defendant's motion to dismiss should be sustained.

Since I conclude that the order of the President does not rest upon the validity of the order of the War Labor Board, it is not necessary or proper that I should pass upon the question which the plaintiff poses as the "unlawfulness of the War Labor Board order."

The United States must, of course, compensate the plaintiff for the use of the property and a determination of the validity of the War Labor Board order would more appropriately arise in the determination of what is to be just and adequate compensation.

Proper orders should be submitted in conformity with this opinion.

MACSWINFORD, Judge.

Date: May 9, 1944.

Attorneys for plaintiff: Thomas G. Sandidge, Owensboro, Ky.; Wilbur K. Miller, Owensboro, Ky.; Mac O'Rell Truitt, Washington, D. C.; Carl McFarland, Washington, D. C.

Attorneys for defendant: Francis M. Shea, Assistant Attorney General, Washington, D. C.; Eli H. Brown, III, United States Attorney, Louisville, Ky.; Joseph Fanelli, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Speaker, it will be noted that the opinion of Judge MacSwinford carries many decisions of circuit courts as well as of the Supreme Court and I invite all the Republicans as well as the writers of some newspapers who have charged the President with exceeding his authority to read it in its entirety. If they do so, I feel they will hang their heads in shame for making these accusations.

I feel that the President and the Department of Justice have been too lenient with this man Avery who, as chairman of the Board of Montomery Ward & Co., as director of the Pullman Co., and many other corporations, has fought and resisted the efforts of the President and the administration, despite the granting of many favors at its hands. He surely, saying the least, does not show any patriotic spirit.

SUPPORTED THE RESOLUTION FOR AN INVESTIGATION

Mr. Speaker, during the debate when House Resolution 521 providing for an investigation was up for consideration, being obliged to yield most of my time to others, I was unable to explain fully the underlying reasons for my support of its passage. I was at first opposed to the resolution, not so much to the resolution itself as to the spirit of bitterness in which it was introduced and to the rash and hasty action implied in the efforts to force immediate action. When the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] joined with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and the other Republican members of the Committee on Rules to push it through, my suspicions were aroused that it was being rushed for political reasons.

But, having learned over the week end that the real truth and facts behind Montgomery Ward & Co.'s defiant position were being obscured from the public, I then resolved to support the resolution, feeling satisfied that a strong committee would be named to conduct the investigation.

The developments of the last few days have justified my position. As I stated on the floor, the plant was returned to the company, the union proved by a fair election its right to represent the workers, and now today, in spite of that, you have the spectacle of the company and this man Avery refusing to renew the old contract for 30 days, and stating in advance that he will not negotiate on maintenance of membership.

Now that the first flush of excitement over the Government's temporary possession of the plant has cooled, sober second thought prevails, and we begin to see the picture as a whole in its true light. Investigation should proceed into every phase of the situation on the basis of fair and impartial inquiry into facts and background, instead of in a prejudiced atmosphere.

By all means let us have this thorough and deliberative investigation, not an inquiry generated in partisan heat and conducted for purposes of political propaganda and to vent anti-Roosevelt spleen. Indeed the very gravity of the issues raised, as from several points of view, imposes upon the committee the responsibility of holding public hearings in proper spirit and for ascertainment of all the underlying conditions involved.

Let us check not only into the action of the President, in seeking to make effective a law which Congress passed over his veto, but let us also check into the conduct and the motives behind the conduct of the corporation head who was responsible for the Presidential action.

LONG RECORD OF NONCOMPLIANCE

Montgomery Ward & Co. has a long record of noncompliance in national economic-recovery programs, dating back to 1935, and of actual, open defiance of duly constituted authority of this Government and the law of the land in labor matters frequently since 1939. The committee will not be getting a full and a clear picture of events leading to the climax of this affair if it overlooks that record.

We have heard much about the rights of Montgomery Ward & Co. in this case. The corporation's lawyer and the corporation's defenders in Congress have expatiated at length upon these rights allegedly having been violated, and upon the idea that our whole system of free private enterprise has thereby been jeopardized.

I listened patiently but did not hear these same gentlemen say anything about the responsibilities and duties of this corporation. Perhaps they prefer to ignore it, but the elementary truth is that any private corporation exists only by reason of the public grant to it of certain privileges.

Under our form of government liberty does not mean license to impede or endanger the common welfare. On the contrary the enjoyment of rights and the exercise of privileges, whether by individuals or corporations, imposes at the same time a responsibility and a duty toward the Government which was set up to protect those rights and which granted those privileges, and toward the whole community and the social and economic order of which the individual or the corporation is a part.

These are fundamentals of our civilized society, our form of Government, and our democratic way of life. If these great truths are to be cast into the discard, if a single corporate entity is to be permitted to set itself up as a power beyond the authority of Government, and greater than the Government of the United States itself, then, indeed, is our Nation in danger of defeat at home while our Army and Navy fight abroad.

It is not for this House or the Congress as a whole to render a judicial decision in this case; but there are a number of observations I should like to offer which should be considered in connection with the charge that the President exceeded his authority in taking possession of the plant and in utilizing the military arm to do so.

The purpose and intent of the Smith-Connally Act, which the President vetoed and which this Congress approved in spite of that veto, was to give the executive branch an authority and a power to exercise against recalcitrants. It was legislation passed in the heat of indignation over the obstructive tactics of John L. Lewis in the coal strike; to make certain that no one individual may put his own interests, or that of a single group, above the welfare and the war effort of the Nation at large.

SERIOUS DEFIANCE COMES NOT FROM A LABOR UNION, BUT FROM A BIG CORPORATION

But the first real test of the War Labor Board's authority to settle a labor disturbance under the Smith-Connally Act, the first serious defiance comes not from a labor union, not from the workers involved—they complied with the Government's order to go back to work—but it comes from a big corporation.

Ah! Can that be the reason for all the hullabaloo? Does the shoe pinch because it is on the other foot? Why is such an uproar created in this one case that exceeds all the publicity, the anguished protests, the cries of dictatorship in all 17 other cases of plants taken over by the Government since June 1941?

And mind you, out of 6,000 wartime disputes settled only these 17 had to be referred to the President for action. In 12 of these 17 instances in which the Government temporarily took possesison of private plants the Army and Navy were used by the President. But in none of those cases was a similar hue and cry raised.

Why was it wrong, dictatorial, high-handed, to cite a few of the adjectives applied, for the Executive to take action in this case similar to that taken in the first, the fifth, or the fifteenth cases?

Can it be because Montgomery Ward & Co. is a powerful corporation whose directorate is composed of men who also sit upon the boards of a score of other great corporations and of men who politically are opposed to the President of the United States?

Can it be that the importunities, the pressure, the demands, the outcries directed at this House arise from an organized effort to stampede us into some brash, ill-considered action?

Can it be that the wave of telegrams and letters, which some Members of Congress proudly exhibited and flourished as evidence of an outraged public opinion, are merely the result of a planned campaign such as was exposed in connection with the Utility Holding Company Act?

These are all questions we must consider. And there are more.

Is it mere coincidence that many of the same elements which cried loudest for curbs upon labor in the name of the war effort now protest against their application to violators outside the ranks of labor?

ACTION WAS PURSUANT TO ENFORCEMENT OF A LAW ENACTED BY THE CONGRESS

After all, the action against Montgomery Ward was pursuant to enforcement of a law enacted by the Congress. This House, together with the Senate, charged the Executive with the duty of enforcement. Now, when it is enforced with equal vigor against a big corporation, are we to recede from our intent?

Was the law placed upon the statute books for a definite purpose, to meet a specific need? Or was it a mere gesture and jest? Was it given approval by this body merely to appease the demands of one special-interest group at the expense of another?

Did we not intend that compliance with the law—by all—should be secured? If so, how?

In the 6,000 other disputes of a similar nature it was brought about by unions ending their strikes and by employers also complying with Board orders; in other words, by ordinary voluntary cooperation with the Government—that same government administered by officials the people themselves have elected.

In those few—those 17—cases where compliance was not voluntary, what was to be done by the Chief Executive, the Commander in Chief, engaged in the supreme task of marshaling all the Nation's resources for a mighty, world-wide conflict?

What was he to do when the dignity—the authority—of our sovereign Government is flouted by one man, setting himself, and the corporation he leads, above the law? In this Montgomery Ward case the President acted as he did in many of those others. He took the only step possible under the circumstances. He called upon the military for assistance when this man deliberately and arrogantly defied United States marshals. The President exercised his police powers in the interest of the common welfare.

But this was no sudden, impulsive action upon the part of the Executive, and no departure from precedent established in earlier similar cases. The same lawful procedure was followed as in those other cases. No; this was not the initial move to enforce the order. This was the last—the final—resort to which the Government was driven by the arbitrary, obstinate, and provocative stand of the head of Montgomery Ward, and after all civil means of action had been exhausted.

Was Montgomery Ward to be treated any differently than any other offender because it is an $81,000,000 corporation, or because its 1943 profits amounted to more than $20,000,000?

Should we have one law for the rest of the country and another for Mr. Avery?

It has been rightly said that there are serious issues involved here, but let us be sure that we give consideration to all of them. What can be more serious than open defiance of the Government in time of war—defiance based upon a selfish private interest as opposed to the common good of all?

Marquis Childs, a Washington writer, who is so esteemed for the fairness of his accounts as to be chosen successor to the late Raymond Clapper's column, raised this very same question. I quote:

> Congress is going into this dispute, but I wonder if they'll really get to the root of it. There is an attitude of contempt toward the Government in both the Lewis and the Avery cases. * * * But in wartime you can't make your own rules. In a complicated industrial society the umpire has to have authority.

Mr. Avery and his lawyers very well knew what could be the only outcome of his defiance. They planned it that way, it is quite evident. Mr. Avery was quoted in the newspapers as saying that he was carried out of the building because he preferred it so. He deliberately chose the role of self-made martyr.

But this brings up another question. Why was the issue raised at this particular time? More than 2 years ago, in February 1942, after the union won the right to represent his employees in a lawful election and was certified as bargaining agent by the National Labor Relations Board, he signed a contract. The President at that time was forced to twice command Mr. Avery to sign. He balked once and then, after the second order, he signed.

WHY DID NOT MR. AVERY HAVE A SHOW-DOWN 2 YEARS AGO

Mr. Avery could have had his showdown 2 years ago. He chose to postpone it. Why? To await a more "favorable," a more "opportune" moment? Why did he wait until now?

Because this year is 1944. Because the people are again to elect a President. Because the interests of which Avery is the symbol and the spokesman hate the President more than they hate America's enemies. Because to them it seems more important to defeat the man in the White House than to win the war.

Of all times—at this crucial juncture in our Nation's history; with millions of our youth poised for the greatest military venture ever attempted; with the very fate of humanity's future dependent upon the success of that venture; and with every nerve and fiber of the American people straining to make it a success—of all times, this moment is chosen by a little group of willful men to hatch their political plot against our Commander in Chief.

This is their D-day that they have selected to dramatize the false issue of "dictatorship"; to try to delude public opinion, and to stampede this Congress. I say the public is not fooled and I am confident that Congress will not permit itself to be fooled. The bugaboo of "dictatorship," worn out by overusage in 1936 and 1940, still has no substance. This cry did not work then and it will raise only hollow echoes now. But we may be sure that all of the financial and propaganda powers that have tried to put it over in the past are banding together again to carry on their campaign of villification, abuse, and falsification against the President of the United States.

The opening gun of the modern "copperhead" rebellion has been fired by Sewell Avery in Chicago, appropriately enough. In the McCormick-Patterson press one of its favorite writers predicts that the picture of Mr. Avery being carried out of his office by soldiers will be the prize Republican campaign document.

So, there you have the secret motive behind this incident. You have it from Avery himself, when he screamed: "You New Dealer" at the Attorney General of the United States, and you have it from the McCormick-Patterson press. After all, the Tribune Tower and Montgomery Ward's offices are only a few blocks apart, and they share the same political thoughts.

But, Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, politics—opposition to an administration—is one thing. Defiance of the Government and enforcement of its laws and the Constitution are something else.

Mr. Avery has chosen his battleground and he has chosen this unfortunate hour to wage his battle. He has flung a challenge and his challenge is being met.

Mr. Speaker, the investigation will proceed and the people will obtain all the facts and, when they are ascertained, I am sure that Mr. Avery and those behind him will stand condemned in the eyes of the American public and the fair and patriotic stockholders of Montgomery Ward & Co. who, in their own interest, should seek his removal as an official of the company.

Sewell Avery Versus the People

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WRIGHT PATMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am including the fifth of a series of articles appearing in the Chicago Sun under the title of "Sewell Avery Versus the People." This article, which appeared in the May 19, 1944, issue, is entitled "Conflicts of Wards Over Trade Practices Shown in F. T. C. Files."

It is as follows:

SEWELL AVERY VERSUS THE PEOPLE—CONFLICTS OF WARDS OVER TRADE PRACTICES SHOWN IN F. T. C. FILES

(Fifth of a series)

(By Thomas F. Reynolds and Charles O. Gridley)

WASHINGTON, May 18.—Not only have Sewell Lee Avery and Montgomery Ward & Co. been fighting the War Labor Board, Office of Price Administration, and the National Labor Relations Board, but also the Federal Trade Commission which has many times accused them of "false and misleading advertising" and violating rules of fair business competition.

When Avery was carried out of his Chicago plant last month, opponents of the national administration sought to rally little business—"the corner groceryman"—to his defense. But Chairman PATMAN (Democrat, Texas), of the House Small Business Committee, charges that in reality Avery and the financial interests he represents are dedicated to the objectives of eliminating small-business men from the American cimpetitive scene.

It was PATMAN who called attention to Avery's brushes with the law and pointed out that Montgomery Ward "had been five times adjudged a violator" of the Robinson-Patman Act which establishes rules of fair competition in private enterprise.

PATMAN'S references to Ward's violations of fair trade practices, related to a Federal Trade Commission complaint which sought to cast Avery in the surprising role of a salesman for pills.

In a complaint filed on September 22, 1943, against Montgomery Ward & Co., the F. T. C. accused Wards of selling Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets and Ward's Bile Salts Compound & Cascara Tablets, which the Federal agency charged are "potentially dangerous."

The F. T. C. charged that the failure of Ward's to disclose in its advertising that the use of the preparations under conditions prescribed in the advertisements "or such conditions as are customary and usual may be potentially dangerous has had and now has the tendency and capacity to and does mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that each of said preparations is entirely safe and harmless and may be taken at all times without ill effects to the user and to induce a substantial portion of the purchasing public, because of such erroneous and mistaken belief, to purchase said medicinal preparations."

The F. T. C. complaint was filed last September 22.

Although hearings have been held on this issue, the F. T. C. has not yet ruled finally on the citation. But even before this issue was placed formally on the docket by this Federal agency, the F. T. C. had found Ward's guilty on charges that it had "disseminated and has caused the dissemination of false and misleading advertisements."

For example, this finding was made on October 12, 1942, on a complaint demanding that Ward's cease advertising cosmetics:

"Ward's creams contain vitamins A and D superfine creams—doubly rich in vitamins. When made, 1,400 U. S. P. units of vitamin A and 300 U. S. P. units of vitamin D are added to each ounce of cream."

After investigation the Trade Commission found that this advertisement, along with similar advertisements, for "skin-softening cream formerly called 'Ward's tissue cream,'" and "Double vitamin cream for dry skins," plus blurbs for "Kleer skin" and "Lady Carole vita facial pak," could be characterized as follows:

"The foregoing representations and advertisements * * * are grossly exaggerated, false, and misleading.

"In truth and in fact, the respondent's (Ward's) various cosmetic cream preparations will not, because of the addition thereto of vitamins, therapeutically treat or benefit the skin to which said preparations are applied and will not aid said preparations in keeping the complexion clear and smooth.

"The external application of vitamins to the skin will not therapeutically affect such skin in the same manner as would the internal consumption of vitamins therapeutically affect the health of the body."

Although the Commission found that Wards halted such "false and misleading advertisements" for cosmetics "a short time" prior to issuance of the complaint, it nevertheless followed through with the case and on October 12, 1942, issued an order directing Avery's company henceforth to discontinue the misleading use of "vitamin" in connection with its cosmetic products.

The cosmetic case, however, was by no means the only time that Montgomery Ward was called on the carpet by the Federal Trade Commission. From 1935 through 1938 the record shows that it was "once a year" for the company.

By stipulations with the Federal agency, Wards conceded the rightness of F. T. C. objections to its methods and modified its merchandising techniques in several instances, including the following:

1. April 6, 1935: Wards agreed to stop advertising or selling a diluted form of neatsfoot oil, branded as "neatsfoot," unless the brand was accompanied by an equally prominent label which clearly indicated that the product was not composed wholly of this waterproofing fluid.

2. May 20, 1936: Ward's agreed that in sales of "turtle oil" it would drop its advertising claims that this fluid was "a corrective for wrinkles * * * ideal nourishing cream * * * aids in retainment of youthful complexion, contains ingredients that nourish the skin." The F. T. C. said this advertising claim of Avery's company was calculated to confuse, mislead, or deceive purchasers into the belief that said product applied externally will nourish the human skin, or act as a corrective for wrinkles."

3. January 15, 1937: Ward's agreed to abandon "false and misleading advertising" in connection with what the company had been proclaiming as "rich oriental wood and butt walnut veneers." This agreement was made by the F. T. C. to apply to all of Ward's wooden furniture products that were not totally covered with veneer, with the enforcing understanding that "if such products are not wholly covered with veneer and the above words or phrases * * * are used to describe such products, the other woods of which the exposed surfaces of such products are composed, shall be * * * described in * * * advertising matter."

4. August 25, 1938: Ward's admitted that it had fallaciously advertised a gas floor furnace as having certain advantages unavailable in products sold by its competitors, that its highly advertised product was capable of leaking gas around an unsealed top, and that it had falsely claimed that the furnace provided "perfect combustion," whereas the fact was that "furnaces have not yet been developed which will produce complete combustion of all fuel consumed."

5. June 7, 1941: Wards agreed to halt "false and misleading advertising" for electrically charged fences, for which the F. T. C. found that Avery's company had made unjustified claims in its advertising.

6. June 29, 1941: The F. T. C. directed Wards to put precautionary labels on its hair dye products, "Inecto" and "Clairol," which said: "Caution: Use only as directed on label" and "Caution: This product contains ingredients which may cause skin irritation on certain individuals and a preliminary test according to accompanying directions should first be made; this product must not be used for dyeing the eyelashes or eyebrows; to do so may cause blindness."

The small merchants came before the House Small Business Committee in the last year to detail specific charges that Montgomery Ward & Co.'s retail stores were driving them out of business by unfair competition. Their charges were such that the chairman of the committee, Representative PATMAN, declared that Avery's "merchandising tactics crucified the smaller merchants wherever they are in competition with Montgomery Ward & Co. and represent monopolistic methods of the worst type."

No Federal court and no Federal agency which takes complete evidence has ruled on these complaints of little business, however.

Address of Hon. Robert F. Wagner, of New York, at I Am an American Day Meeting

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT F. WAGNER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 23 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have embodied in the Appendix of the RECORD, an address which I delivered on Sunday, May 21, 1944, at I Am an American Day meeting held at Central Park Mall, New York City.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, Mayor LaGuardia, my friends, by common consent we have dedicated this day to Americanism. And since Americanism is a thing of the spirit, this day takes on the character of a religious event. It is in a mood of sacred devotion to cherished ideals that we are assembled here.

Our purpose is not to indulge in jingoistic pride that we are Americans. This is not the time to gloat over our great power now exhibited on all the continents of the earth. Rather, have we met to reaffirm or undying faith in America as a great ideal; to recharge the fires of our belief in democracy; and to consecrate ourselves to the service of democracy, not only as an inheritance to be preserved but an achievement still to be attained.

This Nation has behind it 168 years of history—a history of accomplishment unparalleled by any other people. But history alone would not justify these exercises. It is because America not only has a history of a glorious past put represents the prophecy of a happier future that you and I proudly proclaim "I am an American."

From the Arctic to the Tropics our boys are fighting to make that prophecy come true. On the seven seas they are risking and giving their lives to make America's promise secure for ourselves and our children. In the fighting we are also learning. War is a ruthless schoolmaster. It is teaching us a lesson the world should have memorized long ago; that no man and no nation are sufficient unto themselves; that we are all brothers under God; that if our brothers are enslaved our liberty is imperiled; if our brothers are hungry our plenty is a myth; if our brothers are attacked we are not safe. This lesson derived from all the great religions has been brought home to us by the total war which we are fighting.

Of this I am sure: We cannot attain the American ideal; we cannot fulfill the promise which that ideal holds, unless we achieve the defeat of our enemies and bring this war to a victorious conclusion. Everything—everything we hold sacred and precious depends upon victory.

Since this is so it follows that no one can truthfully say, "I am an American" who has shirked his duty, or has given less of himself than he was able, or has spread distrust of our purposes, suspicion of our allies, or disunity among our people.

When victory is assured, as with the help of Providence it will be, then the energies now being spent upon the battlefield must be concentrated upon the furtherance of the American ideal. This is not the time to formulate a precise blueprint of all that involves. But at least we can briefly indicate the direction we must take.

First and foremost is the organization of the world for peace. I do not mean the adoption of pious resolutions. I do mean the creation of the tools for maintaining the peace—powerful tools, backed by us in common with other peace-loving nations. These tools include peaceful means for settling international disputes and forceful means for restraining those who refuse to abide by the laws of civilized society. If this generation should fail in this, as the last generation failed, civilization may not get another chance. We have a covenant with our children sealed with the blood of our heroes that this time we shall not fail.

Our second objective is the vigilant preparation of our own Nation at all times to defend our liberty and security. Our enemies will hereafter know that the treachery of Pearl Harbor cannot be repeated.

Our third objective is to maintain in the future as we have in the present a government which is the servant of the people and not its master.

Our fourth objective is the maintenance and prudent expansion of the whole system of social security, including protection against the risks of industrial accident, unemployment, and poverty in old age.

Fifth, we must enlarge the scope of social security so as to make available to rich and poor alike the benefits of modern medical science, not only in the cure of disease but in the promotion of a higher standard of health among the entire population.

Sixth, one of our immediate tasks is the mobilization of both public and private means to clear away our slums, build in their place decent housing, and bring a home it can love within the reach of every family.

Seventh, a cardinal requirement of democracy is that every boy and girl shall have an education which is not limited by the ability of their parents to pay for it. All of our children must have an equal chance to make the most of themselves. Only in this manner can the Nation be assured that it is getting the full benefit of the capacity of all classes of the population without regard to previous station in life.

The same reasons dictate the necessity of equalizing opportunity in public and private activity for all of our people regardless of race, creed, or color. In a democracy, merit and merit alone should determine the heights to which any man can reach.

Our ninth goal is the preservation and extension of the great freedoms to think, to speak, to write, and to worship without molestation so that man may attain that high dignity which the divine plan comprehended when He created him in His image.

Finally, let us never forget that all our hopes and dreams can come true only through the courage and devotion of the men and women in uniform. They have first call upon our love and upon our resources. It is our task to build a nation fit for such heroes to live in.

The great virtue of democracy is that it cannot be measured by a mechanical yardstick or confined by a rigid definition. It is an ever-expanding concept. As we reach new heights of understanding we see ever wider horizons, embracing more people, greater liberties, and more elevated standards of human well-being.

To be an American today is to strive for the attainment of such goals. For these aims millions of Americans—sons, husbands, wives, sisters—have left their loved ones, interrupted their careers, gone to the battle fronts, there to face whatever destiny awaits them. Can we do less than to hallow their mission, cherish it in our heart and, like them, sacrifice unceasingly upon the altars of democracy?

Speech of Dr. Luis Manuel Debayle, Director of Public Health of Nicaragua, at the Washington Chapter of the Pan American Medical Society

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I include a speech by Dr. Luis Manuel Debayle, Director of Public Health of Nicaragua, given at the Washington Chapter of the Pan American Medical Society, Washington, D. C., Sunday, April 23. This meeting was attended by a large group of health officers from all the Central and South American countries who were in Washington for a conference under the supervision of the Sanitary Bureau of the Pan American Union. It is an excellent example of the fine spirit of cooperation in all fields as well as in matters of public health which we are receiving from our neighboring nations of the Americas.

The speech follows:

Gentlemen, we are at present confronting the greatest crisis that humanity and democracy have ever faced. The foundations of social organization, born of idealism, great sacrifice, and noble perseverance, are being tested. Storms, unleashed by insane ambitions, are endangering the most sacred conquests of civilization. As the greatest apostle of democracy, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, has said it is now being decided whether the existence of a free world shall continue; whether the inhabitants of the earth shall have the opportunity to enjoy the liberties which the eminent North American statesman deems fundamental to worth-while existence; whether the equality of nations, respect for foreign rights, freedom of the seas, and other ideals sacred to the meaning of the Atlantic Charter are to be a radiant reality, or merely an empty symbol of the lofty desires of two great national leaders.

Before the dilemma confronting the world the nations unite around the flags that represent their highest aspirations. All nations which are in a position to do so work to strengthen the lines of democracy which guarantee their existence, because the desire for liberty is born in the individual. It is inconceivable that a man, born with this prerogative, should despise his birthright to the extent that he would sacrifice it and thus become the instrument of his own death. Similarly, only circumstances beyond its control can cause a nation to serve adverse interests at the expense of its own welfare. In the depths of a man's soul burn the fires of rebellion againt slavery. That is why the pathetic drama of the European nations, subdued at the feet of Hitlerism, provides the world with the most powerful incentive to revolt against this violation of human dignity, and for this reason the hour has come for us to form a united front of all the nations of the Western Hemisphere, a united family of nations which lives, hopes, and fights at this critical moment for the world, with faith in the final victory which will save humanity. Our faith in democracy, foremost among the requisites for human happiness and the success of this system of government and of the people who believe in it; our passion for liberty and the advantages of greater comprehension among men of different races and creeds; and, above all, the knowledge that we are living in a critical period, a dangerous period, surrounded and threatened by the brutal conception of life, of those who embrace totalitarianism—all these have inevitably placed us in a position of total and united American defense.

In order to be able to arrive at a practical and adequate inter-Americanism, the fundamental principles must be clarified and fully understood by all the nations. Culture, science, and politics will play an important role. Do not fear the heterogeneity of the American nations. This is not at all incompatible with homogeneity because the basis of this union lies in our spiritual needs and is determined by our community of moral and material interests.

Good faith, clear and wholehearted, must replace any insincerity that may have existed in inter-American relations. Prejudices which have created disunion should be forgotten forever. The ephemeral interests of yesterday must give place to the permanent interests of today and tomorrow.

Let us not say that the menace of Italian-German-Japanese totalitarianism is the cause of our alliance in the defense of Democracy. No! If it were not for the inspired foresight and sincerity of the good neighbor policy of President Roosevelt, which has conquered the heart and the confidence of Latin America, and the great teachings of Bolivar, the first of disunity and distrust would still be latent in the American peoples.

We, the sons of America, let us pronounce with reverence the names of Simon Bolivar, Thomas Jefferson, and Franklin Delano Roosevelt. They, by the impulse of their broad continental conscience, opened the road along which the American people now march to their glorious destiny.

And now, focusing our attention on one point of American unity we come to the very important issue of scientific collaboration among the Americas. In choosing this topic, I am fully aware of the fact that it is not new. I feel, however, that during my years of service to the Nicaraguan Government, acting at various times as Minister to the United States, as Secretary of Foreign Affairs, and as director of public health, I have had a good opportunity to observe at first hand the value of international cooperation in achieving improvements in public health, as well as the need for further efforts in this field.

Visits to sister republics in Latin America have convinced me that many of their problems are similar to our own in Nicaragua. In the accelerated history of the past 10 years a new truth has been established, that is, that isolationism is not tenable in wartimes. As public servants and leaders in an important branch of community life we must anticipate the future, and accept, as a companion truth, the fact that isolation is no longer tenable in peacetime either. This concept must in the future govern our activities in all ramifications of government, and must not be limited solely to those activities which are obviously international, such as international commerce. I feel very strongly that each of us must accept as part of our responsibility the duty of carefully surveying our work and problems to determine possible points of cooperation on an international scale.

Excellent progress has been made in this direction by various well-established agencies. One need only mention the Pan American Sanitary Bureau, the Institute of Inter-American Affairs, the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, as important factors in building a structure of international cooperation. No complaint can be made about the excellent progress of these agencies to date. In Nicaragua our department of public health was established largely through the efforts of the Rockefeller Foundation. Significant help has been forthcoming from the Pan American Sanitary Bureau and the Institute of Inter-American Affairs. A long road, however, lies ahead. Each individual present at this conference, as well as the group, should throw his full weight behind this development in the evolution of social philosophy.

A brief review of our needs in Nicaragua may help clarify the problem and possibly indicate methods of procedure.

1. Vital statistics: We are handicapped by inadequacy of census data and inadequacy of personnel trained in gathering vital statistics.

2. Food and drug administration requires careful thought and planning: Steps must be taken toward the standardization of production and adequate control of drugs placed on the international market. It is impossible for the health officer of a small country to evaluate the mass of new products placed on the market each year. Ignorance of the true value of biological preparations, vitamin preparations and drugs, leaves the medical profession and public, as well as responsible drug firms, easy prey for poorly controlled or unscrupulous concerns.

3. Environmental sanitation: Most tropical countries have been left behind in the newly awakened interest in housing. There is much to be done in the field of development of techniques of construction of low-cost housing suitable for tropical climates. Such study is beyond the reach of a small country working alone.

4. Local health administration is a fertile field: Some countries have gone far to develop an extensive program of local health administration while others, including Nicaragua, are just starting. I am certain that we would all gain by a conference organized with the purpose of evolving standard administrative practices for the administration of local health programs. I make this statement with the full understanding that variation will be necessary according to local needs, and local resources. The pooling of experience, however, and free discussions of programs now in operation can do a great deal to speed the development of this phase of public-health work in many countries where this development has been slow.

5. Our methods of hospital administration are primitive: Although this is not directly a health-department function, it is so closely related to a health program that it deserves our careful attention.

These are just some of the problems which face us in the development of an efficient health program in Nicaragua. I have taken the liberty of reviewing our needs in Nicaragua because similar problems exist, though possibly not as acutely, in some of the other countries of Latin America.

I should, therefore, like to present the following proposals for your consideration:

1. We should strengthen and elaborate the administrative machinery already established for international cooperation in health, particularly the Pan American Sanitary Bureau. Representatives of each of the various essential subdivisions of the organization should be appointed in each country.

2. Conferences of key personnel in various fields should be organized in order that they may dissect and study the various specialized problems and propose schedules of activity and development.

3. Journals in special fields, printed in four languages, should be established to stimulate and maintain the interest of personnel and provide a greater opportunity for pooling of ideas.

4. Promote the publication of technical literature in Spanish and Portuguese. The lack of published material of a fundamental nature becomes immediately apparent in planning training programs.

5. Creation of a board to work on standardization of technical education and to develop teaching centers where appropriate material is most readily available.

This is our front in the war. We must attack the problem as energetically and directly as if it were a military objective. We must develop patterns which will spread across oceans to other continents in order to help develop in practice, as well as theory, a true community of nations. By pooling our resources all of us are that much richer. In working separately we are that much poorer—all of us will lose.

Colorado Proposes Regulations for Interstate Air Carriers

REMARKS

OF

HON. ALFRED L. BULWINKLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, an event has occurred which further demonstrates the farsightedness of the Interstate Commerce Committee and the soundness of the provisions of the Lea aviation bill. The Members of the House probably are aware that one of the salient features of that bill is to prevent the imposition by States of burdensome, conflicting, and duplicating regulations upon interstate air commerce. There has just come to my desk a set of regulations which are proposed by the Colorado Public Utilities Commission for imposition on air carriers operating within the State of Colorado. This set of regulations is 43 typewritten, single-spaced pages and covers the operation of both interstate and intrastate air carriers in the greatest of detail.

The regulations even go so far as to prescribe ash containers in passenger cabins and pilot cockpits and require that all pilots carry a flashlight with them. I have not had time to analyze this lengthy and complicated set of regulations sufficiently to determine the full extent of the conflict between them and Federal regulations, and the duplications of regulation and administration which must result from their promulgation. However, a quick reading reveals to me that the imposition of such regulation upon interstate air carriers will result in constant interference with their operations and a tremendous increase in their costs of operation. While it may not be any concern of the Congress, it also is perfectly plain that the taxpayers of Colorado will have to pay large sums for the administration of regulations which not only fail to improve air carrier service but will actually make such service more expensive for those same taxpayers.

In order that the Members of the House will be able to see for themselves the effect of these proposed regulations, I will touch upon a few of the outstanding requirements.

In the first place, it will be necessary for those interstate air carriers operating in Colorado to secure from the Colorado Public Utilities Commission a certificate of convenience and necessity in order to haul intrastate traffic within that State. The implications of this are plain. If Colorado has the power to grant this certificate it also has the power to withhold it and prevent the interstate carrier from hauling intrastate traffic. While the revenue from intrastate traffic has been very limited, if this rule were applied in all of the States through which a particular air carrier operates, it could be deprived of a substantial amount of revenue. Thus the interstate air carrier that the National Government has fostered by reason of its value to the commerce of the United States, the Postal Service, and the national defense will be deprived of financial support necessary for its full development. In addition, Colorado will be able to parallel the interstate carrier with new operations wherever it sees fit and further impair its financial integrity and the integrity of the national air transportation system which has been built up over many years.

While this is obviously contrary to the national interest the interstate carrier could probably survive the onslaught if this were all, but it is not all. The Colorado regulations provide page after page of safety regulation. The Colorado Public Utilities Commission will designate the route over which the air carrier must fly in going through Colorado. The Federal Government under the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 now prescribes the route that the air carrier must follow in flying through Colorado as well as through other States. I am sure I cannot say what will happen if Colorado picks one route and the Federal Government picks another. Members of the House are undoubtedly aware that the same airplane that carries the interstate passenger also carries the intrastate passenger and it will be quite impossible for that same airplane to fly more than one route at a time.

In addition, Colorado will determine whether or not the air carriers' aircraft are safe. The Federal Government does that now and will continue to do so. The most elaborate provisions have grown up through the years which are designed to make certain that aircraft are fully airworthy before the public is permitted to ride in them. The Federal Government's engineers carefully observe every step in the design and construction of a new airplane and elaborate tests are made on it to make sure it is structurally sound and its performance characteristics are satisfactory. In addition to these measures, before an air carrier can operate an aircraft in scheduled service the air carrier inspectors of the Civil Aeronautics Administration make certain that that particular aircraft is a safe one for the particular service involved. Now after all that is done Colorado will make a fresh determination as to whether the aircraft being used by the interstate carrier is proper for the carriage of intrastate traffic. Again I cannot anticipate what will happen if the Federal and State Governments disagree with respect to a particular aircraft because as I said before the same aircraft must carry interstate as well as intrastate traffic.

The proposed Colorado regulations provide that the Public Utilities Commission will determine whether the crew of the aircraft are competent to perform their duties. This job is also done by the Federal Government. Under the Federal regulation air-line pilots and copilots must have long experience and must pass detailed written and practical examinations before they can operate aircraft in scheduled service. In addition to that the air lines themselves give their pilots elaborate tests and require first pilots to serve long apprenticeships as copilots before they actually can assume command of the aircraft. Now Colorado proposes to do the same thing with respect to the same pilots. It is difficult to say how an interstate air carrier could operate through Colorado in the event that the Federal and State authorities should disagree as to the competence of the particular pilot.

In addition to this Colorado has reserved the right to tell air carriers how many crew members they shall have. This right is also reserved by the Federal Government and the general rule on the air lines today is that they have a pilot and copilot. Colorado may determine that every air line carrying intrastate traffic in Colorado must also have a radio operator and a flight engineer, thus doubling the necessary crew. This, of course, will require the redesign of the airplane in order to make provision for these additional crew members, and thus Colorado regulation will require the conversion of the entire fleet of any air line operating through Colorado.

Another example of a type of regulation which could completely hamstring our air transportation system is that which reserves to the Colorado Public Utilities Commission the right to prescribe the equipment which must be carried on air-carrier aircraft. The Federal Government now prescribes such equipment in great detail. For example, the Federal Government has by regulation required that the navigation lights on aircraft flash on and off so that the aircraft can be more easily identified at night. If the State should prescribe that these navigation lights throw a steady beam, it is difficult to say how the interstate carrier could even carry interstate traffic through Colorado. It would be possible to repeat examples of this type of conflict almost endlessly.

Conflict in administration of the Federal and State regulations cannot possibly be avoided. One example appears on the face of the regulations. The Colorado regulations say that no person can manipulate the controls of an air-carrier aircraft in flight except the pilot, copilot, other qualified air-line personnel, or an air-carrier inspector of the Public Utilities Commission. The effect of this, of course, would be to prevent the Federal air-carrier inspector from carrying out his duties in Colorado. Presumably the Colorado regulation would apply whenever intrastate passengers were on board, which in all likelihood would be true on most flights through the State. Notwithstanding the fact that a large percentage of the passengers would be interstate, the Federal air-carrier inspector would not be able to check the operations of the aircraft or the ability of the pilots in Colorado.

Another clear conflict with Federal regulations is the proposed Colorado regulation which would require the pilot to take up the tickets of the passengers. This is, of course, a hang-over from regulations applying to railroads and trolley lines, which probably are also under the supervision of the Colorado Public Utilities Commission. If this regulation were enforced with respect to air transportation, the pilot on an interstate air carrier would be required to be in two places at once. The Federal regulation, in effect, restricts the pilot to his technical duties in operating the airplane. Before take-off he is required to check weather conditions en route, confer with his dispatcher and meteorologist, check his instruments, radio, engines, and controls. This would permit him very little time or opportunity to be standing at the door of the airplane taking the tickets of the passengers as they come in.

In describing these regulations I have picked only a few examples of the restrictive effect such regulations would have. I will not attempt to describe any more because I am sure the Members of the House will see in these examples the effort of permitting duplicating State regulation of interstate air carriers. In considering the conflicts that I have mentioned you must remember that I have been discussing conflicts between Federal regulations on the one hand and those of one State on the other. If Colorado can impose detailed regulations of the type I have just been discussing, there is no reason whatsoever why all the 48 States should not do the same thing. Thus, instead of having conflict between two regulating agencies, you would have conflict between 49. One large air carrier, such as American Airlines, would have to abide by the regulations of 23 States in order to conduct its operations.

Because we are a United States we have been the envy of those Europeans interested in the development of air transportation. Recently the British Labor Party made a study of European transportation, and after pointing out the inadequacy of the European system and the high subsidies required to keep even that system going, our national air transport service was discussed as follows:

Turn now for comparison to the United States. There, the mileage flown was far higher than anywhere else in the world; standards of efficiency, comfort for passengers, were much higher than elsewhere; an airmail service began as early as 1918; and a network of air lines lighted for flying by night covered the whole vast area. A passenger could board an airplane one evening in New York and alight next morning in San Francisco, 3,000 miles away.

Why was America ahead of Europe in this respect? One reason was the geography and climate of the country; another was the high ability of American designers and technicians, and the vast industrial resources available to them. But the chief reason was that the United States is the United States. A single Federal authority could organize and finance the ground organization on a uniform basis, right across the continent; which meant that no part of a chain of airports, beacons, etc., would be left out because of a local lack of resources. Controlling the ground organization, the Federal authority was in a key position, enabling it to secure a measure of unity in the system and a measure of protection for the public interest. In Europe no such authority existed.

Thus we have the word of an important part of British opinion to the effect that our supremacy in air transportation comes in large measure from the fact that our air lines are supervised and regulated by a single Federal authority. This conclusion is correct up to the present but unless something is done promptly our air lines will have good cause to look with envy upon their European counterparts, who have only 18 or 20 regulatory agencies to deal with, instead of 49.

In considering these proposed Colorado regulations it occurred to me that if I were desirous of preventing the development of air transportation and depriving the public of the benefits of this development I could not devise a better way than to subject this new form of transportation to the type of conflicting regulation I have just described. It will not be possible for air carriers to perfect new equipment if its development must be supervised by 49 regulatory agencies. It will not be possible for them to reduce the costs of their operation so as to make their service available to more people if their expenses are being constantly increased by duplicating regulation. It will not be possible for them to perfect operating procedures which will tend to greater safety if those operating procedures must be agreed upon by 49 separate regulatory agencies.

The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee was aware of all these problems. It recognized fully that if air transportation was to be subject to duplicating and burdensome State regulation our plans for the development of the world's finest air-transportation system would have to be discarded. It wrote into the Lea bill provisions for the protection of the industry against just the type of regulation that Colorado proposes to promulgate, but as I pointed out previously before this body the competitors of air transportation have seen to it that this salutary legislation has not received consideration by the House.

Individual Income Tax Act of 1944

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DONALD H. McLEAN
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a comparison of sections 11 and 12 of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended by the pending tax bill which has come to be known as the Individual Income Tax Act of 1944, showing the surtax rates under existing law and as proposed; also a table prepared by the Division of Research and Statistics of the Treasury Department showing the estimated number of income recipients in various surtax brackets.

The use of this comparison and the table is necessary in determining the revenue yield of the pending measure.

(Excerpt from comparison of the Internal Revenue Code before and after its amendment by the individual income-tax bill of 1944, as reported by the Finance Committee. (Unchanged language appears in Roman, new House language in italics, language repealed is enclosed in black brackets.)

SUBCHAPTER B—GENERAL PROVISIONS

PART I—RATES OF TAX

SEC. 11. Normal tax on individuals.

There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual a normal tax of [6] 3 percent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits against net income provided in section 25 (a). [(]For alternative tax [, if gross income from certain sources is $3,000 or less, see section 400] which may be elected if adjusted gross income is less than $5,000, see Supplement T.[)]

SEC. 12. Surtax on individuals.

(a) Definition of "Surtax net income": As used in this section the term "surtax net income" means the amount of the net income in excess of the credits against net income provided in section 25 (b).

(b) Rates of surtax. There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the surtax net income of every individual the surtax shown in the following table:

If the surtax net income is:	The surtax shall be:
Not over $2,000	[13] 20% of the surtax net income.
Over $2,000 but not over $4,000.	[$260] $400, plus [16] 22% of excess over $2,000.
Over $4,000 but not over $6,000.	[$580] $840, plus [20] 26% of excess over $4,000.
Over $6,000 but not over $8,000.	[$980] $1,360, plus [24] 30% of excess over $6,000.
Over $8,000 but not over $10,000.	[$1,460] $1,960, plus [28] 34% of excess over $8,000.
Over $10,000 but not over $12,000.	[$2,020] $2,640, plus [32] 38% of excess over $10,000.
Over $12,000 but not over $14,000.	[$2,660] $3,400, plus [36] 43% of excess over $12,000.
Over $14,000 but not over $16,000.	[$3,380] $4,260, plus [40] 47% of excess over $14,000.
Over $16,000 but not over $18,000.	[$4,180] $5,200, plus [43] 50% of excess over $16,000.
Over $18,000 but not over $20,000.	[$5,040] $6,200, plus [46] 53% of excess over $18,000.
Over $20,000 but not over $22,000.	[$5,960] $7,260, plus [49] 56% of excess over $20,000.
Over $22,000 but not over $26,000.	[$6,940] $8,380, plus [52] 59% of excess over $22,000.
Over $26,000 but not over $32,000.	[$9,020] $10,740, plus [55] 62% of excess over $26,000.
Over $32,000 but not over $38,000.	[$12,320] $14,460, plus [58] 65% of excess over $32,000.
Over $38,000 but not over $44,000.	[$15,800] $18,360, plus [61] 69% of excess over $38,000.

School-Lunch Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. NOAH M. MASON
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the school-lunch program is before the House today for consideration, I wish to insert for the benefit of my colleagues a telegram of protest received from one of the leading county superintendents of Illinois. I heartily concur in the sentiments expressed in this telegram:

DANVILLE, ILL., May 22, 1944.

Hon. NOAH MASON,
House of Representatives Bldg.,
Washington, D. C.:

Do all you can against hot lunch provision in House bill 4278 or any other Federal hot lunch appropriation. The schools of Vermilion County do not need Federal hot-lunch aid. Everybody in Vermilion County has a job if they want to work. Seven hundred German soldiers were even brought into Ver-million County to help out the labor situation. Parents should assume responsibility for their children since plenty of work and ample wages are now available. School boards in Vermilion County are opposed to State and Federal aid for school hot-lunch programs. In several meetings with county superintendents of schools the great majority of them howled their heads off against the hot-lunch procedures in Illinois. Only politicians have promoted and backed hot school lunches in Vermilion County.

Parents in arguing to me for school hot lunches said that there was plenty of Federal and State money for them and they might as well have a piece of that money. Parents and children are being taught to be parasites by having hot lunches handed out to them on a silver platter. Already some of the hot-lunch sponsors have become disgusted and stopped the hot lunches. Out of the 1,668 pupils receiving Federal hot lunches in Vermilion County all of them are in strong Democratic precincts except 200 of them. Please stop these Federal hot-lunch appropriations and may the gods themselves send you their choicest blessings like the flow of milk and honey on a May day in June.

L. A. TUGGLE.
County Superintendent of Schools.

The Relief Milk Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. REID F. MURRAY
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the following table gives the relief milk figures:

TABLE 601.—Quantities distributed and amounts of payments made by the Food Distribution Administration under the relief-milk and school-milk programs, fiscal year ended June 30, 1942, and totals for earlier years

State	Relief milk
	Quantity	Cost
	Quarts
Illinois	22,456,928	$818,574
Louisiana	3,305,926	75,907
Massachusetts	15,363,720	614,549
Missouri	1,806,772	58,157
New Hampshire	402,264	15,789
New York	20,997,594	773,318
District of Columbia	978,403	39,136
Total 1941-42	65,311,607	2,395,430
1940-41	68,823,947	1,518,726
1939-40	37,298,557	692,271

Source: Food Distribution Administration.

You will note the following facts from the above tables:

First. Over 90 percent of the money for relief milk went to New York, Massachusetts, and Illinois.

Second. Only 6 or the 48 States had any relief fluid-milk distribution.

Third. That the large number of States with the lowest per capita income did not have any participation in the program whatsoever, while Washington, D. C., with double the per capita income as that enjoyed by the United States is in the program.

Fourth. It would appear that this milk is not being distributed on the basis of need as far as incomes are concerned.

T. V. A. on the Jordan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 23 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an article entitled "T. V. A. on the Jordan," written by Hon. George W. Norris, which appeared in a recent issue of the New Republic.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

T. V. A. ON THE JORDAN
(By George W. Norris)

The T. V. A. idea has gone round the world. Its fame has spread to every place where men have struggled with the problems of nature, for it is a blueprint turned into a reality. Actually, it is a very simple idea, based upon the principle of preserving the natural resources of the country.

Until the advent of the Tennessee Valley Authority men built dams upon streams almost solely to develop power, and the location of one dam had no relation to the location of any other on the same river system. The T. V. A. considered a whole river system as a source of power, and prepared to develop it as a whole, not piecemeal. Before the T. V. A. our fertile valleys were being depleted of their soil and their natural fruits. Annual floods swept through them at terrible cost to life and property. Erosion was unchecked upon the hillsides, and the swollen rivers carried thousands of tons of top soil down to the sea. The dams built by the T. V. A. prevented flood damage, and also kept open navigable channels.

A comparatively small additional sum enabled the Authority to utilize the waters impounded behind the great dams for the generation of huge amounts of electric power. This power has been carried into the homes of farmers and provided amenities they never knew before; it furnishes cheap electricity to city dewellers; and in factories and industrial plants throughout the South it is contributing mightily to the war effort and bringing prosperity to the people.

From the very beginning, as soon as the T. V. A. revealed the tremendous scope of its plans, the project excited the curiosity and admiration of engineers and scientists the world over. Dr. Walter Clay Lowdermilk, eminent soil conservationist, scholar, and world traveler, was one who expressed his deep interest, and in 1938 the United States Department of Agriculture sent him to make a survey of the use of land in the Near East, in the interest of land conservation in the United States. Dr. Lowdermilk returned with a project for the reclamation of Palestine which he recently presented in book form under the title "Palestine, Land of Promise." He calls the project, which is modeled after the T. V. A., the Jordan Valley Authority. "The Tennessee Valley Authority," he says, "has set the pattern whereby agriculture, power, and manufacturing can be developed in a coordinated way in the highest interests of the people of a given area. And this pattern can be applied to Palestine."

Centuries ago Palestine was a prosperous country, covered with fertile fields and forests. Its fertility was destroyed by man's failure to conserve its natural resources. After Palestine was set aside as a Jewish homeland, it became a great experiment in reclamation. The Jews built cities and formed agricultural colonies and brought the soil back to abundant production. But the area of their efforts was necessarily limited, and vast stretches outside "the fertile crescent" lay untouched. "It is practically impossible," says Dr. Lowdermilk, "to estimate what the final absorptive capacity of Greater Palestine could be if all its unoccupied and underpopulated areas were rejuvenated by the same vigor and understanding love of the land as have characterized Jewish efforts on a tiny fraction of the land, and if such an all-inclusive reclamation program as that of the J. V. A. were put into effect."

Dr. Lowdermilk advocates a system of dams on the Jordan River and its tributaries to irrigate the arid lands of the Jordan Valley. He points out, too, that in the rush of the river down to the Dead Sea, more than a thousand feet below sea level, there are wonderful possibilites for the generation of hydroelectric power. Enough electricity, he says, can be developed upon the Jordan River and its tributaries to supply the entire country with an abundance of electric power for all purposes. But power and irrigation are only part of Dr. Lowdermilk's project. Like the T. V. A., the J. V. A. would include water conservation and flood control among its activities. Supplementing the work of the Jewish Agency and the government, it would reforest lands unsuitable for farming or grazing and would undertake to extract important minerals from the Dead Sea on a far greater scale than is now being done.

This work would be extended into the Negeb, the south country, which has an area almost equal to that of the rest of Palestine, and into Trans-Jordania, transforming these regions from desolate wastes into thriving agricultural and industrial communities. The Jews, says Dr. Lowdermilk, who has become a convert to the idea that Palestine can be developed by the Jews as a national homeland, would be made the custodians of this work and directors of the Jordan Valley Authority under the United Nations. "If the forces of reclamation and progress that Jewish settlers have introduced," he says, "are permitted to continue, Palestine may well be the leaven that will transform other lands of the Near East. Once the great undeveloped resources of the countries are properly exploited, 20 to 30 million people may live decent and prosperous lives where a few million now struggle for a bare existence. Palestine can serve as the example, the demonstration, the lever, that will lift the entire Near East from its present desolate condition to a dignified place in a free world.

Other reclamation projects patterned after the T. V. A. have been proposed, though none have been so carefully worked out as Dr. Lowdermilk's. Some time ago the president of the National Association of Manufacturers declared that we were not fighting this war to supply Hottentot babies with milk or to build a T. V. A. on the Danube. He spoke derisively, implying contempt for the idea of the T. V. A., but the expression "T. V. A. on the Danube" took hold, and many thoughtful progressives began to wonder whether the idea was not a good one. If the T. V. A. could be developed here without regard to States lines, why could not Europe, the Near East, or any other region develop a T. V. A. without regard to national boundaries?

The economic backwardness of the eight countries which form the Danube Basin—Poland, Czechoslovakia, Austria, Hungary, Rumania, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, and Greece—does not derive from a lack of natural resources. The region has always had a great agricultural potential and rich mineral deposits, and in the Danube River it has a tremendous source of hydroelectric power. Its economic backwardness stems from a surplus farm population, causing overcrowding and a hunger for land, from neglect of scientific farming methods and a lack of working capital, and from the resulting low monetary yield. A program of industrialization such as a T. V. A. on the Danube would make possible, would absorb workers no longer needed on the farms and stimulate agricultural production. The political-economic structure of all these countries is based on the peasantry. Were the peasants granted the benefits which would flow from a great scientific project patterned after the T. V. A., who knows what the effect would be on the future peace of the world?

While the T. V. A. idea reaches out to the Near East and Central Europe, opposition to it, strange as this may seem, is displayed in the land of its birth. This opposition comes primarily from the private power interests, properly known as the power trust, and is aroused by the generation and sale of hydroelectric power by the T. V. A. There would be little or no objection to the T. V. A. if this aspect of the project had been turned over to private power interests. The power trust opposes the T. V. A. because it interferes with its profits and with a monopolistic domination which extends over almost the entire United States.

The Power Trust has thrust a hand into every field of American politics. It is active in every election, whether it be that of a district school board, of Members of Congress, or of a President of the United States. It has controlled and corrupted State legislatures the country over, and it has lobbied unceasingly for the passage of laws that would legalize its greedy claims and take from the people the control and management of the natural resources of their country.

Paradoxically, much of the opposition to the T. V. A. has come from the South, which has derived the greatest benefit from its success. It is startling, indeed, that a Tennessee Senator is now fighting the completion of the T. V. A. program, and with telling effect. I do not mean to charge that opponents of the T. V. A. have always been moved by selfish considerations. Many opposition leaders in the Senate and House of Representatives have honestly believed that the National Government should not go into the business of developing and transmitting electric power. But what other instrument would have been able to carry the project through? No State, no corporation organized by a State, could properly develop a system extending into many States. The only agency great enough to plan and implement such a development was either the National Government itself or a corporation created by and representative of the National Government. The Government entered a field where no private corporation had ever ventured, where, from the very nature of things, no corporation could successfully venture.

The evil and dominating influence of the Power Trust made the T. V. A. a necessity if we were to attain the happiness, comfort, and prosperity that can come from the preservation of our God-given gifts and from respect for the principle of the greatest good for the greatest number. The forces which seek the T. V. A.'s destruction must not be allowed to halt the tide of progress.

The War in Review

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. OWEN BREWSTER
OF MAINE

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 23 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address entitled "The War in Review," delivered yesterday before the annual luncheon meeting of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, at Brooklyn, N. Y., by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], regarding the work of the special Senate investigating committee which he heads.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I am honored to be invited here today to take part in the annual meeting of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce.

Such organizations as yours have played a prominent role in the building and development of our great Nation. The importance of the work of the chamber of commerce throughout the country will be demonstrated in the post-war period, when all our resources and our material wealth must be mobilized to bring us through the transition period from war to peace. It is a difficult and complex future we are facing, but I do not hesitate to voice this belief: it will be a good future if we have the wisdom and courage to make it so.

In this war we have had to create an enormous number of new regulations and controls. That is part of the price which we must pay for war. It is no greater than the price being paid by our allies and our enemies. It is what we must bid to purchase victory and freedom.

These wartime controls have no relation to politics. They were imposed solely because of war needs. Nearly all of them were suggested by industry and labor. Most of the Government representatives dealing with them came from private life. And these representatives are about evenly divided between both parties.

These restrictions must be maintained just as long as they are required to assure victory—just that long, and no longer. Personal and business liberties and freedom from regimentation are not only abstract ideals. They are concrete realities which impinge daily on our lives. They seriously affect our happiness and prosperity. Anyone whose duties relate to the war must keep this always in mind.

The Senate War Investigating Committee, of which I am chairman, was among the first to insist on conversion of industry to war production. We are now greatly concerned with the even more difficult problems of dismantling the colossus.

But before pursuing this question further I wish to tell you something about the committee. The committee consists of 10 Senators, representing both major political parties and every major section of the country. It has been an honor to serve with them and as their chairman. They have shown an earnest and active desire to find the facts and apply them to the best interests of the Nation.

It was decided at the outset that political considerations of either party would not be allowed to affect in any way the action of the committee. The Democrats expressed a willingness to bring to the administration factual and constructive criticism. The Republicans expressed an equal willingness to emphasize and praise accomplishments.

I am very proud to report to you that the members of the committee on both sides have strictly lived up to this understanding. At all times the committee has let the facts speak for themselves. As a result, we have been able to agree about our investigations. Although 30 reports, some of them hundreds of pages in length, have been submitted to the Senate, there has never been a minority report. More than that, every single report has been unanimous, although in one or two instances one or more of the members of the committee have said that, except in the interest of unanimity, they would not have made some of the statements in the report.

It has been possible to obtain this unanimity only because the committee has sought to search out the facts whatever they might be and wherever they might be found. It has limited its conclusions to those which were compelled by an orderly marshalling of the facts. Reasonable men who approach a subject without bias or prejudice seldom differ as to facts. Where the facts are known, conclusions take care of themselves.

From the outset the committee has sought to obtain information from those who should know the facts. It has attempted to deal with witnesses in the manner best calculated to obtain results. As in the work of all other committees, the public hearings have been important sources of information. But they are only one source of information, and not even the most important one. In many cases, it is not possible to obtain all of the necessary facts through a public hearing, no matter how long or extended, or how carefully prepared it may have been. Frequently, high officials of both industry and labor, as well as Government, hesitate to speak frankly in public hearings because of their fear that they may be misunderstood, or that their working relations with others may be hampered. In such cases, it is much better to proceed through private hearings, or even through private informal discussions of which no record whatever is made.

In many cases the detailed facts are not known to the highest officials and can be obtained only by a painstaking examination of documents and records and by discussions with the subordinates who have actual personal knowledge. In the preparation of your legal cases you know better than anyone else how important it is to look at the actual documents and records and to talk with the persons who have first-hand information. You also know the importance of dealing fairly with witnesses and respecting their rights and their personal problems.

In preparing its reports the committee has welcomed and even sought criticisms and suggestions of a factual nature. The reports are prepared in draft form and submitted to every Government agency and private company involved. Their suggestions are studied with the greatest care and are adopted wherever it is possible to do so without violence to the facts.

This has had the additional advantage of making available to the committee and through us to the Senate, a vast fund of information from the most authentic sources. There can be no question but that the committee is well informed, except on issues involving the actual strategy of combat operations. Those issues have been left strictly to the military. Persons with military training and experience are best fitted for making such decisions, and the committee does not desire to obtain secret information with respect to matters of high strategy.

On the other hand, a great deal of information has been obtained by the committee that has been considered by the armed services to be confidential or secret. In all such cases, even those regarded by the committee as downright silly—and there are many such cases—the committee has refrained from making any of the information available to the public until it has been cleared by the armed services themselves.

The committee has sought at all times to get the war over with and to get it over with just as soon as possible and with the least possible loss of life and property. For that reason, in 1942 the committee was insistant that war contracts should be spread widely among small businessmen and not confined to a few large contractors. It urged that the capacity to produce basic commodities such as aluminum and steel should be increased vastly irrespective of the effect upon vested interests. It declared that all civilian industry capable of producing war articles should be converted promptly, irrespective of the fact that some of the industries wanted to keep up their peacetime production to the detriment of vast war contracts which they also desired.

In 1942 the committee pointed out that manpower as well as basic commodities was going to be scarce. It warned against the assumption that the complicated manpower problem could be dealt with by such unwieldy means as a universal manpower draft. The committee stressed that the chief way to alleviate manpower shortages would be to use efficiently the manpower we have. It made 18 practical suggestions as to how government, labor, and industry could cooperate to achieve more efficient utilization of manpower. Many of these suggestions were adopted. Some were not. There is considerable room for further progress.

In 1943 the committee reported with respect to various phases of rationing and submitted detailed reports with respect to the progress which had been made in coping with the problems previously reported on. It also called attention to many instances of waste and to production of defective materials, particularly aircraft engines and steel plates.

Nor did the committee neglect essential civilian industry. It stressed the necessity for providing sufficient farm machinery and equipment and transportation facilities to carry on essential farming and transportation. Such farming and transportation are just as important as the production of war matériel. It was natural that the armed services should have placed their needs first. But the committee insisted that the programs be better balanced.

Last November, the committee outlined a number of problems that would have to be solved before it would be possible to reconvert to peacetime activities. We urged that immediate attention be given to solving those specific problems. They included termination of contracts, reduction of inventories, disposition of surplus materials, removal of Government property from private plants, disposal of Government-owned plants and facilities, and labor and public works programs. Substantial progress has been made in those fields, particularly through the studies by the Senate committees headed by Senators GEORGE and MURRAY and by Mr. Bernard Baruch. The outline of the action to be taken is now well known and is generally agreed to. The job now is to do the hard grubbing detailed work necessary to put the outline into effect.

The tools, as they are termed by Mr. Baruch, must be provided quickly and used effectively.

However, there is a basic question that must be determined before real progress can be made. I believe, and the committee has stated, that the time has come to begin to relax rather than to increase the number of restrictive regulations. Of course a military setback or a change in the course of the war could reverse this situation. But a wartime government must be flexible. The present trend requires that thought be given to reestablishing a free and self-sustaining industry. It requires that some action be taken now in this direction. Already one concrete problem has appeared.

We now have the capacity to produce some basic commodities in quantities greater than required for dwindling war needs. We must determine whether, and to what extent these should be utilized to make additional goods available to civilians. No one is willing to argue against civilian production as such, but there are many who believe that it should be delayed and retarded. You are all familiar with their arguments, which have been stated at great length in recent months. They are set forth in considerable detail in the committee's recent report. Basically, they are that maybe we will need a lot more than our present estimates—that manpower is still short in certain restricted areas—that a surplus of manpower, their way of referring to what I call unemployment, is desirable for the purpose of forcing the unemployed to seek out areas of manpower shortage—and last, and in my opinion least, that unnecessary sacrifice and hardship at home would better the morale of those in the armed services.

Some of those in the armed services have opposed any reference to the fact that many of our requirements, particularly those of the War Department, either have been met or shortly will be met. They believe that the truth should be kept from the public in order to avoid overconfidence. This is a strange argument. I think the public is entitled to know the facts at all times. I have noted that the armed services show little inclination to play down their military and naval accomplishments, and I agree that they should not. But if overconfidence is not caused by such disclosures, it will not come from telling the facts about war production.

The committee has said that we are on the way to winning the battle of war production. That is a wholly separate and distinct thing from winning the war. The committee agrees that we would be very foolish to indulge in any optimism until we have witnessed the course of events on the European front. But the problem at hand has nothing to do with a state of mind. The only result of a false pessimism about the state of our war production will be to create a trough of inactivity in which our economy will lose momentum. Should victory find us in this unprepared state at home, our returning soldiers and sailors may well wonder what we have been doing while they were meeting their severest tests.

Just as it was not possible to prepare for war overnight, it is not possible to prepare for peace overnight. We have all witnessed the difficulties and unemployment that ensued when business adjusted itself to the needs of a single customer, a customer with unlimited resources and an insatiable desire to purchase war items. We can readily appreciate the problems that will develop when that customer sharply curtails his purchases and industry turns back to 130,000,000 customers with almost as many different needs.

For these reasons and in order to provide for the healthiest possible civilian economy to support as long a war as may be necessary, the committee recommended in the strongest possible terms that all of our capacity to produce basic commodities should be utilized now to the utmost. Surpluses not required for war materials or essential civilian items should be made available to all manufacturers. They should be free to use them without restrictions, except that manufacturing operations should not be commenced in manpower-shortage areas or continued if contracts for war materials are offered to them. Such a program is necessary in order to avoid unemployment and hardship in areas where war contracts already have been completed or terminated, or soon will be.

This program also will provide consumer goods and greatly lessen the danger of inflation from suppressed buying power. It will permit an orderly and gradual resumption of peacetime operations without the shock and violence to the economy that would result from artificially damming and blocking it off until the end of all or part of the war. It will provide opportunities for small business and for new enterprises.

The committee cautioned, and it is important that full attention be paid to the caution, that its program does not contemplate the immediate resumption of large-scale production of civilian items. In many cases, there can be no civilian production for many months. This is particularly true of large and complicated items, and of products requiring materials which are still scarce. All that the committee advocates is that we use our resources to the utmost and that we use them in such a way as to prevent unemployment and hardship. This program will facilitate the resumption of civilian production on a full scale when the circumstances permit.

The committee is firmly of the opinion that we must try now to limit and, as fast as possible, to remove wartime orders and restrictions. The committee is opposed to the creation of new and more involved regulations and restrictions such as the manpower draft advocated by the armed services. We are opposed to suggestions that Government agencies should determine what manufacturers should be permitted to make civilian goods, what goods they are to make, and under what circumstances they can sell those goods. We must not create a whole new system of controls over civilian operations on the attenuated theory that they are necessary to war production. The experience of the past does not indicate that Government agencies, staffed with dollar-a-year men from industry, have either the experience or the ability to select from tens of thousands of manufacturers, those who are to be permitted to produce, and from thousands of items, those which are to be produced. The decisions that would have to be made are too numerous, complex, and interlocking, and there is too much scope for bias and prejudice. It is normal and human for the men who are now regulating industry to think that industry cannot get along without the regulations. Each person tends to believe that his job is the most important. But this war is being fought to preserve freedom and individual initiative. We must take care that in winning the war we do not create some of the evils which we have fought against.

It is not enough just to restore, as nearly as possible, the pre-war situation. It is impossible for a nation, or for that matter for an individual, to stand still. It must go forward or backward. We are determined that the United States will go forward. We are determined that we will not again go back to the situation that existed in 1939 when we had 9,000,000 unemployed and 5,000,000 persons not listed as seeking employment but who have subsequently been employed in war work. This means that we must be resolved to utilize the new productive capacity of the splendid plants built during this war. We must use them to provide jobs for the men in our armed services and for the war workers. We need and want their products. By creating the goods and the spending power to purchase them we will provide the foundations for the soundest and most prosperous economy that the world has ever seen. With the inventions and the new production techniques that have been discovered in this war, it should be possible to provide more and better goods and services for everyone than we have ever before enjoyed even in this, the most prosperous and advanced nation in the world. Our future security is dependent upon our doing so.

Fortunately, I can assure you from discussions that I have had with leading manufacturers, bankers, and businessmen that sound plans to this end are being made and that unless we permit artificial obstacles to be created there is a real basis for believing that that prosperity will be obtained.

To do so, however, will require the utmost cooperation and mutual understanding between Government, business, and labor.

Government will have to provide a sound and fair tax system that will encourage the development of new business and the expansion of existing small and intermediate business. It will have to content itself with formulating the rules of the road, it must not attempt to occupy the driver's seat, either as to business or labor.

Business will have to avoid cartels and combinations and to concentrate on producing more and better goods. It must learn to earn its income by working with small margins of profit on a vastly increased amount of business.

Labor will have to concentrate its efforts on its legitimate desires for high wages and good working conditions. It will have to avoid stoppages, make-work practices, and resistance to the development and installation of new and better production techniques designed to lower costs. In that way labor can achieve its aims and still do its part so that the workingman can lead a more abundant life.

We can face the future with confidence, if we avoid bickering and disputes, and if we work for the common good of all.

Irrigation Projects

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BENNETT CHAMP CLARK

OF MISSOURI

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 23 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial entitled "Why Add 4,000,000 Acres?" published in the Kansas City Star of May 14, 1944. The editorial refers to some of the grandiose irrigation projects now being brought forward.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHY ADD 4,000,000 ACRES?

Now that the purpose of the irrigationists and land development companies upriver to control the waters of the Missouri for their own local developments has been brought into plain view, it is time to stop and ask ourselves a question which is highly important but has not much entered into the discussions so far.

What is the need of 4,000,000 extra acres of irrigated land? And especially, what is the need of it when these lands are of such secondary nature that the Governors of the Upper Plains States have admitted that these lands cannot of themselves bear the cost of irrigation—and must therefore get free water from reservoirs built by the people's money for other purposes, if they are to be irrigated?

In an address delivered at Chicago late in March, Secretary Claude R. Wickard had some things to say which are very pertinent to these questions. One of the biggest problems facing American agriculture after the war, he said, will be to find a good market for all the American farmers want to produce and can produce within the limits of sound farming methods.

Estimates by the Department of Agriculture indicate that with high prices and intensive educational campaigns, the farmers of the Nation can, within the next 6 years, on lands now under cultivation, increase their production to 60 percent above the average of 1935–39. Even with moderate prices and only the usual educational methods, this production can be increased up to 40 percent above the prewar level.

On the other hand, population estimates indicate that by 1950 there will be not more than a 10-percent increase over the average for 1935–39. In other words the agricultural production per capita could be immeasurably beyond any figure comparable in the past.

We did not have the right answer to the farm surplus problem before the war. Looking to the period after the war, the problem remains one which will cause headaches for agricultural and economic leaders.

Under these conditions, a critical condition could be created by the addition of crop surpluses produced on 4,000,000 acres of land which would be made productive only at the expense of the Nation at large. The Reclamation Bureau estimates an annual raw crop value of $130,000,000 for this acreage—considerably more than one-third of the total value of all Missouri crops in 1942, which was a year of abnormally high acreage yields.

These are all estimates on the conservative side, but they illustrate the competitive weight against the present crop total which would be thrown by such a project as the irrigation interests are advancing. And this added weight is greater when the small list of irrigated products is considered—grains, sugar beets, legume hay, and perhaps flax. Competition in these categories would be excessively punishing.

The total crop production of the new irrigated land might amount to only 1 or 2 percent of the national production—but virtually all of this would be surplus. After the last war, be it remembered, when the wartime production hit the peacetime reduction in demand, a reduction of only 3 or 4 percent in the exports of our surplus rapidly created an unmanageable domestic pile of farm products. The result—the farm depression of the early twenties.

The situation would be different if the farmers of the upper river States were going to expand their irrigation farming by their own efforts. At least there would not under such circumstances be ground for a reasonable objection—even though the rest of the farmers of the Nation did not like it and knew it was affecting directly their own pocketbooks and the living standards of their own families.

But what is being proposed here by the upriver interests is, in a nutshell, a form of parasitism. They desire to levy upon the free water impounded for other purposes, to develop these potentially disastrous competitive areas. Further, they propose to obtain priorities on all upriver waters, even when the rights to the use of them downriver have been established by many decades of use far antedating the claims of the dry land development companies.

The old State rights cry has been raised—a convenient red herring. Senator WHEELER cried "State rights" in a recent speech—and yet demanded Federal money to carry out his program of irrigation development. In this instance, obviously, the aegis of State rights is meant to apply only to Senator WHEELER'S little bloc of States. It is a poor principle that works only one way. There are State rights also involved in the necessities of the down river States—rights every bit as cogent as those of the Senator's bailiwick.

To return again to the question of the 4,000,000 acres of secondary, public-expense, free-water irrigation, and proposed by the Reclamation Bureau, the land companies, and the immigration companies of certain railroads, it may be of interest to note that there are far cheaper and better ways of increasing national food production, whenever we shall need it in the future, than this method. It can be done at comparatively small cost by protecting the bottom lands from flood and by improving the uplands of the present established farm area.

Already there is enough farm land available for the next several generations. The values of this land are established, and the equities therein. The opening of a great new area of farm land could very easily cause loss to the people who have been working this soil for decades, and create serious economic dislocations.

We have a surplus of food now in the midst of war. We have had a prodigious experience in the past of striving to meet periodic peacetime surpluses. We know we can, if need be, greatly increase our present crop production. Why, therefore, the necessity of an additional 4,000,000 acres of land which could never support the cost of being brought under irrigation? And particularly in view of a comprehensive river plan such as the Pick plan which is not a sectional plan, not an irrigation plan, not a navigation plan, not a a flood prevention plan alone, but a fair combination program for advancing the interests of all sections, in relation to the combined interests of all?

Price Control

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM B. BARRY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech delivered by me over Station WHN, New York City, on May 22, 1944:

More than 2 years ago when the Congress of the United States after lengthy hearings and much controversy, passed the Price Control Act, there were grave doubts by many who supported it as to the widom of placing so much power in an executive agency. Past history revealed, however, that during war times when there is a scarcity of commodities and an overabundance of money, inflation always sets in, and great masses of our citizens suffer from lack of purchasing power. Especially is this true of the great white-collared class of Americans whose income increases very slightly during war times, and whose dollar value shrinks as the cost of living rises. We who supported the act felt that there was no alternative but to experiment with artificial controls. Price controls have, as we expected, proven unpopular since they were foreign to our system of free enterprise. Yet I am convinced that without them we would be witnessing an inflationary spiral that would be ruinous to our entire economy. Even with price control in operation there has been more than a 30-percent increase in the cost of living since 1941 and an increase in the cost of food of more than 40 percent. It is also common knowledge that black-market operations are taking place on an extensive scale. We cannot permit prices to go much higher, else millions of our people with low incomes will suffer great hardship.

The administration of the act has at times been far from perfect. In fact, most of the criticism has been directed at its administration rather than at the act itself. I feel that if it is administered expeditiously, intelligently, and fairly, most of these attacks will subside or disappear. Many aggrieved citizens feel that under existing law they are not afforded an opportunity to have their complaints against the O. P. A. thoroughly and speedily reviewed by the courts. That is why I have chosen as my topic tonight judicial review of the O. P. A.

The act is now before Congress for renewal. Both the Senate and the House have held lengthy hearings and are now in executive session to determine the future of the Price Control Act.

Under the law as it now exists there is an Emergency Court of Appeals which has exclusive jurisdiction to consider the validity of any regulation, order, or price schedule. There is no injunctive relief granted short of the United States Supreme Court. However, before the citizen can have the merits of his case considered by the Emergency Court of Appeals, he must first exhaust all administrative remedies within the O. P. A. itself. It has been testified by the O. P. A.'s general counsel that the average case takes 110 days to be reviewed by the O. P. A. before it can reach the Emergency Court of Appeals. Some cases I know of have taken much longer. In fact, in two instances the Emergency Court of Appeals threatened to mandamus the proceedings because of unreasonable delay, before the O. P. A. finally acted. When the citizens' case finally reaches the Emergency Court of Appeals, that body is bound to pass on the record presented by the Administrator. If the protesting citizen does not have an aggressive and competent attorney, the record which reaches the Emergency Court of Appeals may very well be too meager to fully and completely present the citizens' side of the issue. The informality of the administrative procedure leaves to the Administrator, in my opinion, too much discretion as to what the record forwarded to the Emergency Court of Appeals shall contain.

On the other hand, in the enforcement of the act, the situation is quite different. All of the Federal courts are open to the Price Administrator for the exercise of enforcement tools which includes the civil injunction, the criminal penalty, the treble damage suits and the license. No court, however, is open to the citizen who must face this formidable array of legal armor, except the Emergency Court of Appeals. In the court in which he is sued or indicted, where he is to be enjoined or penalized by the loss of a license to do business, a citizen charged with the infraction of a price regulation may not plead in defense, that it is illegal or unconstitutional, that the Administrator has acted arbitrarily, capriciously or even corruptly. He is deprived of his defense of illegality by the act itself. The court in which he stands charged may not even consider it.

Is it not indeed a novelty in our jurisprudence, that a citizen may be indicted, tried, and convicted for violation of an illegal regulation made by an executive agency beyond the grant of power received from Congress? The situation is incredible, but true.

The law also provides that unless a protest is made against a rule or regulation of the Administrator within 60 days of its issuance, its illegality cannot be questioned. Therefore, it is possible for the Administrator to create law himself, which is more sacred from attack than the act of Congress which he claims as his basic authority. The average citizen would never know of the existence of the rule or regulation until he is charged with its violation. It is contrary to American Democratic and legal principles to deny a citizen the defense of illegality at any time. Furthermore, to give a rule or regulation more force and effect than the basic law from which it was issued, is a legal absurdity.

All of us are aware of the peril of inflation. Congress is overwhelmingly in favor of effective price control. I have no doubt that the act will be continued without any crippling amendments. At the same time, if we are to preserve the freedom for which our Nation is fighting, we cannot deprive a citizen of his day in court. He must be protected from an executive agency which can through its rules and regulations, and acting beyond the scope of its authority, deprive him of his constitutional rights, privileges, or immunities, as a citizen of the United States.

Such protection to the citizen will in no way impair the effectiveness of price control. The Administrator has full freedom to carry out the purposes of the act. The citizen must have the right to challenge the Administrator's acts through the courts, if he feels aggrieved. The average American citizen is a patriotic individual. He may grumble occasionally about bureaus and bureaucrats, but in his heart he knows that during wartime many sacrifices must be made. The overwhelming majority of Americans know that inflation is the greatest threat to our Nation on the home front. They are convinced that O. P. A. and many other wartime bureaus are necessary evils. Nevertheless, they feel that they should not be faced with the threat of civil or criminal prosecution without the right to defend themselves on the grounds that rules or regulations are illegal or unconstitutional. The American citizen takes these rights for granted, and he should.

I feel, therefore, the the Price Control Act should be amended as follows:

1. Compel the O. P. A. to completely review a protest and to render a decision within a definite period of not more than 60 days so that there will be no unreasonable delay in reaching the Emergency Court of Appeals.

2. Give the Emergency Court of Appeals the right to grant a temporary injunction.

3. Give the citizen the right to set up the defense or illegality or unconstitutionality in a civil or criminal proceeding brought by O. P. A. against him.

4. Abolish the 60-day statute of limitations so that illegality or unconstitutionality of rules or regulations may like acts of Congress be attacked at any time.

5. Establish within the O. P. A. an administrative procedure that will guarantee to the citizen the opportunity of making a complete record from which he can, if he wishes, appeal to the Emergency Court of Appeals.

In conclusion, I believe that it is only fair to state that Mr. Bowles, the Price Administrator, and his legal staff recognize the justice of some of the criticisms which I have made tonight, and they have agreed to meet with a subcommittee of lawyers of the House Banking and Currency Committee this week for the purpose of agreeing on amendments to the act.

It is my hope that we agree on whatever amendments are necessary to correct the present deficiencies of judicial review before the bill reaches the floor of the House, so that it will be less open to attack by opponents of any price-control bill whatsoever.

Post-War Civil Aviation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LYLE H. BOREN
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement from the American Aviation Daily for Monday, May 22, 1944:

BRITISH CHOSEN INSTRUMENT NO MONOPOLY

Reading of the official transcript of the 2-day House of Lords' debate, May 10–11, on post-war civil aviation reveals the following:

1. The British do not consider a chosen instrument to be an operational monopoly; it is only a monopoly of direct subsidy.

2. The British Post Office Department can make contracts for carriage of mail with any carrier it chooses.

3. There is no statutory prohibition against operation of air lines by shipping companies and railroads and a reading of the debate reveals that both interests intend to operate air lines.

4. All questions of landing rights abroad for British air lines will be handled by the Foreign Office which appears to be in a dominant position.

The following statements by Lord Beaverbrook pertaining to the chosen instrument, B. O. A. C., and monopoly, including the first thorough definition of a chosen instrument given to date from the British viewpoint, were taken by the Daily from the official transcript:

"LORD BEAVERBROOK. I now come to the question of the chosen instrument and the monopoly. As my noble friend put it, is it still a monopoly or no monopoly? At any rate, it is still what it was. It is fixed by statute, and until Parliament decides to repeal the statute the chosen instrument is just what it used to be. I will endeavor to tell your Lordships how it seems to me, but possibly others might take a different view."

ONLY MONOPOLY OF SUBSIDY

"The present position is that the British Overseas Airways Corporation has a monopoly of subsidy of overseas airways. That is, a monopoly of treasury grants for the development of air transport service. To that extent the British Overseas Airways Corporation is the chosen instrument of the Government. Before the war Imperial Airways received aggregate contributions of £900,000 a year, the Postal Administration taking part in the scheme on the basis that all contract mails would be carried by air on the Empire routes.

"The B. O. A. C. is in this, as in other respects, the contractual successors of Imperial Airways. Apart from this, the Postmaster General has the power to award a mail contract to any transport concern which seems to him to offer the best service on any particular route. That is the briefest and clearest explanation I can make of the statutory position of the B. O. A. C. It is a position which is perhaps not easily grasped—I have some difficulty in grasping it myself—but if you read it in Hansard tomorrow it may seem clearer than the explanation I have given to you."

At this point the Marquess of Londonderry asked: "That is a decision to maintain the act of 1939 in being?"

"Lord BEAVERBROOK. The question of the act of 1939 rests with Parliament. The decision must depend on Parliament. What decision Parliament will take I could not anticipate. But there is the statutory position—monopoly in the sense that it is a monopoly of subsidies and a monopoly of certain payments from the various States concerned with the transportation of mail, but no monopoly in the respect that no lines are forbidden to fly over the seas or that the Postmaster General is forbidden to make payments for carrying mail even on a similar route.

"There is no statutory position that could prevent any concern from operating British air lines overseas as long as that concern conforms to airworthiness and other regulations—none.

"In time of war the flight of civil aircraft inside the limits of the United Kingdom and its territorial waters is controlled by the Air Navigation Order, 1939, and must be subject to any restrictions which may be necessary on operational grounds. That is a war measure."

PERMITS THROUGH FOREIGN OFFICE

"Any concern which wishes to operate, whether a shipping company or any other organization, must have permission to land at its destination, and will need aircraft and trained personnel, both air crews and ground crews. Permits to land at foreign airports may be sought through the foreign office. At present there are no suitable transport aircraft available, apart from those in service, nor can skilled and experienced personnel be spared from wartime duties. I am sure that the House will find no fault with that statement.

"While this is the present position, it is clear to all of us that we are entering an era of change and experiments. There are many uncertanties, and we must be ready to adapt our policy to the conditions as we find them and not to hold on to the position which at present exists.

"We must be swift to seize on all the opportunities presented to us and be sure that is the purpose of the Air Ministry and also of the committee over which I preside.

"Now, some good judges think that air transport will rapidly attain to a self-supporting basis. Many Americans go so far as to say that air transport over the North Atlantic will be a self-sustaining venture, and that in a few years air transport over the North Atlantic may reach not only economic operation, but profitable conditions. There are others, less optimistic, who say that a few aircraft will supply all the services we require.

"The committee is not prepared to base its policy on these predictions either way. We are committed to the pursuit of an efficient and enterprising civil aviation, and we are committed to the furthest expansion of British air transport that conditions in this country and the Empire will permit. We are looking for our proper share in the world traffic. We have set our faces against the wasteful and improvident subsidy race. That, I think, answers the questions that my noble friend has raised on the order paper."

In the second day's debate, after reiterating his previous statement that any concern has the right to apply to the foreign office for granting of landing rights, Lord Beaverbrook returned to the chosen instrument as follows:

"Now may I pass on to the chosen instrument. It is not really a monopoly. I do not object to the interpretation of those who regard it as a monopoly, but it is not a monopoly. It is a monopoly of subsidy and of subsidy only, and you cannot say that a monopoly of subsidy is an operational monopoly. It is not. Operational monopoly does not exist. There is no monopoly of operation, but there is a monopoly of subsidy. There is really a difference—there is a great difference. There is nothing clearer than our compelte freedom in relation to operations. There is no monopoly whatever so far as operations go. That is the only definition that I can give of the chosen instrument."

C. I. O. Political Action Committee Declared Directing Fourth-Term Drive

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article from the Washington Star of May 19, 1944:

C. I. O. POLITICAL ACTION COMMITTEE DECLARED DIRECTING FOURTH-TERM DRIVE

(By Frank R. Kent)

The extent to which Mr. Sidney Hillman, chairman of the C. I. O. Committee on Political Action and custodian of its large political funds, is taking over the direction of the Roosevelt fourth-term effort is beginning to arouse mixed emotions in several quarters.

At the rate Mr. Hillman and his C. I. O. colleagues are going there is considerable chance that long before election they will overshadow the Democratic National Committee. For the first time we shall have a labor organization as the dominant factor in the management of a major Presidential candidacy, with the regularly constituted party committee keeping up appearances, but really playing a secondary role.

As that picture suits neither one, it is likely this will be denied by both the C. I. O. and the party committee. But the denials will not alter the facts.

The basic fact is that the C. I. O. is better organized, more aggressive, and better financed than the national committee. Further, it was not only earlier in its demand for Mr. Roosevelt to run again (being preceded only by Mr. Earl Browder, the Communist leader), but is far more enthusiastic and united, there being some members of the national committee who are, to say the least, lukewarm about the fourth term, though the futility of opposition to renomination keeps them quiet. On the contrary, the C. I. O. leaders, from Mr. Murray and Mr. Hillman down, are a truculent and extremely articulate unit—with lots of money.

CAMPAIGNING WITH VIGOR

In addition, they have already taken the lead and are conducting the campaign with a vigor never before evinced by a labor organization in politics. From its publicity department, fourth-term statements and arguments flow in a steady stream, Mr. Hillman and Mr. Murray alternately—and sometimes jointly—beat their breasts, proclaiming the necessity of keeping Mr. Roosevelt in the White House. Resounding resolutions are passed every week or so by C. I. O. locals. Mr. Hillman assails Congress as sabotaging the policies of our great President, and the Republicans, particular Governor Dewey, are disparaged.

On Tuesday in Cleveland, Mr. Hillman gave out a fervid statement, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America passed a highly eulogistic resolution, and Mr. Murray, in the name of 5,000,000 members, exhorted the C. I. O. delegates to roll up your sleeves and get behind the drive to get President Roosevelt to run again and fight for his election."

Clearly, the postconvention C. I. O. campaign will be of greater intensity, because, after the nomination, there will be a real fight and now there is none. Therefore, it will be maintained and the committee hard seems reasonable to believe the C. I. O. lead put to it to keep pace. The situation is such that it will be compelled to give the C. I. O. a pretty high managerial position.

Certainly, this wholehearted C. I. O. activity is an asset for Mr. Roosevelt. The Republicans have nothing like it. But it has liabilities. For example, there are the farmers. Conservative at heart, antagonized anyhow by the C. I. O. Communistic saturation and the extreme radicalism of the American Labor Party now dominated by Mr. Hillman, the C. I. O. leadership in, and sponsorship for, the fourth-term attempt is well calculated to increase farmer opposition.

RESENTED IN CONGRESS

Also, Democratic Members of Congress, resentful of C. I. O. bullying and the blatant denunciation from the Messrs. Murray and Hillman, are ill pleased at the set-up.

It is easy to believe, too, that it is distasteful both to the regular Democratic politicians and to other labor leaders. Actually, the C. I. O. has taken possession. It has established its claim as the chief promoter of the Roosevelt candidacy. Mrs. Roosevelt is to address its annual convention. It is, in reality, conducting the campaign.

In the event of success, its position would be very strong, indeed. It would have a right to expect—and beyond doubt would get—even greater preferential treatment than before. Naturally, this is not a pleasing prospect for the regular party people or for the A. F. of L. bosses. Nor is it one the average citizen can contemplate happily. It would end all chance to correct the one-sided, unjust and unconstitutional labor legislation, which the New Deal, under labor pressure, has put upon the statute books.

It would put the more radical labor leaders in commanding position. It would give them a right to contend that at last they had elected a President.

The reelected President, his Attorney General and all other officials who otherwise would go out with a change of administration, would be heavily in the C. I. O. debt. It would, in fact, give us a union labor Government to a far greater degree than we have had—and a labor government in which not the best but the cheapest class of labor leader wielded the most influence.

It is hard to believe the American people are ready for this sort of government. It is hard to believe the men in the armed forces, once they understand the closeness of the link between the C. I. O. and the fourth term, would want it. Yet, the closeness of the link cannot be exaggerated. So far as the campaign is concerned the C. I. O. has practically taken over.

Monopolies and Cartels

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARLEY M. KILGORE

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 23 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, on March 14, 1944, I obtained consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an excerpt from Hansard, the official report of the proceedings of the British Parliament, of January 25, 1944, dealing with the subject of monopolies and cartels. It developed that the printing would exceed by 1⅓ pages the 2 printed pages allowed under the rule. The Public Printer estimates that the cost will be $150. I ask unanimous consent that the excerpt be printed notwithstanding the cost.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRUSTS

Lord Strabolgi rose to ask His Majesty's Government, whether they will state their policy with regard to trusts, cartels, and combines, national and international, in post-war reconstruction; and to move for papers. The noble lord said: "My Lords, I beg leave to move the motion standing in my name, and before the noble lord opposite who, I understand, is to reply for the Government gives the answer to the question which I venture to put, may I remind your Lordships very briefly of the recent history of this subject? During the last war, the First World War, the growth of combines, monopolies, trusts, and cartels aroused a good deal of anxiety, and my noble friend who sits below me, Lord Addison, who was then Minister of Reconstruction, appointed a committee of investigation to look into the whole question. The committee reported on the 24th of April 1919. This was a very remarkable committee; remarkable in the eminence of its personnel. I have the report in my hand. The chairman was Mr. Edward Shortt, who resigned in the following June on becoming Chief Secretary for Ireland, when his place was taken by Mr. Charles McCurdy. Amongst the members of this committee were two very well-known economists, Mr. J. A. Hobson and the former Mr. Sidney Webb, who was afterward such an addition to your Lordships' House as Lord Passfield, and a trade-union leader of whom we have heard a great deal since, Mr. Ernest Bevin."

The terms of reference were as follows:

"In view of the probable extension of trade organizations and combinations, to consider and report what action, if any, may be necessary to safeguard the public interest."

If your Lordships will permit me, I will epitomize the report. In the main report the most relevant passage, I think, was as follows:

"In the United Kingdom combinations operating in restraint of trade are, through not criminal, unlawful if shown to be against public policy, as public policy is understood by the English courts, where these words are construed in a somewhat narrow and technical sense."

A great deal of evidence was taken from scores of great combinations, cartels, and trusts, and many other witnesses. In essence the recommendations were these: First of all, that machinery for the investigation of monopolies should be instituted—similar to that in existence in the United States of America, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa; secondly, that the board of trade should gather information about the workings of these monopolies; thirdly, that a tribunal should be established and that the board of trade should recommend state action to remedy grievances established by this tribunal of investigation. There was an addendum to the report by Mr. Sidney Webb (as he was then), Mr. Ernest Bevin, Mr. Hobson, and another member in which they recommended that monopolistic enterprises should not remain in private hands.

That was the report, and I was always interested to know what the Government did about it. In November last, I ventured to ask His Majesty's Government what had happened, and my noble friend Lord Templemore was good enough to tell me that the action taken on the recommendations of this committee—and here is the mountain in labor giving birth to a mouse—was the Profiteering Act of 1919, a ridiculous measure which many of your Lordships will remember very well, and with which we had a great deal of fun in the House of Commons. It never worked. It dealt in the main with the grievances which housewives might feel against shopkeepers, and did not touch the main subjects of the investigation of the committee at all; and, as Lord Templemore admitted, the act lapsed in 1921. The act also charged the board of trade with the duty of obtaining information about the nature, extent, and development of trusts and similar combinations. That was always the duty of the board of trade. There was no provision in the act for the board of trade doing anything about it, although the whole essence of this valuable report was that the board of trade in certain instances should do something about it. As I say, the whole act lapsed in 1921.

It will be common knowledge that between the two wars, and indeed during this war, monopolies and cartels, both national and international, have greatly increased. When various measures of Government control are introduced during a war, as they have to be in a modern war, it is inevitable that the result is to stimulate combines and associations. The Government departments do not want to deal with individual manufacturers and traders, and, if there is not a manufacturing or trade combine in existence, they tell the people concerned to get together and form a trade or manufacturing association so that they can be dealt with as a corporate whole. That is quite natural and not objectionable in itself, but it has the result of stimulating and assisting the formation of combines, associations, trusts, and eventually monopolies, and these can be harmful to the general public, as this report has said, and as other authorities whom I will venture to cite have emphasized again and again.

Why the matter is so urgent and important now, when we are considering plans for the post-war period—and we must be considering them; that is the reason for the existence of the office held by the noble lord, Lord Woolton—is that any combinations or trusts which by their nature are restrictive must be against the public interest. The Government, I understand, is committed to an expansionist policy, and the very object of the modern cartel is to restrict production and to limit it to the supposed capacity of the market. An expansionist policy, whatever may be the desire of the cabinet and of Lord Woolton, will not be possible if these cartels, which are now so extensive, are allowed free play nationally and internationally. Without an expansionist policy—and here I know that I have Lord Woolton with me—the Prime Minister's declared program of work, food, and homes for all will not be possible. I suggest, therefore, that a Government policy with regard to cartels is one of those branches of the activities of Lord Woolton where action can be taken now and legislation introduced. It is not one of the great phases of reconstruction which will have to wait upon events and be delayed until the end of the war. This matter can be dealt with now and, as I hope to show to your Lordships' satisfaction in a moment, it is necessary to deal with it now to guard against a very serious danger.

We have heard a good deal lately, in various discussions on reconstruction and post-war economic policy, about the value of private enterprise and of freedom for the energetic entrepreneur. We are told what a good thing it is to have individual enterprise in business and free competition, and I seem to hear silent cheers from the Liberal benches on my right. Under a cartel system these things are all impossible. You cannot have free competition. There is no room for the able, young, energetic, and usually, so we are told, liberal businessman to break in on the combine; the whole object of the cartel is to prevent him from starting a new enterprise and competing. In fact, the defenders of monopolies and what they call rationalization talk of this free competition, which forms the theme of the perorations of many of the great speeches which I hear from some of your Lordships, as "cutthroat competition"—something evil. They are against it; they want to stop it, and if they can coerce or seduce the trade unions into helping them they will do so.

I ventured to say on a previous occasion, and I must repeat it now, that our rearmament and the American rearmament in the years immediately before this war, and in the early years of this war, was hampered and hindered by the prior restrictions of trusts and monopolies. Some of these were actively encouraged by the governments of Baldwin and Chamberlain; to give only three examples, shipbuilding, textiles, and agriculture. There was a deliberate damping down and prevention of production. I have quoted in your Lordships' House in pre-war years, with indignation but without support, the case of a Yorkshire farmer friend of mine who was fined for growing potatoes. That is but one example of many of the general principles of restriction and rationalization which destroyed looms in Lancashire and shipyards all over the country.

I am glad to say that in this matter I am no longer a voice crying in the wilderness. I do not expect to convert any of your Lordships who have not already come to the same conclusion from an independent study of this great subject, but I will fortify myself by quotations from prominent statesman on both sides of the Atlantic. I hope that your Lordships will forgive me if I make one or two quotations, which shall be very brief, from their speeches. I will begin with my right honorable friend, the Home Secretary, Mr. Herbert Morrison, a colleague of Lord Woolton in the War Cabinet. I may say that in all these quotations the language is a little more extravagant than I usually employ, and in some cases a good deal more picturesque than any of which I am capable; but these are quotations, not my own words. Speaking at Leeds on April 3 last, Mr. Morrison said:

"Let us face the fact that such monopolies are restrictive in their very essence. That is the reason for their existence. You will never alter their nature by patching and tinkering with them. Their whole set-up and relation to the community must be profoundly altered. I am convinced that the only answer consistent with national well-being is full and effective public control."

Let me break off here to say that if we had a normal party government at the present time in which any cabinet minister was speaking for the collective body of the Government, I should not bring this motion forward. That would satisfy me. But we know now from various statements by the Prime Minister that Cabinet ministers are allowed to think aloud at public meetings. It does not necessarily represent the policy of the Government. And where the Government have not got a policy, members of it are either condemned to silence or they must state their own policy.

I must again draw on the vast store of wisdom from the speeches of my right honorable friend by quoting two other sentences from another speech he made—and this is the version in the Times of November 1. This was a speech made in London:

"Vast concentrations of economic power were a political menace, however efficient they might be in their economic conduct. They had within their grasp power over fields of public well-being and public policy far greater in practice than Parliament itself yielded in the great majority of its legislation. * * *

"What I do feel strongly is that the semi-accident by which restrictive practices, which would be outside the law in America, have been able to be built up under cover of the law in this country, is something deserving of early and zealous attention. Once the law is changed and the old doctrine of conspiracy in restraint of trade is given new force in relation to price fixing and other restrictive arrangements, you have made it possible to put the industry which wishes to take such steps in the position of having to justify what it wants to do before public authority, and to prevent any action unless this authority gives specific consent. In some instances, again, I would not rule out the possibility of allowing certain types of grouping to continue for a time to operate under a continuous measure of public supervision of some kind."

And here may I take the opportunity of publicly thanking my noble friend Lord Nathan for sending me this morning a very scholarly article written by him which appeared in one of the great literary reviews this month on this whole subject of monopolies. My noble friend Lord Nathan stresses the evils of cartels and monopolies and the need for legislative action, and I am reminded of it by those last words of Mr. Morrison. But my noble friend does not deal with the international problem, no doubt for reasons of space; he deals only with the domestic problem, and in the speech which I have ventured to quote from Mr. Herbert Morrison your Lordships will notice that it is the domestic problem that he is concerned with. I am far more concerned with the international problem.

Again I quote Mr. Herbert Morrison, and this is from the Daily Mail of June 20—an unimpeachable source:

"Before the war our industrial system was in many of its key areas, both in production and in distribution, not genuinely a system of private enterprise at all, but a system of private semimonopoly governed by restrictive agreements and arrangements which were the absolute negation of enterprise. The result was that our country was falling into a decline. Its productive power was dropping back by comparison with other countries, particularly America. In plain English, it was not earning as good a living as it could have done."

I could quote a great deal more—all on the same lines, obviously showing that Mr. Herbert Morrison, Home Secretary, member of the War Cabinet, and a very respected member of my own party, is unhappy about this state of affairs and hopes there will be legislation. I imagine his views are shared by my noble friend Lord Woolton.

The MINISTER OF RECONSTRUCTION (Lord WOOLTON). Imagination.

Lord STRABOLGI. I beg your pardon.

Lord WOOLTON. I was merely congratulating you on your imagination.

Lord STRABOLGI. Why? Because I venture to suggest that Lord Woolton's and Mr. Morrison's minds might be working on the same lines? Surely there is nothing extravagant or imaginary about that. Has the whole theory of government collective responsibility gone by the board since Lord Woolton became Minister of Reconstruction? It is no laughing matter; my noble friends on this side of the House will be interested and the country will have something to say about it, too.

But now I will quote the Minister of Aircraft Production as reported in the Manchester Guardian of November 20. The quotation is quite short, but Sir Stafford Crips is a master of the spoken word and his legal training allows him to put matters in a very few sentences which mean a great deal:

"Another problem which we shall have to face is the political and economic power of the great monopolies. Monopolies in vital industries must be run as public undertakings by the Government through appropriate organizations. We want to get out of the 'can't afford' attitude * * * and we must give our Government the authority to use all the controls strictly necessary to achieve that end."

Those are quotations from prominent members of His Majesty's Government, and I could have, of course, no better companions in my case.

But now may I quote from two members of the United States administration? The first is Mr. Wendell Berge, the United States Assistant Attorney General. He was addressing the American Pharmaceutical Association on December 14 last. This is what he said, according to the Daily Express. I do not quote the Daily Herald in these matters, not because I do believe it to be more reliable than all the other papers put together, but because some of your lordships might not believe it. This is what Mr. Berge said about cartel domination:

"Cartel domination of essential medical products has jeopardized the health of millions. Because of cartel and patent agreements American drug manufacturers have, in some cases, been denied the chance to develop the industry to its full possibilities. The myth of German superiority in the production of organic medical compounds has been dispelled for many years. This prestige rested not on superior skill, but on the abuse of monopoly and patent privileges."

That report is sent by Reuter.

Lastly, may I quote the Vice President of the United States, Mr. HENRY WALLACE. He spoke in Chicago last September, and the speech was extensively reproduced in The Times and in the Sunday Times. Quoting first the report in the Times I find the following very pregnant sentences:

"There must be power to deal with those international cartels which are strangling production, competing unfairly, or using methods which lead to war."

Mr. WALLACE said:

"Isolationism is the screen behind which special privilege seeks to entrench its control. Isolationism and special privilege spoke with equal force to produce the peace of Munich. Wherever isolationism is being pushed most vigorously, there, in the background, can usually be found, furnishing money and power, monopolistic cartels. These cartels are customarily seeking tariffs, quotas, subsidies, or other governmental favors which are the breeding ground of isolationism. Wherever the forces of monopoly are found our job is to fight them. Those groups which rule over economic empires have usurped the sovereignty of the people in international relations."

I notice that the language has much the same bearing or meaning as that of Mr. Herbert Morrison.

"If we plan aright, there can be freedom from hunger and freedom from the fear of a poverty-stricken old age. The farmer can be free from his fear of impossibly low prices for what he sells and outrageously high prices for what he buys. The businessman can be free from the fear of those monopolies and international cartels which use unfair practices in buying from him, selling to him, or competing with him."

In the same speech—I shall not trouble your Lordships with the quotation—he goes on to explain that he is not really attacking business as business, that he is acting as the champion and friend of the American businessman who is in danger of being crushed and obliterated by the growth of this cartel system in the United States. And, of course, what applies to the United States applies also—though not quite so glaringly—to a great extent to this country.

I must now refer to what I consider is the gravest aspect of this whole problem, and that is the international aspect. Your lordships, I am sure, know now that the international cartel system helped Germany very much indeed in her military preparations before the present war. The German cartels induced their partners in Britain, America, and other countries, but particularly in Britain and America, to rationalize and restrict production, and in exchange, of course, their partners were given a monopoly in certain markets. The German cartels secured closed markets in their own areas. Then, under the Nazi system, when they became in effect part of the Nazi totalitarian government, they built up their own war potential. Profits did not matter to them; the German Government saw to that. They were able, under this cartel scheme in their closed markets, to build up an enormous war potential, the results of which we saw soon enough. They obtained manufacturing secrets and formulas from their copartners in Britain, America, Italy, Japan, and other countries. There was, of course, some reciprocity, but that did not matter, because the cartels in Britain and America were not part of a Government plot to prepare for war. Neither Britain nor America was preparing for war, they could give away a few secrets and manufacturing processes and it did not seem to matter at all. But in Germany they were preparing for war under the cloak of the Nazi system.

Now what has happened since the war? The greater part of Europe has been overrun or dominated, as in the case of Spain, by Germany, and behind the German Army have come the German industrialists and monopoly financiers, the men who built up and controlled these trusts and cartels. In France, Czechoslovakia, and the Low Countries particularly, and in other countries as well, they have got control of the great key industries, the great heavy industries, the manufacture of electrical equipment, iron and steel, coal mining, and so on. There they are, in virtual control of all Europe's industry.

In German-occupied Europe and in countries like Switzerland, Spain, and Sweden, which until recently have not dared to refuse anything on the economic plane, they have got a complete network of industrial, manufacturing, and trading control. They have their "hide-outs," if I may use that word—their financial hiding places—in Spain, in Switzerland, possibly in Sweden (I do not know about Sweden), and probably in the Argentine and Bolivia.

However the war ends, and probably while the Governments of the United Nations are busy rounding up war criminals and disarming Germany, the leaders of German monopoly-finance will try to reestablish contacts with their old friends in Britain and the United States of America. They will have an economic and financial empire of great potential value to offer. There may be political difficulties in unscrambling the omelet of the German-dominated cartels in France and other countries. It will depend a great deal on the nature of the Governments in those countries. I understand that, in France particularly, the German control of French industry has been most cleverly concealed—nominee shareholders, Quislings, and so on, hiding the real power behind the majority shareholders—and they will have a great prize in this almost complete European monopoly of great basic industries. This is not fanciful. I do not say for a moment that they will get a response in this country; I cannot answer for the United States. I do not suggest that for a moment, but that is the danger, and we cannot rely on its not meeting with a response, even an innocent response. On the very eve of the outbreak of this war spokesmen of the Federation of British Industries were closeted with the leaders of heavy industry in Germany—your lordships will all remember that, but forgive me for reminding you—to try to come to some such arrangement for partitioning out great portions of the globe for monopoly trading operations.

The leaders of the United Nations must be prepared to deal with this situation, and it cannot be left to the last moment, left to the confusion and congestion of business following an armistice—by, among other measures and this is the only real safeguard, the control of their own cartels. That does not mean nationalization necessarily. It means knowing what is going on and being able to intervene if arrangements are being come to which are contrary to the public interest here. Unless we take measures in time to prepare for this situation, I suggest that a successful expansionist policy of reconstruction, which I understand is Lord Woolton's aim, will be impossible. You cannot do it if you have great international combines controlling key products and strategic raw materials all over the world. All this talk of "food, work, and homes for all" will be mere words. This matter is vitally important. It is most serious, and from the international point of view it cannot be ignored. It should be taken most seriously. This is not a joke, I beg Lord Woolton to believe. I ask him to take it seriously. I do not ask him to deal with me seriously, but I ask him to deal seriously with this subject. I beg to move for papers.

LORD WOOLTON. My lords, I am sorry that the noble lord thought I was not dealing with him seriously when I made what I hope was a pardonable interjection when he said something about Mr. Herbert Morrison. Perhaps I misunderstood him, and if I caused him any inconvenience by my interruption, I beg him to accept my apologies. This is the third time the noble and gallant lord has raised this matter in your Lordships' House. I hope I am not going to disappoint your lordships in my reply. The subject is one which he need not fear I shall take lightly. It is a subject to which I have already, in the comparatively short time in which I have been in my present office, given very detailed consideration. The noble lord is right in saying that it is a subject which is part of an expansionist policy to which I most certainly am committed. He is also right in saying that it is a subject which is not one for this country alone but one in which we shall have to take conference with the other parties in the United Nations. We have already taken some of the first steps toward that conference.

I make no apology to your Lordships for not following the noble Lord into the many things he has said and the many quotations that he has given us today from speeches of some of my colleagues. When I undertook this responsibility I said in the first speech I made to your Lordships that I should put first things first. Well, I have found myself, on assuming office, confronted with a great mass of reports and very much wisdom. This requires to be canalized into some legislative form and I am busily engaged on that, primarily with the object of seeing that the housing problem is tackled first of all, because that is the most urgent problem which is before the public, and it has, indeed, taken most of my time and the time of several of my colleagues who are associated with me in this work. We are already engaged in the process of preparing our views on the question as to how we are going to obtain full employment in this country, and when we came to that subject then we found ourselves faced with the problems that the noble Lord has raised this afternoon. In due course His Majesty's Government will lay before the House a Paper embodying those views. I think it would be ill-advised on my part to enter into a discussion on this problem now and that it would be better to wait until I have had further time to digest everything in regard to it in order to bring it into line with all the other problems with which, as the noble Lord has said, it is associated.

When that time comes—and I hope my Lords it will not be long before it does come, because we are all working very hard on this problem of reconstruction at the present time—then your Lordships will have the Paper, for which the noble Lord now moves before you. It will be part of a Paper embodying the whole subject of employment. I hope that will satisfy the noble Lord as regards today's debate. I apologize to your Lordships for not having entered more fully into many of the arguments that have been put forward. There were many temptations that the noble Lord gave me to enter into a political argument with him today but that, I am sure, would have been very unwise of me. I do not ask the noble Lord to withdraw his resolution demanding papers, because I have every intention of putting those papers before your Lordships. I hope the other members of the House will not feel that I have treated this subject too lightly because I have ventured to withhold a final opinion until I have had a fuller opportunity of dealing with all the facts.

LORD ADDISON. My Lords, I am sure every member of your Lordships' House would wish to avoid any attempt to hustle the noble Lord. We recognize the vastness of the undertakings which are committed to his charge and we would not, for a moment, wish to embarrass him in his work. At the same time I confess to a great disappointment at the small extent to which the noble Lord has referred to the most important matter brought before the House by my noble friend. I gather—and this is the only reason for my rising—that the proposal is that the question of the influence of combines and trusts on the possibility of the provision of employment or the restriction of employment will be dealt with in a forthcoming paper dealing with employment. If that is so I am glad the noble Lord has decided that it shall be dealt with.

LORD WOOLTON. That is so.

LORD ADDISON. But I would like to be quite clear. It will not be a mere aside? This is a vital question relating to the possibility of employment and perhaps the noble Lord will give me a little more extended information on that.

LORD WOOLTON. I will give the assurance that it will not be an aside.

VISCOUNT SAMUEL. My Lords, this question of industrial monopolies is second to none in importance. It is fundamental in framing the economic side of the post-war world. At the same time I think it not unreasonable that the noble Lord, Lord Woolton, fresh to the great office that he now holds, should ask for more time before making a considered pronouncement on behalf of the Government upon this wide and complicated issue. He told us that it would not be long before a statement of policy will be made. I hope that it will not be so long as the period we have experienced in the case of town and country planning and the decisions on the various reports that have been made which have been in abeyance for a length of time that has caused widespread dissatisfaction. If the noble Lord can hold out a hope that the time will indeed be short, a question not of years but of months and if possible of weeks, then I am sure the House, as a whole, will not demur.

LORD WOOLTON. My Lords, I must not mislead the House—not of weeks. I must first deal with the reports to which the noble Viscount has just referred, upon which I think the country is waiting for some pronouncement, but certainly within a very few months I hope that we shall have presented your Lordships with this report.

VISCOUNT MAUGHAM. My Lords, I hope your Lordships will forgive me saying something, not from a Government point of view in the least, in reference to the very important topic which is before the House. I have long been interested in this matter of combines and cartels, and I have done what few members of this House can have done, studied the Sherman Act and endeavored to understand the vast difficulties of the problem with which the United States Government have found themselves confronted after the passing of that act. I am acquainted with some portion of the very many actions that have been brought in the United States to enforce the act and am aware of the fact that the great majority of them have failed. No more difficult problem could be before any legislature than that of attempting to deal with this question. It is a very important one, and the difficulties at the root of it can be appreciated by anyone.

The noble lord who opened this debate declared himself in favor of the view that every combine to limit production was wrong. I wholly disagree with that proposition. It seems to me perfectly and demonstrably a mistake. The noble lord forgets for the moment the terrible effects of unrestricted effort by people to compete against each other. Unrestricted competition is a terrible thing in an industry. I am only going to say a very few words, but I cannot help mentioning one industry with which I was at one time very well acquainted, that of rubber. There was unrestricted competition at one time in the matter of rubber. The trees take 7 years to grow and be in a condition to be tapped. When they are ready to be tapped everyone wants to get rid of his rubber. It cost at that time about 1 shilling sixpence a pound to produce.

Of course that has greatly diminished now. Yet by unrestricted competition the price went down, I think, to 2 pence a pound. That was a wholly unremunerative result. It threw a great number of growers, especially the smaller growers, into a state of bankruptcy, and plantations were sold for a song. Nobody, I think, can reasonably suppose that it would be unfair in a case like that, or that it was unfair in that case, to make some sort of bargain between the various growers in the different countries concerned so as to prevent ruin to the industry as a whole.

That is only a single instance. There are instances that could be given of other products all over the world. Take the question of coffee in Brazil. Coffee grows so easily in Brazil that Brazilians have found it perfectly impossible to sell their coffee in a large measure, and in order to prevent it being sold at half or one-third the cost of production the government have stepped in and thrown the coffee into the sea. I believe that was going on a year ago. I do not know if it is still going on. You want some limitation there. You may say that the government should intervene, but the noble lord has enough experience of governments to know that if you wait for the government to intervene probably all engaged in the industry will be ruined. This problem sounds so easy to state, but it is difficult to deal with. Every combination which has for its object to enable goods to be sold at a reasonable price to the public, including a reasonable and not an unreasonable profit, is perfectly fair. Every combination which is directed to raise the price to an extravagant amount, so that the public do not get properly served in connection with that particular article, is wrong. I challenge the noble lord to produce a bill which will carry out those two objects. The United States have done their best, but, if I may say so without any offense to that country, they have not been particularly successful in their efforts.

LORD STRABOLGI. My Lords, I am very much obliged to the noble Lord for accepting my motion. I understand it will not be very long before we get a white paper on the subject. May I thank my noble friends, Lord Addison and Viscount Samuel for their support? It is the first time in my life I have ever had support from spokesmen of two separate parties of their respective eminence. I hope my noble friend, Lord Woolton, will take warning from that fact. It is a very big subject and the public is really very interested and in some ways exercised about it. I am sorry the noble Lord, Lord Woolton, is not even doing what my noble friend, Lord Addison, did in the last war, that is to set up a strong committee to look into the present development of the subject. It did not take a long time for the inquiry to produce its report before and the report could have been acted on. However, we shall see what the white paper contains. I am sorry if I displayed any irritation because I thought the noble Lord was taking the matter somewhat lightly. I know now from what he says that he is not taking it lightly, and I am glad to realize that he and I agree that it is a serious subject.

The MARQUESS OF LONDONDERRY. My Lords, I do not understand whether the noble Lord withdraws his motion or not. The wording of the question is:

"To ask His Majesty's Government whether they will state their policy with regard to trusts, cartels, and combines, national and international, in post-war reconstruction."

The noble lord has come up against a brick wall of the Government declining to disclose their policy, and the motion holds good.

Lord STRABOLGI. I understand that papers are going to be laid.

The MARQUESS OF LONDONDERRY. If the noble lord cannot get an answer he must withdraw his motion or continue.

Lord STRABOLGI. The Government have accepted it.

On question, motion for papers agreed to.

Manpower

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ABE MURDOCK

OF UTAH

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 23 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, I have received a communication from the Order of Railway Conductors of America, signed by Vice President and National Legislative Representative W. D. Johnson, of that organization, to which is attached a report by Mr. Lawrence A. Appley, Deputy Chairman and Executive Director of the War Manpower Commission to Director Paul V. McNutt. In the letter transmitting the report to me this paragraph occurs:

The attached memorandum contains information of public interest on the general manpower situation, which the Railway Labor Executive Association thinks should be made available to all Members of Congress and the general public. We would, therefore, like very much to see it placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, together with any comments you care to make in connection therewith.

Mr. President, I have gone over the article and the report quite carefully, and find that the report does contain much very valuable material, and I know this organization would not make this request if its members did not think it contained valuable information which should appear in the RECORD.

The report is longer than is permitted to be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD without an estimate being made of what it will cost to print. I have an estimate, which shows that it will cost $286. I ask that the report be included in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 20, 1944.

MEMORANDUM

To: Mr. Paul V. McNutt, Chairman.
From: Lawrence A. Appley, Deputy Chairman and Executive Director.
Subject: Annual report.

INTRODUCTION

On April 18, 1944, the War Manpower Commission entered its third year. It is appropriate that I should give you at this time a summary of the progress of the administrative machinery of the organization, placing that summary against a back-drop of the various phases through which the manpower situation in this country has passed.

This report divides itself into four basic parts. The first deals with the manpower conditions to which our administrative machinery has had to adjust itself from time to time. The second part outlines the development and gradual improvement in the administrative machinery itself. The third part contains a few reflections of the kind of a job that has been done. The fourth outlines some basic difficulties we continually face.

I. THE CHANGING SCENE IN MANPOWER

The manpower situation in this country has passed through very definite phases. Each was easily discernible while we were in it. Each was, and still can be, clearly defined. The beginning and end of each phase can be clearly associated with calendar dates. It must be kept in mind that all characteristics of each of these phases have existed continually through all periods mentioned. What is being emphasized here is a matter of degree. During certain periods certain characteristics predominated.

A. The War Manpower Commission came into existence in the midst of a manpower situation which may be described as the period of mobilization and allocation of an adequate supply of manpower. This period extended from April 1942 to April 1943. It contained certain fundamental characteristics.

1. The war production schedule was all green lights. Full speed ahead was the signal. Anybody who could produce anything in the way of finished products, component parts, or basic materials, was urged and helped to do so. Goals were unlimited. Incentives were high. The manpower program and organization are always sensitive to war production schedules because war production is the biggest claimant for manpower.

2. The armed forces were growing in leaps and bounds. There was much confused thinking as to what the maximum goals should be. The manpower program and organization are likewise sensitive to the needs of the armed forces because they also constitute a major claimant for manpower and their requirements have to be carefully balanced with those of other claimants.

3. The manpower pool was large and appeared to some to be inexhaustible. There were millions of unemployed. There were hundreds of thousands of physically handicapped, minority groups, women, youngsters, oldsters, and other available and willing groups of potential manpower. Extensive prejudices existed against the use of much of this potential manpower and grave doubts existed as to their possible performance.

B. In May of 1943 the manpower situation quickly shifted into a new phase which we now identify as a period of mobilization and allocation of an inadequate supply of qualified manpower. This period extended to the end of 1943.

1. During this time the war-production program was still full speed ahead. The incentive scheduling techniques of the procurement agencies were still in operation. The actual manpower needs of individual employers, of particular segments of the production program and of the whole program were still highly exaggerated. The cry was for greater utilization. Few seemed to realize or accept the fact that greater utilization was inevitable as time progressed and the job "know-how" increased.

2. The demands of the armed forces for men had now become very specific and definite goals had been set and accepted. The goals were so high that it was evident that certain groups of able-bodied men would now have to be opened up to the armed forces which had been previously considered fairly immune. This, some failed to believe and accept. Action along this line was to some degree delayed thereby.

3. The pool of potential manpower had been fairly well consumed. Certainly those who were willing and anxious to enter the war program had been mobilized to a large degree. Serious shortages continued and increased in critical skills and in critical industries. Many of these shortages had been created by the unwillingness of some to believe a year earlier that we would ever reach the situation in which we now found ourselve. They were, therefore, slow in adopting training measures and other devices of securing and developing replacements.

C. The current phase of manpower identified itself about as quickly and sharply as any phase herein discussed. It started in January of 1944 and will extend until the course of events in Europe becomes more clear. It would be safe to say this period will close with the defeat of Germany. It may be described as a plateau period—a leveling off of total manpower needs with sudden and radical adjustments within a stabilized total requirement.

1. Total war production has reached a peak. Red lights are now flashing on many schedules. There is even a slight decrease in totals. Sudden adjustments, many of them unanticipated, are taking place frequently and rapidly within the total. This creates a situation of not knowing what is wanted when or where from one week to the next, and makes the problem of supplying manpower a most difficult one. Manpower, unlike material, cannot be stock-piled. Neither can it be moved from one place to another suddenly upon the signing of an order or a requisition. Such a situation creates many emergencies which are inevitable by the very nature of warfare.

2. The goals of the armed services in terms of net strength either have or will have been reached within the next few months. The Army is at its peak; the Navy will be shortly thereafter. It then becomes a matter of replacements to keep the services at net strength. This, like war-production schedules, causes great uncertainties in the manpower situation. Replacements can be scheduled only as there is more definite knowledge of casualties and discharges for other causes.

3. National statistics alone are no longer significant. Local situations control the pattern of action. Great flexibility in programs and in administration are required. Tight labor areas are loosening up. Loose labor areas are tightening. Some critical labor areas are getting more critical. Unemployment is developing in some communities while serious labor shortages are increasing in others.

D. To anticipate the future is difficult. To prophesy in time of war is hazardous. To have some basis for planning, however, we must sometimes guess and gamble. We are safe in naming the next phase of manpower which we will enter. It can be identified with two words—partial demobilization. Partial demobilization will follow the defeat of Germany and will blossom into full bloom with the defeat of Japan.

1. The war production program may drop from 35 to 50 percent after the close of the European campaign. We are entering to a small degree some phases of demobilization right now because of the lead factor in the manufacture of component parts. Whether there will be complete demobilization of war production activities will be determined by the course of action decided at the peace tables. Quite probably we will never go back to the low level of munitions production preceding this war.

2. Demobilization of the armed forces will follow much the same pattern as that of war production. Like munitions production, it is reasonable to assume that the size of the armed forces following the defeat of Japan will not go back to the low level of pre-war days.

3. The return of war workers to civilian production and the return of the veterans to civilian life is a simple phrase and an easily identified period in the manpower situation. It will present, however, more serious problems, a greater challenge, and a more difficult job than mobilization. This must be a subject for a separate report which will outline the nature of anticipated problems and plans for meeting them.

II. INTERNAL ADMINISTRATIVE DEVELOPMENTS OF THE WAR MANPOWER COMMISSION

Ever sensitive to the changing nature, to the certainties and uncertainties of the war-production and military programs, the administrative growth of the War Manpower Commission is a fascinating story in public administration and voluntary cooperation of all of the forces involved. Continually riding through storms, always the recipient of complaints and abuse, this agency of government finally emerges with her head above water and still on her course. The administrative organization of the Commission has, like the over-all manpower situation, gone through very definite and definable stages of development.

A. The first period in the life of the War Manpower Commission may be defined as the establishment of a War Manpower Commission organization. This period extended from the time of its birth in April 1942 until the 1st of July 1943 The time is long because the birth was not complete upon its appearance in this world. Arms and legs were added over a period of months by Executive orders of the President, which gave to the Commission added responsibilities and brought into its fold additional organizations.

1. The first job was the establishment of an organizational pattern. It was necessary to determine whether we would operate as a staff and line organization or as a functional organization. It was also necessary to determine the number of levels essential to do the job and yet small enough in number to permit streamlined operations.

It was finally decided that the most efficient type of organization would be the staff and line pattern. This meant a single line of responsibility from the Chairman of the organization to the most outlying local unit. All other parts of the organization were established as having a staff relationship to the line. The basic concept that it was necessary to get over to the entire organization in order to make this pattern work was that staff and line responsibilities, while different, are equally important to the successful attainment of objectives.

2. The amalgamation of many different Government agencies into one single streamlined operating unit was not simple. Each agency had a different organization structure, had its own budget, its own basic concepts, loyalties, suspicions, and desires for the perpetuation and growth. These are natural instincts since organizations are constituted of human beings. As in a marriage, each must give up certain individual privileges and thereby gain greater privileges and stature which come from a successful union. This can be accomplished by faith in the union and faith is not easy to develop.

3. Our most significant administrative development was in establishing and maintaining a mechanism for making full use of advisory groups, of management, labor, agriculture, women's organizations, minority groups, etc. This is the very heart of a voluntary system.

It was necessary to build working relationships between and within these advisory groups, to tear down preimposed barriers that existed. This could be done only by individuals and groups of individuals becoming acquainted with and gaining confidence in each other. There were periods of resignations of individuals and groups of individuals and of representatives of various organizations. Sometimes this rose to the heights of righteous indignation.

This development has been successful and none of the symptoms just now outlined have existed for many months. This has been a major contribution, not only to the groups involved, but to the manpower job as a whole.

4. Another major administrative development was putting into operation the principle of decentralization. This was a determination to which we held religiously and unwaveringly. It was accomplished in the face of the natural tendency of bureaucracy to center everything in Washington and of local communities and representatives of local communities to come to Washington for decisions.

It is safe to say that there are few Federal agencies and certainly no wartime agencies that have accomplished the degree of decentralization that has been accomplished by the War Manpower Commission. That can be proven by many facts but the most significant one is that our headquarters staff has been cut in half while our field staff has been growing slightly. Comparison of the two is likewise striking because we now have about 1,300 people in Washington and over 24,000 in the field.

B. In July 1943 our attention was directed intentionally and specifically to pulling together the established parts of a manpower program and placing them in a sequence which would constitute a complete whole. While many of the parts had been tested over a long period of time there were some few parts that had to be developed. This period in our administrative progress can be identified as the development of a war manpower program, and it extended to the end of the calendar year of 1943.

It would be a mistake to imply that we had not given consideration to this earlier, but it would likewise have been a mistake to have given most of our consideration to it before we had the administrative machinery to make the most effective use of such a program.

1. Running all through program considerations has been the basic uncertainty in the minds of many as to a voluntary system versus a compulsory one. Late in 1942 the War Manpower Commission felt that a national service act was inevitable if the job was to be done as it should be done. There were many, including the President, who at that time did not think national service was advisable. We, therefore, as an organization, definitely committed ourselves to make the voluntary system work.

Even though we had sincere doubts as to the possible effectivness of the voluntary system we went all out for it and had a grim determination to make it work. This determination on our part was largely influenced by the confidence of the advisory groups working with us in such a system and by the all-out cooperation which those groups gave us in making it work.

It was in the late summer of 1943 that we realized the voluntary system was working and the job was being done. We would be no less than frank if we did not admit that we were both surprised and pleased to see a voluntary system in America accomplishing results far beyond the fondest hopes of many authorities in the manpower field.

2. There has exisited throughout this history another basic difference in thinking which has made the formulation and full effectiveness of the voluntary system difficult. It grows out of the radical difference between the methods of dealing with military and civilian manpower.

In mobilizing and utilizing military manpower there are certain authorities and facilities that do not exist for the mobilization and utilization of civilian manpower. In the case of the military there exists the power to select, transfer, transport, house, feed, pay, and clothe. Likewise, the facilities are provided for such activities. Furthermore, there always exists the power to court martial. In dealing with civilian manpower none of these powers exists. Furthermore, they cannot exist in as clear-cut, simple, and maneuverable a pattern. Circumstances are completely different and the uses to which manpower is assigned are dissimilar.

Failure to recognize this leads to impatience on the part of some with the apparent slowness and indecisiveness of the voluntary system. Such reactions lead to convictions on the part of some that a voluntary system is not working or cannot work. This, of course, is a basic error in reasoning. At the same time, it has contributed to much of the confusion in the manpower program and has delayed the development of confidence in the country in the effectiveness of a voluntary program.

3. The ultimate evolution of a very definite program pattern was finally expressed in the recommendation of the National Management-Labor Committee to the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission on November 6, 1943. This committee, made up of top-ranking executives of management, labor and agriculture, was able to watch the activities of the Commission much more objectively than those who were a part of the machinery. Their analysis of the situation has proved to be a very sound one.

Quoting from his committee report of November 6: "The War Manpower Commission has had widespread and varied experiences with locally developed manpower programs under decentralized administration and with controls of one form or another in various critical situations. In the opinion of the committee, out of these experiences has emerged a practical approach that is basic to the solution of any critical war manpower problem, whether it be local or national in character.

"The elements of this approach constitute a basic outline of the program this committee believes should be used to solve the war manpower needs. These elements are:

(a) "The facts as to manpower needs and available supply must be determined as accurately as is humanly possible. The War Manpower Commission must make these determinations in close cooperation with management and labor of any given area."

The end result of the measures taken toward this end is expressed in the form of area classifications. There are four such classifications. Group I areas are those in which there is not sufficient immediate manpower supply to meet the demand. Group II areas are those in which the demand is expected to exceed the supply within six months. In group III are found those areas in which the supply is expected to be adequate to meet the demand for at least 6 months. Group IV includes areas of labor surplus with no anticipation of a shortage. These classifications represent the conditions as they exist in relation to manpower supply and demand.

Because of the vital uses of these classifications it is imperative that demand and supply figures be as accurate as possible. Up to the present time we have been basing demand upon figures given to us by employers which in turn are adjusted for anticipated increase in efficiency, for selective service withdrawals, and for known inaccuracies in estimates.

There are further steps to insure the accuracy of these demand figures. Our utilization people, who know considerable about manpower needs in relation to production, check these figures. In addition to that, procurement agencies certify their accuracy from the knowledge that they have of the plants from which the figures come. It is sometimes necessary to conduct utilization surveys in cooperation with the management of these plants in cases of doubt as to actual need.

This triple check on the demand estimates per plant results in the establishment of ceilings on manpower requirements in certain critical labor markets. Those ceilings represent the very best estimate that can be secured as to the total manpower required to meet the known production schedules. These ceilings, of course, are adjusted to changing schedules, but they represent a more realistic demand figure than we have received in many instances on the monthly and bimonthly reports submitted by employers to the United States Employment Service.

(b) "The relative urgency for products and services must be determined in each local area by the agencies of government responsible for procurement and production. Such determinations must be made as close to the source as possible by local representatives of those agencies acting together in close cooperation with the local representative of the War Manpower Commission within the framework of national policy."

The machinery for bringing this about is now known as the Area Production Urgency Committee. That committee is made up of the representatives of the procurement agencies, of the War Manpower Commission and a chairman from the War Production Board. These committees are being granted authority such as has not existed at the local level before. They have been given the authority to review contracts and facilities and to take such action in relation to them as necessary in order to bring about a balance between production requirements and available manpower.

Previous to the establishment of these committees the various procurement agencies and production officials were competing against each other in tight labor markets. There was little coordination of the contract and facilities activities. The functioning of these committees improves that situation considerably.

At the present time there are 11 of these committees in existence which have full authority as just outlined. There are the 5 original committees on the west coast plus those in Hartford, Conn.; Akron, Ohio; Detroit, Mich.; Cleveland, Ohio; Buffalo, N. Y.; and Chicago, Ill.

(c) "The relative needs of individual employers for workers must be determined in each area. Such determinations must be made by local representatives of the War Manpower Commission in close cooperation with local representatives of procurement and production agencies of Government with the counsel and advice of the Managament-Labor War Manpower Committees."

The machinery for fulfilling this objective is known as the Area Manpower Priority Committee. It is the function of this committee to establish the needs of individual employers for workers and to express such needs in terms of manpower ceilings. On these committees are representatives of the procurement agencies, of the War Production Board, of the Selective Service System, of the Congested Area Committee, the Smaller War Plants Corporation, and of other agencies which may be concerned from time to time in the problems involved. The Chairman is a representative of the War Manpower Commission.

This committee is under the general authority of the Area Management-Labor War Manpower Committee. The Management-Labor Committee performs four very definite functions in relation to the Manpower Priority Committee: It nominates a chairman; it recommends standards which are to be used in the establishment of manpower priority; currently reviews the actions of the Manpower Priority Committee; and it hears all appeals. These are most important and vital responsibilities.

This is not the only function of the Manpower Priority Committee as will be revealed in the next point to be considered in this program.

(d) "The causes for failure to meet and maintain required employment levels in individual employing establishments must be identified and wherever possible removed. To accomplish this the War Manpower Commission must secure and coordinate the full and cooperative efforts of employers, workers, the community and other Government agencies."

In the accomplishment of this objective the area manpower priorities committee plays a most important part. When it has been determined what the relative urgency is for the production or services of each employer, and when it has been determined what the manpower needs are in terms of demand for each employer, it is then necessary to discover why the employer does not have, cannot secure, or cannot keep manpower.

This would seem to some practical minds to be a little bit academic. It happens to be, however, the very heart of the manpower problem. If there are bona-fide causes for failure to meet and maintain required employment levels, those causes must be removed. Following are some of the common ones: Antiquated personnel policies, inadequate housing or transportation, unreasonable wage differentials or levels, underutilization, untrained or unskilled supervision, substandard working conditions, and many minor practices which are irritating and unnecessary.

Such causes must be identified and programs worked out with each individual employer for their removal. There are many conditions beyond the control of the individual employer. It is, therefore, necessary to get the full support and cooperation of the community and of the Government agencies involved where their help will remove the difficulty. If, after all reasonable attempts have been made to meet and maintain required employment levels, there is still failure to do so we then have left only one alternative, and that is to put the business somewhere else.

(e) "The flow of available manpower must be guided to the points where it will contribute most to the war effort. In accordance with plans formulated with local Management-Labor War Manpower Committees, the War Manpower Commission must guide this flow of workers in any given area."

If the steps just outlined have been followed, we now have an intelligent basis for allocating manpower supply. We know where it is most needed, when it is most needed, and what has to be done to secure and keep the labor at such points. It is necessary, therefore, to guide the labor to those points.

For this purpose there has been developed what is known as a controlled referral plan. This is many times misinterpreted as regimentation, as usurpation of rights, and as an imposition of government upon workers and employers. That is far from the philosophy of the plan.

It is our basic belief that the average American worker wants to contribute where his skills or abilities are the most needed in the war effort. We believe he will do so when he knows where his skills and abilities are most needed. The controlled referral plan, therefore, says to such a worker, "If you will go to the United States Employment Service or to other agencies with which arrangements have been made and which have been identified for that purpose, you can find out where you are most needed." It is intended entirely as a service and as a guide and if used as such it will be extremely effective.

The controlled referral system is one of many provisions contained in local stabilization plans for guiding or curtailing the movement of labor. These stabilization plans are the medium of the voluntary system. While they are worked out within the framework of national policy, they are primarily the product of local development and are administered locally. The entire country is now blanketed by hundreds of these stablization agreements.

There are different degrees of controlled referral according to the provisions of the local plans. In some cases there is controlled referral for critical skills which are found on the national list. In others the controlled referral system covers locally critical occupations. Some cover all male workers, others cover male workers and women workers in essential activities, and there are a few that cover all workers in the local area. The stringency of the local labor market determines the degree of the controlled referral system in effect.

(f) "The volume of production allocated to or retained in any given area must be balanced with the ability to supply the necessary manpower. The coordinated agencies of government responsible for procurement, production, and manpower should make such allocations."

This becomes a function of the area production urgency committee and was fairly well outlined under step (a) above. There are further points of view, however, that may be of value in understanding it.

Human beings are not like material. When you move a human being you tear up roots, you destroy homes, you separate friends, and you create a need for terrific mental and physical adjustments. Furthermore, you cannot keep human beings in stock piles waiting for needs to arise for their services as you can material.

Because of this simple truth we are guided by a fundamental policy. Our first attempt is to take production facilities, material, and equipment to the places where there are workers to produce. When we, therefore, find a community where the demand far exceeds the supply of manpower our attempt is to remove some of the business, thereby reducing the demand and taking that business to labor-surplus areas.

There is, of course, some business that cannot be moved. Time and the nature of the facilities do not permit moving production facilities from some localities. In such cases we must recruit workers from other areas and bring them into those communities until the demand is met. These workers are volunteers and must be treated as individuals who are coming as the result of a request and of a need that exists for their services.

It is not an easy task to bring production and manpower supply into balance. It is necessary, however, that it be done if we are to meet the accelerated production schedules that the military programs require.

(g) "All of these actions must be based on the initial conception that the agencies of Government are to service the people by informing them what has to be done, when and where it must be done, and that the people of the Nation are the ones to determine how it shall be done."

This states the central theme and philosophy of the entire program. Throughout all of our considerations of the question of manpower and throughout recommendations and resolutions there has been and is a deep conviction that "fully effective mobilization and utilization of the national manpower will be achieved; when all agencies of Government concerned with procurement, production, and manpower, are administered under the coordinated and well-understood arrangement in which Government defines the war needs, enunciates the fundamental policies of 'rules of the game', confines itself to a minimum of control and administrative detail, and provides the maximum of real assistance to those who must do the work, namely the people of this Nation in each community; when all the people understand their personal obligations as related to the war needs, and know where and when to apply their services in such manner as best to aid in the war effort."

This program, as finally pointed up by the Management-Labor Committee, first began to take shape in Buffalo in the spring of 1943. That was a hectic experience and some mistakes were made. Taking into account the successful features and the mistakes, an even clearer pattern was expressed in the west coast manpower program recommended by Mr. Baruch and issued by Justice Byrnes, Director of War Mobilization, in September of 1943. Mr. Baruch, in making his recommendations, was very carefully guided by the Buffalo experience and by the recommendations of the War Manpower Commission growing out of its experience in other areas.

The reason we state that this report of the Management-Labor Committee on November 6 pointed up the voluntary program in very definite form is that no policy or significant change in policy has been issued by the War Manpower Commission since the 14th of August, 1943. We can now say with confidence that there is a War Manpower program, and that it will meet manpower situations regardless of how critical. All of the activities of the Commission are specifically related to one of the seven steps just outlined.

C. Having consciously developed a dynamic, streamlined, and decentralized organization by July of 1943, and having evolved a very specific manpower program by the end of 1943, we entered a third stage of our internal administrative development in January of 1944. This may be described as the period in which we are placing emphasis upon the development of capable War Manpower Commission administrators and administration.

Having an organization and having a program, it was now necessary to analyze and perfect our individual and collective capacity to make the organization function effectively in the application of the program. This period will extend until July of this year (it must be understood that these phases we are identifying by definition and by calendar dates are periods of primary emphasis. Consideration is being given to these matters continually, but emphasis is being placed upon various segments at different times.)

1. Very careful attention is being given to the selection and training of executives and supervisors throughout the entire organization. We, like any employer, are suffering from the inroads of the Selective Service System upon our key personnel. We, like others, accept the policy that the first duty of any man is to serve his country in uniform. The duty of others is to replace him quickly and effectively when his country calls and to carry on in his absence, not only to perform the functions he has left, but to support him in the job he has to do at the front.

2. Emphasis is now being placed upon the function of management as such rather than upon the substantive problems with which management deals.

A common error in all management is that executives and supervisors get so involved in the problems that the organization is solving that they do not pay sufficient attention to managing the organization in such a way that it operates most efficiently and solves the problems promptly and with relative ease.

(a) A War Manpower Commission management program has been established. This program encompasses: First, an appreciation of the basic principles of management. Second, a simple management formula which, if used, will guarantee the application of these principles. Third, a system of program control which evaluates the results of management in terms of the actual attainment of goals, which makes possible preventive action rather than just curative, and which reduces the number of emergencies. Fourth, a conference system by which every employee meets with his immediate supervisor at regularly appointed times for the purpose of establishing a two-way channel through which the suggestions of employees and lower echelons of supervision may get to the top and by which the thinking and the policies of top management may reach the lowest echelon in the quickest possible time and the simplest possible form.

(b) Our own training-within-industry program is being given from the top of the organization down for the purpose of improving the quality of supervision by training supervisors in the sound methods of supervision. This has been effective in the War Manpower Commission as it has been to other organizations to whom we have rendered this service.

(c) Our utilization program is being applied at all levels of the organization. Comprehensive studies have been and are being made of individual and group effectiveness on the job. Recommendations for improved operation are continually being made, accepted, and put into practice. This has resulted in a marked decrease in turn-over and in absenteeism, so that we are not only below the Federal agency averages, but likewise below national averages for industry. Turnover at headquarters, for example, has dropped from 9 percent a month a year ago to between 3 and 4 percent a month now.

(d) Definite morale-building programs have been put into effect within the organization itself. Approximately once a month all employees within certain geographical areas are brought together at central points for programs put on by both management and employees. Questions of internal policy, organization, and program are discussed. Significant events in the history of the Commission are celebrated. Moving pictures are used extensively which contain the feel of the manpower situation in the country and of our own efforts in particular.

It is our objective to see that each employee appreciates the significant part that his or her particular job contributes to the manpower program and thereby to the war effort.

D. As to the next phase in the development in the administrative organization of the Commission we must again go into the realm of prophecy. This is always dangerous. We are, however, willing to consider that which is fairly well assured. We will enter the next period about the 1st of July and it will continue for the duration. It may be described as the period of adjustment to demobolization and post-war activities.

1. The organization and program for dealing with war conditions being firmly established and under the leadership of carefully selected and ably trained executives and supervisors, attention will have to be directed to the problems of adapting organization and program to demobilization and post-war activities when they come.

The War Manpower Commission will find inself in a very difficult situation of going in two directions at the same time. Mobilization for changing and continued war production and for military replacements will be necessary while demobilization will be increasing rapidly. This will not be an impossible task but it will be one which will require conscious administrative attention in order to keep both in proper balance and in order that one will not be sacrificed for the other.

III. THE MANPOWER JOB THAT HAS BEEN AND IS BEING DONE

So far this report has dealt with various phases of the manpower situation as a whole and with specific stages in our administrative development. It is now necessary to turn our attention to results. Has all of this been to any particular avail? This particular question has been greatly confused and may have been misleading by the unlimited and sometimes wholly unjustified attention that has been given by people in high positions of responsibility to certain specific difficulties and emergencies. This has completely thrown out of perspective in the public mind the accomplishments that have been attained.

A. The most significant single accomplishment is one peculiar to the War Manpower Commission. This agency, under the determined leadership of the chairman, has proven that the voluntary forces of any community can solve any problem regardless of how serious. When they understand what the problem is, what has to be done, and when they are willing to fully cooperate with each other, no job is too tough if they are supplied with adequate Federal guidance with an absolute minimum of Federal control.

Cooperation between the forces of labor, management, agriculture and Government has been the proposal of many orators and political aspirants. It has been a grand theme song. Few, however, have actually utilized it in the accomplishment of a sizeable task. The War Manpower Commission has put this principle to work to the extent that this country has been able to do a tremendous war job on a voluntary basis and has had to do it on a much larger scale than others in a much shorter time and without the always helpful incentive of the war being fought in its streets.

There are those who feel that this country has not wholly gone to war simply because in some instances we have not made the personal sacrifices that have been required by others whose homes were in the midst of a battlefield. The country is a bit fed up with this thinking because the average citizen sees no sense in sacrifice just for the sake of sacrifice. At the same time he measures up to whatever sacrifice is required.

B. By far the largest armed forces in the history of this country have been mobilized on time (despite conflicting figures to the contrary) and have been fully supplied in record-breaking quantities. If circumstances require increasing the strength of the armed forces, they will still be met and on time. There were many who, only a few years back, maintained this could never be done in the numbers then discussed. The stark fact is it has been done.

C. War production has exceeded the fondest hopes and again in a record-breaking time. No country ever converted as quickly and completely to war production as did this country. He who believed 4 or 5 years ago that it could be done was a dreamer and accused of having a mental disease of the type that men are now being discharged from service for having. There are tens of thousands of planes available. There are ships, tanks, munitions. They will continue to be available in the quantities needed and at the right time and places. Those who wish to criticize may do so, but the cold stark fact is the war production job is being done.

D. Another interesting accomplishment that few seem to realize is the degree to which civilian production has been maintained.

Production of civilian goods and civilian services has reached a peak during wartime that we were setting as a goal during depression. The percentage of decrease in civilian production in 1943 as compared with 1939 in terms of 1939 dollars is negligible.

The per capita consumption of food and clothes and other basic civilian goods was higher in 1943 than in previous years. Some reliable research institutions are reporting that the standard of living has increased substantially.

E. All this did not just happen. Who did it? People did it. People are manpower. This manpower or human effort had to be mobilized and utilized. This required some central leadership. The agency that was set up to supply that leadership was the War Manpower Commission. I suppose there are those still unreasonable enough to say that it was done in spite of the War Manpower Commission but at the same time there are those who are willing to give credit where credit is due.

At the same time it must be pointed out that the War Manpower Commission is not just a group of Federal employees. It is made up of thousands of volunteers and is merely the catalytic agent which has made all this voluntary effort possible through a coordinated machinery and program. It is necessary likewise to avoid any possible misunderstanding that we claim any credit for war production or for military mobilization or for civilian production. We are simply speaking of that particular part of the total job which was our responsibility and that is seeing that there is manpower available at the proper places at the proper time and in the proper quantity. Immodest though it may be, we have to believe that manpower is the most important element in the attainment of any objective.

F. Aside from the evidence just cited of accomplishment, there are other indicators which seem to support our reaction that the Manpower Commission organization is well established and functioning and that the program is clean-cut and effective.

1. The United States Bureau of the Budget has been very close to our development and most helpful in it. It was the reaction of that Bureau, which keeps its finger on the pulse of all agencies, that we were a bit confused and possibly on dead center a year and a half ago. Our negotiations with the Budget Bureau on our annual budget during February and March of 1943, while pleasant, were a bit chaotic. It seemed at that time a hopeless task to ever get any order out of the situation that then existed.

The experience on our supplemental budget in the fall of 1943 was quite different. The Budget Bureau indicated that they saw some order developing from the chaos. They began to see an organization pattern and they began to see a program to which budget justification and work loads could be related.

During the recent month or six weeks our annual request for the fiscal year 1944–45 has been before the Bureau of the Budget. This has been so radically different from our experience of the year ago that it would be unfortunate not to mention it. Ranking officials of the Bureau of the Budget have stated that "here is an outfit that seems to be moving in the right direction, that seems to know what it wants and where it is going." These same officials have stated that this agency has found itself and is no longer a matter of primary concern to them. Again it is important to cite that our relationships with that bureau have been one of the basic reasons for our accomplishments in better internal business management.

2. It is interesting to read and compare the reports of the congressional committees before which we have appeared for appropriations. In the spring of 1943, the Appropriations Committee of the House was severely critical. It was difficult for them to understand our organization, our programing, and our Budget requests. As a result we were only reasonably successful.

The report of the House committee in the fall of 1943, is quite to the contrary. With the exception of a few policy items which only the Congress could determine, we were granted everything for which we asked. We were complimented for the clarity of our presentation and for the rapidity with which we had corrected the difficulties cited by the committee in the spring of that same year.

It is our hope that we shall have a similar experience with the Congress upon our appearance for our next annual budget. We have conducted searching administrative reviews within our own agency. Every item is clearly identified and justified. We are asking only for what we are convinced we need beyond any question of a doubt and are making no predictions as to the future. Any curtailment in our budget by the Congress will be a very serious matter administratively.

It is interesting to note that with an increasing load, with much more work to do, we are asking for less money for the next fiscal year than we were granted on an annual basis for the last fiscal year.

3. There is evidence that the trends outlined in this report are being recognized in local communities. Favorable local press and editorial comments are increasing in number. The country is slowly becoming conscious of the job that has been done. Editorial and press releases in Washington are indicating a greater appreciation of the problems with which we have dealt and the effective way in which we have tackled them. There is also indication of increasing appreciation of the uncertainties and difficulties with which we have had to deal.

IV. CAUSES OF CONFUSION

It is unfortunate that each manpower difficulty cannot be placed in its proper perspective. When we are all engrossed in meeting a particular emergency it is difficult to realize that that emergency involves one fraction of 1 percent of the total picture. That, however, is inevitable. There are certain basic causes for some of these emergencies and for the confusion resulting therefrom which must be kept in mind.

A. If needs for manpower were clean-cut and definite, manpower organization and program could be stabilized and kept on a straight line toward a given goal. The nature of war, however, makes that impossible. The uncertainties of the armed forces as to what they need, when they need it, and where they need it are always reflected in uncertainties in the manpower scene. Our plans, programs, and actions can be definite, long range, and without confusion only to the extent that the needs of war production and of the military for manpower can be the same.

One of the elements from which we have suffered are the inaccuracies in the information supplied by the production and military authorities as to what they have in terms of manpower. These inaccuracies are undoubtedly explainable and excusable in time of war, but it is significant to realize that they are what confuses the manpower picture. There have been recent and striking illustrations of this situation.

B. Another factor that creates difficulty is the human desire of the production authority to want to solve his own manpower problem. When he is faced with an emergency in manpower he is inclined to create an organization or to send out paratroopers or to set up a special program for solving that manpower problem in his own way and to meet his own needs.

Such an attempt, of course, always creates confusion. If all the claimants for manpower were permitted to crash around in the labor market at their own free will the result would be general chaos. There would be uncontrollable competition for labor through various devices and incentives. One of the indirect results of such a practice would be inflation.

Many of the production authorities deal with manpower as a side line and only in connection with emergencies as effecting that particular production. The Manpower Commission has the responsibility of keeping the whole picture in balance. Whenever the production authority has a manpower problem and submits it to the agency whose responsibility it is to solve that problem, it gets solved and with a minimum of chaos and confusion. When, however, that production authority endeavors to solve it in a special way without consideration of the over-all manpower program, confusion, misunderstanding, and friction result. All this does is to delay the accomplishment of the objective because ultimately the Commission has to perform its responsibility and straighten out the situation.

There are times when it appears that this condition is on the decrease, and there are other times when it appears to be on the increase. It will always interfere with effective mobilization and utilization of manpower in this country. The best illustration of the point being made here is this: If a man's house gets on fire the best thing for him to do is to call a trained fire department. If, however, he wishes to organize a fire department of his own and get the equipment and train them in methods of fire fighting, the chances are his house will burn down and he will either have to build another one or go homeless.

C. Another basic difficulty which we have is the fact that the average citizen does not understand the nature of the manpower problem and how we are dealing with it. This is our responsibility, and we are definitely directing our efforts toward the accomplishment of a better understanding by the public at large. We hope, in the very near future, to have this all spelled out in such a simple fashion that the average citizen can very easily and very quickly understand what our problem is, what the program is, what the organization is, and from this he can determine what is expected of him and how he should go about fulfilling his particular responsibility.

IN CONCLUSION

While ending this report on the subject of difficulties it would be unfortunate if we left the impression that they are insurmountable. Our experience has been to the contrary. They are merely the sand that gets into the machinery, but the machinery keeps running.

The people of this country have done a grand job. The purpose of this report is to give you an indication that we really believe this organization has contributed tremendously to the accomplishment of this job. As the deputy chairman and the executive director responsible for the administrative operation of this organization, I report to you that our goal is to see to it that we contribute more and more as the months pass.

LAWRENCE A. APPLEY.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS C. RABAUT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep affection that I recall the fond memory of our colleague, J. William Ditter.

Bill Ditter was a friend, steadfast and true. His literary genius and his oratorical skill will be remembered by all of us. He was a stanch partisan and he served his country and his party well.

Although we differed on many issues, I am proud to think of him as a friend. We had many talks and I recollect that in our quiet moments together he told me of his great devotion for his family.

His untimely death was a shock, but the memory of Bill Ditter will linger long in these hallowed walls.

Radio Address to the People of My District

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address delivered by me over Station WNBF on May 20, 1944:

Dear friends of the triple cities and my congressional district, this week I received an invitation from Trustee P. Clay Knickerbocker, of Endicott Village Board, expressing his satisfaction with the recent passage by Congress of the Hall amendment providing for a survey of the Susquehanna River in the Endicott-Johnson City vestal area. I appreciate Mr. Knickerbocker's kind references and also thank him for the invitation he extended me to be present at his flood-control meeting at the Municipal Building in Endicott on Thursday evening, June 1, 1944. By that time I expect to have some interesting reactions from the commanding general of the Army engineers as to what immediate future possibilities are.

The American Legion's G. I. bill was debated in Congress this week. I am pleased to report to you folks back home that I fought for it on the floor of the House and voted for its passage.

But let me read to you my speech in favor of the G. I. bill as it appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

"Mr. Chairman, late last year back home before the Endicott Furlough Club I made a few proposals which I later incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 6, 1943. I called my proposals the elementary three r's of veterans' legislation. I outlined in these proposals rehabilitation, reeducation, and readjustment.

"I was most happy, I can assure you, when early this year the American Legion came forth with the G. I. bill and incorporated a great many of these proposals in it. At this time may I compliment the committee members for the efforts they have put forth in drawing up and writing this G. I. bill. In the face of great opposition, in the face of pressure from many groups, the members, from the chairman of that committee on down, are entitled to great credit.

"Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most outstanding pieces of legislation which ever has or ever will come before the Congress. It proposes to rehabilitate the veterans of World War No. 2 and provides for a system of completion of education and a system of employment placements which has never before been conceived by any nation in the world. It is a step in the right direction. Of course, subsequent legislation will have to be proposed to different parts of the bill. Nevertheless this constitutes a blazing of the trail along which we must go a great way in relation to the boys in the service.

"I mentioned the three R's as the fundamental steps in veterans' legislation. A great deal has been done in connection with rehabilitation. Hospitals and medical attention have been provided for those who will return from World War No. 2. If I were to give a title to the present G. I. bill I would call it a bill to adequately equip the veterans of World War No. 2 for post-war pursuits by providing them with education—vocational, specialized, and advanced. These words, in my opinion, aptly describe the G. I. bill and those fundamental precepts that I mentioned late last year. I am so glad to hear that the committee is unanimous or almost unanimous on these points.

"Mr. Chairman, as time goes on I hope we will be able to go even farther on the course we have charted to date. The war has lost several million years to this generation in their educational pursuits. There is no reason why these millions of years cannot be made up. They should be made up and the veterans of World War No. 2 should be provided for in such a way as to make up for this great loss.

"Those brave men and women of our armed services will find America a better place to live in if we pass the G. I. bill now and provide them with the future of rehabilitation, of reeducation, and of reemployment which they deserve for the sacrifices they are making in this awful struggle."

Efforts of C. I. O. To Defeat Hon. John M. Costello

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. NORRIS POULSON
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, as a further example of misrepresentation by the C. I. O. political action group, I want to insert in the RECORD a letter from a personal friend, which very cleverely describes the extent to which the C. I. O. went to defeat Mr. COSTELLO and others:

Last night I was lounging in the easy chair in my den, and thought of how I'd put on my campaign coat and ten-gallon hat and go out and whoop it up for your reelection. Says I to myself, here's our good friend and fellow accountant, NORRIS POULSON, staying in Washington and slaving for us at a time when he ought to be out here mending his fences so that he can go back to Washington and slave for us another 2 years for a measly ten grand a year.

Well, would you believe it, Norris no sooner had I gotten the words out of my mouth, so to speak, when I twiddled the radio dial and heard a deep-throated gazookus announce the beginning of a program to advocate the election to Congress of candidates who would support the war effort and vote for the interests of the people. He means our good friend, NORRIS POULSON, I thought, for your circular says you did all of those things and more, so I decided to listen.

The master—or rather mistress—of ceremonies was Olivia de Haviland, and the program began with that deep-throated bird singing a ditty about our grand Commander in Chief and how we ought to back him up. Somewhere in every line or two were the words "Commander in Chief" or "Franklin D." all made up in rhyme. It was real purty at that, but the tune was a little off key.

By that time, Norris, I began to smell a rat, but decided to stay with it anyway, for I figured after reading your circular that they could say only good about you. Olivia started right down the list, beginning with JOHN COSTELLO. I always thought this fellow COSTELLO was a right guy, even if he is a Democrat, but if his ears weren't burning last night it wasn't Olivia's fault. According to her, COSTELLO hasn't voted right on anything since he's been in Congress, and she called on Rita Hayworth and Gloria Stuart to back her up.

But speaking of ears burning, Norris, yours should have been the color of a nice ripe beet, too. It seems that you voted 17 out of 20 times against the people, voted against war measures, lend-lease, etc., and in general failed to support our dear Commander in Chief. Rita and Gloria both agreed heartily with Olivia that you should be retired to private life.

About this time the basso profundo again sang the Commander in Chief ditty. Incidentally, Norris, one of the best statements I have seen on the functions of the Commander in Chief, as envisioned in the Constitution, is in the article on the Montgomery Ward case by that eminent New Deal apologist, Walter Lippmann, appearing in the Pasadena Post today.

Olivia, Rita, Gloria, and the others continued down the list and proceeded to slam my friend and Congressman, CARL HINSHAW. It seems that CARL, COSTELLO, and you are reactionaries, isolationists, obstructionists, and worse, and if the country is to be saved we had better vote for your opponents. The tip-off came when the gals and guy went overboard for Ellis Patterson and SHERIDAN DOWNEY, citing the latter's outstanding record in the Senate as the reason for advocating his reelection. The program came to an end with another snappy rendition of—you know what—and the announcer said it was under the auspices of the C. I. O. committee or some such organization.

All I can say in closing, Norris, is that you are a great disappointment to me, instead of representing us in Congress, as you are paid to do, all the time you were stabbing us in the back. You and your partners in crime, COSTELLO and HINSHAW, will have a tough time talking yourself out of this, for if Olivia, Rita, Gloria, and the what's-his-name say you are heels, it must be so.

I guess I must be a reactionary, too, Norris, for I am still for you and working for your renomination in the primary on May 16.

Sincerely yours,

S. S. WEBSTER, Jr.

Marriages Stay Put at Harper, Iowa

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. KARL M. LeCOMPTE
OF IOWA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, Members of Congress from Iowa and other Midwestern States are often spoken of as "being close to the soil," and I think this may partially account for our good living, and particularly in good living together. In general, our State is made up of small communities and it is here that we find the most harmony and happiness. There is no finer example anywhere than in the little town of Harper,

Iowa—Keokuk County—population 210, where on the invitation of Rev. J. J. Schoenfelder, pastor of St. Elizabeth's Catholic Church, nine couples who have been married for more than 50 years recently met together and were introduced to members of the press. An illustrated news story in the Sigourney (Iowa) Review, May 17, 1944, tells about these fine folks, and I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short paragraph about each couple. It has been pointed out by our Iowa State Department of Health that there is a definite connection between the longevity and happy marriages of the Harper folks, and that happiness contributes to mental well-being and lack of mental strain adds years to life:

Mother's Day in Harper was a great day that will live in the memory of nine prominent couples who have been married more than 50 years and who have lived there practically all their lives.

The Reverend J. J. Schoenfelder entertained these couples at a special breakfast at the parish after they had attended early mass at the St. Elizabeth Catholic Church Sunday morning.

The Reverend Mr. Schoenfelder states: "He is proud of these couples; they all belong to his church, which has a membership of 500, and out of this number 200 are relatives of these couples."

In an interview with Mrs. Honnas Smith one day last week, she related, "That they all were surprised, as they did not know what the Reverend Mr. Schoenfelder wanted with them last Sunday when he asked them all to remain after the service, and invited them to the parish, as he was prepared to take pictures of us. He had a photographer from the Des Moines Register there to take our pictures."

Henry Streigel, 88, and his wife, 82, who was Mary Besser before her marriage, was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Nick Besser. They have been married 64 years, have 8 children and 41 grandchildren, 9 great grandchildren, all living. Two of their children are dead and 9 grandchildren are in the service.

Honnas Smith, 88, and his wife, 82, was Mary Feckley before her marriage, the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Feckley. They have been married 63 years, have 5 children, 33 grandchildren, and 37 great grandchildren, all living. Seven grandchildren are in the service.

John Peiffer, 82, and his wife, 77, was Anna Berg before her marriage. She was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Nick Berg. They have been married 57 years, have 11 children, 40 grandchildren, all living. Two children, one a daughter, Lt. Edythe Peiffer, an Army nurse, stationed at New Orleans, La., and four grandchildren in the service.

Mike Peiffer, 78, and his wife, 71, who was Barbara Berg before her marriage, was also the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Nick Berg. They have been married 51 years. They have 8 children and 28 grandchildren living; 4 of their children are dead. They have 2 grandchildren in the service.

Matt Weber, 81, and his wife, 78, was Lena Peiffer before her marriage and was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Peiffer. They have 6 children, 20 grandchildren, 2 of whom are in the service.

Mike Adam, 81, and his wife, 78, who was Mary Heiberger, the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Jake Heiberger. They have 6 children, 23 grandchildren, 16 great grandchildren, all living. They have a son and 4 grandchildren in the service.

August Klein, 75, and his wife, 72, who was Minnie Goeldner before her marriage, the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. August Goeldner. They have been married 52 years, have six children and nine grandchildren, all living. One grandchild is in the service.

Joe Clarahan, 72, and his wife, 70, who was Yetta Besser, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Peter Besser. They have 6 children, 32 grandchildren, and 3 great-grandchildren, all living. Three children are dead and they have one grandchild in the service.

Mike Sondag, 73, and his wife, 74, who was Mary Peiffer, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Mike Peiffer, were married 50 years, they have 3 children, 16 grandchildren, and 7 great-grandchildren, all living. One child is dead and one grandchild in the service.

There were two additional guests, Mrs. Joseph Haupert, 84, whose husband died in 1936. They had been married 56 years. Mrs. Haupert was reared in the home of the late Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Helberger. She was the mother of six children, one child is dead. Four grandchildren and one great-grand child living.

Mrs. Peter Adams, 73, whose husband died 1942, was Anna Yeager, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Ambrose Yaeger. She has 7 children, 40 grandchildren, and 3 great-grandchildren. Five grandchildren are in the service.

These folks, who all had the honor of celebrating their golden weddings, are pioneers of Keokuk County and the community in which they live.

All the couples but one lived on farms near Harper. They attribute their long years together to their mode of living. These couples had many hardships, but both husbands and wives worked together. When the women had their housework done they would take their children and go to the fields to work.

They didn't stop when the clock struck 6 in the evening. They would toil on until nearly dusk and then come in to do their chores. Many a supper meal was served by lamplight.

In after years, when their work was done and they had accumulated their fortune, they moved to Harper to settle down and take life easy.

They purchased property with an acreage and kept a cow, several hogs, and chickens, and put in large gardens, and in this way made a good living while in town.

John Peiffer and his wife were the only couple that did not live on the farm. They settled in Harper, where Mr. Peiffer operated a hardware store and was the community undertaker. He was active in business until the last 2 years, when he decided to quit business and take it easy.

The Review wishes to join the many friends of the couples in congratulations for the many years they spent together.

Leave It to Dr. Gabrielson

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HOMER D. ANGELL

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, Dr. Ira N. Gabrielson, Chief of the Wildlife Service, is a resident of my district and for many years was engaged in the program of the conservation of wildlife resources in our State prior to the time he took over his present position. On May 16, 1944, there appeared an editorial in the Portland Oregonian with reference to Dr. Gabrielson's service, paying a well deserved tribute to his excellent work in the conservation of our wildlife resources, which I include as a part of my remarks. The editorial is as follows:

LEAVE IT TO DR. GABRIELSON

On his return from the North American Wildlife Conference in Chicago, State Game Supervisor Frank B. Wire reported that, owing to many complaints of the damage of crops by wild ducks and geese, it is probable the present shooting restrictions will be somewhat liberalized. Supervisor Wire admitted, however, that Dr. Ira N. Gabrielson, Chief of the Wildlife service, made no promises in the matter. Here in Oregon we know how strongly the plump Dr. Gabrielson would feel about increased shooting without most urgent indication, for it was here, before he became head of the Service, that Dr. Gabrielson dreamed of a day when intelligent conservation measures should restore our waterfowl resources to their pristine abundance. This ambition, which was shared by all genuine sportsmen, now has been in large part redeemed.

Yet for all his zeal as a conservationist—a practical zeal that has proved most fortunate for America—Dr. Gabrielson regards himself as a custodian of our natural wealth of migratory waterfowl, and this he considers a crop that should be reasonably and annually harvested. He is the hunter's friend rather than the spoilsport. When an issue is made of the proportion of the harvest that may safely be taken, it must be remembered that Dr. Gabrielson is the foremost authority on our wildlife resources, and that his decision in the matter can only be the best and most impartial decision it were possible to obtain. If the chief of the wildlife survey concludes that our waterfowl regulations may safely be liberalized, his advice should be followed; if his finding is to the contrary, again it should be observed.

This is neither the place nor the time, if ever, when political pressure should be brought to bear upon competent authority. Like many another bystander we are inclined to believe that the waterfowl regulations could be liberalized without hazard, though with possibly some few exception, but we are waiting for Dr. Gabrielson to give us his views. To make the decision is part of his job. That's what we hired him for.

Lend-Lease in South America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HUGH A. BUTLER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 23 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two of a series of articles by Stanley Johnston relating to the furnishing of money to South American countries, which appeared in the Chicago Tribune.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune of May 21, 1944]

FINDS UNITED STATES CASH BUYS US FOES IN SOUTH AMERICA—DOLLARS DISRUPT ITS BALANCE OF POWER

(By Stanley Johnston)

The New Deal policy of pouring money into Latin America in an attempt to buy good will actually has contributed to the formation of an anti-United States bloc of countries in lower South America.

The anomalous situation is the result of United States dollars disrupting the normal balance of power among these neighboring countries and, consequently, sending each of them scurrying for new ties of security.

This reporter's observations of the friction caused by our good neighbor policy confirmed the conclusions of Senator BUTLER (Republican, Nebraska). After an inquiring journey through Central and South America last summer, BUTLER reported to Congress that our "hemispheric hand-out is neither good nor neighborly."

CASH STARTS ARMAMENT RACE

In an audited report submitted to Congress, BUTLER said $5,733,953,534 had been spent by the United States in Latin America for lend-lease, gifts, outright loans, purchase of supplies, and development projects. He said the amount already spent or committed for lend-lease amounted to $800,000,000.

The golden stream flowing southward from rich Uncle Sam has altered the financial strength of these countries, built air fields for them, distributed weapons and brought them military training from United States Army officers. The result has been an armament race and a recasting of protection bonds to the detriment of their lavish northern neighbor.

Despite occasional accusations, there appears to be no direct evidence of Axis influence motivating the anti-American coalition in Latin America. The fact that neither Germany nor Japan is in a position to give aid to any state in the Western Hemisphere is as apparent to the South Americans as to us, their comprehension of international affairs being in no way inferior to ours. Their attitudes toward their neighbors stem from nationalistic aspirations fertilized by New Deal money.

ARGENTINA LEADS "ENEMY" BLOC

Comprising the bloc in which dislike of the United States is growing are Argentina, its nucleus and principal member; Chile, Paraguay, and Bolivia. Pressure to join is being exerted heavily upon Uruguay and the southern part of Brazil. The turn of affairs has brought great discomfort to our friends, such as Peru, Uruguay, and Brazil, for they are forced to make difficult decisions to protect themselves from the clique without openly disrupting old relationships with members of the anti-American bloc.

Although no lend-lease aid has gone to Argentina from the United States, she benefits indirectly from that source by the lend-lease, spending, and gifts in nearby countries who in turn are enabled to increase their purchases from her. This is in addition to more than $100,000,000 annually spent by the United States in buying Argentine exports, and purchases made by Britain as agent in behalf of the United States in a program of allied purchasing of meats, dairy products, poultry, and eggs.

A "CHICAGO" OF SOUTH AMERICA

Argentina, whose capital, Buenos Aires, is the Chicago of South America, is the natural leader in her sphere by virtue of an excellent economic position, progresive development, and the highest standard of living on the continent—all objects of admiration by her neighbors.

Holding such a position, Argentina is in reality a potent rival of the United States in acquiring influence in South America. She was the last Latin-American nation to accede to our wishes to join the Pan-American front against the Axis and the moment her current dictator made such a move he was overthrown by a palace coup. Consequently, the present junta government has not been recognized by the United States and this reproof adds to the tension between the two countries. Furthermore, Argentina's trade being mostly with Europe—principally with Great Britain, who also has vast investments in the country—her greatest interests are in that quarter rather than helping our plans to fruition.

Instead of remedying this situation, our scattering of money aggravated it. Argentina has a natural rivalry with Brazil, the only country on the continent which is larger than Argentina. However, their strength was approximately on a par until the United States stepped into the picture and altered it. Brazil's military strength was sharply improved by our spending, industrialization and transfer of weapons to her. Argentina's answer has been formation of the anti-United States coalition.

ANOTHER RIVALRY BLOSSOMS

The expedient met with ready acceptance by some of Argentina's neighbors, including Chile. As in the case of Argentina and Brazil, Chile had considered her strength equal to that of Peru in the pre-war period, but by United States largess Peru was supplied with weapons, new airfields, improvements to existing fields, and expert training for her defense forces.

Chile had not joined the majority of the Latin-American countries in breaking with the Axis Powers following the Montevideo conference in 1942. She believed she could negotiate a more profitable arrangement by dealing directly with us later. During the year prior to Chile's decision to join the anti-Axis combine, Peru worked closely with the United States and profited accordingly.

When Chile belatedly appealed to Washington, D. C., for arms and her plea was not heeded, her generals awoke to the fact that she had been outdistanced by Peru. Frantically they turned to other sources for weapons and found a ready helper in Argentina.

CHILE SWINGS TO ARGENTINA

Argentina has industrial equipment but lacks steel. Chile had obtained an important concession from the United States—a loan to finance erection of a steel plant expected to produce 100,000 tons annually. However, she lacks machines for turning the steel into the weapons she wants to bring her up to the military level of Peru.

And so it was arranged that Argentina would take 75,000 tons of Chile's steel annually and in return supply Chile with weapons. The mutually satisfactory arrangement gave Chile a good reason for following Argentina rather than the United States.

Paraguay, an impoverished but warlike nation, also turned to Argentina's lead at the first call despite United States financial efforts to help her 1,000,000 population obtain a decent living standard. A similar tack to influence her was taken by Brazil, who last year canceled an old Paraguayan war debt and tried with a gift of $5,000,000 to induce Paraguay to eschew Brazil's rival, Argentina. But, just as American spending failed, so did Brazil's effort to buy good will, and Paraguay entered Argentina's sphere of influence.

CURB CLAMPED ON BOLIVIA

It is not surprising that Bolivia tossed her lot in with Argentina in view of Washington's attempt to discipline Bolivia's violent politics by refusing to recognize the new Government—the Villarroel junta—despite its pro-Americanism.

Thus cut off from the Allies, Bolivia turned to other fields to find supplies of vital food and materials. She found Argentina ready to provide at least some supplies and the weight of her friendship to counterbalance the pro-Allied linking of Peru and Brazil.

Uruguay, almost the only democratic country in South America and a steadfast friend of the Allies from the beginning of the war, is being heavily pressured to join the Argentina bloc.

Efforts to force this little country of 2,150,000 population away from the Allies' camp were apparent during the writer's recent visit to Montevideo. At that time Argentine military officers were there, stirring up feeling between peaceful Uruguay and her northern neighbor, Brazil.

THREATS AGAINST URUGUAY

The officers were offering guaranties that, in the event of international strife among South American countries, a push against pro-Allied central and northern Brazil would be joined by southern Brazil. The southern section is populated largely by Germans and contains most of that country's expanding manufacturing industry.

Meantime, Argentina was threatening an "economic sanction" against Uruguay with a campaign to dissuade Argentines from vacationing at Uruguayan beaches, which provide much of that little country's foreign income. The move was patterned after Hitler's coercion of Austria by preventing German tourists from visiting there. But Uruguay has continued to hold out.

[From the Chicago Tribune of May 22, 1944]

HOW NEW DEAL SWINGS LATINS' TRADE FROM UNITED STATES—SOUTH AMERICAN CREDIT POOL BUILT UP IN LONDON

(By Stanley Johnston)

While the New Deal with one hand lavishes millions of dollars on its good neighbor policy in South America, it is disbursing with the other hand huge sums which are being used to help amass in London a vast store of credit that will give Great Britain an advantage in competing with us for post-war South American trade.

More than $220,000,000 of such credit already has been built up by two Latin-American nations—Argentina and Uruguay—and is continually growing. These credits have been frozen for the duration of the war and at its end can be spent by Argentina and Uruguay only in trade with Great Britain. The result is bound to be an impediment to United States trade in those markets for years to come.

ALLIES SOLE BUYER

Our part in closing a trade door upon ourselves results from Britain being permitted to act as our agent in making purchases for us in its role as the Allied Nations' sole buyer of various supplies from South America.

During a first-hand study of the effects of our policies in Latin America I was told of the singular situation by a United States financial authority in one of those countries. The procedure that brought it about is similar to the system of barter used by Hitler, which, incidentally, both Britain and the United States denounced as a threat to world trade and peace.

Argentina, a leader of its continent and long a hold-out in severing relations with the Axis, is a prosperous, ambitious, and productive country. Argentina's principal trade is with Britain and it always exports more to Britain than it imports from there. Consequently, a balance in favor of Argentina formerly accrued annually, which normally was used in meeting payments on Argentine bonds and other investments held by Britain.

BALANCE INCREASED

Since the war, however, Britain's expanded purchases from Argentina—part of which are made in behalf of the United States—and Britain's lowered exports to Argentina, have led to a greatly enlarged favorable balance for the South American country in London.

Instead of settling the account currently, the two countries entered into a war-time agreement to freeze Argentina's surplus credit in London for the duration. Argentina's total credit now amounts to £50,000,000 sterling or more than two hundred million. It is still growing. Based on Argentina's population of 14,000,000, the frozen credit amounts to more than $14 for every man, woman, and child in that country.

The same thing also is true in Uruguay. That small country, one of the few real democracies in the dictator-dominated continent, already has amassed a credit balance of twenty million in Britain. Spread over Uruguay's population of 2,000,000 this means that every person in that country has frozen in England $10 of credit which can only be spent in trade with the British after the war.

BUDGET $12.50 PER PERSON

What these sums represent to South Americans is indicated by the comparison given by Senator HUGH BUTLER (Republican, Nebraska) who reported to Congress, after a trip through Latin America last summer, on this country's vast scale of spending on the good-neighbor policy. He observed that the total of all budgets of 20 Latin-American countries was $8.45 per capita in 1941 and $12.50 in 1942, as contrasted with the United States' budget of $461 and $769 per capita for those years.

Britain's designation as sole purchaser of South American meat, poultry, and dairy products for the Allied Nations was made last year by the combined Allied Food Board. It was announced that most of the beef which the British Ministry of Food would buy in Argentina and Uruguay would be resold to the United States Army.

Subsequently, it was learned the Roosevelt administration had taken funds from the United States Treasury to pay for more than 2,000,000 pounds of turkeys bought by the British Government in Argentina. The Commodity Credit Corporation made the purchase from the British and turned the turkeys over to the War Shipping Administration, which put them in the Allied food pool where they were made available for stocking the merchant ships of any of our allies at no cost to that nation.

At the time of Britain's designation as the Allies' sole buyer in South America, foreign trade authorities expressed surprise that the United States would agree to the delegation of this authority to the British. They observed that the millions spent in pursuit of the good-neighbor policy appeared to have been counteracted by the administration's permitting an arrangement under which Britain can build up competitive advantage in South American trade.

It was considered significant that Argentine newspapers, on learning that Britain would buy the country's exportable meat surplus for the next 2 years, did not mention that much of the funds for purchase of the meat would be supplied by the United States.

"Again the British have come to our rescue and purchased our meats," one newspaper said.

What part of the vast frozen credit in London actually results from purchases made for the United States was not ascertained but the indications were that our contribution is considerable.

ADVANTAGE TO BRITAIN

My informant, a United States representative in South America, added his observation that the constriction of this huge credit until the war ends, coupled with Argentina's normal excess balance of trade with England of more than fifty million annually assures Britain a powerful advantage in keeping our country from full participation in the Argentine market for years, especially in the immediate post-war period when all countries will be scrambling for trade.

"We're helping Britain to build up a big stick to wreck our trade with Argentina after the war," he commented. "Regardless of what we have to sell them, Argentina will buy from Britain to utilize the frozen credit. And besides, we are giving away the psychological credit actually due us for the money we're spending in this trade."

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 23 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, former Governor Alf Landon, of Kansas delivered an able address entitled "A Platform for America," before the one hundredth and forty-seventh Rotary International district conference, in Chicago, Ill., on May 16, 1944. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

One of the objects of Rotary is international goodwill. I know of no civic organization that has made a greater contribution to that objective dear to the hearts of the common people everywhere.

In considering a platform for America, the No. 1 requirement is a good manager for our Nation's affairs; one who will not interfere with our military and naval experts in winning the war.

This conflict has demonstrated once again the old truth that there is nothing of greater concern and importance to all people, than the kind of government under which we live as well as the kind of administration we get from that Government.

The everlasting confusion over manpower and draft—to mention only two items out of a long list—brings the realization to every home in America of the great need for an efficient administrator in the White House. The true test of a good executive is his ability to formulate wise and sound policies for the general welfare, his ability to pick capable associates, and his willingness to delegate authority. That executive capacity is all the more vital at a time when squeezing the last possible dollar from the taxpayer will cover only a fraction of our astronomical Government expenditures and when Federal wastage is visible to every eye.

When we think of the almost daily headlines, "Confusion in draft," "Confusion in foreign policies," "Confusion in taxes," "Truman committee reports confusion in war," etc., then we think back a few years to similar headlines, "Confusion in relief," "Confusion in recovery policies," etc., we are forced to the conclusion that something is basically wrong in the executive branch of our Government. I am not discussing the intrinsic merit of the New Deal policies of the past 11 years. I am simply pointing out that you can scarcely remember one that has not needed clarification and the clarification has needed clarification and so on ad infinitum.

The same thing is true in our foreign policy. I believe the American people are not adverse to taking a full responsible part in world affairs, but if we are going to avoid the fumbling of the past, we must make a new start in mobilizing public opinion on a more sound base than it is now.

Every unbiased observant citizen knows that a lack of information and clear direction—the failure of Franklin Roosevelt to enlighten his countrymen concerning his plans—the failure to clarify the differences between his general pronouncements and his actual performance—the failure to crystallize, in terms more comprehensive than unconditional surrender of our enemies, our aims in this war, have all confused and disappointed our citizens.

Then also, there must be in America no East nor West in assuming that intelligence and patriotism in foreign affairs is a matter of geography. That adds to the confusion not only at home but abroad. There must be an end to the hallelujah yammering that gives the impression that Europe and the rest of the world is to come first—and America last.

There must be an end to the policy which deliberately conceals from the American people the political conditions existing in the world.

We must face the fact that both Churchill and Stalin are pursuing an independent course to protect their national interest. I do not know whether from the start the British and Russian Governments have been unwilling to make the concessions necessary for permanent collective security, or whether there has been a real change in direction as a result of the President's failure to formulate a practical, clear, and stable foreign policy. The fact that the President, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of Interior take turns in making and altering our foreign policy, must have affected the attitude of our allies toward post-war settlements. They cannot rely on our leadership in that respect, any more than we can.

No matter who is to blame, we must immediately make a fresh start in the attempt to forge lasting bonds of amity with all peoples. The lack of a better-informed public opinion here of political conditions in the world increases the danger of misunderstandings. The American people have no desire to return to the old order of things, in either the domestic or foreign field. But enduring peace depends on the stability of its foundation, and that requires a broader base than the closely guarded secret conferences of three men.

The fundamental need for building step by step the vital cooperative attitude among the United Nations—for building the vital public opinion to back up that cooperation—is a task which a United Nation's world council can best solve.

The first step to tackle is the relief of economic friction. If we cannot work out sound economic collaborations, what hope is there of working out enduring political collaborations?

No territorial redistribution of the world can equalize opportunities for all nations. But we can make the differences less irritating and burdensome by facilitating international trade. That not only means lower tariffs but also it means that as soon as possible all governments abandon artificial control of currencies and exchange, quota restrictions, and imperial preference. The Johnson Act, restricting the financing of foreign loans in the country, should be repealed in name as it has been repealed in fact by lease-lend.

Each nation must be encouraged to reorganize gradually and painfully on a sound financial basis rather than lean upon a world monetary organization for support. It is time the statesmen of the world, including America, take seriously once more the prudent care of national finance.

I reject the New Deal theory that an unbalanced budget and a spendthrift psychology is a national asset. It threatens all the social gains of generations. I view a permanently unbalanced budget as a national menace, and we should strive by economy and efficiency its earliest possible balancing.

Just as territorial redivision after every war is a menace to enduring peace, so are Government-sponsored cartels, monopolies, tariff, and trade barriers and "blocked" exchange. We cannot have a high level of employment unless there is by and large, world economic stability. Furthermore, I believe dictatorships in the world will fade with the rise of true prosperity.

We can make our currency the soundest in the world. We have the largest and most modern merchant marine. We have the most efficient mass-production system. I believe it is to the interest of America to unite with other nations in a spirit of mutual concessions and mutual responsibility in removing economic frictions.

Our position as the world's leading creditor Nation—the world's leading manufacturing Nation—the world's leading merchant marine Nation, makes it imperative that we change our tariff policies.

I believe that our reconstruction and world reconstruction requires a more liberal tariff policy on our part. Our present tariff and world credit financing policy means a closed system and progressive delay. No system of extravagant spending on public works will bring the prosperity that the waiting markets of the world will bring.

I believe that this is the only way we can enjoy solid prosperity, and I believe it is a necessary contribution to social and economic relations between people upon which peace is ultimately based.

I believe the peace and happiness of our country is linked with the happiness and prosperity of all countries.

Of course it is folly to ignore the political and spiritual forces indigenous to every country. I fear an attempt to reform the world on the basis of the good old American tradition, "There ought to be a law," and then thinking everything is "Jake." There is too much talk about coercive principles without considering the removal of evils which precipitated the war. The aggressor nations, in past history, have not always been the same ones.

Here in America good citizens are devoting themselves to the cause and removal of racial tensions. They are not content simply to rely on a police force to suppress them. Haven't we the same situation in the world?

Peace can best be maintained over the years if we frankly recognize now that it's base rests on justice, humanity, and Christian fellowship for all races—yellow, black, brown, as well as white. I am more concerned at this moment with keeping the base on the proper level than in the forms and blueprints.

I believe in a committee of nations on which smaller countries are represented to guide mandated territories of hitherto subjugated peoples until they are capable of achieving political autonomy.

The courage and fighting ability of our incomparable soldiers and sailors stirs the depth of our emotions. But in recognition of their sacrifices, our Government must decide whether this war is a conflict of principles or whether it is just a grab for world dominion.

We should have had long ago the long-promised report from the President on his conferences, conversations, and agreements with Stalin and Churchill. There is a marked difference between Woodrow Wilson's public diplomatic exchanges and the personal secrecy of Mr. Roosevelt. Wilson led in public debates formulating American public opinion, but we do not know under Mr. Roosevelt whether, as a result of his conferences, we are headed in the direction of a superinternational state, a league of nations, a federation of nations, a world court, or a balance-of-power alliance between Russia, Britain, and America, with the world divided into three spheres of influence, or a direction not yet made known.

We do not ask for perfection because we know that shaping the post-war policies depends on others as well as ourselves.

We do ask to know what is the best the President has been able to obtain in a definite line of policies in order that this war may build up peace and happiness for America.

Domestic issues and international issues are not separate and distinct from one another. They are in fact similar, and are determined one by the other. We must seek economic peace and harmony abroad and at home. We scarcely can expect to have much influence on such conditions in the world's sphere, if we cannot set our own house in order.

The Nation's Chief Executive must have respect for his own branch of Government as well as an equal respect for the legislative branch, with the realization that the two must work together to accomplish the best results. The history of Mr. Roosevelt's relations with business, labor, agriculture, and Congress is one of intermittent wrangling and uneasy truce, but with no permanent peace.

Plainly, we cannot continue that way with the President's chip-on-the-shoulder attitude. Far reaching issues can only be solved by an Executive and Congress who bring to the task mutual good will and a common determination to treat the American economy as an indivisible unit. Unity of labor has been deliberately upset by White House politics. The whole country has suffered from such maneuverings.

We are all interdependent and no group can suffer a disadvantage without the others suffering also. All should have a voice in post-war planning. We fought a civil war to establish political unity in this Nation. How much more grief will we have to undergo before we understand how indispensable is its economic harmony.

Any program for America's progress, calls for a scientific revision of our antiquated tax structure. It has been patched so many times that no one knows for sure how to interpret it. A whole new tax law should be written from the ground up. That, of course, is a monumental task. It should be aimed at adequate revenues—ability to pay—increased encouragement for venture capital and the fair distribution of excessive wealth and concentrated economic power, so as to maintain the balanced economy without which all talk of the free enterprise system is meaningless. We must keep open the doors of opportunity for every individual. That is particularly vital with 10,000,000 soldiers returning to take up their rightful places in the Nation's business life. The benefits of technological progress as well as production efficiency, must promptly be passed to the consumer and wage earner.

Good government calls for a prompt and thorough revision of our antiquated pension acts. The present laws very seriously need codification so that the veterans and the administration as well can be sure what the law is and can give the veterans and the Government both a fair deal. Like the tax laws, there are so many rules, regulations, and interpretations of them in our pension acts that no one can be sure that justice will be done the Nation's service men and women.

I favor repeal by the Congress as soon as the war is over of all acts delegating emergency powers to the President.

I favor the election of a President this fall who will use these great emergency powers with discernment and according to the plain intent of the Congress.

Republicans and anti-New Deal Democrats march under the banner of a Government conceived by and for Americans. We desperately need a President who will not attempt to eliminate the Congress from its historical and traditional place of responsibility as the New Deal has done.

To mention one vital matter out of many that illustrate the great, important, and vital place the Congress plays in our lives: The average citizen would have been helpless against Washington bureaucratic inertia, arrogance, and stupidity if he had not had repeated action by vigorous and intelligent and experienced Members of the Congress.

We cannot hope to remove racial and religious conflict abroad and at the same time ignore its aspects at home. World recovery depends on helping other peoples to help themselves by increasing their productivity and thereby raising their standards of living. Our own recovery depends upon exactly the same thing, and our ability to obtain the general cooperation of all groups and interests in that objective will be a pretty fair index of what we shall be able to achieve in the world community.

Again I remind you that we must keep in mind that our international and our domestic policies cannot be separated. Only the unthinking will vote for a candidate simply on the claim that he has a strong foreign record. A man can't be a statesman abroad and a failure at home and be of much use in the period ahead, either to America or to the world.

Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS G. ABERNETHY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, on last Thursday the House of Representatives passed the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, which is commonly referred to as the G. I. bill of rights. I appreciated the opportunity, as a member of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, to have had a part in the drafting of this liberal and constructive legislation. The G. I. bill not only had the approval of the various service organizations but the hearty endorsement of a grateful American people. It represents a sound investment in the future of our Nation.

This morning I am in receipt of a letter from Gov. John Stelle, chairman of the Committee on Rehabilitation Legislation for World War 2 Veterans, and the Honorable Francis M. Sullivan, executive director of the National Legislative Committee of the American Legion. This letter, which I treasure most highly, and my reply, are as follows:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE
Washington, D. C., May 19, 1944.

Hon. THOMAS G. ABERNETHY,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The American Legion is most grateful to you for the earnest, intelligent consideration and effort you have given to S. 1767 which provides Government aid for the readjustment in civilian life of returning World War No. 2 veterans.

It was gratifying to observe that the House of Representatives appreciated the work of your committee. This was reflected in the members following the leadership of Chairman RANKIN and the committee members when the measure was up in the House for consideration.

Naturally, we of the American Legion are very proud of our part in this program. We feel when the measure becomes a law that the proper plans may be made for the day when the war will have been won and there will be mass demobilization of the present day members of the armed forces.

We believe the privileges which will be afforded by the terms of S. 1767 to World War

No. 2 veterans is a sound investment in the future of our Nation. The proposal represents an intelligent approach to the problem of readjustment in civilian life of World War No. 2 veterans.

Again, we express our appreciation for your splendid work in connection with S. 1767.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN STELLE,
Chairman, Special Committee on Rehabilitation Legislation World War No. 2 Veterans.

FRANCIS M. SULLIVAN,
Executive Director, National Legislative Committee.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 22, 1944.

Hon. JOHN STEELE,
Chairman, Committee on Rehabilitation Legislation World War No. 2 Veterans.

Hon. FRANCIS M. SULLIVAN,
Executive Director,
National Legislative Committee,
The American Legion,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR FRIENDS: It is with deep and profound appreciation that I acknowledge receipt of and thank you for your very kind letter of May 19, relative to the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, which is commonly referred to as the "G. I. Bill of Rights." For me it was indeed a rare privilege and great honor to have had a part, as a member of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, in the molding and enactment of such rightful and worthy legislation.

I cherish deeply the direct opportunity which my assignment to this committee offers to be of real service to the servicemen and veterans of all wars. I shall be ever alert and at your service in their behalf.

Again thanking you and with personal regards, I am,

Cordially and sincerely,

THOS. G. ABERNETHY,
Member of Congress.

Report of John S. Knight, Publisher, Detroit Free Press, on Conditions in England

---

OF

HON. GEORGE G. SADOWSKI

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 19, 1944

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, in the extension of my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to include this most interesting and informative report. John Knight, the publisher of the Detroit Free Press, has spent nearly a year in England, and I am sure that his statement which appeared in the Free Press on Sunday, May 21, 1944, will be enjoyed by every Member of Congress:

Since returning from London, where I have spent most of the past year as London director of the Office of Censorship, all sorts of questions have been thrown at me from every conceivable direction.

How do our boys get along in England? What do the British think of us? How's the food? Has the invasion really started?

There are many others but most of them are the natural, human inquiries that spring from man's emotions and a curiosity that is increased ten fold by the 3,000 miles that separate us from the tiny islands where several million beautifully trained and well equipped Americans are rubbing elbows with their indomitable allies, and getting acquainted with noisy air raids, village pubs, Brussels sprouts, tiny taxis, pink gin, and the English counterpart of our teen-age American "slick chicks."

Because so many of the queries that are most frequently posed to a recently returned American fall into a few well-defined categories, perhaps I can pin point the answers as I found them into a few brief pararaphs. Here they are:

1. What about the appearance, spirit, and general attitude of the English people now in their fifth year of war?

Answer: They look extremely well, their spirit is excellent, and since the famous blitz of 1940–41 they have never doubted the ability of the Allies to win.

Quite naturally, everyone in England is fed up with the war, but it has been going on so long that adjustments have been made and the routine of living under the necessary restrictions is now generally accepted without complaint.

Unlike us, the British have learned to be patient and they have no illusions about winning the war within the next few months.

The food is adequate but ordinary. There is some meat available but poultry and fish predominate the menus. Sprouts, marrow, spinach, and potatoes fill in the rest. How those Englishmen can fill up, as they do, on quantities of starches without developing gargartuan girths is more than I could ever understand.

As Ernie Pyle has already told you, Scotch whisky is daily becoming scarcer and there is literally no rye or bourbon in London. The liquor is all low proof—which is probably just as well. Everyone drinks beer or lager with meals unless they can afford wine. You rarely see any water—except in the bathtub, and that is limited to 5 inches.

The theaters and movies are packed to capacity. The London stage abounds with good plays, spritely musicals, and excellent concerts. The cinema, or "flicks," depending in what circles you move, get the latest Hollywood "superdoopers," and weave them in with the more subtle, restrained British productions. Needless to say, Betty Grable, Bob Hope, and Betty Hutton draw the crowds. British documentary films are unexcelled anywhere.

Everyone works in England, regardless of station. Under a universal service act, all women from 18 to 45 are called up. The more fortunate drive cars, help in Red Cross canteens, or serve in the various Government ministries. The rest work in factories or toil in the fields as part of the Women's Land Army.

It is quite common to see Lady X, attired in coveralls, handling rivets in a Spitfire plant. In at least one instance with which I am acquainted, a titled lady is a union-shop steward as well.

All men come under the same call-up system until they are 51. Owing to a shortage of mine workers, every boy upon reaching the age of 18 may either be assigned to the forces or put to work in the mine pits. The latter group are called the Bevin boys, because Ernest Bevin, the Minister for Labor, devised the plan. Needless to say, it is not too popular, but is typical of British realism.

2. How badly has London been bombed?

Answer: Well, London is a battlefield and has been the scene of one of the decisive battles of this war—a battle in which the Germans were licked. It still looks like a battlefield, and a view from the air would show a city pockmarked with gaping holes and destruction. There is virtually no repair work being done. After a raid, the rubble is cleared away and buildings not damaged too badly are propped up and made safe.

Cellars are used as emergency water tanks, to be used to combat the incendiary bombs dropped in a fire blitz. The most recent raids of last winter and early spring were quite severe and came as a bit of a surprise to most Londoners who felt the Luftwaffe could never again reach the outskirts of the city.

For a time, they had grown quite casual about the sirens which precede a raid but this attitude no longer prevails. Crowds again seek the cover of the shelters and the underground at night. The Luftwaffe does not fly in formation, as do our daylight bombers, but darts in from all directions. The night bombing Jerries are commonly termed in the British press as "scalded cat" raiders because they dive from an altitude of 20,000 to 25,000 feet, release their bomb loads and then scoot for their airdromes in France.

The raids are terrifically noisy due to the rocket guns and antiaircraft barrage that is put up by the batteries defending London. It is not uncommon to see half a dozen huge fires burning in various parts of the city following a big raid and the screaming sirens of ambulances and fire trucks give one an eerie feeling of danger and insecurity.

The greatest danger to pedestrians during a raid comes from the "flak" thrown in the air by the British antiaircraft defenses. Literally hundreds of people have been killed or injured by our own "flak."

I was definitely cured of the great American habit of sticking my head out of a window to see what was going on when flying fragments of steel knocked out the large window in the living room of my apartment. Fortunately, I was out that night.

But life goes on, raids or no raids. During the performance of a play or a movie, the alert sign, which warns that a raid is on, flashes on the stage, but it is seldom that anyone leaves his seat. I remember the night that two American G. I.'s were seeing a show and the rail signals lighted up over the orchestra pit. They looked at each other rather uneasily, wondering what they should do. When no one made a move for the exits which lead to the shelters, one G. I. turned to the other and said, "Gee, these limeys sure have guts."

The only reason for recurring raids on London is that Dr. Goebbels needs them for home consumption. The people in Germany know only too well what is being done to them by the combined day and night bombing of the Yanks and the Tommies as they are commonly called in Hitlerland. The German propaganda minister is well aware that their will to endure these devastating raids can be intensified and prolonged if they feel that England, and particularly London, is being subjected to the same lethal dose of fire and high explosive.

After a "scalded cat" raid on London and the towns on the southern coast of England, the Berlin newspapers paint a frightful and lurid picture of the waste and destruction that is being dealt out to their hated foes. Strategically, there is nothing to be accomplished by bombing London. And it is much too late to destroy British morale. It might have been cracked during the big blitz but, having withstood that and with mounting confidence in Allied superiority of the air, the average Londoner views these hit-and-run raids as a "damned nuisance," but his step is still juanty and his confidence in ultimate victory as firmly established as ever.

The morning following a sizable raid, all conversation turns on the damage done and the probability of the "Jerries coming back tonight." Be it barkeep or baronet, the raid of the previous evening is the sole topic of discussion. The chief plaint is that our antiaircraft guns never knock enough Jerries out of the sky to suit anyone. The difficulty can well be imagined when these raiders fly in at a speed of 300 to 400 miles an hour, drop their bombs, and scurry away to the safety of their own airdromes.

During a raid, the sky resembles a Fourth of July celebration magnified tenfold. The raiding planes drop flares that light up the city like the Polo Ground at a night baseball game.

The wonder is not that so much destruction is done but that the Luftwaffe fails to hit really important targets. Tragically, the poorer sections of London suffer most. When the raiders are driven away from their objectives by the intense barrage of antiaircraft fire, they loose their bombs wherever they can and the huge flats where hundreds of families are housed and which lie below the raiders' return line of flight get the full impact.

Shelter elsewhere is found almost immediately for the survivors and a system of fire watching and protection has been organized to a high degree of efficiency.

As I said before, these German raids actually accomplish very little except to furnish ample propaganda for home consumption. And how they need it!

Well, that's all the space we have at our disposal this week but if a friendly talk of this sort over the morning coffee holds any interest, we'll be glad to take up a few more aspects of life in wartime England next Sunday.

Your questions are respectfully invited.

JOHN S. KNIGHT.

Resolution of Minnesota United Nations Committee

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WALTER H. JUDD

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following resolution:

Resolution adopted by the membership of the Minnesota United Nations Committee at the second annual meeting, at the Radisson Hotel, Minneapolis, on April 22, 1944

Whereas on November 1, 1943, the Governments of the United States of America, United Kingdom, Soviet Union, and China, at Moscow, declared: that they recognize the necessity of establishing at the earliest practicable date a general international organization, based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all peace-loving states, and open to membership by all such states, large and small, for the maintenance of international peace and security"; and

Whereas on November 5, 1943, the United States Senate, by a vote of 85 to 5, adopted the Connolly resolution incorporating the language above quoted from the Moscow Declaration; and

Whereas encouraging progress has been made by the United Nations in various conferences, such as the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Conference; and

Whereas the Secretary of State of the United States has requested the appointment of a bi-partisan committee of Congress to help in the formulation of plans for the establishment of an international organization; but

Whereas numerous questions have arisen which may substantially affect the nature of the peace and which should be determined by and through such an international organization rather than unilaterally by any single one of the United Nations or by conference between a few; and

Whereas further delay in the taking of steps looking toward the formation of a general international organization may gravely jeopardize its formation and its ability to function; Now Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we urge the President of the United States and the Secretary of State, cooperating with the bi-partisan leadership of Congress and collaborating with our allies, to call a meeting of the United Nations at the earliest practicable date, to develop plans for such an international organization; and we urge both political parties to support such action.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President, Secretary of State, the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committe, the Senators and Representatives from Minnesota, and Minnesota delegates to the national conventions of both political parties.

The Veterans Express Appreciation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARION T. BENNETT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, permission having been granted by the House, I wish to extend in the RECORD the following telegram I received on May 6, 1944, showing the position of the Missouri Department of the American Legion on the G. I. bill of rights which was reported by the World War Veterans' Legislation Committee, of which I am a member:

The Missouri Department of the American Legion, representing 40,000 veterans of World Wars Nos. 1 and 2, urgently request your active support of S. 1767 as reported by House Committee. Further request that you oppose all amendments from the floor such as amendment of education or the addition to or substitution of any adjusted compensation amendment in place of the unemployment compensation title.

HARRY F. DUGGAN,
Department Adjutant.

Mr. Speaker, the following letter is a letter of appreciation I have received from the national legislative committee of the American Legion, approving my work for the veterans, signed by Francis M. Sullivan, executive director of the committee, and by Hon. John Stelle, chairman, American Legion special committee on rehabilitation legislation for World War No. 2 veterans. Mr. Stelle is a former Democratic Governor of the great State of Illinois. Both men have many years of experience in veterans' problems and their advice and counsel was of great value to our committee in perfecting this constructive legislation which will be so important to the veterans of this war and to the future of our country:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 20, 1944.

HON. MARION T. BENNETT,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The American Legion is most grateful to you for the earnest, intelligent consideration and effort you have given to S. 1767 which provides Government aid for the readjustment in civilian life of returning World War No. 2 veterans.

It was gratifying to observe that the House of Representatives appreciated the work of your committee. This was reflected in the Members following the leadership of Chairman RANKIN and the committee members when the measure was up in the House for consideration.

Naturally, we of the American Legion are very proud of our part in this program. We feel when the measure becomes a law that the proper plans may be made for the day when the war will have been won and there will be "mass demobilization" of the present-day members of the armed forces.

We believe the privileges which will be afforded by the terms of S. 1767 to World War No. 2 veterans is a sound investment in the future of our Nation. The proposal represents an intelligent approach to the problem of readjustment in civilian life of the World War No. 2 veteran.

Again, we express our appreciation for your splendid work in connection with S. 1767.

JOHN STELLE,
Chairman, Special Committee on Rehabilitation Legislation World War No. 2 Veterans.

FRANCIS M. SULLIVAN,
Executive Director, National Legislative Committee, American Legion.

PLEASE FORWARD TO SOMEONE IN THE SERVICE

Mr. Speaker, when H. R. 1767 was before the House of Representatives on May 12, 1944, I spoke on the measure and analyzed its provisions. This legislation is a matter of great public importance. It should come to the attention of all citizens. I hope that those to whose attention it comes will forward it to those now in the service who are unable to get such data through the regular channels. As a member of the World War Veterans' Legislation Committee, I have been called upon by many servicemen, veterans' and their dependents, for information about veterans' legislation. It has been a pleasure to serve these people. There is so much legislation on veterans' problems that it hardly can be distributed in pamphlet form to all who are interested in it. However, I am always glad to furnish any information or to help with any claim presented to me by one of my constituents. One of the real satisfactions I have derived from my service in Congress is the pleasure which has come from handling thousands of inquiries of this kind.

What Can Our Young People Returning From the War Expect?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARENCE E. HANCOCK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me, I am including in the RECORD an address by our colleague, Representative LEONARD W. HALL, of New York, made at Glens Falls, N. Y., May 20, before the Association of New York State Young Republican Clubs, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, distinguished guests, officers and members of the Association of New York State Young Republican Clubs, I join with the other speakers in expressing to you my sincere appreciation for your very kind invitation to address you here tonight.

It has been most pleasant meeting old friends—valued friends—friends I made during my service in the New York State Assembly.

However, I note with very considerable regret, that many additional old friends are not here. They are absent fighting in our armed forces. And, in their service, their patriotism, their aggressiveness, their desire to serve their country—they are reflecting the same characteristics they showed as Young Republicans—young Americans, in their service to their organization, to the Republican Party, and to the general welfare of the people of their own communities, the State, and the Nation.

We recall, pridefully, that our great Governor, Thomas E. Dewey, began his political career in this State as a member of the Young Republicans.

Similarly, Paul Lockwood, executive secretary to the Governor, was, as you know, chairman of the board of your organization, and worked as a Young Republican in Kings County.

Another of many of your bright stars, is Herbert Brownell, campaign manager for Mr. Dewey in his successful contest against Mr. Bennett, and more recently, campaign manager for Lt. Gov. Joe Hanley.

Then, there's George Sibley, State Senator Tom Desmond, Secretary of State Tom Curran, State Senator Walter Mahoney, Archie Dawson, Supreme Court Justice Dave Peck—the list is endless—because, the young Republicans have a happy habit of attracting to themselves real talent—real energy—men with a capacity for service—and filled with aggressive spirit.

In mentioning these names I have omitted many other famed young Republicans, or former young Republicans, who blazed their own trails of success through the political forests and often peril-beset jungles of statecraft. I say to you, young Republicans—keep at it—stay in there and keep punching.

Your good president, in writing to me, suggested that I speak to you tonight on this question, "Can young people returning from the war expect freedom of opportunity and freedom from governmental restraint?"

This is a very timely question indeed. I have no doubt that your president had much in mind, when he posed the question, what has been happening in these United States since the advent of the New Deal. He, like the rest of us, has seen signposts which indicate clearly that an attempt is being made to make over America. This attempt is being made by a coterie of men who have been able to work their way into the inner circle group around President Roosevelt. They operate in a subtle, behind-the-scenes undercover way.

Should the New Deal stay in power my answer to the question would be "No"—an emphatic "No."

Under normal conditions it would seem unnecessary to discuss such a question with any gathering of Americans. But the conditions are not normal—the record of events, ominous in character, are not conducive to a peace of mind as to the future of America.

Looking back over the past 11 years of the New Deal, normal developments have had nothing to do with the assaults that have been made on constitutional government. Each of these assaults was studied, planned; each fits into a general pattern—an attempt to socialize or sovietize America.

It will do no harm to recall to our minds once again some of those assaults against our system of government.

The attempt to pack the Supreme Court was the first glaring example of the mental operations of this palace-guard group. No more dastardly attempt was ever made by a President of the United States to make another independent branch of government subservient to him and a pawn in his hands. But outraged public opinion, Liberty men and women, from every corner of this great country of ours, wrathfully hurled back this grab for despotic power.

Tnen along came the bill to reorganize Government departments, under which many legislative functions would have been taken over by the Executive. Again, public opinion was felt and the bill was defeated.

The utter disregard and lack of respect on the part of the President for the Congress has been shown on at least two occasions recently.

Of course, our President, always grasping for more power, does not like a strong Congress. So we find the President joining with that group which would discredit the Congress in the minds of the people. Just for a moment let us consider the message of the President to the Congress on the soldier vote bill. In so many words, he accused the Congress of attempting to perpetrate a fraud on our soldiers. No more insulting message was ever penned by any President.

Again, on the tax bill, we find the President accusing the Congress of aiding the greedy instead of the needy.

Those acts, those messages, are not isolated accidents—they are all a part of a plan to put all power in the Executive. Of course, Congress would have to be entirely discredited before the people would accept such a plan.

These incidents, but a few from the record we know, show the design that the long-haired boys are trying to weave. Thoughtful people are aware of what is going on. Many of us are too busy with business and personal matters to give it the attention it deserves.

It took the recent seizure of Montgomery Ward & Co., in Chicago, to shock the people into a complete realization of what is going on. Without a warrant of any kind, a civil officer of the United States used the United States Army to remove the president of that company from his office. Boys who had enlisted or been drafted to fight our enemies from without were used to attack a citizen of the State of Illinois—and who was in charge of the Army? Generalissimo Biddle, Attorney General of the United States.

Oh, yes; Generalissimo Biddle did go to court after the people became incensed over the seizure of this mail order house. But he went to court after the seizure and not before the seizure. Why, we are entitled to ask, did not Generalissimo Biddle go into court the day before the seizure instead of the day after?

Some people may feel that these questions are partisan. Nothing could be further from the truth. This is not a party question at all. Rather, it is a battle between those who believe in constitutional, Bill-of-Rights government and those who believe in personal, despotic government.

For the time being, Congress must be your only defense against these actions, but as time runs to January 1945, it will be necessary for the people to make a change in those who are in control of our Government today. They must be replaced by men who believe in constitutional government.

When Congress was told that the President must have certain emergency powers, because the enemy was virtually hammering at the Golden Gate in California, and might well be expected to blitz our great cities along the Atlantic seaboard, the Republicans were willing to go along on the basis of patriotism; on the basis of submerging political conflicts for the duration so that the Nation might be unified and the war effort pressed to its most energetic conclusion.

In the public interest, I say to you, with all the emphasis at my command, that a test should be made of these wartime powers of the President—and immediately—because the original powers granted the President as a matter of course, as a tool for efficiency in the conduct of the war, have been utterly misinterpreted and misapplied, viciously and definitely misapplied. And this assumption of power becomes more dangerous as we find the President holding secret meetings with other nations without any but very few Senators having the remotest idea what has been done, what is being done, what the Nation, through the President, proposes to do in the future.

That, my friends, is not constitutional government. It is a dictatorship no matter how you look at it.

The appetite for power and more power has not only touched the Chief Executive. There isn't a New Deal henchman or handyman who isn't trying to outdo his administration colleague in broadcasting edicts and decrees, and preparing drafts of Executive orders by the scores. The regimenters are having a field day, with the housewife, the industrialist, the laboring man, being told from day to day what they may and may not do. And the planners are multiplying apace.

Just now one of the great planning efforts—if you can dignify the attempt in such a way—currently being made is for industry—industry reconversions, private job making.

All industry, we know, ever since and even before Pearl Harbor has obeyed the dictates of the War Production Board and other wartime boards. And industry has long understood that, at the earliest possible moment, reconversion from war to peacetime manufacture would follow. But here again industry which, with labor, helped to bail out this Nation from defeat at the hands of well-prepared enemies—enemies pressing a war on either side of the world—has apparently been listening to another New Deal siren song—a song of half truths, suppositions, innuendos, and in the "draw whatever conclusion you want to draw" philosophy.

With the exception of the Baruch report, with other somewhat discursive reports from New Deal agencies—with constantly changing promises made in succeeding editions of newspapers—little else has been worked out looking toward rapid reconversion of industry either when peace comes, or now, or at such other time when we are "over the hump of war production in any given field."

Constantly we read that this or that industry is about to get the green light to swing part of its wartime production back over to the making of badly needed peacetime goods, but the green lights only seem to swing in newspaper columns and not in the vast arsenal of the Nation's manufacturing facilities. And don't misunderstand me, I don't want war production slowed down at the expense of our men at the fighting fronts, manning our airplanes or battlewagons. On the contrary, all of us are willing to make every possible sacrifice to the end of winning this war in the shortest possible time.

But what I resent—and what millions of people in this country resent—are the incessant barrages of New Deal contradictory reports on this and that important question, whether the question be the imminence of industrial reconversion, the showing of green lights to industry, or what the War Manpower Commission does or does not want done, or what will or will not be the immediate future of men within draft ages and the moot questions arising from weird interpretations of these ever-changing draft regulations.

But, specifically reverting to industrial questions:

Whereas industry believed that before peace came, and with the coming of peace, there would be announced plans and orders for industrial reconversion, thus to keep apace with the Nation's needs and post-war manufacturing and economic situations, nothing concrete has materialized.

And every day in every way the situation becomes more and more confused, more and more involved in reams of apparently endless contradictions, "red tape," and constantly changing orders, more and more a cat-and-a-cradle device representing the puny imaginations and the mental bankruptcy of some

New Deal theorists charged with the duty of aiding industry to be efficient.

My friends, you know and I know that industry is never efficient when forced to obey the dictates of men who do not know industry, and who know economics only from the textbooks of slightly "pink" professors who haunted ivy-covered walls before being spirited therefrom to Washington to "save" the Nation.

Now, the New Deal administration has encouraged post-war planning by industry—in fact, some Government agencies have been sending out very insistent questionnaires demanding to know what given corporations and companies have done and are doing about post-war planing.

But, the pay-off is—and I use the vernacular advisedly—almost coincidental with the distribution of the questionnaires having to do with post-war planning—the various New Deal agencies issue a series of contradictory reports which make scientific post-war planning utterly impossible.

In connection with the foregoing, I mean to say that, with thousands of industrial firms engaged in trying to draw up post-war plans—the New Deal agencies have made announcements to the effect that "it cannot be determined at this time exactly what materials or to what extent varying materials, or in what quantity materials will be available for release to manufacturers in the early post-war days."

Consequently, many manufacturers have written me, and with heat, asking.

"How the devil can we draw up post-war plans when we don't know what material the Government will release in post-war days, or before post-war days? And what is the use of planning if you don't know what to plan, or on what to predicate any given plan?"

Others have written to say that, apparently we propose to not only do much in feeding the world in the post-war days, but in reconstructing a considerable portion of the bombed-out areas of the world, or furnishing material by and through which such construction may be had. All of which prompts the question in the minds of those writing me: "If this be so—where do we come off—what of our American industry—where do we get the necessary materials—and what proportion of materials do we get?"

Yes; I know, the two statements are similar—merely phrased differently—but the whole New Deal system, planning, discussions, publicity, alarms, emergencies, backing, and filling are so completely cockeyed that they don't make sense to anybody, particularly the men who, in the final analysis, will have to lead this country back into the pathways of industrial reconstruction and economic stability.

Immediate stability of Government and reconversion of industry will not and cannot come in the post-war period if the Roosevelt administration continues in power. How, under such a set-up, can young people returning from the war expect freedom of opportunity and freedom from governmental restraint?

Should the New Deal be reelected come November, it will then place in full force and effect the most despotic powers ever seen in the administration of this Nation. I am not using empty words in saying this. Nor am I speaking lightly. Similarly, I am not speaking for political effect.

Should the New Deal be returned to even greater power this fall—it is my considered view that the regimentation of the American people would rise to unparalleled heights—heights which, eventually, would bring great internal disaster to this Nation of ours.

And mark you well, returning servicemen and women will be in no mood for regimentation—for limitation of opportunity—for a spit-and-polish form of Government with the fighting men the virtual servants of several million Government employees—and there still are almost 3,000,000 of these Federal employees.

I say to you, in great seriousness, the New Deal must go. It must be replaced by an understanding administration—one not desirous of constant appeals to hatreds, class consciousness, the perpetual array of capital against labor and vice versa.

We must have a Republican administration. We must have a thoroughly competent, orderly, lawful, law-abiding administration based on democracy. We must have a restoration of government by and with the full consent of the governed.

You Young Republicans, and thinking citizens everywhere, can help make this possible.

Thank you very much.

Negro Soldier Morale Endangered in South—Bus Lines Chief Cause

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HERMAN P. EBERHARTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following articles by Orrin C. Evans from the Philadelphia Record:

NEGRO SOLDIER MORALE ENDANGERED IN SOUTH—BUS LINES CHIEF CAUSE—DISCRIMINATION BY TRANSPORT FIRMS NEAR CAMPS VICIOUS AND HEARTLESS—CLUBS STANDARD EQUIPMENT FOR DRIVERS

(By Orrin C. Evans)

Since the beginning of the war, 400,000 or more Negroes from Northern States have been inducted into the Army and sent to southern camps for training.

And, as their number increased, reports of mistreatment and persecution of Negro soldiers, both by military authorities and civilian population, have grown at an alarming rate.

Stories widely circulated—and almost as widely believed—in Negro communities in Philadelphia and other northern areas have brought about a tragic lowering of morale—even to the extent of impairing patriotism among thousands of the folks at home.

War bond sales among Negroes have decreased; bonds bought on the pay-roll deduction plan are cashed far too often; even the Salvation Army—which always had a good standing among Negroes—finds support dwindling.

PROPAGANDISTS ACTIVE

Propagandists have been alert to take every fair and unfair advantage of the fact that Negroes have been sent south to train—a wartime necessity, according to established military principles, for the simple reason that in a warmer climate there are more days suitable for drill and maneuvers.

The propagandists have twisted any incident they can lay their hands to into declarations to the effect that "the administration is sending Negroes down south to be kicked around and is doing nothing to help them."

The reports from the South—by propagandists, by grapevine and in direct letters from Negro servicemen—add up to a mass of rumor, which it is impossible to judge from a distance.

RECORD REPORTER HUNTS FACTS

For that reason, the Record sent me on a 3,400-mile tour of southern camp areas to get the facts. I am a northern-born Negro. I had never been in the South before. In those respects I was like thousands of Negro boys who have been sent to southern camps.

I was in and about 14 camps in 7 States. I talked to hundreds of Negro soldiers from the North.

WHAT HE FOUND

On the basis of what I saw and heard, I can report these facts:

1. In every camp, the Negro detachments are separated from white troops with definite Negro areas and white areas, with one exception: At Fort Benning, Ga., Negro and white officer candidates—by voluntary agreement—train, live, and eat in the same quarters, with no friction.

2. With rare exceptions, northern Negro soldiers stated without qualification that the food, quarters, entertainment facilities, and treatment generally in these areas were as good as among the white soldiers.

CASE OF DELIBERATE DISCRIMINATION

3. In only one camp—Gordon Johnston, Fla.—was there evidence of downright, deliberate discrimination. There, Negro soldiers are forced to perform menial tasks (such as latrine duty) for the entire post, thus being made, in effect, servants to white soldiers.

4. In towns near camps, Negroes are subject to the severe segregation prevalent in the South. Most southern Negroes defended this to me with such statements as: "We know where we can go here, and don't pretend, like you northern Negroes, that we can go anywhere. When did you rent a room in the best hotel in Philadelphia?" Northern Negroes resent the obviousness of the segregation, but, with rare exceptions, take it philosophically.

NEGRO OFFICERS RESENTED

5. Negro officers are resented by white civilians and some white soldiers. Sometimes the officers take off their insignia before going into town, in order to avoid unpleasantness.

6. Despite all propaganda to the effect that racial tension is increasing in the South, Negro leaders to whom I talked were unanimous that the situation has improved unbelievably, with the exception of a few areas in Alabama and Texas.

Those are the broad general facts—and not a bad picture basically; not a picture, indeed, which justifies the deep concern felt by many friends and relatives of Negro soldiers.

But I did find one condition which is so irritating to Negro soldiers (especially those from the North) that I could understand why one of them said to me recently: "I feel that if I go on the other side, I'm going to die anyhow. Since I have this stuff (his uniform) on, I'd just as soon die here and take a few of these 'pecks' (white Southerners) with me."

CAMP TRANSPORTATION BAD

It is a problem which seems trivial to tell—so trivial that one wonders why nothing has been done about it—and yet which wrings the hearts and embitters the minds of men wearing their country's uniform.

I refer to public transportation—not transportation for long and important trips, but the simple matter of getting to town and back when a soldier has a week end (or a few hours) off duty.

I can pretty well sum it up by telling what I saw one night as I stood on a busy corner of Oak Street in the heart of the Negro section of Montgomery, Ala.

There was a bus stop sign on the corner.

A group of Negro soldiers from Maxwell Field, which grew larger as the minutes passed, stood with me.

DRIVER ARMED WITH CLUB

Along came a bus, a rather ramshackle affair, operated by a local company. The driver was a tobacco-chewing, not-well-shaven "cracker" type of man—the sort of person who is referred to in the South as "poor white trash." He was armed with a club nearly as big as a cattle stick. Clubs are standard equipment for southern bus drivers these days; some of them even carry pistols; one shot a Negro soldier dead in Alexandria, La., a few weeks ago.

The traffic light was red. The driver slowed down, trying to avoid a stop. He didn't make it. But he didn't pull up to the curb.

The Negro soldiers surged out as the bus stopped.

FOR WHITE PEOPLE

Without opening the door, the driver shouted: "This bus for white people. Cullud bus jest behind."

The light changed and the bus moved on. The disappointed soldiers dropped back to the curb.

Another bus came up after a few minutes. The driver said the same thing.

The third bus stopped.

"Going to Maxwell Field?" shouted one of the soldiers.

"Naw," said the driver, "This ain't no Maxwell Field bus."

He drove on, too.

WANT NO COLORED SOLDIERS

"That driver's lyin' to you," volunteered a native. "They just don't want no colored passengers, especially not no colored soldiers."

That incident on Oak Street in Montgomery is important not just to the few dozen or the few hundred soldiers who had to walk 10 miles back to camp after a "free evening." It is important to the entire Nation.

In fact, I feel safe in saying that:

At least 60 percent—probably 80 percent—of the justifiable resentment of Negro soldiers in the South (which, of course, is transmitted to their relatives and friends in the North) is due directly to the heartless, vicious discrimination of the local bus lines.

It seems unbelievable that the conduct of a few score bus companies and a few thousand drivers should be a major factor in national morale.

CAPITALIZED BY PROPAGANDIST

It seems incredible that the resentment aroused by rowdy bus drivers should furnish a major part of the resentment capitalized by such propagandists as Edgar G. Brown, the bewhiskered Negro who has been sponsoring profitable causes for 20 years and is now known in Chicago as Col. Robert R. McCormick's "favorite son."

Brown can take one letter from a Negro soldier who has been pushed around by bus drivers and use it to prove that the administration hates and persecutes Negroes.

It does, indeed, seem strange that this condition has been allowed to continue—especially when the Army authorities could remedy the whole thing in 24 hours, as has been proven in one camp area and to a lesser degree in another.

OUTGROWTH OF JIM CROW LAWS

The bus situation is, of course, the outgrowth of the Jim Crow laws of the Southern States. These laws provide for segregation of the Negro and white passengers on public vehicles. On trains separate coaches are provided. Somewhat to my surprise I found that in general the railroads are providing adequate space for Negroes.

Sometimes the Negro cars are overcrowded and there are empty seats in the white coaches. More often it's the other way around. For instance, as I was going down from Washington at the start of my trip there were vacant seats in the Jim Crow car. At Quantico, Va., the marine training base, three white persons came into the car—two marines and a woman.

JIM CROW IN REVERSE

The Negro porter came in and told them they would have to leave—that the coach was for Negroes only. They refused.

"There isn't a seat in any other coach and I'm not going to stand all the way to Richmond," said one of the marines.

The porter brought in the conductor.

"I and the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad," he said, "don't make the laws of this State. It's the law that Negroes and whites can't ride in the same coach. You'll have to get out."

They did.

"Hot dog," said a Negro sailor. "That's why I love the South. Jim Crow in reverse."

He laughted. He was a Northern Negro. In his laugh was bitterness and humor and resignation. The bitterness was there, all right, but he had taken the discomforts of Jim Crow cars himself when they were overcrowded and he could get a little fun out of that experience—his first of the kind.

DENIED TRANSPORTATION

With busses the situation is such that even the most tolerant, the most peace-loving Negro can't continue to take it with a grin.

A man can be shoved off into a Jim Crow car or a Jim Crow waiting room and console himself with the thought that a law based on prejudice and race hate forced the humiliation upon him—and that some time, through education in true tolerance, democracy will end that sort of discrimination.

But when discrimination reaches the point that a man—and a man in his country's uniform, at that—is forbidden to use public transportation at all, the breaking point has been reached. That becomes the final straw which produces despairing letters to the folks back home. And the folks back home stop buying bonds and supporting the Red Cross.

FEW SEATS "RESERVED"

On busses, the Jim Crow system "reserves" a few back seats for Negroes.

In Houston, Tex., I found the division quite rigid. The back 6 seats were for Negroes—room for 12 persons—plus the standing room in the aisle up to the division line.

In New Orleans there was a movable sign, reading "White" on one side and "Colored" on the other. Negroes and white passengers could move the sign forward or backward, as the occasion warranted.

But in many places the bus rule was, whites fill from the front, colored fill from the rear.

ONLY TRANSPORTATION AVAILABLE

That meant that white people entering the bus took seats from the front in order, and Negroes did the same from the rear. The Jim Crow division thus established itself in accordance with the number of white and Negro passengers.

It is obvious that as more Negroes are taken on the busses of this type, there is room for fewer white people.

The bus drivers, whose only claim to distinction and respect is that they are white men—don't want Negro passengers. And they don't take them.

Bus transportation is virtually the only way a soldier can get from camp to town—for an evening or on a highly prized and often hard-earned week-end pass.

The tobacco-chewing, club-toting cracker bus drivers—obviously with the approval, if not under the direct orders, of their employers—won't provide that transportation.

NO FUN WALKING 10 MILES

There isn't any fun in a trip to town if you have to walk 10 miles each way.

To end this situation would remove the chief cause of complaint of Negro soldiers.

It can be done without moving the soldiers back North or without repealing the Jim Crow laws or without educating the South to democratic tolerance.

In fact, it has been done by one camp commander.

LACK OF FACILITIES IN SOUTH FOR NEGROES HITS MORALE OF SOLDIERS AND FAMILIES

(By ORRIN C. EVANS)

(Third of a series)

I was in Fayetteville, N. C., tired enough to drop, and with no place to stay. It was 11:30 p. m.

I considered stretching out on a bench in the Jim Crow waiting room of the railroad station. But I was advised against it:

"They're apt to arrest you for vagrancy."

So I asked a Negro taxi driver if he couldn't find me a place to sleep—any place.

He looked me over, and paid a compliment to my somewhat disheveled costume by saying: "Don't think I can find a place you'd want."

I told him I had to have a place.

"I'll take you to a place, then," he said. "It ain't so clean, but it's safe."

DRIVEN TO HOVEL

He drove me to a house which was no more than a hovel. The slovenly "landlady" showed me a room, about 9 by 9. The floor was grimy. The furniture was a repulsively dirty cot and not much else. I gritted my teeth and asked the price.

"What time you goin' to get up?" she asked.

I told her I hoped to sleep late—perhaps until 10 a. m.

"If you git out by 8," she said, "it'll be $5."

And if I stayed until 10?

That, she said, would be another day, and it would be $10. After some more talk, we compromised. I paid $7.50 for the room until 10—a matter of 75 cents an hour or more for a room that wouldn't be more than two bits a night in a Philadelphia flop house.

SOLDIERS' PROBLEM

In that experience—and many another like it—I came face to face with one of the problems of Negro soldiers stationed in the South, and particularly of their families.

The service facilities open to Negroes in the South—rooms, taxicabs, restaurants, taprooms, etc.—are limited. Because of the low economic status of the Negro, they have been not only limited, but generally far from good—ranging from fair in the larger cities to indescribably bad in small communities.

The war has brought an influx of Negroes, increasing the demand. At the same time, local Negro civilians are more prosperous, earning $25 a week up, instead of $5 to $15.

Soldiers' families are, according to southern Negro standards, "rich."

Army pay plus allotments give many a Negro family an income beyond its fondest dreams.

PRICES SKYROCKET

Prices for the inadequate services have skyrocketed. The O. P. A. may be efficient in some areas, but apparently has no time to control prices in Negro communities.

I mentioned in another article that I rode in a taxicab driven by a white woman in Hattiesburg, Miss. I add now that she charged me 25 cents. For the return trip, a Negro driver charged me 50 cents. Both worked for the same company. The Jim Crow driver apparently considered he had a special license to gyp his passengers.

I haggled with a Negro cab driver over a trip from Montgomery, Ala., to Hayneville, a distance of 18 miles. He wouldn't come down from $20. I finally got another one to take me for $10.

80 CENTS FOR BREAKFAST

At the Greenleaf Cafe in Petersburg, Va., I paid 80 cents for breakfast of fried eggs, potatoes, bread, and no butter. Eggs were 32 cents a dozen in stores, or 20 cents from street vendors.

Whisky can be bought around camps for $5 a pint. "Shots" of questionable origin run 50 cents or more in back-street saloons.

These conditions constitute a direct injustice, which while not ranking with the bus scandal—account for much of the dissatisfaction among Negro soldiers in the South. It would seem possible that the Government—which rightly builds emergency homes for migrant war workers and establishes reasonably priced cafeterias in the Pentagon Building—might do something to make the matters of eating and sleeping more tolerable for its citizen soldiers and their families.

CLAIM CITED

They have a claim equal to that of the war workers, it would seem. The Negro soldiers were sent South because the climate there is suitable for training, just as war workers go to Philadelphia and other cities because that's where they are needed on certain jobs The case for emergency facilities appears to be the same.

In my 3,400-mile tour of Southern States, I found good mixed with the bad, as Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told me I would.

I found that Negro leaders generally are not too despondent—although they often are disheartened by discrimination and segregation, which arouse cumulative resentment.

OVER-ALL PICTURE

Carter Wesley, editor of the Houston Informer, Negro newspaper, expressed a general opinion when he said to me:

"The over-all picture throughout the South in regard to improved conditions for Negroes is unbelievably better."

It was inspiring to find that conditions in communities where Negroes were stationed in World War No. 1 generally are better than those where Negroes have been brought in for the first time.

That makes one feel that people can get along together if they know each other.

I discovered on this, my first trip through the South, that it makes a lot of difference what particular person you happen to be dealing with. My experiences on two dining cars illustrate that point.

TABLE RESERVED

The southern railroads reserve a table or two at the end of the car for Negroes. Sometimes a curtain is hung between them and the white tables, sometimes not.

On the Seaboard Airline, I and three Negro soldiers went to the dining car a few miles above Raleigh, N. C White passengers occupied the table reserved for us. We waited until they finished. The steward beckoned us forward, then motioned us back, and gave the table to a wizened old Chinese, who had come up behind us. He wore no coat, collar, or tie. But he ate at our table, all alone, while we were made to wait.

On the same railroad some days later, another Negro and I went into the diner, just behind four white men. They took the only remaining seats—which were at a Negro table. This steward (a southerner, like the other), came up to us, told us he was sorry, but we would have to wait a moment. He then told the white men they must move. One of the white men glared at us, but they all moved, and we were seated.

CONTRASTS NUMEROUS

It is possible to find such contrasts all over the South. The unfortunate thing is that propagandists have not been able to see the true picture, but have picked out the bad, ignoring the good and taking advantage of every justifiable resentment.

Thus bus drivers—and the type of men who bulldoze Negroes on station platforms—furnish grist for the mills of such men as Edgar G. Brown, referred to in an earlier article as a leader in the movement to stir up Northern Negroes with half truths.

Brown was a new dealer until about a year ago, when he decided the "other side" was more profitable. In the words of David Kellum, executive of a Chicago Negro newspaper, he became Col. R. R. McCormick's "favorite son."

AIDED NEGRO MERCHANT

About all he has ever done for Negroes in the South was to induce a well-to-do Negro merchant to run for United States Senator in Mississippi. When Brown got through with him the "candidate" wasn't a merchant, let alone a Senator; he wasn't even a Mississippian. Nobody knows where he went.

Now he is telling Negroes that their sons and brothers and friends are being persecuted in the South. He claims credit for reversing the political trend in some areas.

It is true there was a reversal last year—as noted in the seventh, fourteenth, twentieth, thirtieth, thirty-second, thirty-sixth, fortieth, forty-fourth, forty-seventh, and fifty-second wards here, which swung to the Republicans.

Much of the real credit for the swing—if it is based on resentment, as a great deal of it seems to be—should go to those bus drivers who won't let Negroes ride, to the people who gouge them for poor meals and lodging, and to the scattered bigoted Army officers in a few of the camps who seem unable to submerge racial prejudices in the interests of a united America, or else just don't care.

It may seem a little thing, but it is important to the men who have to suffer in the South.

I know, because I have been there.

Defeat of Hon. John M. Costello

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. NORRIS POULSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, I know that the people of this country are greatly concerned over the defeat of one of California's outstanding Congressmen, JOHN M. COSTELLO, in the primary election. Coming from the adjoining congressional district, I can say that the campaign conducted by the C. I. O. political-action group against both JOHN COSTELLO and myself was of the dirtiest and lowest type.

The editorial from the Hollywood Citizen-News, written by Judge Harlan Palmer, which I insert in the RECORD, has aroused a virtual storm of favorable comment because it definitely hits the nail on the head:

BEHIND

Congressman JOHN M. COSTELLO was defeated Tuesday for the Democratic nomination for reelection as Representative from the Fifteenth District (central Hollywood). Though he is a Democrat, he won an overwhelming plurality of the votes for the Republican nomination but under the law he cannot have the nomination of another party unless he also wins the nomination of his own party.

The election results decree that the country is to lose the services of one of the ablest, most conscientious Members of Congress—a clear thinker from whose intelligence in finding a sensible way through governmental problems the whole country has been profiting.

Congressman COSTELLO was defeated because he would not accept the dictation of Hollywood Communists.

Of course, the people who voted against him, with few exceptions, did not realize that they were aiding the Communist cause or accepting the Communist propaganda. Had the voters realized that, COSTELLO would have been reelected with a splendid endorsement equal to those he has received in previous years.

We doubt that COSTELLO's successful opponent, Hal Styles, realizes that he was a mere ignorant instrumentality that the Communists used in their efforts to make good on their earlier vows that either COSTELLO would accept their dictation or would meet political defeat. We think that Hal Styles has an idea that most of the people think that he has the qualifications of a good Congressman. The most of the people who voted for Styles know nothing about his lack of qualifications.

Congressman COSTELLO was not defeated with the contention that he was opposed to the Marxists who masquerade under false fronts in the Hollywood area. He was defeated with a campaign of misrepresentation that makes one wonder if the upholding of the highest standards of public service is a worthy activity.

He was defeated with circulation of such falsehoods as: That he was opposed to Roosevelt; that he was anti-Semitic; that the Japanese were putting money into his campaign.

As to such falsehoods it might be said, that the Democratic National Committee realize that it is losing one of its finest representatives; that he numbers many Jews among his best friends; that the Japanese would spend money for his defeat rather than for his victory; that there is no stronger friend to he servicemen in Congress that he has been; that he has made the ablest fight in Congress for a fair, sensible administration of selective service.

The people who voted against him in the main did so with an absolutely false picture in their minds as to the character and the ability of the man and as to his standing among democratic leaders of the Nation. Their false picture was obtained as a result of the ruthless, honorless campaign cleverly directed from behind the scenes by the Communists.

The success of the Communists in defeating COSTELLO doesn't mean that they are going to run this country. Nor does it mean that they are going to win out in the final election. The Republican county central committee must now select a candidate to oppose Hal Styles in the final election and it has an opportunity to provide a man around whom all those opposed to the schemes of the Communists can rally.

But the success of the Communists in defeating COSTELLO does reveal that there is ample reason for concern over the possibilities that a comparative few can devise schemes to get control of the Government.

The success of the Communists in defeating COSTELLO reveals that there is reason why everyone should be concerned in the false front organizations that the Communists create and into which they intrigue thousands of good citizens through dishonest appeals.

If there are not enough intelligent voters in the fifteenth district to defeat the Communist schemes at the November election, then there should be an end to the talk that there is nothing in the Communist movement for Americans to worry about.

Our Heritages Are in Danger

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EVERETT M. DIRKSEN
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, recently there appeared in the Peoria Journal-Transcript, of Peoria, Ill., a very persuasive and analytical editorial dealing with the Montgomery Ward case, and I insert it in the RECORD so that it may come to the attention of a larger group of readers:

OUR HERITAGES ARE IN DANGER

Some precious American heritages are in peril.

Attorney General Biddle told Judge William H. Holly, in Federal court in Chicago, that the President's order to seize Montgomery Ward & Co. was not based on the type of goods handled by the mail-order house, but was motivated by a desire to halt the threatened spread of a labor controversy.

"It is the basic duty," he added, "of the President to prevent a spread of labor trouble during the war. There is nothing in the War Labor Dispute Act to prevent the President from taking such action."

Maybe there isn't. But there ought to be. Here is why:

If we reason from Attorney General Biddle's statement we find ourselves facing some horrible possibilities—possibilities which, if they ever eventuated would actually destroy the American Republic and establish in this land a dictatorship which would put Hitler's to shame, and would make the sacrifice of American blood on the altar of human freedom a wasted and futile thing. Let us suppose Biddle's reasoning were applied in the case of American newspapers, both daily and weekly. Let us suppose that a newspaper, or all the newspapers in the land, refused to heed a maintenance of union order issued by the President. Let us suppose the President then seized editorial direction of the papers. What would happen under these conditions to the hard-won, the greatly cherished thing Americans call freedom of the press?

Perhaps you are thinking that is a too self-serving analogy, since this is a newspaper editorial. O. K. Let us take another example.

Suppose the board of trustees of a large Protestant church in a big city, employing half a dozen or more janitors, or the bishop of a Roman Catholic diocese employing a large number of janitors, were to become involved in a labor dispute with those employees. Suppose the War Labor Board ordered the board of trustees or the bishop to grant maintenance of unions to those janitors. Suppose the board of trustees or the bishop refused, and—still on the theory that it is justifiable for the President to take violent action to prevent the spread of labor difficulties—men with bayonets were sent into that church or that diocese to operate the religious institution or institutions under the board of trustees or the bishop. And suppose, going further, that the president of the board of trustees or the bishop refused to vacate the premises and was, thereupon, carried out by a couple of soldiers with bayonets dangling from their belts.

What would become of the hard-won and greatly cherished thing we call freedom of worship in these United States?

Manifestly, these hypothetical cases, based, truly enough, upon suppositions, are not likely to happen. But if the argument of Attorney General Biddle be valid, if the President of the United States can order the seizure of any institution—whether it is purely human or whether it believes it has Divine connection—because the human beings in charge of that institution become involved in a labor dispute, then the President is assuming prerogatives which no human being should ever have. Attorney General Biddle justifies the seizure on the grounds that the President's action would prevent labor disputes. So might the seizure of a newspaper, seizure of a church, or, for that matter, the seizure of a State government, if that State government became involved in a labor dispute, under analogous conditions.

The argument leads directly to tyranny. Its justification stems from the philosophy that makes dictators.

O. P. A.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY D. LARCADE, JR.
OF LOUISIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to include an aditorial from the Crowley Daily Signal, Crowley, La., entitled "Regardless of How Hard You Try" as follows:

REGARDLESS OF HOW HARD YOU TRY

The buyer had his priority certificate.

The firm had the truck to sell. Both the seller and the buyer checked the "little book" on the ceiling prices. They found what they were sure was the right figure.

The deal was made.

A few days later the seller was notified he had violated the ceiling price and he owed some $100 or more to the O. P. A. He checked the little book. He checked with the buyer. They found that instead of violating the ceiling price he had cheated himself half of the sum requested from him by the O. P. A.

A few days later he received the demand to send in the money. He was given a time limit.

He feels he is right and is waiting, ready to fight.

The next incident is about a business concern which wanted to install some machinery. That priority had to come from Washington. It came through fast. Another request was being made to use material which was on hand to install a new floor. That request and priority had to come from the State office. It is still hanging fire, still being delayed, and the businessman cannot move because of Government red tape. Yet he needs to get that plant ready now.

And the third incident is the double meaning in O. P. A. regulations. It has to do with meters, light and power meters. One place the instructions say that the company can have $1,800 worth in the State. In another they say $850 worth in the State. Which is right? What can the firm do?

If they do one thing they are in violation. If they do the other—they are neglecting those they should serve.

How does the O. P. A., the Federal Government, or anyone else expect them to serve the best they can when even the Government isn't sure what can or can't be done?

This is happening today. Business is being unnecessarily handicapped because of unnecessary, confusing, and complicated regulations.

Industry asked to do a job is being prevented from doing that job because of red tape of that very Government asking industry to do that job.

If tire certificates can be issued locally and they can; if gasoline certificates can be issued locally and they can; if meat stamps, and sugar stamps, and other matters can be handled locally—why must the businessman or a firm travel to Washington or New Orleans or to Dallas for priorities on things, which could and should be handled here and in which common sense can be used to clear these matters and handle them?

Citizens and taxpayers, we believe, could demand that local governing board or panels or committees be named to handle every single thing which is rationed or controlled with priorities. These matters can be handled locally much fairer; much easier; and much more satisfactory.

And we are sure that some of the confusion arising today could be eliminated.

It is rather a serious thing when honest dealers, honest buyers, honest sellers are accused without hearing; without facts; and even convicted without a trial.

That is done under the O. P. A. And it will continue to be done until there are those with sufficient courage to battle through this form of bureaucracy until the law is administered in the manner in which Congress intended that it be administered.

Western Industrialists and Asia Markets

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN M. COFFEE
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 22, 1944

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Speaker, the eminent writer and editor, Mr. Lowell Mellett, recently wrote an article which appeared in the Washington Evening Star of May 16, discussing the business future of the far West and the plans of western industrialists to secure a share of the American market in the Orient following the war.

The article ably summarizes the problem and is of interest to the whole country. Here it is:

WESTERN INDUSTRIALISTS LOOK TO ASIA IN THEIR SEARCH FOR POST-WAR MARKETS

(By Lowell Mellett)

If I were President and Congress, I'd be paying particular attention to the far West.

When this war ends the West may suddenly take the place of the South as the Nation's No. 1 economic problem—and opportunity. Planning to meet the problem and seize the opportunty can hardly begin too soon.

New war industries, shipbuilding, and plane manufacture have added vastly to the population of the coast and nearby States. The problem is what to do about these people when the demand for wartime products gives way to more normal demands. Western communities are making their own plans to absorb a part of this new population, while reabsorbing the hundreds of thousands of their native sons and daughters now in the armed services. But if the war plants all closed tomorrow the west coast might have a situation on its hands that would make the days of the Oakies and Arkies seem like a pleasant memory. Because it is not to be expected that all these workers and their families will immediately pick up their belongings and head back East. They know, most of them, that the communities from which they came are not prepared to receive them, not prepared to provide them with jobs and homes.

POPULATION NOT EXCESSIVE

The population in these Western States is not excessive by any means. There is still plenty of room. When the West begins to realize the future which every Westerner envisions, the population will be much greater than it now is.

The future seen by the West is one which includes great industrial development. Thanks to the war, the West is now demonstrating what it has long claimed, that it has everything to make it a great industrial region. It always has had the raw materials, the fuel, the power. Now it has the people, the skilled workers. But it still has its own handicaps. Chief of these are discriminatory freight rates and discriminatory finance. With the Government financing the factories and the Government paying the freight, these handicaps have been eliminated so far as war industry is concerned. They are still right there so far as other industry is concerned. These Western States have their eyes on a share of the American market for those things they think can be made best in the West. They have their eyes likewise on the great potential markets of Asia. Given an even chance at the domestic market and Government support in the development of the Asiatic market, the new industrialists say their section need never be an economic problem for the rest of the country.

But they know that the West, in the past, has had no more success in the matter of freight rates and industrial finance than the South has had.

GOVERNMENT HAS HELPED

When I say what I'd do if I were the Government, I'm not being fair, since that implies that not much is being done. Actually both the executive and the legislative branches are devoting very particular attention to the West. Last September Senator O'MAHONEY, of Wyoming, acting for the Senate Committee on Post-war Planning, held hearings in San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Tacoma, and Seattle to learn the general views and the local plans. His report has been made and printed.

And a few weeks ago the President signed an act of Congress authorizing the construction of demonstration plants to produce synthetic liquid fuels from coal, oil shales, agricultural and forestry products. West coast industries should be the principal beneficiaries of this act, which carries an appropriation of $30,000,000, to be spent by the Interior Department. Since Secretary Ickes has long been a prophet of the industrial development of the West, it can be anticipated that he will put his well-known energy into this undertaking.

But there remain freight rates and finance—more serious problems than fuel. A teaming up of the West with the South to break these barriers would seem indicated.

New Deal Victory in Alaska

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS J. LANE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to include the following article in the Washington Calling column of Marquis Childs, published in the Washington Post May 20, 1944:

WASHINGTON CALLING

(By Marquis Childs)

NEW DEAL VICTORY IN ALASKA

Here's another straw, a small one, blowing in the stiff political wind. They had an election up in Alaska not long ago and the New Deal candidates won a clean sweep.

You don't think of Alaska as voting, but they elect members of a Territorial legislature and a Delegate to Congress.

The big contest was over the Delegate's job. After a dozen years in Washington, ANTHONY J. DIMOND is retiring from the House of Representatives to be Federal judge for the first Alaskan judicial division.

The race to succeed him was concentrated in the Democratic primary since, curiously enough, in the far North as in the deep South, Democratic nomination is today equivalent to victory. That has been true in Alaska since the Democratic triumph of 1932.

Three candidates sought the Delegate's post. A. H. Zeigler, of Ketchikan, hammered away at bureaucracy, by which he meant the New Deal. Henry Rodan, veteran Territorial attorney general, took a more or less neutral course with respect to the administration in Washington.

The Roosevelt candidate was 40-year-old Edward L. "Bob" Bartlett, who had the active backing of Ernest Gruening, liberal, New Deal Governor of Alaska. In the sharp campaign Gruening's support of Bartlett was made an issue. His pro-New Deal record was paraded.

Betting on the outcome was uncertain. At one time or another all three candidates occupied the position of favorite. Yet Bartlett won by a landslide, carrying all four of Alaska's election districts. In the Second District, which includes Fairbanks, he had a majority over the field and he even carried Juneau, the capital, where Rodan had been rated the favorite.

One of the issues was statehood for Alaska. Bartlett was strong for it while his opposition soft-pedaled this question. Most of the big industries in the Territory—chiefly salmon fishing and gold mining—are against statehood if only because it would increase taxes.

Incidentally, if you still think of Alaska as a far-off place, you'll have to move into the air age. By slow Army transport it's only 15 or 16 hours from Chicago to Fairbanks. By fast plane, after the war, the time will be cut to 8 or 9 hours.

If Alaska were a State, it would take far less time to reach Washington by plane than it took the Virginia delegation to come across muddy roads to those early sessions of Congress. After the war a week's fishing or hunting trip in Alaska will be perfectly feasible.

As I say, this is a very small straw. Nevertheless it seems to me to be one more proof of the old axiom that you can't beat something with nothing.

Ernest Gruening has been a good Governor. Attacked as an outsider and a new dealer, he has worked quietly for the Territory. Gruening was largely instrumental in organizing Alaska's native population for defense when the Japanese were attacking in the Aleutians. He's made friends with Indians, Eskimos, trappers, salmon fishermen. In short, he has had a program. He stands for something.

That's what people were voting for. Down with the New Deal, down with bureaucracy, has a negative sound. Americans are positive. Put Alaska alongside the New Deal victories—against heavy odds—in Florida and Alabama.

Now the Republican National Committee is mailing out a first batch of 25,000 pictures of Sewell Avery being carried out by the two soldiers on one side and a purported picture of the arrest by storm troopers in Germany of a pushcart peddler on the other. Above is the caption, "It did happen here."

The committee seems to want to make Sewell Avery a Republican rallying cry.

This is the negative approach. Twice before the G. O. P. has tried it. Apparently they think it will work the third time.

Maine—A Political Barometer

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE A. DONDERO

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include therein an address delivered by my distinguished and able colleague the gentlewoman from Maine, MARGARET CHASE SMITH, before the Maine State Republican Convention, at Bangor, Maine, during April of this year.

Thank you, Mr. Morton, for your introduction and for the distinct honor which you have given me. I shall try to carry out your plans as efficiently and as effectively as you have arranged them.

I shall confine my remarks to matters of general interest to Maine Republicans, and refrain from commenting on any political issues of controversial nature because that is the prerogative of your delegates to this convention.

It is a very great privilege to serve in Congress during these historic days, especially when associated with the alert, conscientious, and able Senators and Representatives now serving this State of Maine. No Congressional delegation of similar size serves on more major committees, receives more special committee assignments, works more harmoniously together, keeps closer to the needs of the State which they represent than does the Maine group. The Maine delegation is outstanding in its participation in America's international picture. I value the opportunity of serving with this distinguished group.

This is not just another meeting. It is a convention of great importance, not only to the Republican Party but to the Nation. We cannot say when this war will end, but we know victory is certain and after it we will be faced with the crucial post-war period. Everybody watches Maine because we have the first election. This means that Maine Republicans have a most serious obligation, as well as a splendid opportunity, to serve as a barometer for the rest of the country.

Our primary purpose is to formulate policy and prepare a platform. Our platform must be keyed to the future. It must present concrete and definite plans on matters that vitally affect the lives of the people of Maine; it must avoid petty criticism; it must be constructive. Any criticism must be accompanied by definite substitute proposals. We must meet the issue, for the voters want to know, and they are entitled to know, exactly what we offer. They are tired of catchy phrases and idle promises. The people want action and plain talk, which means that our platform must be sound and forward looking.

This is a time for us to forget ourselves. This is a time to think of the Republican Party and all that it can contribute toward our return to a sane and safe government. We are fighting a horrible war, but when it is won our job is only partially completed.

There will be weighty domestic problems—issues that have been neglected because of the desire to be united in the war plans.

The Democrats know that President Roosevelt is their indispensable man—that he has become greater than the Democratic Party itself—and that they haven't the slightest hope for victory with anyone else. As we know it today, the Democratic Party is but one man—Mr. Roosevelt. He is not only their one hope for the Presidency but their sole hope for retaining control of the House and perhaps of the Senate. The Democratic Party knows that the people are tired of experiments and unrealistic theories. The President acknowledged this weariness by discarding the term "New Deal" and attempting to replace it with the slogan "Win the war." The present administration will be judged by its record, not by smart slogans.

We should profit by the errors of the opposition. The Republican Party is greater than any one man or any group of men. It is not limited to one. It has many men capable of being a good President.

However, it is the privilege and duty of every voter to work for the candidate of his choice, but he should avoid tearing down the other fellow's candidate. Animosities that will be troublesome after the convention must not be created. We must and will select our candidate carefully. This is our job, yours, mine, and that of all Republicans. This is serious. Our only difficulty is that we have so many good men to choose from—our choice is not limited.

Although it is generally accepted that the Democratic Party cannot win in the general election, we must not underrate the present Chief Executive. It is true that we hear every day that everybody is opposed to him. We hear that he can't be reelected. We heard that in 1936. We heard that again in 1940, but he won each time. The time for us to glow with victory is after the general election, not before. We can win this battle with—

1. A constructive platform.
2. The best candidates we can nominate.
3. Hard, sustained campaigning before the day of election.
4. Getting every Republican voter to the polls on election day.

STATE OF MAINE

The future of the State of Maine is closely tied to the Republican Party. We must have a State administration that will encourage individual enterprise and not hamper it. We must encourage new industries to come in. With the inevitable strategic Army and Navy air bases in this northeast outpost of America, and as an air terminal for trans-Atlantic commercial flights, Maine is destined to become n aviation center after the war. In this rapidly expanding and highly important field our own Senator BREWSTER is recognized as one of the outstanding authorities in Congress. This and his visits to the battle fronts of the world last year are among the reasons why he is a member of the Special Committee on Post-war International Aviation.

There will be a great expansion in the production of consumer goods in the post-war period. This means that the State of Maine should concentrate on reconversion plans and give special emphasis to measures that will attract capital to Maine and provide jobs for Maine labor. We must not hamper these people with any more regulations than are necessary.

Maine has always been the vacation land of this country. She will continue to be in an increasing degree. The many developments and new inventions will bring better agricultural opportunities and shorter work hours and good pay. This will in turn give more time and money for recreation and travel. Maine will then be more than ever the desired vacation land of the East, both in summer and in winter.

When the war needs are taken off our railroads more attention will be given to quicker and cheaper transportation. War has developed our air industry incredibly and after the war these developments can also be turned to quick and cheap transportation. Improved air transportation will open markets over the entire country for Maine fishermen. Even now there are plans in process for delivery of fresh sea food to far distant points by air.

Automobile companies are already planning on great prosperity on developments of travel over the highways. Both the Federal Government and the State are planning a great integrated highway system which will make Maine's mountains, lakes, and coast more rapidly accessible.

Maine lost much of her naval and maritime importance after the last war. This must not be repeated. It will be necessary to maintain a large Navy. Maine has become more than ever a strategic point in the supply lanes of the Atlantic. War has brought to the forefront the importance of our Maine bays and harbors. This recognition created by the war emergency will continue in peacetime because maritime and naval officials appreciate more and more the anchorage facilities and shipping advantages of the Maine coast.

SERVICEMEN

Returning servicemen must be given A–1 priority. Nothing is too good for those who have risked their lives in combat. We cannot wait until they come back. There should be specific legislation and machinery in process now. Action toward this result has been initiated, but it must be accelerated as much as possible. These men were sent out proudly—they have suffered and they will suffer. They are entitled to the best of everything when they come back home. They must be assured of good jobs with good wages. We should help those who want to go into agriculture, locate and acquire good farms. These men must be given financial stability during the difficult period of transition. They should have special tax consideration. Those who shed their blood for our safety should not have to bear as heavy a burden when they come back as those of us who did not have to pay that dreadful price. I am not talking about pensions and medical care because it is understood that the Congress will provide these necessities.

But above all, we must receive these servicemen proudly—not just sympathetically. We must have particular consideration for those with disabilities—they do not want pity. They want to be treated as ordinary human beings and given a chance to work, to earn, and to live as they aspire to.

FEDERAL TAXES

Taxes must be simplified. They must be realistic. We should pay for as much of the war as we can while war business is booming. Revision of our entire tax structure is basic and essential. Mr. MARTIN, House minority leader, has appointed a special committee from the Republican side of the House to make a study and report. Maine is represented on this committee by the Representative from the First District the Honorable ROBERT HALE. This group has a real job to do.

SOCIAL SECURITY

After the war our older people who have done their bit in agriculture and in industry through the years should have a well-earned retirement. We must have an expanded social-security law. The record of the Republicans in support of sound social security legislation in State and Nation is one to be proud of. Social security must be expanded into larger fields and under Republican leadership we can look for further accomplishments along this line.

LABOR AND MANAGEMENT

American war production is one of the marvels of the ages. The team of American labor and American management has made this production possible. Labor and management have worked together for war. If they will continue this friendship into peacetime production, it will be one of the surest guaranties that there will be prosperity.

EDUCATION AND PUBLIC WORKS

The young people of our Nation are our greatest national asset. They are our Nation's future. But they can easily become a liability. The war has interrupted the education of many young people. The war has undermined our teaching staff; many have gone into other work. The war has taken students from our colleges. The war has increased juvenile delinquency.

Education and good home environment are the foundations of democracy. Good home conditions will flow from the economic prosperity which we Republicans believe can be produced only under a system of private enterprise. It is our duty to give increased educational opportunities to our young people.

Public works must not be used as a substitute for the employment of millions of workers after the war. Unemployment should be avoided by the expansion of private business. Public works must be provided but only where the motive is the need itself, and should, as far as possible, be financed and controlled by the States, counties, and cities. The end of the war will find local governments in a better financial position than for many years. The Federal Government will have little money when the war is ended—necessary huge war expenditures—and unnecessary pre-war waste and inefficiency will have dangerously drained Federal finances. The dominance by the State and local governments in the public-works field will help restrict production only where there is proven need. It will eliminate boondoggling projects. Federal aid in this field must be kept to a minimum.

FOREIGN POLICY

We must maintain unity on foreign policy regardless of party affiliation. But unity is not a one-way street. One political party must show as great an interest in cooperating as the other. If there is any disagreement we should thrash it out quickly, and agree upon the best possible compromise.

To have a true American policy there must be friendly cooperation between the Chief Executive and the Congress, but in order to have unity on a sound basis there must be frankness and understanding on the part of the President and a willingness on the part of Congress to wholeheartedly back the program adopted.

No one is making a greater contribution in the foreign relations of this country than is Maine's United States Senator, WALLACE H. WHITE, Jr. It is a great honor to the State of Maine to have Senator WHITE minority leader of the Senate. Secretary Hull regards the Senator's opinion so highly that he invites him into many conferences where international problems are being discussed. This is a recognition of Senator WHITE's experience and understanding of foreign affairs. He is looked upon by all as an outstanding authority on communications, as a man whose objective and fine judgment is valuable in affairs of State. If we can be assured of frankness and understanding on the part of the administration and know that men like Secretary Hull and Senator WHITE are in conference on this subject week after week, we will have more confidence that we will have a true American foreign policy.

Now to turn to the business of the day. It is pleasant to meet here in Bangor, in the home city of my distinguished and able colleague, the Honorable FRANK FELLOWS, to see old friends, renew acquaintances and make new ones. There is no way that we could spend 2 days to a better advantage. This is not a junket. This is the initial step in deciding upon our nominee for President.

I have always been proud of being a Republican, proud to know that time and time again the Republican Party has been the salvation of this country. I believe we again have the opportunity to restore confidence in our Government. I am confident that our platform will be sound and forward looking and that our Republican delegates will be men and women who will go to Chicago, not to play politics but to formulate a constructive national platform and help nominate a man who will accept his obligation and carry out the pledges of the party without reservations.

As there is danger of overconfidence to the Nation in its 1944 war effort—and I believe there is very great danger—there is the danger of overconfidence to the Republican Party in its political effort. The Republican Party is on the road to victory, but we must not allow the glamor of apparent victory to blind us. We are going to win, but we must keep our voting machinery working on all cylinders. Republicans, let us get together and select a good driver, support him to the limit, and be ready for a free and prosperous postwar world.

Federal Regulation of Medicine

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN H. OVERTON

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 23 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the conclusion of the American Bar Association committee report on parts of the Wagner-Murray bill, S. 1161, relating to Federal regulation of medicine, and generally called the "socialized medicine bill." The committee report was, I am advised, adopted February 28, 1944, by the House of Delegates of the American Bar Association. I am making the request, Mr. President, at the instance of Dr. P. T. Talbot, secretary-treasurer of the Louisiana State Medical Society. Dr. Talbot has done me the courtesy of sending me a printed copy of the complete report of the American Bar Association. The excerpt I ask to be printed is to be found on pages 19 and 20 of the reprint of the report under the subheading Conclusion.

There being no objection, the conclusion was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONCLUSION

The American Bar Association is limited to an expression of opinion and judgment with respect to those fields which relate to the administration of justice and which directly affect the safeguards and protection of the rights and liberties of the citizens of this country. Under normal circumstances, therefore, it is not the function of this association to attempt to influence substantive legislation by the Congress of the United States. But when, under the pretext of the general welfare, legislation is proposed in Congress which either inadvertently or with deliberate subtlety constitutes a direct attack on the rights and liberties of the citizens of this country, it becomes the duty of this association actively to voice its objections, a summary of which is as follows:

1. Local self-government must be preserved in our Federal system. State governments directly responsible to the will of the people are best adapted to exercise such supervisory control as may be instituted over the health and medical care of our citizens.

2. S. 1161 seeks to invest in the Surgeon General, who is not an elected servant of the people and who is not amenable to their will, the power arbitrarily to make rules and regulations having the force and effect of law which directly affect every home.

3. The measure furnishes the instrumentality by which physicians for their practice, hospitals for their continued existence and citizens for their health and that of their families can be made to serve the purposes of a Federal agency.

4. The bill fails to safeguard the rights of patients, citizens, hospitals, or doctors with respect to disputes arising or rights denied through the arbitrary or capricious action of one man.

5. The bill fails to provide for any appeal to any court from the action of the Surgeon General.

6. The vicious system whereby administrative officials judge without court review the actions of their subordinates in carrying out orders issued to them is extended in this bill to a point foreign to our system of government and incompatible with the adequate protection of the liberties of the people.

The Constitution of the United States is designed to protect the citizens of this Republic in the exercise of the rights of freemen. The provisions of that instrument can be rendered impotent when our citizens, for the sake of an apparent immediate benefit, surrender to their Government such direct control over their lives that Government, by imposing a constant fear on them of having those benefits withheld or withdrawn, can compel from them obedience and subservience to its dictates.

Respectfully submitted.

W. E. STANLEY,
Chairman.
WILLIAM LOGAN MARTIN.
CLEMENT F. ROBINSON.

Need for Congressional Action on Air-Line Taxes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LYLE H. BOREN

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, there has come to my attention an article in the American Aviation Daily for May 18, 1944, which contains important information for the Members of the House to consider. The article points out that in view of the recent Supreme Court decision in Northwest Airlines, Inc., against the State of Minnesota, congressional action is necessary in order to prevent the burdensome multiple taxation upon interstate air lines authorized by that decision.

Air line attorneys, a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board and one of the Nation's leading newspapers today saw in the Supreme Court decision in the Northwest Airlines tax case (Daily, May 15, 17) an invitation to Congress to establish an over-all Federal policy on the taxation of air transportation. Fear that the decision will throw open the gates to multiple taxation in many States was expressed, and one suggestion that passage of the Lea bill would solve the problem was put forward.

S. G. Tipton, counsel for the Air Transport Association, told the Daily:

"It seems to me that two important conclusions flow from this decision. The first is that the decision points the way to the imposition upon air lines of local tax burdens heavier than those of any other interstate carrier. On the basis of this decision there is a strong possibility that an air line's entire fleet may be taxed in one State and portions of it taxed again in all other States through which the air line operates. The second conclusion is that the Court apparently feels that if the decision results in burdens upon interstate commerce by air the Congress and not the Judiciary should deal with the matter."

RHYNE CHARGES INCONSISTENCY

Charles S. Rhyne, well known aviation attorney in Washington, said:

"The Court really divides 4 to 4 in its reasoning with Mr. Justice Jackson reasoning one way yet voting the other. While all the Justices agree that the air lines should pay their share of the cost of State government, they disagree as to how far the States can go in taxing air transportation.

"Mr. Justice Stone and the three who join him in his able dissenting opinion are clearly correct in their conclusion that the theory of tax apportionment which applies to railroads should apply also to air lines so as to prevent unfair multiple taxation. Mr. Justice Jackson rightly states that if Minnesota taxes all of Northwest's airplanes, no other State should be allowed to tax the same planes. He then votes in a very inconsistent manner to allow Minnesota to do the exact thing he condemns.

"Mr. Justice Frankfurter in the majority opinion seems to fail to comprehend the practical effects of his decision. He mentioned the taxes paid by Northwest on its airplanes in six mother States but then brushes those facts aside as presenting matters not before the Court, so he need not consider the multiple-tax problem, which to me is the major issue in the case. He states that the tax-apportionment theory has been 'painfully evolved in working out the financial relations between the States and interstate transportation' and that it should not be carried over into the air-transportation field, yet he offers no alternative method of preventing multiple taxation of the air lines."

OSWALD RYAN SEES STEP TOWARD FEDERALIZATION

Oswald Ryan, member of the Civil Aeronautics Board, issued the following statement regarding the decision:

"The majority upheld the power of Minnesota to assess the tax upon the entire fleet of the air line, but refused to decide the question whether the other States through which the air line operated these planes had the right to tax any part of the fleet, saying that this question was not before the Court. Justice Jackson concurred in the majority decision, but thought the Court should have gone further and held that Minnesota's right to tax the fleet was exclusive. The Chief Justice dissented from the majority decision on the ground that the taxing of Northwest Airlines' fleet for their full value by Minnesota constituted an unconstitutional burden upon interstate commerce.

"The Minnesota decision leaves unsettled the question of burdensome multiple taxation. It is, nevertheless, a significant decision. The majority decision makes reference to the power of Congress to control the taxation of interstate air lines. Justice Jackson, in a concurring opinion, points to the power of Congress to control this field of taxation, adding that Congress has not exercised its power to do so. Justice Black in a separate opinion says that "these problems call for congressional consideration and action." Thus the various opinions strongly suggest that Congress can supply the answer to a problem which, unless it is taken under control, may create a situation which many feel will make it impossible for our air lines to survive economically.

"One of the significant opinions delivered in this case was that of Justice Jackson in which he pointed out the inherent national character of air transportation. Pointing out that the high court had interpreted the commerce clause of the Constitution to lift navigable waters of the United States out of local controls and into the domain of Federal control, he stated that 'air as a navigable medium of transportation is even more inevitably federalized by the commerce clause than is navigable water.' He adds that local exactions and barriers to free transit in the air would neutralize its (that is, air transportation's) indifference to space and its conquest of time.

"This view, if accepted by the Court, would settle the present controversy over the question whether the Federal Government should exercise exclusive regulatory power over air transportation."

SAYS LEA BILL IS SOLUTION

Suggesting that passage of the Lea aviation bill, H. R. 3420, would provide a solution to the tax problem, the Washington Post said editorially today:

"The case took to the court for the first time the question of constitutional limitations on the power of the States to tax airplanes. The court searched all the precedents and apparently found no doctrine that could be applied to vehicles of the air with full satisfaction. So it split four ways. * * *

"In our opinion the nub of the whole matter is contained in this sentence from Justice Jackson's concurring opinion: 'It seems more than likely that no solution of the competition among States to tax this transportation agency can be devised by the judicial process without legislative help.' That is certainly an invitation to Congress to step in and straighten out the mess, as could be done by a reconsideration of the pigeonholed Lea bill. Obviously, individual States cannot be permitted to tax airplane companies operating out of their borders at will. That would create chaos in aviation. Yet the courts are naturally reluctant to step in and establish special rules to govern this delicate problem of taxing air transport."

Smoke Screening the Real Issue

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. NORRIS POULSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, I have shown to many of my colleagues on the floor the vicious political smear sheet put out by the C. I. O. political action group against both JOHN COSTELLO and myself. I am asking to insert in the RECORD an editorial which very aptly covers this situation:

[From the Highland Park News-Herald, Los Angeles, Calif.]

ALONG POLITICAL ROW

(Candidate publicity for May 16 primary election)

SMOKE SCREENING THE REAL ISSUE

(By Oliver B. Jaynes)

When labor lobbyists called upon Congressman POULSON in Washington before a vote was taken on the Smith-Connally bill, he was told that it would be political suicide for him to vote in favor of the measure. Nevertheless, he voted for it.

But instead of attacking him on this issue during the present campaign, and letting the voters decide how they feel about it, labor leaders put on a campaign to smear the incumbent. They say little about the real issue and try to confuse voters with a lot of trash that doesn't mean a thing. Facts are thrown to the winds. They even get so intent on defeating the official that wouldn't go along with them that they almost forget to say a few nice things about their candidate.

The smear POULSON crowd did say though that their candidate didn't have a "campaign pay roll." No pay roll, perhaps, but what a bankroll! Who is paying for all this anti-POULSON campaign propaganda? We believe it is largely labor-financed.

We do not believe, however, that labor is 100 percent back of the smear campaign. As a matter of fact, one of POULSON'S other opponents, Calvert S. Wilson, claims that the rank and file of union membership is behind him, and that the union meeting which endorsed another opponent was "stacked."

The News-Herald, as our readers know, does not make a practice of endorsing candidates. We prefer that the voters get the facts and make up their own minds. We see no reason why a person should vote for a man because he is endorsed by any newspaper. Endorsements are overdone in political campaigns, anyway.

But we do not, however, like to see a real campaign issue hidden behind a smoke screen of smear propaganda. Why can't labor come right out and ask the voters to defeat POULSON because he voted for the Smith-Connally bill? It can only be assumed by their methods that they do not think they can defeat him on this issue. So they drag a red herring across the trail; the soldier vote bill and the tax bill, for example. Does anyone think for a minute that this crowd is losing any sleep over the soldiers or the taxpayers? Don't you believe it.

There is certainly nothing wrong with labor attacking any public official for any of his acts that, in its opinion, hurts the labor cause. That is its right, especially when that official is running for reelection. But labor, or any other group, should be willing to stick to the issue and fight it out on that basis. Threats and smear campaigns should not be tolerated.

Address of Hon. James J. Davis, of Pennsylvania

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARVE TIBBOTT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday last, the Republicans of Pennsylvania met in convention under the laws of the State to elect the officers of the Republican State Committee and to make necessary assignment to the Republican National Convention.

One of the principal speakers at that convention was Senator JAMES J. DAVIS, who has enjoyed a long and distinguished career as the representative of the people of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The address delivered by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania on this occasion is a clear exposition of the fundamental and sound policies of the Republican Party, to whose standard he has brought lasting credit through his years of public service.

This statement by Senator DAVIS describes the stand which the Republican Party might well take on the issues of foreign relations and the various domestic problems which confront this Nation. It is a statement which can be read with great advantage by all Americans who are sincerely interested in preserving constitutional government and human freedom in America.

A member of five outstanding committees in the Senate—Finance, Foreign Relations, Naval Affairs, Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and Mines and Mining—Senator DAVIS has capably represented all of the people of Pennsylvania in his efforts here, whether they come from the ranks of labor, or agriculture, of industry, or of the professions, and I am sure that one who has maintained such cordial and understanding relations with the vast multitudes of Pennsylvania citizens, both as Secretary of Labor in the Cabinet of three Presidents and as the Republican Senator of the Keystone State, is well qualified to speak in their behalf on the pressing issues and problems of the times.

Under unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, I therefore include in the Appendix of the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the address delivered by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania before the Pennsylvania Republican State Committee in Philadelphia on May 20, 1944:

In 1932, the present administration went into power pledged to a policy of national economy and to the solution of certain fundamental economic problems.

Twelve years have passed and the problems are not solved, the ills are not cured. Temporarily obscured by the impact of war, the problems of unemployment, labor relations, the lack of balance between industry and agriculture, a sound taxing system, and proper relationships between Federal, State, and local governments, are with us yet, and they shall reassert themselves with full vigor in the very near future.

With all its vows of economy forgotten the present administration adopted the doctrine of deficit financing, and its only accomplishment in the years of peace—1933–39—was to increase the national debt from nineteen to thirty-eight billion dollars.

The good Doctor—Dr. New Deal—who was to have achieved so much has failed so miserably that even those who created have disowned him and declared him officially dead. But there is every reason to believe that the theories which the good doctor advocated still dominate and control the policies of the present administration.

Why has the present administration failed so completely in the face of the glittering promises with which they beguile the American people? A score of detailed answers can be given to explain the failures of the present administration, but in my mind, they boil down to two:

1. The basic philosophy of the present administration is unsound. It makes the welfare of our people dependent upon illusory promises of the good life; upon centralization of all authority in Washington; upon the paternalism of a managerial clique who think they know the interests of the people better than the people themselves do; upon a concept of an economy of scarcity.

2. The administration's methods of putting such a philosophy into action are unsound, inefficient, and in complete violation of the basic democratic concepts upon which this country was founded and developed.

REPUBLICAN PHILOSOPHY

The Republican Party, like all other American people who believe in sound constitutional government, repudiates the philosophy of the present administration and rejects the methods it has used to control the affairs of our country.

We base the progress of our country on the initiative, individual integrity, and self-reliance of our people.

We believe that the Government should serve, but not control the destiny of our people.

We believe that agriculture, industry, labor, and business should plan for themselves and discover the best means of coordinating their private efforts for the good of all. No society and no economy can be effectively directed by a small handful of political planners in Washington.

We reject the idea of a scarce economy. American attainment is based on an expanding economy, and America must return to an ever-increasing production of the goods and services upon which the health, security and happiness of our people depend.

WIN THE WAR

In action, our first purpose is to win this war. We must prosecute this war to the complete and decisive defeat of all our enemies.

We must brook no compromise with those who plunged the world into this dreadful struggle. We pledge ourselves to a military victory so complete that it will thoroughly crush the war-making powers of our present enemies, and discourage aggression for all generations to come.

This means full support of the war with all the trained manpower, equipment, resources, production, money and moral forces which our great Nation can mobilize and throw into the scales of battle.

It means confidence and faith in our military and naval leaders, and no interference with their operations.

It means wholehearted cooperation with our allies in every part of the world.

These things the Republicans pledge themselves to do to the end that the scourge of war shall be driven from the world.

WIN THE PEACE

When war is ended, we are determined to win the peace. This means that we shall have to see crystal clear what the causes of war really are; and then adopt such policies and provide such instruments as will abolish future wars.

Our task is nothing less than the framing of an international order founded upon justice and right-dealing among nations to the end that war will no longer be relied upon to solve those conflicts which cause people to resort to military force.

We must find a proper working basis upon which American national interests can be harmonized with American responsibilities to the world. Our Nation cannot remain aloof from the currents of world affairs. We will cooperate with other nations and extend all possible aid to those peoples who are in need, but we will not impoverish our own people or destroy the security of our own country.

I am certain that a proper medium can be found by which we can protect our legitimate home interests and at the same time fulfill those international obligations which our world position requires of us.

If this Nation is to fulfill its international obligations in the post-war world it must not be averse to full participation in an international organization to preserve the peace. Far from being averse to full participation in such an organization, the American Nation must assume a positive and leading role in its creation.

This organization must be open to the participation and support of all nations, including those nations who now stand pitted against us in this war—after these nations become adjusted to and accept the principles of peace. No organization for peace can possibly endure or succeed which is restricted in membership or which is concerned solely with the negative problems of policing the world.

The type of organization which the world requires is one which will be directed toward positive progress. This organization must foster all the peaceful methods for settling disputes—conciliation, mediation, arbitration, and full judicial process. It must provide agencies for the solution of economic and social problems of world-wide import. It must build institutions that depend upon popular support for their primary strength.

And if it should be found that a proper world organization must be supported by positive sanctions, we shall not fail to encourage their establishment.

These are the broad outlines to which we must devote our organizing genius, to the end that the welfare of all people is enhanced and that the destructive force of war may never again engulf the world.

PRESERVATION OF THE ENDURING PRINCIPLES OF AMERICAN LIFE

There is a third and probably a more pressing problem which the Republican Party must pledge itself to examine and to cure. That is the problem of restoring and strengthening the American way of life, both in its political and economic aspects.

Constitutional government is in danger of collapse in America today. The people of this Nation are greatly disturbed and resentful at the continuing invasion of their personal rights and privileges by the Government.

Recent events have caused countless numbers of our people to abandon all hope that the party in power will ever return to a government based upon a division of authority among the three branches of government as set forth in the Constitution.

Executive order and administrative command are the prime tools of government in this administration. An uncontrollable desire to create bureau after bureau, agency after agency, to more closely control the various activities of our people, has dominated the present administration since its very inception.

The Republican Party must devote itself to leading the people and institutions back into the processes of constitutional government. The Republican Party must abolish government by directive, and it must free our people from the strangling grip of rampant bureaucracy. The Republican Party must see to it that this Government once again becomes a government of laws and not of men.

In the economic realm the Republican Party and the people of America face a prodigious work, if ever this Nation is to return to sound fiscal policies and intelligent economic progress.

Today this Nation labors in the shadow of a staggering national debt. Before the war is over this debt may well exceed the astronomical figure of $300,000,000,000.

We are now on the threshold of tremendous economic adjustments in America. The post-war era will be the most crucial era in the history of our economic life.

Either we will continue the policies of deficit financing, economic scarcity, government regulation, and mounting debt, sponsored by the present administration, or we will refute those policies.

As the present administration will not of its own volition return to the paths of constitutional government, neither will it abandon the restrictive and unsound economic policies to which it has adhered these many years.

If competitive enterprise and the policy of abundance are ever to be restored in America, they must be restored by the Republican Party. If sound finance and economy in government are ever to be practiced in America, they, too, must be restored by the Republican Party.

The stand which the Republican Party must take in this important area of economic policy is abundantly clear.

1. We must pledge ourselves to the abandonment of the policy of scarcity, and carry out a vigorous policy of expanding production.

2. We must devise a national fiscal policy which will place the affairs of government on a pay-as-you-go basis, and which will provide for the gradual and businesslike retirement of the national debt.

3. Republicans must achieve and maintain a high national income to insure a strong, effective purchasing power among America's consumers.

4. We must adopt effective measures to maintain full employment for all Americans—a positive employment at high wages in the productive enterprises which contribute to the growth of the Nation—and not the negative employment at low wages in the unproductive projects of government relief.

5. We must establish a rebirth of American agriculture which will free our farmers from the restraining hand of Government regimentation and restriction.

6. We must seek to establish industrial peace in America by giving full recognition to those sound principles of industrial management and fundamental trade unionism—collective bargaining, arbitration and conciliation. If labor and mangement are to remain free, they must come together on a common ground, and they must guard against surrendering their rights and responsibilities to the central government, for such a course will lead the entire economic life of America into regimentation and slavery.

7. We must encourage (not dominate or destroy) competitive economic enterprise in America, and thus maintain freedom of opportunity for all men.

This is a program far different from that pursued by the present administration. This is a program designed to free the people and restrain the Government, not to saddle the people under the yoke of government.

The American people are prepared to make their stand for freedom now. The Republican Party must stand with them and come forward with sound policies and sound leadership in order that the American people shall not fail in this struggle against bureaucracy and against the unrestrained power of irresponsible government.

I say again that these are grave hours. But if the hour is grave, so, too, is it opportune. Our party must meet the challenge of the times. Our party must lead the people of America out of the abyss of confusion into the clear light of positive action and continuing progress.

Our party must say to America and demonstrate to the world that we stand ready to lead this Republic into the vanguard of human progress on all fronts, that we stand ready to pursue those ideals and carry out those policies which will restore this Nation, and lead all men into a freer, more purposeful and more abundant life.

The Republican organization of this great commonwealth has been well chosen and it is well informed. I know that the delegation which Pennsylvania sends to the National Republican Convention will devote its full effort to meeting the problems of the times. I know they will select candidates who are worthy and capable of carrying out the principles and policies under which the country has grown great with Republican leadership. When we sound the call of freedom and progress, I feel sure the people of America will support us with an overwhelming victory in November.

The Stewart Pension Bill—Eliminating All Red Tape and Making Age and Citizenship the Only Requirements

REMARKS
OF

HON. PAUL STEWART

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, there is so much confusion among the old people who are drawing old-age assistance with respect to reducing their monthly allowance or striking them from the rolls that I have introduced a bill (H. R. 4545) which provides that age and citizenship shall be the only requirements for securing a pension.

Under the terms of my bill all red tape is eliminated. The proof of age and citizenship makes the applicant eligible for an equalized pension and all will receive the same amount, and then, when an old person sells a dozen eggs or hauls a load of wood to town to sell he will not be penalized by having the price of eggs or wood withheld from his monthly check.

Many cases have come to my attention of late where the sons and daughters in the armed forces have made an allotment to their father or mother drawing old-age assistance and because of this allotment they have had their old-age assistance taken away from them. The passage of my bill would make all our fathers and mothers happy and they would not live under an eternal strain of having a reduction of their monthly check for doing a little work for pay, or selling their milk and eggs, or cutting and selling wood, or any other commercial activity in which they might desire to engage.

And right here, Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to the fact that just 2 days ago the House of Representatives passed a straight-out pension for the laborers who constructed the Panama Canal, and nowhere in the bill were there provisions for the reduction of their checks one single cent once proof is made that they were employees of the United States Government in the construction of the Panama Canal. As a matter of fact, all the pension laws we know anything about except the present old-age assistance law are for a definite amount when once allowed.

And then, too, my bill provides that the old folks shall receive their checks on the first day of each month, which will allow them to meet their obligations in a satisfactory and businesslike manner. The truth is that every old person in the beginning of legislation of this kind was working and fighting for a pension, not old-age assistance, and had I been a Member of Congress at that time I would have put forth every effort to have amended the original bill as H. R. 4545 provides.

Mr. Speaker, the bill I have introduced is as follows:

H. R. 4545

A bill to equalize State old-age assistance payments under the Social Security Act

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any other provision of law, no payments shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury to any State under title I of the Social Security Act, as amended, unless the State plan for old-age assistance provides that the only limitations with respect to eligibility for old-age assistance are (1) an age requirement of 65 years or more, (2) United States citizenship, and (3) a residence requirement complying with the provisions of such title I. Such old-age assistance payments within such State shall be equal in amount for every person eligible therefor, and shall be made by check to be received by every eligible person at his or her post-office address on the first day of each calendar month.

Global Phonetic Shorthand Printing

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. LYLE H. BOREN

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 24, 1944.

Hon. LYLE H. BOREN,
Member of Congress,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR LYLE: You asked me in your letter of April 29 if I had considered the effect of phonetic printing on the economic production and competition between nations. Your question is partially answered by the experience of other nations using the phonetic alphabet in printing.

RUSSIA

Russia, in less than 2 decades, has through an educational system based on a phonetic alphabet of 35 letters, increased its national income and production over 400 percent. The Russian phonetic alphabet has abolished illiteracy and vastly increased the knowledge and intelligence of its people. It has created hundreds of thousands of technicians from illiterate people.

The evidence of what Russia has done through the phonetic alphabet is set forth with clearness by Rhys Williams in The Russian; by Hon. Joseph Davies, our Ambassador to Russia; in Mission to Moscow, by Hewlett Johnson, great engineer and dean of Canterbury in Soviet Power. With equal force the same results were convincingly set forth in the history by Davies and Steiger—Soviet Asia, covering the huge country, Kazakhstan, between Russia, China, and India.

KAZAKHSTAN

Kazakhstan, containing over a million square miles, a land of oil and cotton and of modern technique, as large as Texas, Louisians, Alabama, and Mississippi, has developed marvelously under the Russian Soviet Socialist Republic using the Phonetic alphabet. (See Soviet Asia, by Davies-Steiger, Dial Press, Inc., New York.) What Russia has done in the European Russian Republic is better known to America because American engineers employed by the Russian Government have led the way in developing water power, electricity, etc.

TURKEY

The Russian example was followed by Turkey under Mustafa Kemal Pasha, the George Washington of Turkey, by the law of November 1, 1928, Act No. 1353, by which after June 30, 1930, all books, documents, papers in the Turkish language in Turkey were required to be printed in a new Turkish phonetic alphabet of 29 letters, a copy of which alphabet is in my possession.

GEORGE BERNARD SHAW

On April 10, 1944, George Bernard Shaw, one of the greatest brains in the world, wrote to the London Times as follows: "The fact that Russia, with its 35-letter alphabet, can spell my name with two letters (Wo) instead of four may conceivably make it impossible for us to compete economically in the world with Russia." Mr. Shaw went further and stated he proposed to leave his entire estate to establish an English phonetic alphabet of 42 letters. (My petition to the Senate will show that I propose to use 36 letters and 6 compound letters, total 42 letters.)

LAUBACH PHONETIC SYSTEM

Following the example of Russia, Kazakhstan, and Turkey, in 1930, Rev. Frank C. Laubach, Ph. D., Christian missionary, gave the Moros of Mindanao in the Philippines a phonetic alphabet of 16 letters. With it they abolished illiteracy and opened the door wide to the knowledge of modern art and science. Laubach had an example of authority because Moses wrote the Book of Genesis with 22 phonetic letters some 2,700 years before.

The Moro success was contagious. It spread to the Philippines, to Malaya, to India, to 50 nationalities in Africa, to Jamaica, Santo Domingo, Haiti, Puerto Rico, and to various nationalities in South America.

This great work has taught over 80 nationalities to read, write, and print their own native language in the phonetic alphabet of various types under the guidance of the Committee on World Literacy and Christian Literature representing the cooperation of 123 foreign missionary societies. Dr. Laubach is the guiding spirit.

Over 300 local languages have abolished or are abolishing illiteracy by using each one a phonetic alphabet of his own. It is a world revolution nothing can stop.

LEPSIUS (1863)

In 1863 Professor Lepsius and the linguists of his time examined 600 languages and dialects with a view to establishing a universal alphabet by which each and every one of them could be written phonetically. See the book of Lepsius illustrating these alphabets, Standard Alphabet. Lepsius found that the primary sounds of the human voice were about 50, including all languages, but no world alphabet was ever agreed upon by any competent authority for obvious reasons then existing but which have disappeared with the airplane and radio.

The great value of the phonetic alphabet in all nations using it is that an illiterate person, young or old, can learn to read and write it in 24 hours of instruction and study.

The evidence of how this can be done is fully explained in detail in Dr. Laubach's book, The Silent Billion Speak, which I reviewed in a letter published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Congressman MONRONEY, July 8, 1943. This wonderful book tells the most brilliant story of the war on illiteracy, ignorance, poverty, and human misunderstanding.

The supreme importance of a world language to the establishment of world understanding, world abundance, and a world of peace is well understood by many informed men. The ministers of education of the United Nations have passed resolutions urging a world language following the war.

Our Army has been making great and commendable efforts to teach our soldiers, sailors, and representatives of the United States a conversational knowledge of the languages of the countries with which they are now in contact. Nearly 30 of such languages are being actively taught by printed books, by the phonograph, and employed instructors, but the Moro invention of "each one teach one" has been overlooked except by Dr. Laubach and his associates and friends teaching the Laubach system. Russia and Turkey are compulsory systems—Laubach's is voluntary. The Laubach system is working successfully and being received with enthusiasm everywhere by the common people and by their leaders.

EACH ONE TEACH ONE

When Dr. Laubach had his funds impaired by the panic of 1932, the Moros invented a method of "each one teach one," making it a point of honor that each Moro who was taught the phonetic alphabet was honor bound by an endless chain to teach another Moro until all Moros could read and write.

Enthusiastic individual Moros did not confine themselves to one Moro. Some of them taught as many as a hundred individual Moros, and it was taught in classes and rapidly spread until the Moros claimed illiteracy in Mindanao was abolished.

The same system can be now employed in using the global alphabet by printing any given language—Russian or Portuguese—in global letters in parallel lines of identical meaning so that a Portuguese child could not only read the Portuguese phonetically but with equal ease read the English or equivalent meaning and read it intelligibly. Thus one book could teach a Portuguese child and an American child the Portuguese language and the American language. A Portuguese child could pronounce the Portuguese however delicate the inflections. The American child could do the same for the Portuguese child. "Each one teach one" would thus use the eye and the ear and each one would be compensated with what he got from the other in the way of service and friendship and innumerable ties would be established between the people of Brazil and the people of the United States.

ADVANTAGES OF GLOBAL ALPHABET

The value of the global alphabet to all people: First, it can be learned in a day or two of instruction and study. Second, it can enable people to read and pronounce any language intelligibly, at sight. Third, it can thus teach conversational English to the whole world at high speed and at negligible cost. Fourth, it would be self-sustaining and self-expanding. It would require only half the paper, composition, storage, mail, and transportation costs. It would open the doors of modern knowledge to the people of every nation in the world almost immediately printed in their own native tongue on the monotype, linotype, intertype, and the typewriter. The whole world could write in shorthand their own language as well as any other language which they might know.

In abolishing illiteracy and ignorance, the income and production and creative power of every nation using it would be multiplied 5 or 10 times, enabling them to use the best modern methods of production, distribution, transportation, and by abolishing want abolish fear of want, abolish exploitation of ignorance and poverty.

Above all, it would save the children of the world many years of loss of time now employed on the Western Hemisphere and in western Europe in mastering the unphonetic orthography of English, French, German, etc. This saving of time in the life of the youth of the world is of absolutely incalculable value because such values not only are saved but they generate compound interest in the field of production, distribution, and human understanding.

In Russia inability to read and write is a civil misdemeanor. As a matter of public policy it is justified because each citizen should as a civic duty equip himself for maximum production and service through reading and writing and because he can learn to read and write Russian phonetically within a day.

To demonstrate that the global alphabet which I have invented could be employed, I submitted copies of Senate Document 133 to several hundred professors of languages in and out of our universities.

Among others, to Professor Pei and his associates, to whom the world is indebted for Languages for War and Peace, reviewing all the languages in the world of importance and teaching English-speaking people how to quickly learn such languages conversationally. Professor Pei's book was published by Vanni & Co., New York. Eleven such languages are treated in special individual books by Professor Pei and his associates. He approves in principle my global alphabet and approves the teaching of English as a world language as a means of establishing throughout the world mutual understanding, world peace, security, and abundance.

The Chinese and Japanese experts of the Office of War Information have expressed the opinion that Japanese and Chinese can be written in my phonetic alphabet. I have the testimony of other professors and men learned in the Russian language, and many other languages to like effect, but the commendation which I received from Rev. Frank C. Laubach comes from an authority which is unsurpassed on earth as to the phonetic alphabet, and he says frankly that my alphabet is the best he has seen.

To demonstrate the ease with which the global, phonetic, shorthand alphabet can be learned, I invited Mrs. Frances D. Dorman to teach it to the children in her classes in the Ben Murch School, Chevy Chase. Her children were from 8 to 10 years of age. I enclose a few lines from her as a part of my reply to you—exhibit 1. She taught 50 or 60 children to read and write the alphabet beginning with 15 to 20 minutes of instruction a day. At the end of 5 such lessons of 15 minutes each they could read the alphabet, and with some practice could write, so it is fair to say that in a few days anybody of ordinary intelligence could learn to read and write the alphabet, and with it read and pronounce intelligibly any language in the world printed in this alphabet. This is of an incalculable benefit enjoyed by no other alphabet in existence.

The matrices for the monotype machine have been ordered by me and expected about August 1, and then the printing of books by modern machinery in this alphabet can immediately begin.

In 1939 Russia published about 30,000 new books in the phonetic alphabet. These books were books of instruction to the people of 16 republics, involving one-sixth of the inhabitable land of the world and nearly 200,000,000 people. The Russian avowed objective is to surpass the per-capita production of the people of the United States.

George Bernard Shaw is right in saying that the Russian system will surpass the English system of unphonetic printing. The proof is overwhelming. Asia, Africa, eastern Europe, and the Philippines have accepted the truth of the value of the phonetic alphabet.

So impressed have I been with regard to this revolutionary movement that on February 24, 1944, I wrote to the Commissioner of Education of the United States, Mr. John W. Studebaker, calling his attention to the vital facts of this new system of educating the youth of the world. My letter was published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 29 in Mr. MONRONEY'S remarks.

In a letter to me from Rev. Frank C. Laubach, he said:

"I have long since learned that the greatest single obstacle to the use of English as a universal language is its chaotic spelling. Experience in 80 languages shows that if we can adopt a phonetic spelling it will be exceedingly simple to pronounce every word correctly. We then have only the problem of acquiring the meaning of words to make English universal.

"I grow increasingly satisfied with your alphabet as I experiment with it, for I find it easy to write connected letters, and it is swift, since there is but one stroke for each letter. I believe your idea of writing above and below a line and of using curves upward, downward, and straight lines is the best ever yet devised.

"Yours for a great cause,

"FRANK C. LAUBACH."

The midnight hours from 1 to 6 of the American radio could be employed to teach the global alphabet to the whole world within a few months. The matrices of books in the global alphabet could be furnished to every nation of books printed in the global alphabet and teaching the English language to the people of every nation at a cost and at a price which would pay its own way and expand the system at the same time through the "each one teach one" plan.

My dear LYLE, we are entering a new world of knowledge and abundance through the radio and the airplane. I am devoutly thankful and deeply desire to contribute what I can to the establishment of a world of knowledge, abundance, genuine friendship, and cooperation.

With kind regards,

ROBERT L. OWEN.

Picketing of the Senate

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN S. GIBSON

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, never was the solemnity and dignity attached to our Capitol Grounds so basely abused and so pitifully besmirched with filth and slime as when last week a bunch of Negroes, led by a few people whom God had given the privilege of belonging to the white race, engaged themselves for 3 or 4 days in what they called picketing the Senate. With pity and shame I watched big, husky, oxlike Negroes, bearing their masters' burdens, carrying banners of condemnation of the United States Senate because its Members voted as they pleased on a measure and would not be dictated to by a bunch of New York Communists, followed by white women with similar banners.

On the first day the parade was composed of practically all Negroes, but each day the whites increased and the Negroes decreased, until on the last day there were scarcely any Negroes. After looking at the whites and analyzing their nationality and character as best I could from their appearances, it occurred to me that the Negroes became ashamed of the company they were keeping and quit.

This demonstration was in protest of the Senate vote on the anti-poll-tax measure. It is common knowledge that this disgraceful spectacle was organized and executed by the Communists' interest in New York and for the deliberate purpose of exciting more feeling and hatred between the races. This bunch of prostitutes of freedom and justice have no means of boring into the heart of this democracy except through minority groups whom they can excite by claiming to have for their purpose the correction of wrongs, or imaginary wrongs, that they claim such groups have been subjected to by the majority. It is nothing short of tragic to see the Negro people and some labor organizations taken in by this gang of destroyers. If they are not stopped in their efforts, and are permitted to communize this country, labor and the Negro will suffer hardships and deprivations unknown to the slave system before the Civil War. Every move they make is toward a dictatorial power under which the common people always have and always will become serfs and slaves.

I would like to here and now warn the Negro, and, for that matter, all the people, that you may accept this bunch of destroyers as a Moses who will lead you out of the wilderness, but in the years to come you will realize that they are the monsters that blinded you with deceit and moved you on your own power from the beauties and blessings of a free land into a state of serfdom with all its horrors and pains. You will condemn yourself; your posterity will look back through the pages of history and damn you for the chains you shackled them with. Why cannot you see your shadow falling across the path of progress in this beautiful garden of democracy and enjoy its flowers without destroying them?

When I looked down from my window on this ugly sight, I would think of the dreadful price to be paid for the few dollars those pitiful specimens of humanity were getting to walk up and down the sidewalks around our State buildings carrying ugly and disrespectful banners. I thought of the boys in the fox holes and on the battle fronts under heavy fire, and being swallowed up by the waters of the seven seas, dying to preserve and extend what these human carcasses were trying to destroy.

I thought of the hours these miserable creatures were wasting which were sorely needed to produce needed equipment and supplies to help those who were then facing an early call to invasion when blood will run like the waters of a flood, and souls will be thrown into eternity by the thousands per second. Oh, miserable creatures, cannot you feel the blood of these boys rushing over and burning your bodies in condemnation of your filthy acts? How can you ever face one who has fought for you?

This dastardly demonstration was sponsored and paid for by those of the same stripe that met in the name of their organization, and demanded the resignation of Senator BILBO as chairman of the Senate District Committee because he had spoken in favor of white supremacy.

It was rather interesting that a disabled World War veteran fell in line and marched with this bunch of bums carrying a banner with these words, "BILBO for President," inscribed thereon. At first thought I wondered why they did not throw him out of formation, knowing how they hated Senator BILBO. It then occurred to me that from their appearances none of them could read the English language. I noticed by the press that this gang of un-American bigots met in New York last week and dissolved the Communist Party to which their secretary, Earl Browder, has given much publicity. Let me warn the American people that you had better get on your guard. When a skunk takes on a robe of purity he is just beginning to stink. When the deadly serpent hides in the grass and conceals himself, he is just fixing to strike and pour his deadly venom into the blood streams of his prey, and this is what this gang of outlaws are fixing to do to our form of government. They realize the strength they have built up, they think they are ready for the kill, and they have shrouded themselves with this pretense to throw our people off their guard.

If this democracy is to be saved America must wake up. I have through the years warned you, and if our people will not accept the warning, your children and mine cannot damn me for the living hell your slumber and cowardice has condemned them to.

Managers Told Labor, Capital Must Face Self-Rule or Ruin

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM A. ROWAN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. ROWAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article from the Washington Times-Herald of May 19, 1944:

MANAGERS TOLD LABOR, CAPITAL MUST FACE SELF-RULE OR RUIN

Labor and industry were challenged yesterday by William H. Davis, W. L. B. chairman, to build up their own structure of "collective bargaining and mutual understanding" if they would bring an end to Government controls after the war.

"Industry and labor will never develop their leaders by looking to the Government for an answer to their problems," Davis said, speaking before the final session of a 2-day forum of the Society for Advancement of Management, in the Statler Hotel.

WARNS OF TREND

He warned both industry and labor against letting the Government carry on the burden of leadership in labor-management relations, saying that extensive Federal regulations of such relations, particularly as to wages, may well mean regulation of all phases of our economic life.

Turning to disputes between both camps, Davis urged that both increase efficiency of present grievance machinery and make the most of their current agreements.

"Both sides should live up to their contracts," he declared. "Both should abide by the spirit of their agreements," adding that mutual agreements should be specific in what is included and excluded through collective bargaining.

SMALL BUSINESS WOES TOLD

The plight of small businesses was spotlighted by Maury Maverick, Chairman, Smaller War Plants Corporation, and W. P. B. Vice Chairman.

Most small business, Maverick said, die like children abandoned in war, because of inadequate capital investment, lack of management advice, and the heavy impact of taxation.

He urged financial assistance for the little fellows in order that production of war essential civilian goods could be started now, or at least planned, in factories where management, manpower, and raw materials are available and not needed for war production.

Maverick recommended that financing be accomplished through standard free-enterprise banking, averring that 85 percent "of our banks are themselves small businesses."

STRENGTH IN NUMBERS

A strong peacetime economy can be built, he declared, by assisting the little man with technological advice and aid, giving him access to surplus properties and material and by assisting little prime and subcontractors in contract terminations, now and through the reconversion period.

"Small business can be helped," Maverick said, "by arranging production adjustments during the war."

Needed now, he said, and capable of being produced by small business, are clothing, kitchen utensils, sheets, washing machines, farm equipment, house-repair supplies, tools, and spare parts.

Typically American

OF

HON. HENRY D. LARCADE, JR.

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to include an editorial by Dezauche—himself, publisher of the Sweet Sheet, about a soldier in my home town, Opelousas, La., and which I am sure will be of interest as this is so typically American. The article follows:

Got a barber shop down here on Main Street where I go to shave quite often—the shop is just like the shop in thousands of small towns all over the old U. S. A., kind of a spot where lots of folks meet and rake the folks of the town over the coals. Presidents are elected, generals and admirals are made and remade every day, battle strategy that can't miss is shaped up here from opening to closing hours. Lots of kidding and kibitzing, and a jolly good place to pass a little time while waiting for your whiskers to be pulled out or make a blood donation to the barber.

Well, there used to be a fellow in this shop that would get me down and pull 'em out and I'd raise H—— about the way I suffered so that he could make a living, and the more I talked the more I'd get sliced—so suffer in silence wasn't a bad idea. Well, this boy disappeared for about 18 months—we'd hear from him like we did all the other boys. He was a handsome fellow, tall, black hair, fine personality, but just another fellow. A couple of weeks ago he came back, pretty well shot up, shrapnel all over his once perfect physique, about 4 inches of bone out of one arm, and no more the sound body that once was his, mind off the peaceful pursuits of life. For this boy, Lee Cormier, landed at Salerno and made it safe until his patrol tackled the hill at Cassino, and he was the only one who survived. It was a volunteer mission, took a stout heart and one unafraid to step forward; for hours he lay there bleeding, praying, with thousands of thoughts flitting through his mind, saved by the skill of our medical attachments and that precious blood plasma. Blood from some American went to the front to save this fellow, for, as he put it, "If it hadn't been for that blood plasma I wouldn't be back here today." And so this barber boy that shaved me so many times was up there on the front fighting and suffering so that I might continue to go to this same barber shop and go through what I called suffering. Well, when Lee comes back he can pull 'em out one at a time and I'll never say a word about it. No, sir; I'll take it on the chin and suffer in silence, for when men can go through such Hell as those places are, the least we can do is keep our traps shut, for we don't know what hardships are.

Fellows like this boy come from your town, too, and it might have been the blood donor from your town that saved this boy so that he might come back to us, and we hope those of us who gave will save the boys from your town—but let's give again and again.

Potatoes: Forgive me for inserting a commercial here, but we are really moving some Louisiana triumphs now—and they are arriving good, satisfying, and getting repeat business. Need I say more to you fellows who want to make a little dough and are having trouble?

Next time I'm going to tell you about an Opelousas boy that has made all the papers—his picture was perhaps in your town paper. These American boys are really go-getters, and you never can tell how much man is wrapped up in those kid skins until the test comes—they make good every time.

Guess I better get those diversions attended to or some of you guys will say your car missed the boat. As ever,

DEZAUCHE (himself).

Minnesota Plans Prayers for D-Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HAROLD C. HAGEN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, the people of Minnesota are among those taking the lead in the movement spreading through this great Christian Nation for a solemn hour of prayer when the announcement is made that our American and the British forces have started the invasion of continental Europe.

It will be no day of celebration. That will come later. It must be a day when on our bended knees we ask Almighty God to direct and protect our boys fighting for a Christian cause and against the evil forces who have attempted to place themselves in the position of the Divine Being and to erase from their sphere any semblance of Divine authority.

This special hour of prayer is not at all new. Innumerable instances of prayer for the forces fighting for right may be found in the Bible.

Mr. Speaker, an example which other cities might well follow is one set by the board of directors of the Civic and Commerce Association of Fergus Falls, Minn., which is in the Ninth District of Minnesota, which I represent in Congress. Their plan is outlined in their public announcement which follows:

The board of directors of the Civic and Commerce Association respectfully request—

The suspension of all business and manufacturing in Fergus Falls and the holding of services for 1 hour following the announcement of the invasion by our armed forces and allies if this announcement comes during business hours.

That each business, office, service, etc., close its doors for that hour to permit each person to join in special prayer service at his or her own church, or in his or her home.

That all flags be on full display throughout the day in both residential and business districts.

The hour of invasion will be announced in Fergus Falls by three long blasts of the fire siren at half minute intervals.

This will be a solemn day in the history of our Nation, in the life of our community and in the hearts of our citizens. It is not a day for rejoicing.

As the men and women of our community join those of other communities and our allies in the march on Berlin, our thoughts will be serious, our prayers will be sincere and heartfelt.

Pastors of all Fergus Falls churches will announce to each congregation or parish their plans for special prayer services on D-day. Church doors will be open continuously for silent or special prayer.

Fergus Falls business will cease for an hour in order that united prayer and thought may be with our fighting forces to victory.

Additional Support for the Hawkes Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GORDON CANFIELD

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, additional support for Senate bill 1737 by the distinguished senior Senator from New Jersey, Mr. HAWKES, is emphasized in the following editorial from the Paterson (N. J.) Morning Call of last Thursday. Senator HAWKES' bill would require the Federal Government to compensate local taxing districts for the full amount of tax revenue losses suffered from Federal property purchases for war purposes since the emergency declaration of September 8, 1939:

One of the problems with which many New Jersey municipalities and their taxpayers, as well as those of other States, are confronted results from land-tax exemptions caused by Federal acquisition of property, which of necessity means that this loss in taxes will have to be made up by the property in the district remaining in private ownership.

This condition is especially prevalent in our own State, as the Federal Government, for war reasons, has taken over much property for the development of bases, ports, and other purposes incidental to the carrying on of the war. Hoboken presents a convincing example of this, for during World War No. 1 the Government took over—and still retains—that city's choicest water-front property, with the result that the municipality has lost $12,000,000 in taxes over the 25-year period. Similar conditions prevail in Monmouth, Burlington, and other counties.

We all realize that the Government would not take over this land unless it was necessary, but most taxpayers feel that the cost of the war should be borne by all citizens of the Nation and that local taxpayers should not be forced to pay increased levies because of tax exemptions forced by Federal acquisition of property in their municipalities.

A remedy for this is provided by a bill introduced by Senator ALBERT W. HAWKES, of New Jersey, known as Senate bill No. 1737, which would require the national government to compensate local taxing districts for the full amount of tax revenue losses suffered from Federal property purchases for war purposes since the emergency declaration of September 8, 1939. War imposes necessary hardships, but in a democracy these should be equally borne by the American people as a whole, instead of by a community of taxpayers who happen to live in an area where the Nation needs a military establishment.

In view of the fact that the present situation is obviously an unfair one, and may affect many other sections of the State and country as the war progresses, it would be well for citizens to urge upon their representatives in Congress strong support for the enactment into law of the Hawkes measure, for it is obviously a remedy which will relieve taxpayers who are carrying a burden which should be shared by the people of the whole country.

Congress at Its Best

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES L. GIFFORD

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Boston Herald, of May 19, 1944:

CONGRESS AT ITS BEST

When the House or the Senate goes nonpolitical and gives nonpartisan attention to a subject of national importance the debates are usually admirable. Comparing them with discussions in the House of Commons, or those in Washington during the days of Webster and other giants of the past, many a reader must lay down the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with a feeling of gratification that broad problems have been studied and expounded so thoroughly and conscientiously. To take a specific example, the debate in the House a few days ago on flood control shows that Chamber at its best.

Although a great deal has been said about the inadvisability of damming Vermont's West River, the most important tributary of the Connecticut, the problem affects other portions of New England vitally. As Representative CLASON of Massachusetts, a member of the Flood Control Committee, pointed out, in an exhaustive excellent speech: "Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Connecticut have suffered heavily from the ravages of the Connecticut River. Today it is one of the few basins of comparable size in the United States without adequte flood protection." The floods of 1927, 1936, and 1938 caused an expense of about $144,000,000, took 28 lives, and occasioned a great deal of hardship and heavy local expense. This situation, paralleled in various parts of the country, is what Congress proposes to correct. The engineers have been studying the matter for years and now the time has come to do something substantial.

The weakness of the case made by Congressmen PLUMLEY of Vermont, FISH of New York, and one or two others is made obvious by the debate. State rights will not be endangered. No power octopus is lurking in the Green Mountains. There is no insidious, unholy plot to "federalize and control the raindrops, the fog, and the dew," as Congressman PLUMLEY declared, or to "beat God" and "stop God" and defy "Nature's God." Congress is engaged, belatedly, in carrying out projects of the kind which President Theodore Roosevelt urged a generation ago. Once they understand the facts, residents of the four New England States which have been at the mercy of the overflowing Connecticut will applaud the House. They will be grateful to Representative CLASON and the committee chairman, Congressman WHITTINGTON of Mississippi, for their broad comprehension of our need and their impressive presentation of the people's case.

Little Steel Formula

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS J. LANE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I wish to include the following resolution adopted at a meeting of the city council, city of Lynn, Mass., April 25, 1944:

Whereas in the spring of 1942, President Roosevelt gave to Congress and the country his seven-point stabilization program covering wages and salaries, profits, taxes, and cost of living and announced for the specific purpose of stabilization of the war economy; and

Whereas stabilization of wages and salaries was established by the War Labor Board by setting general wage ceilings at 15 percent above Bureau of Labor Statistics January 1, 1941, figures, and known as the Little Steel formula; and

Whereas, the freezing of wages and salaries was an integral part of the seven-point program with the promise that the cost of living would be stabilized accordingly; and,

Whereas the cost of living has continued to rise, due mainly to the failure of Congress and administrative agencies to control the national economy to conform with the principle of the seven-point program; and,

Whereas this failure to conform leaves only wages and salaries frozen at 15 percent, compared with a 23.4 percent United States Bureau of Labor Statistics rise and a 43.5 percent rise, according to labor's special committee on cost of living; and,

Whereas every worker, both manual and white-collar, in war industries and in every other economic endeavor for which salaries and wages are paid in the community, is affected by this freeze edict: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the City Council of the City of Lynn, in meeting assembled, records itself as appealing to President Roosevelt, Senators Walsh and Weeks and Congressmen Lane and Bates, and Chairman Davis of the National War Labor Board, to do their utmost to abolish the 15 percent Little Steel formula or so modify it that wage and salary adjustments can be made in conformity with the true increased cost of living.

Capitol Stuff

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by John O'Donnell in the Washington Times-Herald of May 23, 1944:

CAPITOL STUFF

(By John O'Donnell)

"I sometimes think that never blows so red
The rose as where some buried Caesar bled."
—Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam.

The inevitable title for any report on recent political moves on the fourth-term front must be—"So Red the Roosevelt."

Within the last week, the present White House occupant has become the '44 Presidential choice of Mr. Earl Browder's Communist following; of Mr. Sidney Hillman's well-bank-rolled C. I. O. Political Action Committee; and of both wings of the radical American Labor Party.

And with the White House nomination already handed to F. D. R. by these groups all that now remains for the bleeding Caesars of the ancient Democratic Party is to wrap their togas about their heads; meet political extinction bravely at the Chicago convention, and gasp out a formal endorsement of the White House candidate picked by Browder, Hillman, Dubinsky, and the other chieftains on the left.

Now gulping down a Communist White House dish and saying they like it will be very grim business for some of the ancient democratic worthies and will sit vilely on their political stomachs.

But we can see no escape for them. The Democrats ordered this Roosevelt table d'hote back in '40 when they went for the third-term "draft."

And if they smacked their lips over the appetizer, there's no reason why they should gag now over the '44 main course.

As a matter of fact, the situation of the old-time Democrats is no more embarrassing than that of F. D. R. when he faces the task of writing out an acceptance speech graciously welcoming the Communist and Red endorsement.

Just 3 years ago, as we remember, Mr. Roosevelt could look across the White House lawn and see the parading followers of Mr. Earl Browder picketing the White House and carrying banners denouncing F. D. R.'s foreign policy and howling to the heavens of Washington that the brawl in Europe was a "capitalist war" and our good lord Franklin was hell-bent for shedding the blood of the American workingman on foreign soil.

Of course, those were the days when Pal Joey in the Kremlin and Hitler were buddies and the pair of them were digesting the remains of a neatly carved up Poland.

And that was also the time when the Federal gendarmes tossed Comrade Browder in the hoosegow for a little passport monkey business.

Now to make a speech of acceptance, welcoming the support of Brother Browder and his followers, might be a difficult task for many White House aspirants but we will lay dollars to doughnuts that F. D. rises to the occasion.

And we haven't the slightest doubt but that those ringing words of virtuous denunciation which F. D. R. intoned from the White House when Pal Joey jumped on "brave little Finland" will be glossed over, now that the Communists with United States ballots in their hands have seen the Roosevelt fourth-term light.

Of course, that was a pretty savage judgment that F. D. R. passed when he declared, in those days:

"The Soviet Union, as a matter of practical fact, known to you and known to all the world, is a dictatorship as absolute as any other dictatorship in the world.

"It has invaded a neighbor (Finland) so infinitestimally small that it could do no injury to the Soviet Union, and that seeks only to live in peace as a democracy, and a liberal and forward-looking democracy at that."

Well, things certainly have been changed since those days. We even remember F. D. R. winding up his third-term campaign among his Hudson Valley neighbors and proclaiming at the cross road that his '40 drive for the White House would be his final Presidential campaign.

Paterson, N. J., Salutes Maritime Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GORDON CANFIELD

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, Paterson, N. J., one of America's greatest defense cities, remembered Maritime Day last Monday and the Paterson Evening News of that date paid the following editorial tribute to the courage, fortitude and devotion of the thousands of loyal officers and men of our merchant marine, who are doing so much to bring about victory for the Allied Nations in this war:

America today celebrates National Maritime Day and pays deserved and earned tributes of memory and honor to the loyalty, courage, and fortitude of the 140,000 merchant marine officers and men who perform their vitally important task of delivering the goods to our men on the fighting fronts of the world, regardless of danger, hardship, or privation.

Paterson has a special interest in the celebration of this day.

Under the flag of the United States Maritime Commission, the liberty ship Edward B. Haines, named for the founder of the News and the Call, is out on a wartime mission on one of the seven seas.

Our own Congressman, GORDON CANFIELD, is a member of the House Maritime Commission, which controls the destinies in Congress of the merchant marine, and Mr. S. W. Richards, of Ridgewood, N. J., is public-relations consultant for the United States Maritime Commission, and has just completed an important and outstanding job in supplying the newspapers of the Nation with the finest, most complete, and most interesting general publicity for Maritime Day which has ever been issued from Washington.

The United States today celebrates its rebirth as a maritime nation and hails the approaching victory in the battle of the supply lines.

Maritime Day observances are being held in scores of coastal cities and inland shipyards as a tribute to the brave and intrepid men who sail the world's greatest merchant fleet, the men and women who build it, and the 5,000 who have died in its wartime service.

The ceremonies have an added keynote—the determination, already voiced by the Maritime Commission, to keep this country in the forefront of the world's seafaring peoples.

One hundred and twenty-five years ago today the merchant ship Savannah dropped down the muddy red waters of the Savannah River under steam power and set out for Liverpool on history's first ocean crossing by a vessel carrying a steam engine. Today honors that event and also honors, by virtue of an act of Congress, the American merchant marine, grown suddenly under the forcing fires of the war to the largest carrying fleet in the world. The native enterprise and technical ingenuity exemplified in the Savannah have not always been applied, over the last century, to the business of ocean shipping, but they were still available in the last war, when abruptly we needed them, and they have been available in this war to create an astounding system of maritime transportation, moving huge armies with all their intricate paraphernalia over colossal distances and supplying them with the mountains of food, ammunition, gasoline, and equipment which they consume—all on a scale unknown in the long history of the ocean highways.

It is a less romantic achievement than that of our globe-circling airways, but quite as remarkable in its way. It is compounded out of many things—the courage of the crews who have fulfilled their civilian tasks what was often the front line of military action, the labors of the shipyard workers, the skills and energy of the operating companies, the industrial managers, the designers, and the training schools.

The stretches of sea being covered are enormous. The supplies for the armed forces are immeasurable and incredible to the layman. Day after day and year after year the convoyed merchant ships are feeding, clothing, and arming, and are furnishing countless instruments, vehicles, machines, material of all sorts to our widely scattered forces. And we mustn't forget in the cargo the passengers. Millions of fighting men have been transported to ports of new strange names which appear in the news every day.

How often have we read of their dangers, of their battles for life in waves flaming with oil, of their long exposure on rafts to hunger and thirst, of their rescue in extremity or their death. It is indeed most fitting that America was silent for the minute after 11 this morning in memory of our merchant seamen dead in the service of their country and in prayer to God for the safety of those surviving.

Resolution of Chicago City Council

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM A. ROWAN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. ROWAN. Mr. Speaker, the city council of the city of Chicago at a meeting held recently adopted a resolution requesting that any veterans' hospital or hospitals for the Chicago area be located within the confines of the city, convenient to mass transportation. It is stated that in many instances large veterans' hospitals have been located at sites far removed from population centers with very inadequate transportation facilities. The resolution follows:

Whereas it is recognized that additional veterans' hospital facilities will be required in large metropolitan cities such as Chicago, which has contributed so fully of its young-man power to the war effort; and

Whereas the past practice of locating these hospitals at sites removed from the centers of population has been a cause of complaint from patients and their relatives and friends, because of the travel distance involved, and the difficulties of reaching such locations; and

Whereas, there are a number of sites within the limits of the City of Chicago which are suitable for this purpose and which are adjacent and easily accessible to local street car and bus lines; and

Whereas, it is understood that the Federal Works Agency is now giving consideration to the required number and most suitable sites for the construction of additional veterans' hospitals as a post-war program: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the city council of the City of Chicago hereby requests the Federal Government to locate and erect one or more adequate and modern veterans' hospitals, together with all necessary and desirable appurtenances, within the confines of the City of Chicago; and, be it further

Resolved, That any site so decided upon be located convenient to the local mass transportation system of the City of Chicago; and, be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the City Clerk to the Administrator of the Federal Works Agency, and to each member of the Congress from the State of Illinois.

HON. THOMAS J. LANE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to include the following poem entitled "Mother's Day," by John "Kerry" Finnegan, which appeared recently in the Irish Echo, New York:

MOTHER'S DAY

Don't forget your mother as you have but one,
And one is all you'll ever have until life's work is done,
Of friends you may have many and you may love one another,
But you can depend on one true friend—Mother, yes your mother.

Just think what she suffered at the hour of your birth,
And how that mother fondled you when you came upon this earth,
She toiled so hard just for you and never ceased to pray
That the good Lord would watch you and guide you on your way.

She nursed you and she cared for you since you were one hour old,
You were more precious to her than your weight in gold,
You spoiled her sleep—yes, many a night and took her time by day,
Now don't forget that mother, today and every day.

Mother was so kind to you, so kind in every way,
When you were very little she taught you how to pray,
She dressed you, sewed and washed for you, she loved you like no other,
No wonder then we name a day in honor of that mother.

When you first started off for school, your mother took you there,
She washed your little hands and face and your breakfast did prepare,
She also fixed your lunch for you in that good old-fashioned way,
So don't forget your mother—remember Mothers' Day.

She smiled and looked so happy, she was proud and why—
When time for you to graduate, her heart was full of joy,
She knew you were growing big, bigger every day,
And you had your mother's blessing as for you she'd always pray.

Now when you started your first job, Mother was so proud,
She watched you round the corner go and said good-bye so loud,
She waited for your coming home, and she, too, had toiled all day,
Now don't forget your mother when she is old and gray.

Should cares and troubles come your way, of course you'd seek relief,
Mother's always willing to bear part of your grief.
How patiently she'd talk to you and soothing words would say,
So let's remember Mother—make all days Mother's Day.

There's no love like a mother's love we all should bear in mind,
And there's no friend who could ever be so loving or so kind,
So always try to help her, and you to God should pray
That He watch over your dear, kind mother until the judgment day.

We may be far apart just now, three thousand miles or more,
But mother's love is just as strong as in days before,
A mother's love is a blessing we've often heard folk say,
Now let us honor Mother, today and every day.

Avoid Politics, O. P. A. Aides Told

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM A. ROWAN
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. ROWAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article from the Washington Times-Herald of May 19, 1944:

AVOID POLITICS, O. P. A. AIDES TOLD—OR ELSE LOSE JOBS, IS BOWLES' WARNING

Price Administrator Chester Bowles last night ordered some 258,000 paid and volunteer O. P. A. employees and officials throughout the country to keep hands off the forthcoming national elections or face instant dismissal.

He said he soon will issue a written warning against political activities to all State and local O. P. A. workers, as well as those employed in headquarters here. After they read these instructions, he said, "there won't be any doubt in their minds about what will happen to them if they don't obey."

Bowles said that his office has sought repeatedly to impress upon O. P. A. personnel the absolute necessity of remaining aloof from political controversies and campaigns because of the politically vulnerable position they hold in the various communities.

"I feel, however, that it is important on the eve of a national election to spell out our position so that Republicans as well as Democrats see plainly where we stand—on the sidelines," he declared.

Bowles, a Democrat, said he took over the helm of O. P. A. with the "distinct understanding by all hands" that he would not engage in political activities, and that his agency was not to be considered a part of any political network.

With this understanding, he said, he has been guided in making O. P. A. appointments and promotions solely by the standard of ability and not by the political yardstick.

Four Freedoms and the Poles

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article from the April issue of the Washington News Digest:

FOUR FREEDOMS AND THE POLES
(By A. N. Butterfield)

What has happened to the "four freedoms" so far as the brave people of Poland are concerned.

According to the United States Bureau of the Census of our foreign born population, as reported in the 1944 edition of the World Almanac, Poles rank fourth in numbers in the United States with Italians, Germans, and Russians ranging first, second and third in respective order. To politicians in the limited number of localities where the Polish vote might be considered a factor, the plight of Poland, if Mr. Stalin is to have his way, is a matter of real concern. However, this writer sees the issue from a much broader viewpoint than politics. To him it is a matter of whether the "four freedoms" on their first test, are to prove mere political oratory, or whether the promise is truly to be performed.

One should not censure Mr. Churchill for expressing sympathy with Mr. Stalin's view on the Polish-Russian border issue. Britain has a relatively small Polish population and England's Prime Minister has a wholesome respect for Mr. Stalin's intention to run things pretty well as he pleases on matters concerning countries adjacent to the Soviet Union. No, Mr. Churchill will not jeopardize what he views as much larger issues, from England's standpoint, by standing on the letter of the promised "four freedoms." With the President, it is another matter. He made the promise and thoughtful Poles, except for those who can be bought with political plums, will expect to see the promise fulfilled.

One can understand how the Polish people feel to see the country for which they fought so bravely become the victim of power politics; to have part of their soil taken from them and then be supposedly compensated by receiving some territory from their defeated enemy, regardless of the wishes of the population now occupying the territory so gained.

Poland's record in this war is inspiring. Not only has it 100,000 trained soldiers in the Near East and 50,000 in England alone ready for the invasion of the second front; it contributed 12,000 flyers to the grim battle of Britain; it is fighting side by side with our American fighting men in Italy; it fought magnificently in the Battles of Narvik and Tobruk. It is one of the oldest democracies of Europe, and while Mr. Stalin has objected to men now serving with the Polish Government in exile, now in London, these are the elected representatives of the Polish people and until others are chosen, have the confidence of the people of Poland.

It seems the fate of America, whenever she goes to war on the side of justice and idealism, to find, when peace is declared, that many of the promises of American politicians, turn into mere scraps of paper. We come to learn that when it comes to European politics, we are star-gazing amateurs. President Wilson found it so. That appears, too, to be the future fate of President Roosevelt.

Perhaps we have promised too much in the "four freedoms." It should not be so. Perhaps they were well-intentioned phrases which did not take into consideration that stark and brutal realism actuate the policies of the leaders among our allies; that, after all, countries are like individuals, each seeking to place his country's interest first. A realist can find no fault in that but one can sometimes wish that America might itself learn to think first of its own interests and remember that only grief and disappointment may come from promising too much with too little grim determination to see it through.

Military Training

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HARVE TIBBOTT
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include a letter from a prominent newspaper publisher in Cambria County, Pa., concerning boys of 18 years of age, who have been drafted into the service and who have not been given the promised adequate training before being sent overseas. This letter is typical of many such communications which I am receiving from worried mothers and fathers throughout my congressional district. This is an alarming situation.

The letter follows:

CAMBRIA COUNTY, May 15, 1944.
Hon. HARVE TIBBOTT,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR HARVE: On February 14 my son, Richard, 18 years old, was taken out of high school and drafted into the Navy. On that day he left home for Sampson, N. Y. He was there 5 weeks, given a 7-day furlough, returned there, and after a day was sent to the receiving station in Brooklyn, N. Y.

On Easter Sunday, less than 2 months after he was drafted into the service, he was sent overseas. In a letter I have just received from him, postmarked May 5, less than 3 months after he was put into the service, he states that he had been taken from Scotland to England and placed on an L. S. T. ship, No. 382.

My terrifying concern naturally is whether this represents the adequate training our boys were promised by the military that they shall receive before being sent overseas. It seems more to me like a determination that the teen-age boys are being looked upon as something only to be liquidated.

Sincerely yours.

Servicemen's Benefits—Insurance Paid According to Age

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM H. STEVENSON
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article that appeared in the Vernon County Broadcaster, of Viroqua, Wis., May 11, 1944:

WASHINGTON NEWS FROM OUR CONGRESSMAN, WILLIAM H. STEVENSON

SERVICEMEN'S BENEFITS—INSURANCE PAID ACCORDING TO AGE

It is appropriate that my people be informed as to just what dependents and next of kin of veterans are entitled to as a result of the loss of a son, a daughter, a husband, or a father. If a casualty visits your family or your immediate neighborhood, you ought to know the rights of certain relatives. Basically, there are four money benefits, as follows:

1. A 6-month gratuity payment. This payment is automatically paid to a wife of a deceased veteran; or if there is no wife, it is automatically paid to the surviving child or children. This 6-month gratuity is not automatically paid to parents or brothers or sisters of an unmarried serviceman. If unmarried, he must designate beforehand that the parents or brothers or sisters receive the 6-month gratuity payment. As a result, it might be well to advise the unmarried man in service to designate his parents or brothers and sisters to receive this payment. If this is not done, the parents or brothers and sisters are not eligible for this payment.

The amount of the gratuity payment depends on the rank of the serviceman. For example, if the casualty is a private, it is $300. If he is a corporal, it is $396. If he is a sergeant, it is $468. The payment is 6 times the monthly base pay of the man or woman in the service. This payment is made in addition to insurance and is payable even if the serviceman has no insurance.

2. Monthly insurance payments: This insurance is not paid in a lump sum. It is paid on a monthly basis, depending on the age of the beneficiary. On a $10,000 policy a beneficiary under 30 years of age will receive $55.51 a month for 240 months. A beneficiary over 30 years of age will get a guaranteed 120 equal installments—and if they survive beyond 120 months, it is paid for life. The amount paid to beneficiaries over 30 depends on their age. The older the beneficiary, the higher the monthly payment. The serviceman can name any of the following as beneficiaries: Wife, husband, child, stepchild, parents, brother, or sister, including those of halfblood.

PENSIONS, BACK PAY EXPLAINED

Besides, the 6-month gratuity payment and the monthly insurance payments benefits to veterans and their dependents include pensions and arrears in service-personnel pay. A pension is paid automatically to a wife and children. All children under 18 are eligible and children up to 21 are eligible if they are in school at the time of death. If the child marries before 18 or 21, he or she is not eligible for this pension.

Parents who have been dependent upon the serviceman can get a pension at the same time his wife and children are receiving a pension. One parent, $45 a month, two parents $25 each. A widow under 50 gets $45. In addition she receives $10 per month for the first child up to 10 years of age. She also receives $15 per month for each child between 10 and 18 and this continues up to 21 years of age if the child is in school.

It is important to note that a widow, a child, or parent receives the insurance payments, if a policy has been taken out by the enlisted man, in addition to getting a pension. Both may be collected, the pension and the insurance.

BACK PAY

Arrears of pay is a possibility sometimes overlooked. When a casualty occurs, there is always a chance the veteran has back pay due him. When men are at the front, there is always the possibility they may have missed several pay days. All this back pay is paid directly to the next of kin. Inquiries should always be made about possible arrears of pay so it can be collected by those entitled to it.

In the event there should be any difficulty in getting these payments from the Government, see your County Veterans Service Officer, or write me, Congressman WILLIAM H. STEVENSON, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Montgomery Ward

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. VITO MARCANTONIO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following articles by Ernest Lindley and Marquis Childs from the Washington Post of May 24, 1944:

MONTGOMERY WARD

(By Ernest Lindley)

WORKERS IN CIVILIAN INDUSTRIES

The practical question at the heart of the recent Montgomery Ward (Chicago) case has been set forth succinctly by Chairman Davis of the War Labor Board. It is whether workers outside the direct war industries are to be relieved of the no-strike pledge. If the employees of Montgomery Ward in Chicago were not subject to the no-strike pledge then, according to Mr. Davis' estimate, approximately 15,500,000 other employees engaged in distribution, transportation, and various service trades also would be exempt.

Most of these workers are engaged in supplying civilians. Civilians who work in war plants have to be fed, clothed, and transported. So do the farmers who produce the food supply. And so do the civilians who provide the things needed by war workers and farmers. Suppose that these 15,500,000 workers were to go on strike—all of them, or 10,000,000, or 5,000,000, or 2,000,000 of them? Does anyone suppose that the war effort would not be seriously affected?

Some civilian activities are less essential than others. Some are not essential at all to the prosecution of the war. But, in general, distribution of the necessities of life is essential. And certainly the supplying of automotive accessories and motorized equipment to farmers is essential. Montgomery Ward is not a night club.

If the workers in wholesale and retail distribution and in various civilian services are to be held to the no-strike rule, they must have machinery for adjusting their differences with their employers. In the more important cases in which conciliation fails, the War Labor Board provides this machinery. The Board has been unanimous in considering Montgomery Ward within its jurisdiction.

The War Labor Disputes Act empowers the President to back up the War Labor Board by taking possession of mines, plants, and facilities engaged in manufacture or production. It may be that Congress did not intend that the President should have the power to seize facilities engaged in distribution of essentials to civilians. That certainly was the opinion of Sewell Avery.

But if Congress did not intend that, it left a dangerous gap in the law. For it said, in effect, that strikes on the part of some 15,000,000 workers were all right.

In the opinion of the Attorney General, the gap is so obvious and so dangerous that the President has the power to fill it without express authorization of Congress. In this connection, it may be worth noting that on May 9 Federal Judge MacSwinford, of the western district of Kentucky, held that even without an act of Congress the President has the power to seize a plant to prevent or stop an interruption in production essential to the war.

Judge MacSwinford said:

"The President has no power to declare war; that belongs exclusively to Congress. But when war has been declared and is actually existing, his functions as Commander in Chief become of the highest importance and his operations in that connection are entirely beyond the control of the legislature. There develops upon him by virtue of his office a solemn responsibility to preserve the Nation and it is my judgment that there is specifically granted to him authority to utilize all the resources of the country to that end."

In this instance, the seized properties belonging to the Ken-Rad Tube & Lamp Corporation were engaged directly in war production. But Judge MacSwinford quoted with approval the Attorney General's recent opinion: "The fact that the initial impact of these disturbances is on the production or distribution of essential civilian goods is not a reason for denying the Chief Executive and the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy the power to take steps to protect the Nation's war effort. In modern war the maintenance of a healthy, orderly, and stable civilian economy is essential to successful military effort."

The further determination of the President's powers may be left to the courts. The question which the Members of Congress and others who have assailed the President and the War Labor Board in the Montgomery Ward-Chicago case have to answer is: Do they propose to exempt some 15,000,000 workers from the War Labor Board machinery and so from the no-strike pledge? If their answer is "yes," then, as Mr. Davis has pointed out, the result almost certainly would be "a complete disintegration of the existing machinery set up by Congress to preserve industrial peace."

WASHINGTON CALLING

(By Marquis Childs)

SIDELIGHTS ON WARD INVESTIGATION

Beginning quietly enough, the House investigation into the Montgomery Ward case promises to produce some sensations before it ends. The committee, four Democrats and three Republicans, may come out agreeing on an objective report, but I doubt it.

The whole business is hub deep in politics. The Republicans at this point seem bent on making Sewell Avery an issue in the 1944 campaign. They may have a change of heart before the hearings are concluded.

The C. I. O. is preparing a blitz on Avery, based on a careful scrutiny of his entire record. According to present reports, this blitz will be unleashed in the course of the hearings, probably during Avery's cross-examination by members of the committee.

Senator MCCARRAN, of Nevada, a Democrat, is going ahead with plans for a separate report by his own committee in the Senate. He now says that possibly he'll make it public in a week, timing it, perhaps, with Avery's appearance before the House committee.

The Senator from Nevada is having his own little private war with the C. I. O., which throws an interesting light on the strange politics of this unprecedented year. When war industries were being located in various parts of the country, MCCARRAN prevailed on the War Production Board to put a big magnesium plant in his State. That, he has since discovered, was by way of hauling in the Trojan horse.

At the Las Vegas magnesium plant are some 30,000 employees, most of them newcomers to Nevada. They voted not long ago in favor of the C. I. O. as a bargaining agent, and while the issue is in dispute with the A. F. of L., the fact remains that a majority are on the C. I. O. side.

Now, it doesn't take a great political seer to divine the influence of 10,000 to 15,000 new voters in a State that was shown by the 1940 census to have a total population of 110,247. If the C. I. O. does the kind of job in getting those voters registered that it has done elsewhere, they could swing the election.

MCCARRAN has been a conservative, yes, an ultraconservative. So the new threat of the C. I. O.'s political power is a real one. In his report on Montgomery Ward, the Senator from Nevada may have a chance to express some of his pent-up emotions.

The House hearings began with an able presentation of the War Labor Board case by Chairman William H. Davis. Davis, who has the face of an earnest cherub, is intently hard working and intensely sincere.

"We think," he said, "we have the best program for settling labor disputes that exists anywhere in the world."

This may be put down to the understandable pride of a man who has sacrificed much for a job he never wanted. But Davis added that no system could be perfect, and you certainly have to agree with that. There's no way in a free country to end strikes by fiat.

In the course of his statement, Davis quoted from the remarks of two former industry members of the War Labor Board who were sharply critical of Montgomery Ward and its behavior in the past. One was Harry L. Derby, president of a big chemical company, and the other was Roger D. Lapham, west coast shipping executive and now mayor of San Francisco. From first-hand experience they knew what obstacles had been put in the way of a fair settlement.

All the fuss of hearings and reports is not likely to produce anything that gets at the nub of the matter as nearly as the comment made recently by Malcolm W. Bingay in his column in the Detroit Free Press. He said:

"To me it seems supremely asinine to contend that a government in wartime can take a man away from his family, his property, and his job to fight for his country and to give up his life—which no court or no act of Congress can restore to him—but it must not interfere with an angry old gentleman who wants to settle a private feud with a man named Roosevelt who happened to be President."

That puts it in the proverbial nutshell.

Price Stabilization Must Continue

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS F. BURCHILL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. BURCHILL of New York. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to include therein the following article entitled "Price Stabilization Must Continue," which appeared in the New York Packer on May 13, 1944. Since the House will soon be considering legislation having to do with the extension of the Office of Price Administration, I commend this excellent presentation to the reading of all of the Members:

PRICE STABILIZATION MUST CONTINUE

Nowhere on earth exists the freedom there is right now in America. This is true despite the emergency measures made necessary by war. Price control, rationing, wage stabilization—whatever has been done—had its inception in the over-all necessity of winning the war. Obviously, the war must be won at home before we can overcome the enemy at arms. Inflation must be prevented, there must be ample supplies of foodstuff and vast production of war matérial in order that victory be won overseas.

It appears that the big primary home battles have largely been won. Dangerous inflation has been prevented, food supplies have been ample, and production of war equipment has attained a magnitude that amazes the world. There must be no softening of effort in carrying on measures that have been instrumental in gaining our present position in these home-front battles, for inflation especially can grow from a small beginning into a monster that would mean catastrophe. Inflation can rise from many sources. Shortage of foodstuff, uncontrolled production of supplies not essential to the war effort, runaway wages, black markets—any one of these could well be the beginning of a dangerous inflationary condition in America. And, remember, inflation could cause us to lose the war right on the eve of victory.

Utmost freedom has always been the lot of our people. We've been accustomed to buying anything we wanted at any price we wanted to pay and doing what we pleased in general. Possibly that heritage is one reason why some have felt that at least some of the wartime restrictions have been uncalled for. Probably it is true that some are not necessary, but as time proves this point of view, revisions can be made in the regulations without endangering the whole structure. Basic restrictions are necessary in the war effort, and will continue so until victory comes.

The fresh fruit and produce industry has been beset with black markets, one of the primary causes of inflation. Ethical operators in this industry have found regulations in many instances unfair and unworkable. We believe those responsible for administering the Emergency Price Control Act themselves recognize these facts now. It may have been different at first. Possibly when O. P. A. was first established, some of those in authority looked upon the law as a sort of "reform" measure which in fact it was never intended to be. Be that as it may, the attitude now seems to be different than at its inception.

The measure is again before Congress. It should be continued, with amendments to the end that every factor in the industry be treated fairly and black markets in fresh fruits and produce made an impossibility. Price stabilization must continue, and every measure necessary to bring this about must be extended if America is to plow to the end of the row and achieve victory.

Creation of Allied Council Now To Plan Lasting Peace Is Urged

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MATTHEW J. MERRITT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article from the New York Herald Tribune of May 22, 1944, by Maj. George Fielding Eliot:

CREATION OF ALLIED COUNCIL NOW TO PLAN LASTING PEACE IS URGED—EXTENSION OF UNITY OF BATTLEFIELD TO POLITICAL SPHERE WHILE WAR IS ON DECLARED IMPERATIVE, LEST ALLIANCE DISSOLVE WHEN VICTORY IS WON

(By Maj. George Fielding Eliot)

On every battle front of this global war the essential military unity of the United Nations is being cemented with the blood of their sons. On every battle front the very words "United Nations" become, with every added day of conflict and of sacrifice, more of an established symbol of existing fact, and less the expression of a vague and distant aspiration.

In Italy the flags of Poland, Great Britain, France, and America fly together above the ruins of the abbey on Monte Cassino. The men of those nations, yes, and the men of India, of Morocco, of South Africa, and of New Zealand, died to set those flags on high, agleam in the sunshine of victory. Not only nations, but the continents, the four corners of the earth, were there assembled in arms against the forces of darkness.

In the British Isles the young men of those islands, and of Canada, and of the United States gather in their hundreds of thousands for the decisive battle of the west. With them are Poles, Belgians, Dutchmen, Czechs, Norwegians, ready to die that their countries may again be free. Meanwhile the airmen of all these nations fly ceaselessly, day and night, over the enemy's crumbling citadels, smashing the centers of his power, preparing the way for the final battle of the nations.

Along the vast eastern front the battle-tried legions of Russia are gathering for their part in the final struggle. Poles and Czechs are with them, too, and their ranks include men of all the great and varied congeries of peoples who go to make up the population of the Soviet Union.

UNITY ON BURMA FRONT

In Burma Americans and Britons, Chinese and Indians, little Gurkhas from Nepal and Kachin tribesmen from the northern hills are breaking the back of the Japanese power in all the region north of Mandalay, are carrying forward the road that will bring fresh help to the long-suffering people of China.

In the Indian Ocean a fleet under British command, composed of British, American, French and Dutch warships and planes, is hammering away at the enemy outposts in Sumatra and Java. In the Southwest Pacific, American, Australian and New Zealand forces are pushing back the Japanese from their last footholds on the island-continent of New Guinea. Meanwhile, Chinese armies supported by American aircraft fight stoutly for the vital lines of communication within China itself, and in the north and central Pacific a vast American amphibious power poises for new blows against the Japanese island defenses.

Thus, on the fighting fronts, the United Nations are truly united. Their efforts are coordinated. Their soldiers and sailors and airmen give loyal obedience to the orders of commanders in chief who may not be of their own land or their own service, and loyal cooperation to each other when battle is joined.

But when we look elsewhere for the same unity, we do not find it. The military unity which we have achieved will end when the need for it has passed with the defeat of the common foe. The political unity which will then be needed to reap the harvest that has been so dearly bought, to perpetuate the victory that has been won at such sacrifice, does not yet exist, and cannot then be created. For the pressures which now hold the nations together will be relaxed, the common danger will be dissipated, and the centrifugal forces of greed and suspicion and selfishness will be at work upon the minds and hearts of all of us.

DELAY IMPERILS FUTURE

It is only now, while we are united in a great common effort, while the sons of all the United Nations are dying side by side upon a hundred battlefields, that we can hope to forge enduring links of a permanent association to preserve the peace that they are dying to win. Every day that passes without accomplishment in this direction is a day lost which can never be regained. If we continue to postpone, to delay, to wait, to dilly-dally with the fate of the world, one of those days will be the last day; one of those days will be too late.

The time has come for the American people to ask their Government why we must postpone further the formation of a United Nations Council as a beginning toward the political unity of the United Nations which must be achieved if our victory is to be worth the winning. Why must we wait to take the lead in asking our Allies to join with us in this first and essential step? Why must there be further delay in saying boldly and clearly what we are fighting for, and the sort of world we want to live in, and asking those who are fighting at our side to help us erect this definite symbol of our continued unity? Why cannot we now begin the task of creating the instrument of that unity which is essential if the vast and complex problems of the peace to come are to be solved, if the great alliance is not to dissolve on the day after victory is won, as every other alliance in history has dissolved?

This is no subject for partisan debate. This is no political football. This is a matter which concerns the future of every child in America, of the Nation as a whole, of the world as a place in which human beings may live and work and pursue happiness—or which they can, if they continue along the blind and stupid courses of the past, make into a hell which will beggar the imagination of a thousand Dantes.

Why can't we begin now to lay the foundations of that unity with which all the hopes of all humanity are so irrevocably bound up?

Privileges and Responsibilities of an American Citizen

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MIKE MANSFIELD

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent, I am inserting in the RECORD a copy of an address entitled "Privileges and Responsibilities of an American Citizen" by Bob Ripley, of Kalispell, Mont. This young man is now 17 years old and has just completed his secondary school work and graduated from the Flathead County High School in Kalispell. While in high school he was the student body president, was awarded the honor of being named the best student officer during his high school career, has won the State oratorical contest conducted by the American Legion, Department of Montana, for the past 2 years and this year in addition to winning the State contest he has won the regional title as well and placed third in the national meet. He has been an outstanding athlete, has carried on numerous school and outside activities and has been a regular radio announcer over Station KGEZ for the past 2 years. During his entire high school career he has been a high honor student.

I have read his manuscript very carefully and, knowing Bob as I do, I am not at all surprised that he has been able to express his beliefs and the beliefs of millions of other American boys in a clear, logical, and concise manner. We of Montana are proud of Bob Ripley and know that our great country can face the future confidently because of him and others like him who will become the leaders of tomorrow.

It gives me a great deal of pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to bring to the attention of the House the oration which took third place in the national meet conducted under the auspices of the American Legion:

Honorable judges, ladies and gentlemen, these are troubled times, that see America engaged in a terrible battle of survival, whose magnitude and intensity surpasses human understanding. This war we are waging is a bitter war, a total war, a people's war. We realize in this third terrible year of a people's war that we are not facing a weak or irresolute foe, but a determined, prepared, and paganistic one that will stop at nothing to reduce us to slavery—to take away our rights and privileges, our heritages, and our freedom. We fight a barbarous foe. And so it is that we, as Americans, are vitally interested in the subject. The privileges and responsibilities of an American citizen, with its interrelated bearing on the war and the peace to come. We are not only interested as Americans, we are concerned and challenged in a way that only a bitter war of survival can bring.

It is my privilege this afternoon to tell you of several important problems that face us, problems that require the attention of every thinking American that desires to remain truly free. It has been ably said that there is no privilege that does not depend upon a responsibility, and the fate of this war, total uncompromising war, has shown Americans that the prvilege to remain free to live, to work, and even to play as they please, demands the responsibility of preparedness, readiness and eternal vigilance both within and without. On December 6, 1941, we were a smug and complacent people, content with our neighbors and ourselves, accepting our freedom without question. Pearl Harbor changed that complacency to awareness, that smugness to the stark realization that security is measured in preparedness—the stabs in the back which followed and the subsequent defeats are engraved indelibly on our minds as living proof that failure to guard zealously our precious and all-encompassing privilege of freedom means losing that freedom.

The sacrifices we have made in this war are small indeed to those made by our allies. Small in the face of the countless numbers of our allies in Russia that have fallen at the hands of the common foe. Small in the face of the shambles and destruction that was London and Coventry. Small in the face of the devastation and desolation that is China today. And they are infinitely small in the face of those sacrifices we must make to obtain unity of purpose for lasting peace. We have the privilege of leading mankind into the light of freedom and we have the responsibility.

In order that America may lead in the world to come she must continue to prove to the world that she is the example of freedom and progress; and to do this, when peace comes, she must attack with vigor the evils that have been bred by a war economy. And the greatest of these is the loss of free enterprise without which America ceases to live and grow. Under the necessity of centralization for war production, Uncle Sam has become our senior partner with supreme power. In a nation that is fighting, it may be expected that business and industry shall sacrifice individual gains and follow the leadership of government. But in peacetime such a policy would make our country completely unsure of its future. It is therefore the responsibility of every American to see that as soon as this war is won, and we pray that is soon, economic power is immediately redelegated lest the specter of despotism should walk in upon us at home and become more of a menace than despotism abroad. In short, we must protect this privilege of free individual enterprise with every fiber of our being.

As we look ahead at the post-war world, which must be considered now, we see one great danger for America, the growth and extension of politocracy. What is politocracy? It is a new word coined recently, and its definition is misleadingly simple. Politocracy is the change in America that is daily becoming more apparent from a government of the people to a government of the official. A government of the party, for the party, a government based on reelection not upon promises. It will be for you and me and our soldier sons, brothers, husbands, and sweethearts to decide this peace, for it is we who will derive the benefits or detriments, rather than pressure groups, blocs, or politicians whose aims too frequently parallel their own personal desires and ambitions.

There is yet another great privilege. It is the hope of mankind. That privilege is the American home. We are charged with the responsibility of protecting the purity of youth, now and in the future. In placing our hopes upon the shoulders of youth, which today is more than ever deserving of it, we must take ourselves to task for its education and instruction. It is a commonly known fact that juvenile delinquency is largely parental delinquency, and the home is the supreme moulding institution. It is therefore a great privilege to train our youth, not through the State as our enemies do, but through the home, where the principles of our democracy are best typified. And, consequently, it is also a great responsibility to see that the home unit is the type of democracy that youth must champion. Youth—with its unbounding enthusiasm and optimism. I fail to feel the pessimism that floods the minds of some youth authorities. Their views upon the softness and looseness of youth fail to strike a responsive key in anyone who will only take the time to analyze the record of youth in this war. Was it a soft and degenerate youth that stormed the beaches of Salerno, or north Africa, Sicily, or Guadalcanal? Was it a nation of weaklings that stood the trial and horrors of Bataan or Corrigedor? No. It was and is a firm resolute youth that sees clearly the task of winning this war and the preserving of future peace. A youth that is more discerning and demanding than any other because of the conditions through which it developed and progressed. A youth that saved America through courage under fire, and will continue to save those things for which we fight. We must look to youth with hope and encouragement, not skepticism and doubt. It is our sternest task, duty, and privilege to see that mankind's hope in youth is not undermined by a lack of faith, backing, and guidance from the American home.

As we look more and more toward the future as the day of victory approaches, we must consider another great privilege, the right to think. And more important, that of the responsibility entailed, that of not just to think, but to think clearly, to analyze and to understand. Now, that we know the price of total war, and envision the price of total peace, we must use this privilege of thinking to its fullest extent—for when in history has there been a greater need for clear thinking, for understanding our neighbors at home and abroad than at this present moment? Our minds must grasp the problems of rehabilitation and reconstruction, politics and its weaknesses, world government and order, and most important peace and progress.

This afternoon we have discussed the basic privileges and responsibilities of an American citizen.

First: We are a Nation of free men. Free with a freedom based not upon an ocean or a line of guns, but upon a determined united people who must always bear upon their hearts the responsibility of preparedness and unity, that America will continue to lead the peoples of the world into the light of freedom.

Second: We enjoy in peacetime the right of free enterprise that has made America the land of opportunity and progress. We must guard this individual freedom as we do any other freedom, redelegating the power when peace comes to those who by law are granted it—the people.

Third: We are a democracy in which you and I control all policy. Our duty is to see that we do not change to a politocracy in which a few selfish men control our future.

Fourth: Our Nation and our generation is young with the virility and enthusiasm that marks youth. We must look to the American home to protect the youth of today and tomorrow by the backing, faith, and guidance of the family circle.

Finally, we are privileged to think as we please, to plan and build as we please, we must then think constructively not destructively, with the hope of benefiting not undermining the lot of our neighbors at home and abroad.

As we have discussed these privileges and responsibilities of an American citizen, all over the world American citizens in uniform are accepting without question those demands made upon them to win this war of survival. They fight and die without question for they have faith in us at home and our plans for the future for them. That faith puts the greatest responsibility of all upon us, that of proving that their trust has not been misplaced.

After this war is over, after the fighting and dying, when bleeding and killing is done, these responsibilities we talked of will become sterner realities. We must then put our thinking into action. It is then that we all must safeguard and nurture these heritages, freedoms, rights, and privileges for which our heroes have fought and died. We must then be determined to provide a better world, to preserve our code of decency, to build upon peace.

We must not in remembering our privileges and responsibilities be sentimental, soft, or weak. We must be prepared and, with clear thinking, be unshakable in our demand that all peoples shall be free and equal, hopeful and content. We will build a future of free opportunity that lies far above the realm of past experience. By preserving the privileges I have mentioned, and by keeping our responsibilities ever before us, we can and will as American citizens, continue to build this Nation strong and great. I thank you.

Federal Aid for Readjustment in Civilian Life of Veterans of World War No. 2

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALVIN F. WEICHEL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 18, 1944

Mr. WEICHEL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, after April 6, 1917, the orators stood on the courthouse steps and in the name of the community God-sped the youth of the land into the armed forces to make the world safe for democracy. They were patriots and heroes-to-be and lauded to the skies. They were promised much, and least of all their place back in the community, their job, and an opportunity to finish their schooling.

While they were fighting to make the world safe for democracy the shirkers and war contractors waxed fat and wealthy.

After the armistice and when these boys came back home, there was no one on the courthouse steps—those promises never bore fruit, they became a dream to the returning veteran. He was high and dry, with no job, and no help to put him back to the place he earned in his community.

To the war-rich, he was an unwelcome guest and Treasury raider who needed help. There was no place for the war veteran. He should take the hindmost. That was the reward of a thankless Government, expressing the shoddy gratitude of those who benefited most. There was disappointment and sorrow in the hearts of these men. It remains, even today. That time out of his life can never be recovered. These men do not want to see it happen again.

I believe that the present bill to provide Federal Government aid for the readjustment in civilian life of returning World War No. 2 veterans will lessen the shock to our veterans of this war, and ease their return to civil life, to help them carry out their ambitions and desires and again live the American way of life.

An Analysis of the So-called Roosevelt Foreign Policy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GERALD W. LANDIS

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I want to take this opportunity to call to the attention of the Congress and the country an interesting and informative article written by our colleague, Representative KARL E. MUNDT, of South Dakota, and appearing in the Republican magazine for May in the monthly feature written by Mr. MUNDT under the title "This Month in Washington."

In my opinion, Mr. MUNDT makes a pointed analysis of the deficiencies prevailing in the so-called Roosevelt foreign policy and clearly demonstrates the need for replacing ambiguities with action in the field of foreign policy:

THIS MONTH IN WASHINGTON

(By KARL E. MUNDT, Member of Congress, South Dakota)

April was a month for asking questions in Washington. May, June, and most of all, November may provide answers for the questions asked in April, but the interrogation point was the most used punctuation mark in Capital City typesetting machines all last month.

What was the real significance of the historical Wisconsin primary election? Who will be the Republican nominee for President? When will occur the opening of the second front in western Europe? Do Churchill, Stalin, and Roosevelt all three agree upon its need and wisdom, or is Churchill holding back with his approval? What are the actual tenets of the much-discussed, little-defined Roosevelt foreign policy? Which party convention will select the next President of the United States? Will Roosevelt run again? How seriously have the President's recurring illnesses and deteriorated health reduced his effectiveness as a wartime Executive? These and other questions were those which many did ask but few could answer during April of the third year of American participation in World War No. 2.

Among the questions asked and most eloquently evaded were those revolving around the central theme, "What is our American foreign policy?" All together, it seemed, Americans were awakening to the sickening sensation that their administration had no clear-cut foreign policy and that their President and State Department either had no post-war program and foreign policy proposals or were concealing them from those to whom they meant the most—the folks in uniform, and their families who were sacrificing so prodigiously to bring the victory which an accepted and acceptable foreign policy alone could make secure and fruitful.

Like a huge forest of countless individual trees coming to life in the spring, the American public from coast to coast was questioning the executive department, "Whither are we bound on foreign policy?" The glad promises and the fascinating phrases of the Atlantic Charter and the declarations following Cairo, Tehran, and Moscow had echoed and reechoed across the land. Now Americans were asking, "How achieve these goals? Have we a policy in mind for attaining the principles of justice so frequently repeated in these statements? If so, what is it? What is the working formula to be? Will Stalin follow it? Will Churchill? Does Roosevelt have a foreign policy in mind, since 'policy' is, after all, not a recital of desirable objectives but the process for getting them achieved?" Funneled into Washington from every town and city came an unending stream of questions about what was to follow the war.

Sparking the growing crescendo of voices, big and small, in and out of Washington, calling upon the President and the State Department to answer these questions, was the publication of the significant and somewhat startling (to New Dealers) result of the latest Twohey Analysis of Newspaper Opinion, which showed that editorial approval of the Roosevelt foreign policy had dropped from 80-percent support to a present-day low of 20 percent during the first 4 months of 1944. The decline of public approval of the Roosevelt handling of foreign affairs had been surprisingly persistent since the first of the year and had sharpened its precipitous drop noticeably in March and April. This was, indeed, a danger signal for the New Deal, whose campaign orators already were rehearsing their preliminary stump speeches to the effect that the President, and he alone, saw the world situation clearly enough to understand the type of foreign policy by which America could best serve itself and its associates in the family of nations. This was striking directly at the part of the propaganda campaign which was intended to secure the most votes. Hurried and harried conferences worked far into the night to do something to reverse the steady slide of public opinion away from the New Deal, away from the State Department, and away from President Roosevelt with respect to their administration of American foreign affairs.

At this juncture, 29 Republican "freshmen Members" of the House, headed by Congressman HALE of Maine, added fuel to the fire by writing a list of specific questions to Secretary of State Hull requesting that he reduce his theories and pretty phrases on foreign policy down to specific principles and tell them how he proposed to harness these principles into an operative foreign policy for approaching the goals he had in mind. As a result, a 2-hour conference was held between the Republican freshmen and the venerable Secretary of State, but out of it all came only the report from disillusioned House Members that "if America has a definite foreign policy, the Secretary of State did not tell us what it is." Then came the Secretary's radio address of Easter Sunday with more pretty phrases and additional noble objectives but a continued failure to take the people into his confidence as to the formula of action (i. e., policy) whereby we were to reach these goals.

In the meantime, Governor Dewey, Governor Bricker, and other Republican spokesmen were speaking of the world after the war and the methods of procedure by which the United States could fulfill its rightful role as a leader among nations. Even though Republican candidates and spokesmen lacked access to the diplomatic pouches, the tripartite conferences, the direct communication with foreign statesmen, the information secured by our system of counterespionage, and certain secret military data, the suggestions and statements of Republicans were fully as specific and appealing as the even more general and indefinite rhetoric coming from the President and the Secretary of State. In April, it became obvious that a great myth was being destroyed. The highly vaunted ability of the President to exemplify American leadership in foreign affairs was nowhere in evidence. Just as the "doctrine of indispensability" had long ago been exploded in connection with American domestic affairs, it was now being exposed as fallacious in the field of foreign relations.

A SERIES OF REACTIONS

As Americans heard from their executive officials new and strained redefinitions of what was meant by the Atlantic Charter, the Moscow Declaration, etc., they began to realize that what President Roosevelt was apparently providing us was a series of compromising reactions to proposals from Moscow and London rather than a clear-cut and courageous series of constructive suggestions stemming from American heritage and expressive of American concepts. The mightiest nation in the world in the fields of production, finance, and military prowess was becoming the most mute nation of them all in the field of foreign relations. The bargaining power of the United States in foreign affairs was rapidly being drained away, and opportunities, now neglected, might never again arise to enable this Republic to exert its influence for sanity and soundness upon a distraught world. Private citizens throughout the country, always alert to manifestations of ineptness by their leaders, joined with American editorial opinion and the Members of Congress in the growing conviction that either ill health, or ineptitude, or ill-concealed political ambition, or something was preventing the President from exerting appropriate and effective American influence in the determination of foreign affairs both with regard to the day-to-day decisions now being made and the post-war era in which the absence of wise decisions and determined leadership on our part might provide such a bloody aftermath.

A NEW DEAL RESPONSE

Near the month's end the administration made a frantic effort to stop the growing discouragement and discontent over its do-nothing attitude on foreign affairs. Secretary of State Hull at long last (the author of this column suggested the procedure in H. J. Res. 28, which he introduced the opening day of the 78th Cong.) agreed to the appointment of a bipartisan congressional committee to counsel with the State Department in the formation of an American foreign policy. Eight Senators were forthrightly selected, but for some as yet inexplicable reason the program by month's end had not been expanded to include a similar group of counselors from the House of Representatives. Stranger even than that, however, was the fact that nobody was selected on the Senate advisory committee to represent any State in the Union west of the Missouri River.

The entire Pacific coast region and the western section of the United States, vitally interested as it is in the problem of the Pacific and our post-war relations with the Orient, was deprived of representation on the senatorial bipartisan advisory committee. This writer addressed the House on April 26 with a recommendation to Secretary of State Hull that he "rectify this unfortunate oversight immediately" by the expansion of the eight-man advisory committee to include four Republicans and four Democrats from the House "chosen so as to give generous representation to the western area of the United States."

The eight Senators selected are able men and should be helpful in aiding the State Department to develop the outlines of a working and workable foreign policy to replace the magnificent but largely meaningless phrases which up to now have largely comprised what the administration would have Americans accept in lieu of foreign policy. The eight Senators are: CONNALLY, Democrat, Texas; GEORGE, Democrat, Georgia; BARKLEY, Democrat, Kentucky; GILLETTE, Democrat, Iowa; LA FOLLETTE, Progressive, Wisconsin; VANDENBERG, Republican, Michigan; WHITE. Republican, Maine; AUSTIN, Republican, Vermont.

THINGS THAT MAY HAPPEN

Among those who made news in Washington during April that may well create additional discussion in May were the indefatigable Vice President HENRY WALLACE. Since his promotion to the Vice Presidency from his former position as Secretary of Agriculture, HENRY WALLACE has become one of the most persistent orators of the New Deal. Sometimes referred to as the head of America's "boondoggle bund," the Vice President resurrected the New Deal the day after the President pronounced it dead, and from coast to coast has continued his appeals that new dealism continue to dominate the thinking and planning of the party in power. It is indicated that he is making considerable progress, that perhaps even "the Chief" secretly encourages his apoplectic appeals to the extreme leftists while he seeks support from constitutionalists on the ground that the extreme experimentalism of the New Deal is a thing of the past.

As this is written, it is expected that HENRY WALLACE will be sent to China as an ambassador of good will in the Orient and (perhaps) as a build-up to secure for him the additional prestige he may require to be F. D. R.'s running mate if the President seeks to extend his regime to 16 years.

Attorney General Biddle also stirred speculation in Washington as April ended by issuing orders resulting in the United States Army's taking possession of Montgomery Ward's Chicago store to add a new chapter in American history by making it the first time that an American Army has been used to deprive private owners of the right to operate their own department store. It is reported that Nazi history books record several such operations by Nazi storm troopers, but in America such a use of the powers of Commander in Chief of the armed forces is a strange, albeit unwelcome novelty. The entire Illinois Republican delegation in the House supported a resolution by Congressman DEWEY of Chicago to investigate this action and, the day this is written, forced through a resolution in the Rules Committee calling for an investigation of the whole occurrence including the use of the Army physically to eject Sewell Avery, president of Ward's, from his office. The picture of American soldiers in helmets and uniform being used to carry an American businessman forcibly from his own premises appeared in most of the country's newspapers as April made way for May. It deserved the space it received because it definitely made news as well as history in this Republic. But it also gave cause to serious thought on the part of many Americans of all political affiliations and all walks of life as they reflected upon the results of stemming from an administration left too long in power and given (or seizing) too much authority.

Price-Control Week

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS E. SCANLON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. SCANLON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks on the Price Control Act, I submit the following:

"Price Control Week," so designated at a citizens' conference held in the Old House Office Building April 19 and 20, by 400 delegates representing over 200 organizations, has just ended. I would like to tell you of the response this week has brought forth throughout the country. For every locality, from California to Connecticut, from individuals and organizations among farm, labor, and consumer groups have come resolutions, statements and telegrams, proving that the overwhelming sentiment among the people is to continue the Price Control Act with no weakening changes.

Mayors in 31 major cities, including Detroit, Chicago, Santa Clara, New York, St. Louis, Hartford, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, and scores of minor ones, including Alexandria, have officially proclaimed Price Control Week, calling on the citizens of their cities to cooperate with the local governments and O. P. A. in observing this week. Community activities in the form of mass meetings, door-to-door leaflet distributions, and so forth, in many cases sponsored jointly by a farmer-labor-consumer organization, set up specifically to educate the people on price control, have been carried on in over 50 cities throughout the country. In one city the board of education officially set aside one week as Price Control Week. In addition, I have received copies of resolutions and statements from local C. I. O., A. F. L., and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen groups, and from prominent individuals in different localities, all asking for immediate renewal of the Price Control Act with no amendments. The following is a statement sent me by 21 residents of northern Virginia:

During this week of May 17–24, designated "Price Control Week" by a citizens' conference called by the Congressional Committee for the Protection of the Consumer ("Fighting Sixty," THOMAS E. SCANLON, chairman), we, as residents of northern Virginia, feel it particularly appropriate to join with the hundreds of organizations and thousands of individuals throughout the country who are calling on Congress to renew the Price Control Act without any weakening amendments. We believe that a return to the inflationary policies of the last war would not only cause serious hardship to the individual budget, but would result in a general economic instability which would be disastrous to the successful prosecution of the war.

Those Members of Congress who will say they want to continue price control but are supporting a series of amendments which would emasculate O. P. A.'s enforcement powers and result in an immediate rise in rents as well as food prices, are in effect advocating inflation.

We urge you to vote down all amendments and to fight and vote for renewal of the Price Control Act with adequate enforcement funds for O. P. A.

Mrs. Anne C. Chew, Mrs. Ivan A. Booker, Mrs. Eugene Duffield, Mrs. Douglas Murray, Mrs. Virginia Durr, Mrs. Clark Warburton, Mrs. Dorothy Mooklar Surrey, Mrs. Janet W. Wiecking, Mrs. Chandler Morse, Mrs. David Wing, Mrs. Elizabeth B. Magruder, Mrs. Joseph Beard, Mrs. John Ide, Mrs. John W. Aldrich, Mrs. Jamieson C. Hollway, Mrs. Alexander C. Zabriskie, Mrs. Stanley Stewart, Mrs. Ernest L. Akerley, Mrs. Katherine Stone, Mrs. Louise Miller, and Miss Sarah Hartman.

Legislation in Washington

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLINTON P. ANDERSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, the legislative program which has engaged the attention of Congress since the 1st day of May has made it impossible for me to spend this month campaigning in my home State of New Mexico in anticipation of the primary to be held on June 6. This is our third State-wide primary and I regret my inability to cover my home State as fully and leisurely as I would have desired. During the first campaign in 1940, at which time I was first nominated for Congress, I covered virtually every corner of the State by automobile and I enjoyed the experience of those weeks.

In the campaign of 1942 we were in the midst of the war and while I was able to be in New Mexico for a part of the primary period, my work here kept me in Washington for much of it.

This year, however, I find conditions greatly changed. In serving on the House Appropriations Committee I have found my presence required here in Washington almost every day. The subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee to which I am assigned have been holding hearings steadily since the Easter recess and usually have held them simultaneously. I have felt that my place is here in the Capitol because of my association with the committee.

In addition, there have been matters of legislation in which I was particularly interested. First of all, of course, would come the so-called G. I. bill advocated by the American Legion and the great mass of service men and women in this country. It turned out that the vote was so overwhelming in support of this bill that I need not have been concerned about its passage, but there were important amendments and proposals being made on the floor when it was before the House. It seemed to me that my place was here.

When that bill passed, I had hoped to return immediately to New Mexico. However, the legislative program made provision for action on May 23 on the Boren bill to repeal the land-grant rates on railroads. I had received strong petitions from all classes of citizens of New Mexico urging me to be on hand to support this legislation. The railroad brotherhoods were outspoken in their support. The shippers of New Mexico and particularly the wholesale and retail stores of our State wanted the Boren bill passed and asked me to aid in that endeavor. I spoke twice while the bill was under consideration and did my part on the floor of the House to assist in its passage. We were all delighted that it passed by a substantial vote.

On May 24 the legislative program called for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill on which I had worked as a member of the subcommittee. Naturally I could not leave until after action on that bill had been completed.

The full Appropriations Committee had been called to meet on Thursday, May 25, to consider and report out the bill carrying funds for the national war agencies. Again, though it is my desire to be in New Mexico participating in a primary campaign, I find myself compelled to remain in Washington until after the war agencies bill has been reported to the House.

Under those circumstances I have had to abandon the plans which I had earlier formed to speak over every radio station in New Mexico and to visit as many towns as I could reach in a short but vigorous campaign. Instead, I have prepared a radio address which I have transcribed and which I am sending to the stations. In it I have tried to summarize my interests in the present national situation and my hopes for the future. I have tried to say to the voters of my State what things would interest me most if I am renominated and reelected to the Congress.

Following is the full text of this address:

Ladies and gentlemen, my fellow citizens of New Mexico: We are nearing our third primary election. Again I am asking the Democrats of New Mexico to nominate me for Representative in Congress, and I am using this means of reaching voters in the State. If conditions were more normal it would be much better to visit every section of New Mexico and discuss matters in the national field. But these are far from normal times. Transportation between towns is difficult to arrange and hard to justify. In addition, a whole series of appropriation bills has been clearing through the committee to which I am assigned and it has seemed to me better that I remain in Washington and attend to the tasks which involve the provision of funds for all types of agencies engaged in the prosecution of the war.

I hope that every citizen of New Mexico will understand that no one regrets these circumstances more than I do. I like to campaign. I like to go from one town to the next and meet people and talk with those whom I have met on previous trips. The necessity of bringing a message to the voters is no hardship to me, but this is not the year for the ordinary campaign and I will therefore restrict myself in travel and in time to the barest minimum.

When you vote in the Democratic primary for a nominee as Representative in Congress you seek to select someone who can handle in the Nation's Capitol the many individual problems that arise to perplex the citizens of the State. At the same time you look for a lawmaker whose vote on national issues will be representative of the sentiments of the people who have picked him,—someone whose experience and background may fit him to be an advocate of the development of all the diversified natural resources with which a State is blessed.

I would like to review a few things that might aid you in your consideration of the candidates for the Democratic nomination to Congress. The Democrats have been good enough to give me that nomination twice, and now, as I enter a third campaign, I feel in fairness to myself I should remind you of some of the things which the past few years have brought us. There are items which are peculiarly associated with the past 4 years and to which my vote has made its contribution.

For example, the first important vote that I was called upon to cast was on the question of lend-lease. This was early in 1941. The Congress was divided on the question. There were men in both political parties who took the floor of Congress to fight lend-lease legislation as vigorously as they could. All over America there arose America First committees to urge that we take no part in this overseas activity. It required no small amount of courage to vote for lend-lease in the face of the vigorous opposition that developed against it, but today with Russia still carrying the brunt of the fighting on the European Continent, the wisdom of lend-lease has been demonstrated.

I am glad that my first important vote as a Representative in Congress was for the furtherance of a policy which insured on the European Continent a vigorous opposition to the forces of Adolf Hitler and which in the intervening years has been used to strengthen the arm of Chinese fighting men as they have struggled against uneven odds to keep the forces of Hirohito out of Asia. We in America know who our enemies are because they have attacked us. We know that those foreign policies which started us on the road to preparedness for the inevitable conflict which came to us out of the skies at Pearl Harbor were wise and good.

I did not fail you on a single issue that related to foreign policy or the defense of America in those fateful months when the issue was not clear and when good judgment was necessary to determine what position your Representative should take on pending legislation. It is easy, now that we are in the war, to say that the supplying of goods and munitions to England, Russia, and China was both wise and timely, but it was not so easy in 1941 as will be testified by many of my friends in Congress who voted against the lend-lease program and have lived to regret it.

With the beginning of my second term as your Representative I was assigned to the Appropriations Committee. We as a young and growing State need sympathetic treatment from the Appropriations Committee of the House because it is in the House where all money bills, either for the raising of revenue or the expenditure of funds, must originate. I have tried my best to make my presence on that committee count for the benefit of New Mexico and if you send me back to Congress, I shall continue to look out for this State.

But it has not been only the interest of New Mexico that has attracted me to the Appropriations Committee. Every piece of legislation which calls for any expenditure of funds, either in its operation or its administration, comes before the Appropriations Committee for a final review. A bill may pass both Houses of Congress and be signed by the President, but unless money is appropriated for its administration it never becomes effective. Therefore, there must pass in review before this committee all the activities of a Government in peace and at war. We, as members of the committee, come to know the programs, policies, and personnel of the Government agencies. In that work your Representative has a chance to be constantly on guard for the welfare of his home folks.

Just recently these appropriation bills have been coming from our committee to the floor of the House. In them are items for the welfare of agriculture. I need not remind my Democratic friends how during this administration the farm-credit system, which had known a complete collapse under President Hoover, has been reborn and revitalized until it is of service to the farmers of this State and this country. We know that it has saved millions of dollars annually to those who labor in the production of food. We know that with it there has been a program of soil conservation aimed to preserve the soil and its fertility to serve us and the generations which follow us. We know that the agricultural adjustment program seeks to assure for the farmer economic equality with his friends in industry and that under it the gross income of the farmers of this country has moved upward from a total of $5,000,000,000 in 1932 to more than $22,000,000,000 in 1943.

It has been my pleasure as a member of the committee to hear the stories of these agricultural developments so vital to our State, and then to realize that in other fields there are parallel accomplishments. The Securities and Exchange Commission is dedicated to the task of protecting the investor's dollar. The social-security laws grant the aged a refuge against the threat of poverty and give aid to the blind and to dependent children.

The Congress has just enacted a tax-simplification law which relieves 30,000,000 of our 50,000,000 taxpayers from filing individual income-tax returns, a reform which will be generally approved throughout the Nation.

Yes, we see accomplishment all up and down the line. In the last few days we have been seeing it in our relationships to the soldiers, sailors, and marines now in the uniform of this country. The Congress has done a proper thing in the passage of what is known as the "G. I." bill because it recognizes that now is the time to guarantee to the men and women on the firing line decent hospitalization, proper educational opportunities, and adequate chances for employment or for the acquisition of land when the war is over and demobilization comes. The men and women who come back from this war will be more justly treated, more adequately housed, more properly trained and educated, and in cases of prolonged illness they will be cared for in more efficient and numerous veteran facilities than any group of people who have ever worn the uniform of America. The G. I. bill which just passed involves billions of dollars to insure that this job is properly done.

This veteran will come home—to what? He must not come home to a country where the transition from war to peace has plunged every type of industry and activity into depression and unemployment. We experienced that once and we should be capable of planning our future so that we need not experience it again. There are committees at work in both Senate and House to make sure that this transition will not be too abrupt nor will it be planned. Bills for the termination of war contracts are now coming out of these economic planning committees. The Government, of course, must be determined to close every war plant no longer needed for the war effort and must divert effort from those plants to the production of civilian goods and the restoration of our peacetime economy. We cannot and shall not submit to the temptation to keep war plants open solely because closing them will involve displacement of employees, but we must close the unneeded plants now while the employees can find other jobs and can still make a contribution to the war effort in those new positions. The Congress is at work on this, and I can assure you of my interest in the program and my desire to help in carrying it out.

In these stabilization plans for post-war years it is not industry alone that is receiving attention. The farmer has been given his safeguards for this difficult period. The Congress has authorized the Commodity Credit Corporation to make loans on basic crops at a 90 percent of parity rate for the first 2 years that follow the end of the war. This means that there will be no sudden chaos in farm prices, that the bottom is not going to drop out of everything the day that peace is signed.

But it is not alone in the interest of the farmer that legislation like this is enacted. After the last war we experienced a disastrous collapse in agricultural prices. Within 2 years the net income of the farmers had been slashed one-half. The farmers quit buying, and the factories closed. When the factories closed, the railroads had no business. Here started the vicious cycle that leads to depression and disaster. As a Nation, we experienced it all. Now we are determined that it shall not happen again when this war is over.

I can assure every voter in New Mexico that the intense interest which I have many times previously evidenced in forward-looking planning for the future of our State, will be continued during another term in Congress. I know of no subject which attracts me more than the utilization of the resources of New Mexico. Fluor spar has been brought into development in New Mexico. We have seen a tremendous expansion of our potash industry, and I am revealing no secrets when I say that in the files of the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey there are reports on many other minerals which promise a post-war future of industrial activity in our State.

We must not overlook the chance of grasping the hand of every forward-looking western Commonwealth that plans now for a better future. We can retain our industrial and agricultural activity. There is in the Congress a committee specifically charged with the responsibility of decentralizing industry Nation-wide and spreading it through the Western States where power and fine climate tend to beckon the industrial worker. It is not an accident that Florida, New Mexico, and California, all sunshine States, were the three fastest-growing States in the Union by the figures of the last census. We must continue this pace. We must be one of the builders of the West, builders of a new industrial empire which feeds and in turn is fed by the solid agricultural background our rich valleys have known for four centuries. I am happy to rededicate my efforts to such a cause. I can assure you that if I am returned to the Congress, the seniority which I have thus far developed and all the influence and prestige that I can build will be used to promote for New Mexico an era of unprecedented industrial and agricultural growth.

Water is a great resource of our State. I will continue to urge the fullest utilization of it and to protect the waters belonging to us against adverse appropriation by other Commonwealths and other claimants. We have not utilized as yet either the full flow of our rivers or the power possibilities which that flow creates. Your Representative in Congress must be constantly alert to opportunities to safeguard and develop every irrigation possibility.

Our future, however, is not alone in the earth or on the earth. It may lie as well in the skies. Aviation promises to be a great new field when this war is over and I am happy that from the very first day I came to Washington I have worked for the development of airports all over the State. Many of these which were surveyed originally by the Civil Aeronautics Administration have become Army training fields and air bases, and we must be constantly alert to see that they are fully utilized in commercial aviation in the post-war period.

But we shall not live our life in the West in isolation from the rest of America. Nor can America live its life in isolation from the rest of the world. I believe in and stand firmly for our country taking its position as a leader of the nations of the world in a cooperative effort, based on our natural resources and in response to what I am sure are the laws of God, to take steps that will bring about a future permanent peace that will save the next generation from undergoing the horrors of another war.

Our children today wear the uniform of our Nation and face the hazards of the most destructive fighting that the world has ever seen. We cannot help but wonder if civilization itself could stand a third war of these proportions. I shall not be indifferent to such a challenge. If I am a Member of the next Congress, as I have been the past two, I will try by my votes to insure your ultimate welfare as I did by a vote for lend-lease and for a whole host of steps which helped to prepare us for the struggle that was so definitely in our pathway.

I have appreciated the honor of serving you for 3½ years. They have been among the most difficult years in the history of this country. They give me a background for the task of representing you again and make me thereby better fitted to serve you.

If you feel that the record of my service in Congress has been good, if you feel that the position I occupy on important committees gives me a greater chance to serve New Mexico and the current war effort than any newcomer could have, if you feel that these momentous years have given me a background for a better understanding of the problems now arising, then I would indeed be appreciative of your vote for me on June 6.

Government Protection to Widows and Children of Deceased World War Veterans

---

OF

HON. ALVIN F. WEICHEL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 19, 1944

Mr. WEICHEL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as a service officer in the community, I have witnessed the last rites of many

World War veterans. These men earned the full mantle of citizenship by service in the armed forces.

With the blowing of taps another hardship began. The widow had to carry on, not only alone, but without the bread-winner. Even though the veteran had earned his full right to citizenship, yet this Government forgot his faithful wife. Widows of veterans of other wars were always recognized. Never in the world has such shabby treatment been given to widows of war veterans.

These women have earned this right as the attentive spouse of men who have fought to preserve this country. To many it has come too late. I am privileged to assist in enacting this worthy legislation, long delayed by those who merely give lip service to the veteran.

Address by Mark Ethridge Before the Oklahoma Democratic State Convention

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, May 17 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address delivered by Mark Ethridge, publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal and Louisville Times, before the Oklahoma Democratic State convention at Oklahoma City, on May 15, 1944. I have obtained from the Public Printer an estimate that the cost of printing the speech will amount to $173.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Harrington Wimberly has made a long-shot bet in asking me to Oklahoma to speak before this Democratic Victory Dinner. In the first place, I confess I never made a political speech in my life, and when I get through there will undoubtedly be those of you who will regard the record unbroken. In the second place, I find myself a little naive about politics. I'm the sort of person who, in spite of all their coy evasions to the contrary, regard it as certain that Roosevelt and Dewey will oppose each other in the fall elections. Both of them seem to me to be running as hard as horses at the head of a stretch in the Kentucky derby. Why they don't say so may be one of those imponderables or mysteries of politics which the lay mind is not supposed to penetrate.

Nevertheless, in what I say tonight I'm going upon the assumption that short of providential interference, the President will be nominated again, regardless of whether he wants to run and that, in fact, the only way he can refuse the nomination is to say "No," after it has already been made and that his opponent will be Governor Dewey.

I think it's a true assumption, and, besides, it makes this speech much easier; it makes a condition rather than a theory. It also makes it a good deal simpler for a good many people to make their choices without hesitation. Willkie's nomination by the Republicans would have disturbed independents and liberal democrats. A good many of them would have had to do some praying before they voted. But the course of the independents is now clear, and it is the liberal Republicans who will have to do the praying. Once again they have watched the history of their party repeat itself; once again the hands of the Old Guard within the Republican Party are bloody from the carcass of an assassinated liberal minority.

The plain truth is that only twice in the entire history of the Republican Party has the liberal element prevailed. In both instances Presidents representing that wing come to power entirely by accident. Abraham Lincoln represented political reform and the expression of human rights. He was elected because the Democratic Party was hopelessly split. Theodore Roosevelt represented political reform and the reassertion of human rights over the property rights and exploitation of the robber barons. He came to power through the assassination of McKinley and through the fortuitous circumstance that he was made Vice President because Boss Platt wanted him out of New York State.

Every other liberal movement within the Republican Party has been choked off. When Lincoln was killed, the party slipped into the reaction of Thaddeus Stevens and stayed there until Roosevelt came. When Theodore Roosevelt challenged reaction under Taft, he was almost bodily thrown out of the party. When La Follette challenged the reaction of Harding and Coolidge in 1924, the price of wheat suddenly went up and his movement was choked off. The Willkie of 1944 was a John, the Baptist crying in the wilderness of a Republican reaction. The same thing happened to Willkie that happened to John the Baptist.

When it is normal, the Republican Party is always reactionary. We had an eminent Baptist divine in Mississippi who said that if other denominations would leave poor white people and Negroes alone, all of them would be natural Baptists. By the same operation of natural laws, left alone, the Republican Party is the natural home of privilege seekers such as Joe Grundy; of labor baiters like Sewell Avery; of Liberty Leaguers, of American Firsters, of Roosevelt haters like John L. Lewis and Gerald L. K. Smith and Clarence Kelland and Colonel McCormick; of isolationists like Nye. There are of course a great many decent and nice people in the Republican Party, but they are in such bad company. Unfortunately, the bad company is in the ascendency and apparently in the driver's seat in the Republican Party this year.

Without too much justification, as far as I can see, but because they hate that man in the White House, because they yearn for the days of the twenties, because they want to be "rid of bureaucracy," because they want to smack labor down and go back to the good old days of goon squads, the Republican Old Guardsmen have undertaken to build a pretty fair Governor—and nothing more, nothing less—into a monumental intellect, into the white hope of the Republic. It is not that they are for Dewey; it is that they are against Roosevelt and all that he and his party stand for. They care no more for Dewey as a person than they do for Roosevelt; it is that they recognize in him an instrument for the destruction of the New Deal.

This, then, is a year of major decisions. This is not the year for a choice between personalities; a choice between a dashing young gang buster who has made the grade as Governor and a charming President. It is not a choice of Commanders in Chief to carry on the war. I shall discuss Mr. Roosevelt and the war later, but it is not as Commander in Chief, as good as he is in that role, that he has primary claim upon the affections and respect of the people of this country. The real choice the American people must make this year is between philosophies, between ideas that lie deep in their conflict. This year is the year of referendum upon the attitude toward the function of government and the works of the New Deal for the past 12 years. Domestically, the choice is between the destruction of the New Deal and the eradication of its emphasis, which is all the Republican Party has so far offered, and the preservation and implementation of the central idea of the New Deal, which is that the person is more important in a civilization than property; that government itself must, and should, be used to make freedom the expanding force it can be when the individual has the opportunity to develop his own soul. In the international field I'll believe the choice is between a good peace and a bad one.

I have no shame in confessing that I am, and have been, a new dealer for years. Yes; I'd like to see the budget balanced and always have felt that in normal times we should tax for what we spend. Yes; I get irritated by a good many things about the administration and with a good many people in it. Yes; I'd change a great deal of it. But I can say in all honesty that I'd infinitely rather have had Franklin D. Roosevelt for the past 12 years than Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover for their 12 years. In theory I don't like third and fourth terms, but I'll take a fourth term of Roosevelt with thanks to God for the chance in preference to a first term for Dewey, with all the forces that are behind him.

I sense every now and then a note of apology in Democratic voices. I'd like for somebody to tell me what the hell we should apologize for; or, since MIKE MONRONEY is an Oxford graduate, for what the hell should we apologize.

Is any Democrat ashamed that we took a banking structure which had had 5,770 failures in the 4 years of Hoover, with a loss to depositors and stockholders of more than $3,000,000,000, and restored confidence, virtually eliminated failures, insured losses?

Are Democrats ashamed that the H. O. L. C. has saved some 3,000,000 homes from foreclosure at a cost, in 10 years, of $65,000,000—with no net cost in the long run—where we had been willing to put a billion dollars into it? Are we Democrats ashamed that in the process of bailing out home owners, we rescued banks and trust companies, savings and loan associations, finance, mortgage and insurance companies and individual mortgagors? Are we ashamed that we lent public credit to rescue homes, to build new homes through the F. H. A., to rescue farms, to buy farms, to reduce tenancy, to stimulate cooperatives—things that cost the Government nothing, but meant everything to the individuals who received benefits they could not otherwise have received because credit sources were paralyzed by fear?

Are we not proud that through housing projects all over this country, we have taken people out of the squalor and filth of a rat-infested slums and given them a chance to breathe good air and their children a chance to be something better than gutter rats?

Are we ashamed that through the stimulus we have given to R. E. A. twice as many farms have been electrified in the past 8 years than were electrified in the 50 years before that? That the work of farm housewives everywhere has been lightened?

Do we apologize for the fact that we did tackle the problem of the Dust Bowl? That we have provided water facilities for more than 3,530,000 acres of arid land? That through soil-conservation measures we have rescued eroded, depleted, and abandoned land to the extent of more than 30,000,000 acres that are now in production in this war effort?

Are we ashamed that the cankerous growth of farm tenancy has been checked and that through the Farm Security Administration's efforts 950,000 small farmers have been led out of despair and back into useful, productive, and happy lives?

Are we ashamed that we took people off submarginal land and resettled them upon good lands? Are we ashamed that we have given encouragement to the reforestation of lands that had been denuded in the ruthless exploitation of timber barons? Or that a good deal of that reforestation work was done by C. C. C. boys we took off the blind baggage of railroad cars—boys who were prowling the country for jobs we could not give them?

Are we ashamed of T. V. A. and of its 21 dams? Of Grand Coulee, Roosevelt, and other great dams that have been built under this administration? But particularly of T. V. A., with the blessings it has bestowed upon the people of that 650-mile valley? Do we apologize for the fact that its influence has reduced electric power rates all over the country? That it has provided flood control and opened new lands to farmers? That it has provided in this war 12,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity without which our war production could not have approached what it has been? Do we apologize for the fact that its research department has opened up new means of livelihood for the 4,500,000 people of an area as big as Scotland and England? Do we apologize for the fact that a once-desolated, flood-ravaged, poverty-stricken valley is now not only one of the great demonstration laboratories of the earth, but one of the happiest place in which to live? Do you people of Oklahoma apologize for that? Certainly the people of that valley do not?

Are we ashamed of our more enlightened treatment of the Indians under John Collier? Of our new national parks and national monuments? Of the public works program which added permanent wealth in the way of roads, bridges, dams, stream control, public buildings, playgrounds, parks, swimming pools—recreational centers of all kinds?

Are we ashamed that we gave vocational education to a great many youngsters who have since used it in the shipyards and factories of the country in the war effort?

Are we ashamed that we fed the poor and the unemployed? Are we ashamed that because of us, old people are drawing pensions all over the country and businesses and employees are jointly setting up more retirement funds and more unemployment funds? Are we ashamed that through us, the crippled and the blind receive aid from the Government? Do we dare apologize for the fact that we have enlightened child labor laws, or minimum wage and maximum hours laws?

Do we have to apologize for what we have done for, or to, business? In 1932 alone, 32,000 small businesses failed. The country's net income was 40 billions of dollars; its employment 37,000,000. In 7 years after that national income had risen to 70 billions, employment to 45 billions; small business failures were negligible and the profits of industry, which had begun to regain confidence and cry about the New Deal, were bigger than ever. Net profits of 2,480 index companies in 1939 had risen more than $1,250,000,000 from the year before. War, of course, has carried national income to $150,000,000,000, but I have deliberately not used war-year figures. Long before the war came, the country was over its Harding-Coolidge-Hoover created headache.

Did we do any injustice in the Truth-in-Securities law, or in the Securities Exchange law, under which the honest broker is given a virtual certificate that his stocks and bonds are honest and the crooked broker is driven out of business with the crooked promoter? Do we have any apology for the holding company law, for utilities regulations? For our attacks upon monopolies and cartels that have as their purpose gouging the consumer?

Have we any apology for what we have done for labor? Let us face that question honestly. Of course, wartime strikes have irritated us all; the only wise thing that Coolidge ever said was that nobody has a right to strike against the public safety anywhere, any time. I have no defense of any wartime strike, but I do want to point to the report of the Truman committee that strikes in mining, manufacturing, and construction in 1943 resulted in a loss of manpower of less than one-fourth of 1 percent of manpower actually used. In the same year, total manpower contributed by labor exceeded that used in 1939 by 76 percent.

The strike picture has been exaggerated deliberately to discredit labor. But it is not the strike picture which primarily irritates the enemies of labor. It is that they cannot reconcile themselves to the fundamental principle of the Wagner act: That labor has as much right to organize for bargaining as capitalists have to pool their money to conduct a business. When the Sewell Averys, the Tom Girdlers, and the Ernest Weirs learn that, this will be a happier country.

Of course we need new labor legislation; I advocate Federal chartering and Federal regulation of labor unions, particularly when they enjoy national power. I advocate legislation that will bring them under common antitrust laws; that will drive out the racketeers; that will make them thoroughly democratic and responsible in every way. I have no hesitation in saying that, but neither have I any hesitation in saying that I want to see the labor code of rights and charter of responsibilities written by a friendly even if sternly insistent administration, not by one determined to destroy organized labor itself. Labor's advances have been bloodily won or grudgingly granted by the opinion of this country. We have translated them into fundamental law. I do not want to see a few men in the Republican Party take them away, or restore to America the form of industrial fascism we had until the late twenties.

If we have no apology to labor, we certainly have no apology to the farmer. He has been the chief beneficiary of the Roosevelt administration.

When Roosevelt took over, farm mortgages had risen 300 percent in 20 years to $9,600,000,000; mortgage interest took 11.4 percent of the total cash farm income. More than a million farms had been lost by foreclosure and farmers were forcibly preventing foreclosures in some sections of the country. Farm income had dropped from twelve billions in 1929 to five billions in 1932. Wheat was down from $1.30 a bushel to 53 cents; cotton from 17.9 cents to 5 cents.

Today, the gross cash farm income, because of the war, is almost $20,000,000,000, or 400 percent more than in the darkest Hoover days, but again, I shall not take war figures.

In 1939, farm mortgage charges were 40 percent below 1928; the average rate on farm mortgages had gone from 5½ to 6 percent to 3½ to 4 percent and mortgage interest took 4.4 percent of the total cash income as against 11.4 under Hoover. Rehabilitation loans had increased the net worth of borrowers by 37 percent. Farm income had almost doubled from 1932 to 1937. The farmer's income in relation to industrial income, to take-home pay of the industrial workers, is at parity where it was at 82 percent of parity at the depth of the depression.

No class of American citizens has benfited nearly as much as the farmer from the 12 years of Roosevelt. Before that, from the beginning of the deflation of 1921 until 1932, he was the most despairing of all our citizens; the most hopeless and the least helped. It must be said in all fairness that most of the things that were done to benefit him were done at his request: Restricted production, holidays in production, subsidies, crop control, soil conservation. No matter how some of his professional representatives, or lobbyists feel about it now, the farmer has profited more than any other citizen.

I have not found much in this record to be ashamed of. Are you people in Oklahoma a little shame-faced when "PAPPY" O'DANIEL travels here to tell you that you should get rid of some of those 3,000,000 bureaucratic "flunkies"? If you are, I suggest you look into the fact that two-thirds of them are civilian employees of the Army and Navy; that 6 percent of them are in purely war agencies such as War Shipping, O. P. A., W. P. B., etc.; and that of the remaining 29 percent, 12.4 percent are employed in the Post Office, with its greatly expanded war service. "Pappy's" 3,000,000 "flunkies" finally get down to 467,841 employees for all other agencies of Government, such as Commerce, Treasury, State, Agriculture, and the independent agencies. If "Pappy" were truthful, he would probably say that he saw no sense in any such foolishness as social security, Federal crop insurance, wage and hour, National Labor Relations Board, the Securities and Exchange Commission, Federal deposit insurance, the T. V. A., and the United States Maritime Commission—the new major bureaus or agencies created by the New Deal. That's where the new permanent bureaucracy has come in. But, oddly enough, it has not been against these bureaus that the great howl against bureaucracy has come; it has been largely against war-created agencies.

The greatest complaint of all of us has been against those agencies that have made us pay taxes to buy the instruments of war for the boys we have sent abroad or into training; against the agencies that won't allow us to make as much money as we want to out of the business of mass killing or that will not allow us to salt away as much of this blood money for post-war spending as we want to; that won't let us have butter and nylons when we want them; that won't let us have all the gasoline that we want to have; that take our boys and don't take somebody else's boy.

I remember hearing from Oklahoma the complaint that you were being rationed on gasoline when you had gasoline and oil running out of your ears. I could not help applying that type of thinking to Kentucky. We have about 50 percent of all the synthetic rubber the country makes. Suppose we had said, "Keep your damned gasoline, but you can't have any rubber for your cars." You'd have been back in that surrey with the fringe on top very shortly. Or suppose that we, making a good deal more than 50 percent of the legal whisky that's made in this country (and pretty nearly 100 percent of all that's fit to drink) had taken the position: "All right, you people in Oklahoma have oil running out of your ears; we have whisky running out of our noses. You keep your oil and drink it and we'll keep our whisky." The drought that brought your Dust Bowl condition would have seemed like a monsoon season to you.

You see how silly is this business of complaining against rationing. No honest person wants any advantage out of it; no patriotic person wants anything more than that the sacrifice shall be equal. Nobody wants it to last any longer than the war makes it necessary, and nobody intends that it shall. The most contemptible position the Republicans have taken during the whole war is to try to capitalize upon dissatisfaction about purely wartime restrictions.

We Democrats have no apology for our conduct of the war. It is the most effective and most efficient war ever fought. Our people at home are better cared for, better fed, and better informed than they have ever been. Prices have been better controlled; in comparison with the rise in prices in World War No. 1, O. P. A. has saved the American people $87,000,000,000, or $169 per person, since the war began, at a cost to them of $1.82 per person.

Our civil liberties have been better preserved than ever before. Sewell Avery can still call the President a liar without being shot—and has.

Our soldiers are the best equipped in the history of the world. We are not borrowing guns from anybody, as we did in World War No. 1. We are lending or leasing or giving our allies great parts of their implements of war. Those who sneered at the President's promise for 50,000 planes a year, including Mr. Dewey, have eaten their sneers in the face of a production of 100,000 or more planes a year. In 2½ years we have built an armada greater than the world has ever known, and with it a bridge of merchant ships making a highway of the seven seas. From inland yards that never knew a sea-going ship, landing crafts and destroyer escorts set their course for Tarawa and Kwajalein. No nation in world history has so quickly summoned its natural and physical resources, its factories, and its manpower to its defense. As Jonathan Daniels put it, "We as a people are the makers of the most amazing mobilization of force for a purpose in the annals of mankind." That purpose, of course, is freedom. That we are so well aware of our purpose and that we are so willing to throw so much into the preparation for the great sacrifice upon which we are about to embark with the invasion, is due primarily to the leadership of the President.

If all these things be true, what is there left to apologize for? For a huge debt? Certainly we have it; the war has been responsible for most of it and will be responsible for more. Without what the debt is buying, we would have no freedom. Without what it bought in the days of peace before this war, we would have had the continued erosion of the soil and of a people. We had a big debt when the war started, but we had all this restored land, all this created wealth, all these rescued souls of a despairing people to show for it. We have physical resources, human resources, and spiritual resources to put into the asset column and dwarf the liability.

Is anybody inclined to count Mrs. Roosevelt a party liability? If so, I think Florida and Alabama have answered that. She was made a direct issue there in the nastiest sort of campaign based on race hatred that could have been devised. And those who made the issue got the rebuke they deserved; the rebuke they will get from people all over this country. There is nothing about Mrs. Roosevelt for which to apologize. She does deserve an apostrophe; it can be found in the Twenty-third Psalm: "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

I have one final question of Democrats: Have we anything to apologize for in our foreign policy?

Are we ashamed that long before we knew we should need their friendship and their help, we reversed our policy toward the republics on this hemisphere, abandoned imperialism and dollar diplomacy and entered upon the good-neighbor policy which has been so productive for all of us?

Are we ashamed that Mr. Hull worked unremittingly to tear down the tariff walls which surely must come down if the world is to live at peace?

Are we ashamed that Mr. Roosevelt saw so far ahead of the rest of us? That he saw ahead what Hitler had in mind, what Japan had in mind and that from 1936 on he tried desperately to warn us to prepare while he was trying to stave off what became inevitable?

Have we anything to apologize for, in the light of history, in the whole record of the Democratic Party in foreign affairs? For the fact that every major declaration, every major advocacy touching international cooperation for the maintenance of peace has been made by a Democratic President in this century?

The country should take warning at the moment that while the Republicans are "talkin' purty" (as the lyrics writer has you saying in the play Oklahoma)—while the Republicans are "talkin' purty" again in international affairs, it is the talk of opportunism. The Republican Party is isolationist at heart. It opposed this war until Pearl Harbor made opposition moot. It has made no declaration as a party equivalent to the Atlantic Charter or to Mr. Hull's outline of our foreign policy. Mr. Hannegan was entirely correct when he referred to Governor Dewey as a man who copies down the answers on his little slate when the examination is all over.

Mr. Dewey was against "deals" with Russia; by two stages he has now come to the idea that maybe Russia and China ought to be let in on the Anglo-American government of the world. Governor Dewey was against lend-lease when it was proposed. He told reporters in Philadelphia January 15, 1941, that it "would bring an end to free government in the United States, to abolish Congress for all practical purposes." In his Wisconsin campaign of 1940, his philosophy was to keep away from Europe; in 1944, he wanted to "discourage the growth of rampant nationalism."

If Mr. Hannegan is not right that Governor Dewey copies the answers after they are all in—after the polls and State elections tell him public sentiment—then he is, in the words of the song from Oklahoma, "Jus' a fellow who cain't say 'no.' His corn is as high as an elephant's eye." There is not the slightest consistency in his foreign policy because there is no sincerity in it.

Therein lies a great danger to the American people. Dewey is playing with us the same deceptive game that Harding played. Harding stood piously on his own front porch at Marion and solemnly assured this country that he was for a society or an association of nations to preserve the peace. In a speech on August 28, 1920, Mr. Harding said:

"There are distinctly two types of international relationship. One is the offensive and defensive alliance of great powers * * *. The other type is a society of free nations, or an association of free nations or a league of free nations animated by consideration of right and justice instead of might and self-interest, and not merely proclaimed an agency in pursuit of peace, but so organized and so participated in as to make the actual attainment of peace a reasonable possibility.

"Such an association I favor with all my heart and I would make no fine distinction as to whom credit is due. One need not care what it is called. Let it be an association, a society or a league or what not. Our concern is solely with the substance, not the form thereof."

With that assurance from Harding, 31 of the most eminent men in the Republican Party, including Lyman Abbott, Robert Brookings, Nicholas Murray Butler, John Grier Hibben, Herbert Hoover, Charles Evans Hughes, A. Lawrence Lowell, Elihu Root, Henry L. Stimson, Oscar Straus, Henry W. Taft, William Allen White, George W. Wickersham, and Lyman B. Wilbur, went to the country with a statement that the "true course to bring America into an effective league to preserve peace" was to follow Mr. Harding.

"The Republican Party," the statement said, "is bound by every consideration of good faith to pursue such a course until the declared object is obtained * * *.

"We therefore," the statement ended, "believe that we can most effectively advance the cause of international cooperation to promote peace by supporting Mr. Harding for the Presidency."

Mr. Harding was elected, but did these honorable men in the Republican Party prevail? Were they able to redeem that faith which they had pledged for their party? History gives the answer to that. It also gives eloquent testimony to te innate determination of the Old Guard that, as Mr. Dewey said in Wisconsin, we shall keep "completely out of the affairs of Europe," no matter how badly the course of those affairs jeopardizes the peace and civilization of the world.

Domestically the Republican Party for most of its life has been the instrument of big business, the exponent of laissez-faire, the protector of the propertied. Internationally it has symbolized imperialism rather than the good-neighbor spirit, the spirit of mutual security. There is nothing in its present policy or in the roster of its candidates for the presidency to indicate that, having choked off its liberal movement, it is not again at the dead center of normalcy in domestic affairs and in an imperialistic mood internationally.

That is not good enough. Anything short of taking our full place in world affairs is an invitation to another war. Anything short of recognition that what we are going through is in fact a counterrevolution against the tyrannies of authoritarianism and that the trend of the world when this war is over will be toward the greater emphasis upon the dignity of the individual—the trend to the left, if you care to call it that—will put us out of step with the peoples we have fought to save. Anything short of the recognition that there is no turning back in our domestic affairs; that we cannot go back to 1914 or even to 1940, is the sheerest stupidity.

Anything short of the recognition that we cannot go back to this will-o-the-wisp thing called free enterprise, which never has existed since the first regulatory law was passed by the Continental Congress, will lead us into trouble. We must know in our hearts that there must be full employment for employables and that if private business doesn't provide for it, Government must. We must know in our hearts that we will never go back on the standards of fair working conditions or wages that we have set. We must know in our hearts that we will never relax regulations made in the public good—regulations born of the necessity of protecting the individual from the brute power of pooled money or influence.

We must know that the demand for an earned security—particularly for greater medical security in the rural areas—will not die out, but will swell in chorus until the Government does what the medical profession cannot do. We must know that the standards of health, housing, nutrition, and all the other things that make for a good life are not matters to be left lightly to free enterprise, but are matters of concern to all of us as a people who make a Government; as a people determined to use their Government as an agency to secure the welfare and enhance the happiness of all of us.

A great decision is to be made this year. Both the mind and the heart will figure in it. Both of them argue for a Democratic victory.

Keynote Speech by Gov. Raymond Baldwin, of Connecticut, Before the Vermont Republican State Convention

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WARREN R. AUSTIN

OF VERMONT

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, May 23 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the keynote speech delivered by Hon. Raymond E. Baldwin, Governor of Connecticut, before the Vermont Republican State Convention, at Montpelier, Vt., May 17, 1944. I am advised that printing the address will exceed by one-third of a page the two pages allowed under the rule, and that the printing will cost $121.33.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

When the invitation came from your Governor and from your State committee to address this convention I felt highly honored. I was pleased—because this grand old State of Vermont is the symbol of sound Republicanism, of faith in the American ideal, and I told my good wife that to be asked to address your convention was perhaps an indication that your stanch Republicans here in Vermont agreed with my brand of Republicanism. But she said that that didn't necessarily follow—that Vermont was such a strong Republican State that nothing that I might say could do any harm. But I do feel highly flattered at your invitation.

For a long time now I have known and admired the leaders in your party. Your Governor, Bill Wills, is a warm personal friend. I admire him for his forthright leadership, for his statesmanship—for his outstanding Vermont and New England qualities. He is known for these qualities, not only throughout New England, but throughout our broad country.

We all admire his insistence that the rights and powers of the States in matters of State and local concern be preserved. First by the taxing power—then by the depression—and now by the exigencies of war—there are those who believe in boosting the Federal power to the control of everything, hoping thereby to build up a bureaucracy, supported by the Federal Treasury, to destroy the States and keep themselves in power indefinitely. Independent, vigorous State governments are the best guaranty we can have against the tyranny that centralized bureaucracy may bring. We all love the United States. We all support our common, united country, with our blood and with our treasure. But we want our country to continue as the United States of America—and not become a multiplication of bureaus filled with political favorites and incompetents.

Your Senators, WARREN AUSTIN and GEORGE AIKEN, are likewise known, not only in Connecticut but throughout our country, for their statesmanlike qualities. It was a rare and happy experience to work 4 years ago with GEORGE AIKEN who was then your Governor. And in these recent months it has been an inspiration to be associated with your Senator, WARREN AUSTIN, particularly at the Mackinac conference, where he made such an outstanding contribution to the thinking of our people in the important field of foreign affairs. And I have known and admired your Congressman, CHARLES PLUMLEY, for his many and able works in the public interest, not only of his own people but of all New England and the country as well.

We folks in Connecticut feel a strong kinship with you folks here in Vermont. Back in the early days many of our people migrated to your beautiful State and played an important part in its founding and development. We are proud of our State of Connecticut, and it is, indeed, a tribute to Vermont, that any Connecticut Yankee would prefer the Vermont hills. And we Republicans down in Connecticut feel a strong kinship with you Republicans in Vermont. There have been years recently when we turned our longing Republican eyes to Vermont and to Maine—the only two Republican States to keep their Republican faith in spite of everything. For in those unhappy days of the depression, which ended in a World War, many Americans went off after strange and unknown gods. The golden calf looked pretty good to them—at times it looked almost productive. But that never happened in Vermont. Vermont set up no new and strange altars. Vermont hauled down no banners. She maintained her faith in her American heritage. She clung to the American ideals of thrift and hard work and rugged honesty, both in thought and deed, and, above all, she kept her faith in the American way.

This convention is an important part of the American process of choosing a President of the United States. I am convinced, that the man whom your delegates select as their candidate will win the November elections. Yours is a solemn, as well as a vitally important duty. Some people have said that it is unfortunate that we have to go through a political campaign in these days of war. Such talk demonstrates a complete misunderstanding of our American system. It shows a lack of comprehension of American methods and American traditions. We would give to our Axis enemies one of the best propaganda weapons that they could possibly have if we did not go through with this election in true American fashion. They would say that our American system, which we boast so loudly about, is too important to stand the ravages of war. They would say that the American people were afraid to hold an election, that they were too weak to carry out the processes of their Government on the home front, while their men and women are fighting to maintain them on the battle front. This campaign and election, carried out in true American style, will demonstrate to our enemies and to all the world that we believe firmly in our American institutions of government and can make them work—war or no war.

You have no doubt heard some people say that criticism of the administration in power will breed disunity. Let me say to you that our kind of government lives by criticism. In no other way can the thoughts and the opinions of all of our people be made vocal, and being made vocal, be translated into action—action that means a more effective prosecution of the war on the home front—action that means more vigorous support of our fighting forces on the battle front, action that means building ever stronger the States and the whole United States to solve the problems of an ever-changing future.

No; we Americans know what this campaign is all about. Perhaps our enemies don't. But whether they do or do not is of no consequence to us. Whatever may be our political affiliation we are first of all Americans. When we make a decision by our ballots, we stand by it—we are more firmly united—more determined than ever.

You will no doubt hear a lot of talk in these coming days and weeks about not changing horses in the middle of a stream. On that very point I would like to submit to you an answer that was once given to this argument in another period of emergency. It is a good answer. I quoted it to the Maine Republicans a month ago. It seemed to appeal to them. I think it will appeal to you. I quote:

"There will be many in this Nation during the coming months who will implore you not to swap horses crossing a stream. But it seems to me that the more truthful, the more accurate plea to the people of this Nation should be this: 'if the old car, in spite of frequent emergency repairs, has been bumping along downhill on only two cylinders for 3 long years, it is time to get another car that will start uphill on all four.'"

Now that appeals to me as a bit of sound thinking. It was never sounder than it is in these days. But I am not the first one to say it. In fact a Republican did not say it. It was said on April 18, 1932, by Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

This year's election is no ordinary contest between political parties. Such a contest at such a time—with our very destiny hanging in the balance—would be intolerable. This, however, is a contest which does involve our very destiny. This is an election in which the American people will choose—not merely the party that will govern them, but more important than that—they will choose the direction in which, in the dangerous period that lies ahead of us, they will go. No; this is not a contest merely between Republicans and Democrats. It is a contest between two different ways of life, two fundamentally different philosophies of government. Into such a struggle the Republican Party enters with confidence—confidence borne not of self-esteem, but confidence borne of esteem in the American people. The American people know where they want to go. They want a leadership that will begin to get them going. The American people know what they want to achieve. They will demand a leadership that believes that what the people want is worth achieving. The American people know what kind of a world they want to see when this war is victoriously ended. They will choose the kind of leadership that believes in the kind of a world they want—believes in it, not in word only, but in the innermost reaches of their hearts and minds.

I believe that the Republican Party has come to the Nation for such a time as this. We do not mean one thing when we are out for votes and another thing when we get down to business. We are not a house divided against itself—half Socialist and half free enterprise; half Democratic and half New Deal; one thing north of Mason and Dixon's line and another thing south of it. The Republican Party is the same party, all the way through, from Vermont to California and from northernmost Michigan to the Deltas of the Mississippi. The Republican Party is not a carry-all or omnibus for all sorts of warring minorities. It is a Nation-wide vehicle for the American faith. What it really is and the direction in which it truly is going are what the American people want. And they are going to vehemently express that want by their votes in the election next November.

Our task in this campaign is a twofold one. It is on the one hand to change; on the other hand to build up. But it is not to tear down all of that which has been put on our statute books in the last 12 years. Much of that, we believe to be in imitation of the best Republican tradition, the tradition of William McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt and Calvin Coolidge. No; our task there is to build those things up so that they will really and truly work, so that they will be supported by a sound American economy and not have to depend upon multitudinous, confusing regulations, ever-increasing taxes, and constant drains upon public savings. We believe that social welfare depends upon the productivity of all of our people. We believe that social progress comes from increasing and expanding our agricultural and industrial production. We do not believe that either can be permanently achieved through a redistribution of the life savings of our people.

In the post-war years we must change the spirit of defeatism that comes from the belief of the New Dealers that there are no more frontiers. We must preach that it is an American virtue to first ask about opportunity—that it is an American virtue to expect a bill of duties to accompany every bill of rights—that it is an American virtue to regard government as a joint undertaking among equals in behalf of the common good. Those are the things that are going to count most after the victory is won in this war. But through the long years before this war we have been told that America's economic progress had come to the end of the road—that as Americans we are no longer required to get up and get going but rather that all that is expected of us is to settle down through youth and age as permanent dependents of the State. We cannot forget that our economic ills, after 9 long years of tinkering, had not been solved by this New Deal administration's "planned economy," when war began for us.

We know now that one of these days we will win this war. We know that because the men who are fighting that war for us are the winning kind. They have the stuff that makes victories. We know it too because on the home front—in factories and on the farms—in multitudes of civilian activities—the American people are demonstrating, too, that they have the stuff. On our global battle fronts and here at home where the materials for those battle fronts are being made Americans are showing every day and every hour that our country will never accept a spirit of defeatism—that our country is a growing, vital thing—that our American system built up through long years of toil and sacrifice is the best system in the world.

But while the victory of our arms now seems certain, what we are going to do with that victory is not so certain. When we have won this war, we will have a world on our hands that is bruised and broken. We will have an America that is dislocated and confused. Indeed that day of our certain victory will at the same time be filled with many uncertainties. It will be a day of joy. It can be a day of great opportunity—the greatest that the American people have ever had spread out before them.

Well, as we look forward to that day, there are, it seems to me, three things of greatest consequence. These three things are the things which in their hearts the American people truly want.

First, we want our victory to be speedy—we want it to be sure. We want no halfway victory. We want an all-out victory, a victory that this time can be made to stick.

That is the first Republican obligation—not merely to win, but to speed the day of our winning. If the victory comes slowly it will not be for lack of courage among those who fight. It will not be for lack of military leadership among the great soldiers and sailors who direct the fighting. If victory comes slowly—it will be because a speedy victory calls for more than the genius of our military and naval leaders and the courage of our fighting men. Speedy victory calls for an aroused Nation—a Nation that is not only doing the best with its hands and its mind—but a Nation that is unselfishly doing its best in its heart and in its spirit.

We have been a long time in this war. We have come a long way. But too many have almost come to accept this war as a part of our everyday lives. We need a revival of spirit, a new and fresh leadership, some new players on the team who can carry the ball from the 25-yard line across the goal. A Republican victory will add nothing to the experience of our military and naval leadership—it will add nothing to the superb courage of our fighting men. But it will add new life to the home front and produce a new, vigorous, fighting spirit that can and will bring speedy victory. When the people know that they are firmly on the American road and that the same spirit which made America great in the first place will continue after the victory is won, a tremendous lift will be given to our whole country. Republican leadership will give a new and fresh start to the solution of the still unsolved and intricate problem of the home front.

Secondly, when our boys come home, they will want from us an America in which there is a place for them. They will want jobs, good jobs at good pay, pay out of which they can build their own homes and raise their own families, as independent, self-respecting Americans, looking and finding opportunity, making their own future secure, taking their part in building an even better America.

There is nothing that Government, in and by itself, can do to see that after the war there are opportunities enough and jobs enough to go around. Jobs come from an ever-increasing and expanding production. Jobs do not come from Government, because Government does not produce. Government lives off the production of others.

If, after the war, there are jobs enough to go around, it will be because America is a producing America. But if Government cannot produce jobs, Government certainly can prevent their production. Government can hamper and hobble and hamstring the instruments of production. It can keep the productive genius of America under a cold shower or in a dog house where for 9 long years before the war the present administration did its best to keep it. There are no jobs in that. All there is is a job in the W. P. A.

What is required of us as Republicans is really the unleashing of America's productive capacities. We can meet that requirement, for the Republican Party is the party of production. It has in it an overwhelming majority of the men who make our American productive system click. That is why so many Republicans were let out of the dog house and called to Washington in such a desperate hurry when the war first hit us. That also is why in 26 States—the States where the greatest part of our war materials are being produced—American citizens have elected Republican administrations. The people knew that this was no time for tinkering. The Nation needed the goods. The people, therefore, called on those who knew how to deliver.

Our Republican victory next fall will produce jobs in this post-war world, because Republicans know what it is that jobs are produced by. Republicans know that government dependence may be good enough for an economic old age, but they also know that only the full-blast operation of our productive system is good enough to provide the jobs that are in turn good enough for our economic youth. If there is one thing above all others that this war has demonstrated it is this irrefutable fact—the American productive system is sound and good. It is workable and efficient. If it had not been we would never, in this short space of 2½ years, have been able to turn out the materials of war in a manner to make the whole world marvel at us, in a manner that really even surprises us.

Finally, when this war is won, when the American productive system is on its way again, then we will want, for ourselves and for our children, some insurance that there will be no more war. That is something that will require more than a formula. That is something that it will take more than mere words to win. You can't get world peace out of a formula. The threat of war cannot be driven from America and from the children of America by pious declarations or secret conclaves or one-man statesmanship. The peace must be a people's peace. That is the only guaranty that it will be permanent.

Some people say that they like the President's foreign policy but that they do not like his domestic policy. But we must all remember this. If you reelect the present administration you must take its domestic policy along with its foreign policy—you must take what you say you like with what you say you dislike. We are coming rapidly to understand that our domestic policy is quite as important in world affairs as our foreign policy. Indeed, they are inseparable. If we are to assume our rightful position of trust and responsibility to ourselves and to the rest of the world, in organizing the world for peace, we must be very strong at home. We won't get very far in settling world problems if we can't settle domestic ones. A sound national economy therefore is prerequisite to our successful participation in plans for world peace. We cannot then separate our domestic problems from our world problems.

We are now being told, and we will be told over and over again in this coming campaign, that the peace of the American people is something which only one man can bring to pass. If we accept that counsel, there will be no permanent peace. What we are trying to disclose to our neighbors in the world, is not the desires and the idealism of one individual. What we must try to disclose to the world are the desires and the idealism of the American people as a whole, the desires and the idealism that come, not from one man or from one political party, but spring from the hearts and minds of all Americans of good will, regardless of party. We tried a one-man peace last time. To the people of Europe the President of the United States was their sole savior. And let me say, as a Republican and as a veteran of the last war, that I admired tremendously the courage and the idealism of that great man. The unfortunate part of it all was that, to the people of America, the President of the United States appealed as their sole advocate. And the peace failed. It failed because it was not made the people's peace. It was a one-party, and in large part a one-man, effort. This time the peace effort must be a common, united American effort.

The tragedy of the present is that history is now repeating itself. The people of Europe are being told, and the people of the United States are being told, that only one man and only one party understands America, understands world problems, and hence alone is capable of making a lasting peace. As Republicans, we can point with unbounded pride to the efforts made by leaders of our own party in the past to bring permanent world peace. Root, Taft, Hughes, and many others in their day labored diligently and effectively and patriotically in the interests of world peace. But when, after the armistice in the last war, we approached the settlement of world affairs, these Republicans were left out. The approach to the peace table was a partisan approach—it was a one-man approach—and it failed.

And while there has been able and intelligent leadership in the interests of world peace in the past—so is there now in these days. The people of Vermont in future years will look back upon their Senator WARREN AUSTIN as one who has made a lasting contribution. As a Republican, and as an American, I say that to date there has been no better, no sounder, no saner declaration of American policy in the post-war world than that announced at Mackinac last September, a statement in which your Senator took such a leading part in framing. I think that it should become a plank in the Republican platform. I quote it to you:

"1. Prosecution of the war by a united nation to conclusive victory over all our enemies including (a) disarmament and disorganization of the armed forces of the Axis; (b) disqualifications of the Axis to construct facilities for the manufacture of the implements of war; (c) permanent maintenance of trained and well equipped armed forces at home.

"2. Responsible participation by the United States in post-war cooperative organization among sovereign nations to prevent military aggression and to attain permanent peace with organized justice in a free world."

A Republican victory next November will lift the peace above partisanship. It will make it an enterprise—not for the indispensable man, not for the indispensable party—but the common, united purpose and enterprise of the American people. Specific plans and measures, specific methods of world organization, the building up and the sustaining of an international law that will govern the relationships of nations as our own laws govern the relationships of men—these all in due time will be required of us. But the first thing that will be required of us is that we, ourselves, out of our own American common sense and our own practical idealism, help shape the things to come, help build a world in which war will be no more.

There is a big job ahead. There is a historical opportunity. But the job is not too big for us to do or the opportunity too great for us to grasp. They are not too big or too great for us, because they are what the American people want to bring to pass. And to the American people, when they are united in a common purpose, when their mind is made up, with God's guidance and help everything is possible.

The Political Situation in Oregon

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RUFUS C. HOLMAN

OF OREGON

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 25 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, in response to inquiries relative to the political situation in Oregon during the recent primary election held there, I request unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the text of a radio speech which I made on the evening of the 18th instant, just a week ago.

The C. I. O. political action committee, the Communists, the special-privilege-seeking crowd, the new dealers, and those internationalists who resent my efforts to restrict immigration for the duration of the war at least, and who, through the centuries have been such a pregnant force in fomenting strife and wars, made common cause and coordinated their resources and efforts to conduct an effective smear campaign. Every "for-hire" political hanger-on, and all the purchasable publications were employed by them.

The same subversive forces, with their apparently unlimited financial resources and the same unscrupulous methods, will be likewise effective in other elections.

I submit this statement for whatever benefit it may be to those Members of Congress who desire an effective prosecution of the war, the preservation of representative government under the Federal Constitution, and the promotion of the welfare of the American people.

Forewarned is forearmed.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Good evening, fellow Oregonians, tonight I am going to make some statements which are decidedly not politic in a campaign for election, but I am not so much concerned with what may happen to me personally or politically, as I am fearful of what may happen to our country if present political trends are not halted.

These are the times that try men's souls. The Communist, the war profiteer, the internationalist, and the new dealer coordinate their efforts to secure advantages to themselves which the haste and confusion of our war efforts make possible, while 12,000,000 young Americans are sacrificing their future prospects for happiness and their very lives in mortal conflicts all over the world. A controlled press disseminates censored and propagandized news to a gullible public. Patriots are made to appear as idlers and traitors while scoundrels are extolled as saviors of our country. Unless these rampant and subversive forces are halted and brought under control now, the end of the American Republic is not far distant.

At a time when all those who truly love their country are diligently apprehensive of the existing destructive trends of national policies, and are urging unity of patriotic purpose and action on the part of all Americans regardless of race, religion, or country of origin, in order that we may not be conquered or lose our form of government, Mr. Roosevelt and his adherents in both the Democratic and Republican Parties are fomenting dissensions among us by inciting class hatreds and vicious accusations, charges, and countercharges among public men.

The new dealers and their gullible dupes encourage the despicable Walter Winchell and his ilk, and quote as from an authority the discredited book Under Cover and other irresponsible and unreliable publications.

Tomorrow's election may be the most important election in the history of our country. If the people fail now to recapture the control of their Government from the sinister and subversive forces which now administer it, I doubt if the people ever again can rally sufficient strength to do so peaceably.

The President, who now refers to himself as the Commander in Chief, together with those who with his cooperation have wormed themselves into strategic places of Government and who permeate all the Federal bureaus and departments, has been extending his and their political powers and expanding their personal authorities until already the Supreme Court is subservient to the Executive, the New Deal majorities in both houses of the Congress constitute it a "rubber-stamp" Congress, and the people are regulated in the most intimate details of their daily lives. Free enterprise, independent labor, untrammeled agriculture and commerce are rapidly disappearing in our country while we pretend to be carrying the "four freedoms" to the remote corners of the world for the benefit of those who know, and accept, nothing but dictatorship. In the meantime our war casualties exceed 100,000 a month and the big fighting has not yet begun.

The Republicans are brought face to face with these sinister forces in this present primary election. I have opposed the socialistic, wasteful extravagances, the tardy preparations for war, and the once complacent toleration of the resident Japanese situation on the Pacific coast, which have characterized this New Deal administration, while my opponent, Professor Morse, has accepted employment under, and carried out the policies of, the New Deal; although now, he pretends to be opposed to it. The outrageous misuse of war-time authorizations in the President's seizure of Montgomery Ward's store in Chicago was based upon the decisions of this same Professor Morse when recently serving as a New Deal bureaucrat on the War Labor Board. He now berates the seizure of the Montgomery Ward store. The professor may be clever, but is he honest?

While, as a member of the Senate Committee for Immigration, I was supporting legislation to restrict immigration and to deport Harry Bridges, the Communist and trouble-making alien, Professor Morse was testifying to his good character. Have you forgotten the beating-up of our good American workingmen, the destruction by fire of our lumber mills and forests and the intimidation of our operators which characterized the reign of terror prevailing throughout our own State of Oregon 6 years ago? Harry Bridges, the Communist and violent labor-leader, was an important factor in these subversive activities.

While I deplore strikes in defense industries in wartimes, the honest, patriotic workingman has never had a better or more effective friend in the public service than I am and always have been. I refer you to my record as Commissioner of Multnomah County, as member of the State Board of Control, and in my private operations. I approve of labor unions. There is a necessary and legitimate place for them in our domestic economy. I have suported Federal legislation authorizing collective bargaining. I oppose the exploitation of those who work by those who do not. I am opposed to the purposes and methods of the C. I. O. political action committee.

I am encouraged to believe that my service in the Senate must be meritorious since my record there must be falsified to enable those who are opposing me to criticize it.

Who are those who apparently are acting for the invisible forces of the special privilege-seeking crowd, of the internationalists and new dealers in this campaign to purge me in this election. Obviously, there is more money being spent for the purpose of defeating me than is being spent for, or against, all other candidates combined in this election.

Never before have I presented my candidacy for public service to the people of Oregon when I have been so well fortified by duties well, timely, and faithfully performed. I have been diligent, constantly on the job, and effective and patriotic in the performance of my duties. In over 6 years I have had no vacations. A thorough examination of the official RECORD and a truthful interpretation of it will verify this statement. Senator McNary said on several occasions that in his quarter of a century of continuous service in the United States Senate he never had known a Senator who had accomplished so much for his State and Nation in an equal period of time as I had.

Although my opponent asserts that I am difficult to get along with, yet the fact is I never have quarreled with honest men.

Then why all this extravagant and slanderous effort to defeat my reelection, particularly when the effectiveness of a Senator is cumulative with the length of his continuous service. Note the example of Senator McNary's long and faithful service and the advantage of it to our State.

Let me remind you that a great fund, accumulated to finance this campaign against me, was hawked about and up and down this State hunting for a popular citizen of Oregon to accept it as a campaign expense fund.

Not a single well-known Oregon citizen so approached would accept this political slush fund. So, with the cooperation of one Palmer Hoyt, who served the Roosevelt fourth-term propaganda organization known as the Office of War Information—it should be designated as the Office of War Misinformation—Prof. Wayne Morse was found in a Federal bureau to be an available candidate for Senator. This Federal bureaucrat was prevailed upon to resign a $10,000-a-year place on the Federal pay roll to enter the campaign against me.

In a similar campaign in Texas, Judge Allred was persuaded to resign his lifetime position on the Federal district court and to become the New Deal purge candidate against Senator O'DANIEL. After the defeat of Judge Allred in the Texas election, the President promptly appointed Judge Allred to the Federal circuit court of appeals. Mr. Roosevelt always takes care of his lame ducks.

The Oregonian, a newspaper managed by Palmer Hoyt, stated that Professor Morse is a lawyer and a farmer in Eugene. I was in Eugene last week and could not find him listed in the telephone book as a lawyer, or of having any legal clients; nor could I find anyone who knew of him being a farmer although he has a suburban residence. He may be a farmer in the city of Eugene. The once great independent newspaper, the Oregonian, as now under the management of Palmer Hoyt, is, in my opinion, little more that a house organ for Aaron Frank's department store. He, too, is opposing me.

Who else beside Palmer Hoyt, the New Deal O. W. I. editor, is openly sponsoring the vicious campaign against me? Well, there is Paul Dunham. Do you know him? No; of course you do not, because I have exposed this fraud in the United States Senate. There is no such person as Paul Dunham; yet news items purporting to be reported by him under a Washington date line are printed in various Oregon publications and these pretended news items are intended to damage my reputation before the voters of Oregon.

Then there is Florence Lawrence. I have tried diligently to locate Florence Lawrence, but have not been successful. She, too, makes assertions about me which the facts do not substantiate or justify.

Then there is the notorious Tom Burns. Do you know him? He purports to have heard me make a speech in the Portland auditorium denouncing a large section of very worthy citizens. Is it not strange that Tom Burns is the only one who heard this ghostly speech?

Then there is Senaca Fouts. Do you know him? He bobs up at frequent elections and opens his mud guns upon reputable men.

Then there is Charley Robison, some of whose racketeering labor clients were sent to the Oregon penitentiary as a result of the disastrous labor troubles of 6 years ago.

Then there are the Communists—need I say more?

All these and the new dealers and the seekers of special privileges and the internationalists, who would relax and repeal our immigration laws, are opposing my reelection and supporting as their candidate the Professor Morse.

I do not want the support of these people. I am unalterably opposed to them. I want no traffic with them. The Professor is welcome to all of them.

However, I do want, and I am receiving, the support of many of those American citizens who love their country, who are loyal to the Government under the Federal Constitution and who make every possible contribution to win the war at the earliest possible moment, with the least loss of life and with the most efficient use of our material wealth.

As a result of my initiation, cooperation and active support of Federal legislation, our country was much better prepared for war when finally war came than it otherwise would have been. By attending faithfully to my duties as a member of the Senate Committee for Military Affairs I was delegated with other members of it to ascertain the true condition of our Pacific coast defenses. As a result of these activities every man, woman, and child in the Oregon country is now, and has been for the past 18 months safer in his home, employment, and schoolhouse than otherwise he would have been. Of course, while employed in these duties neither I nor the other Senators with whom I was associated were idly answering "Present, Teacher" to roll calls in the Senate; nor were we expected to be. We were performing more important Federal work elsewhere, and upon our return, our reports and recommendations were translated into reforms, authorizations, and appropriations which have been of vital importance to the defense of our country, the prosecution of the war, and the welfare of the American people. We committee members were so employed right up to and at the time of the attack on Pearl Harbor.

As a Member of the Senate Appropriations Committee I have secured or cooperated in the authorization and appropriation by the Congress and the allocation by the Federal departments, of every dollar of Federal funds spent in Oregon for any purpose during the past 5 years. These Federal expenditures run into hundreds of millions of dollars and have been disbursed in Oregon for wages, materials, and improvements of every kind and description. An ounce of performance is worth a pound of preachment.

Truth crushed to earth shall rise again.

Fortified by the accurate knowledge of national affairs and war information which you do not have, I assure you if again I had the decisions to make which I have made, I would again vote under the conditions then prevailing, as I did vote.

I have done my full and patriotic duty as your United States Senator. I leave the cause for which I fight in your hands. Now, the decision is yours.

Can this election be bought?

Let us not go the way of France.

Thank you and good night.

The Future of Communications

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BURTON K. WHEELER

OF MONTANA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 25 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a brief address entitled "The Future of Communications," which I delivered over the Columbia Broadcasting System from the rotunda of the Capitol Building, Washington, May 24, 1944, on the occasion of the celebration of the centennial of the telegraph.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Congressman BULWINKLE, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen, we have met here today to commemorate the anniversary of a great event in the lives of mankind and to pay honor to the memory of a great man. The event was the first important public demonstration of the wire telegraph; the man was Samuel F. B. Morse, a New England Yankee who persevered through years of adversity to accomplish his objective. Just 100 years ago this morning, in a room below us in this Capitol Building and before distinguished men and women of that day, Mr. Morse tapped out, fittingly enough, a verse from the Bible, "What hath God wrought!" Forty miles away in Baltimore, his coworker, Alfred Vail, received the message.

It is particularly appropriate that these commemorative ceremonies take place here for it was a congressional grant of $30,000 which enabled that first telegraph line to be constructed.

This was a major achievement in the use of electricity. It paved the way for the oceanic cables, for the telephone, and the radio. It created world-wide interest in that little-known force—electricity—and is largely responsible for the electrical world in which we live, and for the electronic wonderland of tomorrow.

But even more important, I believe, was the economic and social impact of this new and speedy method of communication. Nowadays, all of us take telegraphing or telephoning across the country, or around the world, as a matter of course. To me it is important to remember that only 84 years ago our citizens still looked upon the pony express as a new wonder of the world. In Europe and in America, carrier pigeons and semaphore posts were agencies of what was regarded as fast communication.

The telegraph brought our Republics together; it permitted citizens to know what men thought and what they were doing elsewhere. It implemented the economic and industrial development of our own Nation and of the world.

The past is history and history is only a prologue to tomorrow. What then may we expect from this new art which is still in its infancy?

First, let us consider communications, the business of sending information from one to another quickly. After all, a motivating force behind Morse was the fact that word of his wife's death in New Haven did not get to him here in Washington until 7 days after her funeral.

Avoiding technical details, there are two basic means of telegraphic communication—over wires and over the ether without wires. The latter—which we know commonly as wireless or radio—was made possible by the development of the vacuum tube. It is a newer art, a refinement of communication by wire, but it has not outmoded wire communications. Both are in use today; both will be in use side by side for years because each has a function to fulfill.

Communications, written or spoken words, music, pictures, and even your own handwriting, can be and are transmitted over vast distances by both means.

For example, it is now possible to send hundreds of simultaneous messages over one pair of wires. A few years ago only two or four messages could be sent at once.. You remember when every town and the countryside had poles with hundreds of wires? If it wasn't for that development, it would require a forest of poles for all the wires necessary to carry today's amount of communications.

Another device permits not only many simultaneous messages to be sent over land and ocean but to send them in a steady, uninterrupted flow so that the conductor is used to maximum capacity.

Still another device allows the sending of messages over a conductor which is used for other purposes—for example a high-power line carrying vast amounts of electric power from one area to another can be used to transmit messages without interfering in any way with the normal use of the wire.

Already in use is a device which enables you to drop a message or a picture into a box, much as you drop a letter into a mail box. In the cabinet your message is scanned by an electric eye and is transmitted in your own writing to a central receiving point for subsequent transmission to its destination.

Actual facsimiles of important papers in the sender's own writing are now transmitted across continents. Right now in China, for example, that system is followed by our Army to avoid delay and difficulty in transmitting Chinese characters.

Everyone knows of the teletype—that amazing electrical typewriter so widely used here and abroad to facilitate the transmission of lengthy correspondence.

At this very minute in New York a press service using radio telegraph is picking up more than 400 words per minute from Moscow and last night Moscow was receiving 200 to 300 words a minute from us.

A metropolitan newspaper using radio telephone talked with Australia at the rate of 250 words per minute, and this morning we read the story.

Not only words but pictures of battle scenes on the Russian front, the Italian front, the South Pacific, come flowing in every minute of the day. Our ships in the far reaches of vast oceans are in instant and constant communication with their bases, or with one another, if it is desirable or necessary. Our airplane pilots, bombing enemy targets, talk with one another, or with their commanding officer on a carrier hundreds of miles away. They are guided in to landings—on hidden jungle airfields or on board ship—by radio devices. Through radio, navigation has become so exact a science that vessels will not miss a designated point by 100 yards. Through radio, we know far in advance, not only of the approach of a fleet of warships or of airplanes but how many, what kind, and their exact location from minute to minute. A commanding officer may give orders to his troops which at the very moment are engaging the enemy over an area too large for visible signal communication.

But I am beginning to talk about things that are better left unsaid now. These and many other devices so amazing that ordinary minds cannot comprehend their wonders are actually in operation today—now. They will affect and change the lives of all mankind after this war.

Perhaps here we should take a glimpse into the future of this electronic fairyland: Mail sorted and distributed by electric automatons; automobiles protected from accidents at dangerous crossings by electric eyes; railroad train crews always in full communication with each other and with the dispatcher; railroad trains protected by automatic stopping devices; airplanes, spanning the earth, flown by means of a master pilot, guided to landings automatically, and their passengers receiving or sending messages; automatic automobile driving on main cross-country highways by means of a master pilot; electric eyes which, unfortunately for some of us, tell police stations far ahead just how fast the driver is going; facsimile newspapers and television newsreel scenes, not only in the home but even in the automobile as we drive along; the transmission of electric power, not by wire but by wireless; cooking and heating homes by radio; the processing of metals and plastics by heat induction through radio; even the production of electric power from the sun through use of vacuum tubes.

All of these things are not only possible—many are already accomplished, practical, working facts. Only a few are still in the experimental stage. And all this, mind you, is only the beginning.

I have touched on the future development in this industry for one important purpose; I am firmly of the opinion that it makes clear that a new world is opening up before us and succeeding generations, a world in which there will be the greatest economic opportunity for men who have the courage and intelligence to cope with its problems.

Those jeremiahs who preach of an already finished economy, of an age which must adjust itself to a worn-out industrial economy, are blind to the facts. They are the descendants of those who called Morse a crank and a fool 100 years ago and laughed at his financial backers as having wasted their money.

Incidentally, it may be interesting to note here that the Whigs of that day criticized the Democrats of that day for appropriating $30,000 for the construction of that first telegraph line. Now we appropriate $30,000,000,000 in as many minutes as it took months then.

But this new world is not going to happen of itself while we sit idly by and do nothing. No; it will require patience and cooperation and hard work by all men, but it is full of opportunity for those who wish to make something of it for themselves.

What is important is that communications and other new industries will afford thousands of jobs for our young men who will come back from the war anxious for a secure economic existence. These industries will bolster our economy and strengthen our social and economic structure if we today have the intelligence to prepare for their advent with sound governmental policies, policies which will encourage the maximum of development by private enterprise, but without permitting such new developments as television and facsimile to become the private monopoly of either a few individuals in a Nation or of any particular country.

The life of Samuel Morse whom we honor today—this man who was 52 years old before he achieved his goal after years of struggle—must give all of us renewed courage and faith in our own personal futures and the future of our country.

Let us follow the precept of the great Justice Holmes, "Have faith and pursue the unknown end."

Address by Bernard M. Baruch in Accepting the Churchman Award

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT F. WAGNER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 25 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a very important and instructive address by a great American, Bernard M. Baruch, delivered by him on the occasion of his acceptance of the Churchman award, at a dinner held in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York City, on May 23. I hope everyone will read Mr. Baruch's very able address.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

My deep thanks for the compliments paid me by the Churchman's Medal, by the distinguished speakers, and by your presence here.

After the flattering words, spoken about me, I should like to say a few kind words about a certain relative of mine—a relative of yours—the one who made me possible—the one who makes you possible—our Uncle Sam. We gaze on him with a sort of toleration and amusement, but he is a pretty sturdy soul. He is always on the side of right—sometimes a little slow getting there, but when he does arrive, he makes himself felt. He is better than we think, he is stronger than we know. Let me state a few of his claims to your respect.

There is a tendency among us to wonder whether he—let us say we—have done all we should have done in the world cataclysm. We search our souls for reassurance.

Perhaps we have not done as well as we should have done, or as we could have done. Nor yet will do. But, even so, we do not have to hang our heads. Without us, could the Russians have held? Could the Japanese have been stopped? Could the valiant Chinese have done as well as they have? And what of the magnificent fight of the British? Were we not of help to them? Churchill has proclaimed his debt to us. Even Stalin has admitted the effect upon his battles of the war-making power of America. Today the bloody Nazis and the Japs face a defeat that without us could not be.

STRESSES WORLD-WIDE TASK

We are fighting—and helping—not on limited fronts, but on the whole circumference of the globe, and from the North to the South Poles. Even now our men are poised ready for the great invasion and the blow at Japan. We feed the hungry and we clothe the naked. We build roads, airports, harbors, and plants. We supply our allies all over the world with machines of death and supports of life, in food, medicine, and shelter.

We are the most powerful nation in the world. Let us not forget that. By keeping it in our mind we shall not ignore the obligation power carries with it—to use it justly and helpfully. And we shall be a force, perhaps the greatest, when the peace of the world is set.

When the war is over no country will be able to improve the well-being of its people without our help. Peace will be almost meaningless without betterment of daily existence. In that crisis Uncle Sam will show himself to be neither profligate nor parsimonious. He will be fair, and that means to himself as well as to others. I have no economic radar to penetrate the future, but we can make it what we will it to be. Of that I am sure.

In assessing our position, let us remember that great as our physical strengths are, they are made even greater by the fact that our spiritual armor is untarnished by self-gain; all our steps toward self-protection are steps to save the world—to bring peace to all nations of good will.

America has never forgotten—and will never forget the nobler thing that brought her into being and that lights her path—the path that was entered upon only 150 years ago—a little more than twice my own age. How young she is. It will be centuries before she will adopt that maturity of custom, the clothing of the grave, that some people believe she is already fitted for.

FIGHTING WITH HIGH PURPOSE

Our people are hard bitten. They owe only to themselves what they have, but, somehow, they have always preserved the chivalry and idealism that others mistakenly assume is softness.

Soft? Who dares say that? Have we not fought whenever the test showed that fighting meant national existence and self-respect? When did we ever fail to fight? And when did we ever fight without high purpose, with one possible exception?

I see the leaven of time at work. The precepts of the great Woodrow Wilson are bearing fruit. Both of the major parties have consecrated themselves to the principle of international cooperation and force. This may have the effect, as has been said, of "taking the peace out of politics and politics out of the peace." That is the way it should be.

Today we are deep in war, where we shall be for some time to come. We can survive only through victory, and that will come by tensing every muscle on the job and by making every effort of spirit. Then, with the vista of peace before us, a peace which we shall make beautiful—or distort—we will have the contentment that comes from duty well done, or the contempt of failure.

In another day, Cicero said the proudest boast a man could utter was "Civis Romanus sum" (I am a Roman citizen). It is my prayer that our conduct may always be such as to carry greater praise in the accolade, "I am an American."

One last word. Some ask why we fight. This is my answer: We fight for—

"Ancient rights, unnoticed as the breath we draw,
Leave to live by no man's leave, underneath the law."

My thanks again.

American-British Influence in Argentina

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUGH A. BUTLER
OF NEBRASKA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 25 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a short article entitled "United States Carrying Britain's Ball in Running Against Argentina," by Stanley Johnston, published in the Washington Times-Herald for May 25, 1944.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES CARRYING BRITAIN'S BALL IN RUNNING AGAINST ARGENTINA—SO WRITER SAYS, DECLARING ENGLISH PROTECT THEIR TRADE WHILE WE HANDLE TOUGH TALK

(By Stanley Johnston)

The United States' efforts to bring Argentina into active opposition to the Axis ignore the fact that Great Britain's superior influence in that Latin American country makes her the logical source of such pressure.

While we are attempting to tell Argentina what she should or should not do, and attracting disfavor for our pains, Britain is taking care not to place any strain upon her long and valuable trade ties with recalcitrant Argentina.

British influence in the big pampas country is in direct relation to her investments there. Britain's investment in that country in 1943 was one and one-half billion dollars, as compared with the United States' three hundred and eleven million, and the rest of Europe's nine hundred million. Thus the United States had only about 11.5 percent of the foreign investment in Argentina as compared with Britain's 55.5 percent.

Britain owns the railroads, river transportation, and sea-shipping facilities in Argentina. She is the principal agent not only in buying Argentina's exports but in filling that country's needs from all other parts of the world.

Last year Great Britain, acting as the Allied Nations' sole buyer, contracted to purchase Argentina's entire meat supply up to September 1944, at the highest prices paid since 1926. The reason for the high price, in the light of Britain's record as a close bargainer and the fact that no one else bid or was in a position to transport the produce, is a matter of some speculation.

BRITISH STAND TAKEN LATER

It was to refrain from disturbing Britain's influence in any way, some Argentines believe, that Britain did not issue a note jointly with the United States when our State Department withheld recognition of the new regime of Gen. Edelmiro Farrell in an effort to bring Argentina into a solid pan-American front against the Axis.

Lagging several days behind Washington's instructions to Ambassador Norman Armour at Buenos Aires to "refrain from entering official relations" with the new Argentine administration, British Foreign Minister Anthony Eden announced that Britain felt similarly about the matter. A statement on the subject Eden made in the House of Commons came still later.

The result was that Argentines, in discussing the actions of the two big countries, observed that, "Our friends, the British, do not desire to take steps against us, but, being allies, they have to follow Washington."

STUDY ARGENTINA'S NEEDS

That the United Kingdom anticipates no trouble from the Argentine Army group is indicated by the dispatch from England last September of a powerful business delegation whose members announced, upon their arrival at Buenos Aires, that they would study requirements of shipping, railroads, and other industries in contemplation of the greatly expanded trade they expected Argentina would enjoy with Europe in future years.

The British colony in Argentina, several generations old, now numbers more than 70,000 as compared with fewer than 2,500 United States nationals in that county.

Indicating the shallowness of United States influence in Argentina and that the lower South American country looks to Europe for its business is the fact that the ink had hardly dried on our State Department's favored nations trade agreement with Argentina several years ago before that country nullified the pact's effect in dealing with her good neighbor to the north.

CHANGED MONETARY VALUES

The regime then in power restored discrimination against the United States by the simple expedient of giving the pesos—Argentina's monetary unit—a different value, dependent upon whether Argentines are buying or selling.

For the sale by Argentines of grain and grain products to the United States, the value of the peso is fixed at 3.2582 for each United States dollar. But the peso's buying power is lowered to 4.55 pesos a dollar in the purchase of automobiles, refrigerators, and various electrical goods, which are the United States chief exports to Argentina.

Views of Governor Dewey on the St. Lawrence Seaway

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE D. AIKEN
OF VERMONT

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 25 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, it appears that during the present spring an attempt has been made on the part of the opponents of the St. Lawrence seaway and power development to create the impression that Governor Dewey of New York is not in favor of this great project. On May 17 Governor Dewey held a press conference in which he reiterated his stand in favor of the development, and I ask leave to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD some press reports of the conference. One is from the Watertown Daily Times, headed "Dewey affirms seaway views; Have not changed since he expressed favor here in 1942." The second is from the Albany, N. Y., Knickerbocker News of May 17, headed "Dewey sticks to seaway project." The third is from the New York Times of May 18, headed "Dewey still for seaway." The last is from the Buffalo Evening News of May 17, headed "G. O. P. favors State power in new policy."

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Watertown (N. Y.) Daily Times of May 17, 1944]

DEWEY AFFIRMS SEAWAY VIEWS—HAVE NOT CHANGED SINCE HE EXPRESSED FAVOR HERE IN 1942

(By William W. Tyler)

ALBANY, May 17.—Governor Dewey's views on the St. Lawrence seaway have not changed since he expressed favor of the project in 1942, a press conference discussion disclosed today.

Dewey, outstanding possibility for the Republican Presidential nomination, was asked for his current opinion of the seaway project and let it be known that what he had said in the past still stood.

As a candidate for Governor in 1942, Dewey said in an interview at Watertown that he favored power development of the St. Lawrence and he recalled that in 1940 he had endorsed the entire project.

The Republican-controlled 1944 legislature adopted a resolution, favored by the Governor, urging "prompt measures' for development of St. Lawrence power resources.

Adoption of the resolution was construed at the time as taking the issue out of the 1944 Presidential campaign.

[From the Albany (N. Y.) Knickerbocker News of May 17, 1944]

DEWEY STICKS TO SEAWAY PROJECT

(By John Mooney)

Governor Dewey today, as in the last few years, views the St. Lawrence seaway project not only as desirable but as inevitable.

This is the position Republican leaders expect him to take in the forthcoming campaign for President if he is nominated.

Indeed, Governor Dewey himself today disclosed that his views on the controversial St. Lawrence development have not changed and that he stands today where he publicly declared himself on several previous occasions.

The substance of those declarations was: "I am for the St. Lawrence seaway development."

A recent editorial in the Rochester Times-Union quoted Mr. Dewey in this respect, and because the editorial raised some doubt about the Governor's position as of today, an effort was made to clear it up.

FAVORS PROJECT

Mr. Dewey dispelled, without added comment, any question about where he stands, his position being, he said, the same as it always had been, for the seaway project.

Members of the Governor's staff recalled that he had asserted himself publicly for the St. Lawrence project on at least three occasions, twice in New York State and once in the Midwest, over the last 4 years.

Public development of St. Lawrence hydroelectric power in some form is another thing to which Mr. Dewey may be committed. At least the G. O. P.-controlled legislature this year adopted a strong resolution calling for full public development of the water power of the St. Lawrence River.

Although Buffalo, Albany, and New York City navigation interests are opposed to the St. Lawrence seaway as potentially detrimental to their shipping, it is apparent Mr. Dewey has not been swayed by their arguments. He is represented as considering the seaway to the Great Lakes, via the St. Lawrence River, as inevitable in the development of the commerce and trade of the Nation.

[From the New York Times of May 18, 1944]

DEWEY STILL FOR SEAWAY—REFERS QUESTIONERS TO 1940 AND 1942 STAND OF ST. LAWRENCE PLAN

ALBANY, May 17.—Governor Dewey expressed himself in favor of the St. Lawrence seaway development in 1940 and 1942 and has not changed his views.

Because of some expressed disagreement up-State whether the Governor favors or opposes the project, which has the support of President Roosevelt, he was asked to clarify his position. He referred questioners to his 1940 statement, in which he said:

"I favor the St. Lawrence seaway and always have."

Chief opposition to the project comes from New York City, Albany, and Buffalo navigation interests, while it has strong support in northern New York. The 1944 legislature sidestepped the issue, but adopted unanimously a resolution calling for prompt development of the hydroelectric resources of the St. Lawrence River.

[From the Buffalo Evening News of May 17, 1944]

G. O. P. FAVORS STATE POWER IN NEW POLICY—PARTY REVERSES ATTITUDE OF NIAGARA, ST. LAWRENCE RIVERS, HOPES TO MAKE ADDITIONAL POST-WAR JOBS

(By Ray Borst)

ALBANY, May 17.—The Republican Party in New York State, it became apparent today, has abandoned its traditional opposition to State development of the hydroelectric resources of the Niagara and St. Lawrence Rivers, and now favors speedy development of cheap power in order to bring new industries into the State.

Governor Dewey stands squarely behind his party in its new policy with relation to the development of the power resources on the two rivers.

At a press conference today, Mr. Dewey was asked for his current opinion of the seaway and power projects, and let it be known that what he said in the past still stood.

In 1942, when he was running for the governorship he came out squarely for development of the State's power resources.

"I have always strongly advocated the development of the power resources of the State by Government for the benefit of all the people, and not for any private monopoly," said a statement issued by Mr. Dewey in Watertown.

For many years the Republican Party, through its control of the legislature, opposed State development of the Niagara and St. Lawrence Rivers on the ground that such a step would put private power companies out of existence.

The 1944 session of the legislature, however, by unanimous vote adopted a resolution putting the State and the G. O. P. clearly on record in favor of State development of the power resources of the St. Lawrence River.

In the opinion of many Republican leaders, New York State definitely will undertake the development of the power resources of both the Niagara and St. Lawrence Rivers immediately after the war. Such a project, it was pointed out, would provide work for thousands of men now employed in war industries.

Twenty years ago when Alfred E. Smith was Governor he constantly was battling with the Republicans in the legislature over State development of hydroelectric power.

Mr. Smith made State development one of the major issues in his campaigns for the governorship and years later the Republican leaders admitted that that issue had brought thousands of votes to the Democratic Party in the State.

With the Republican Party in this State now definitely on record in favor of development of the power resources of the St. Lawrence, the old issue between the two major political parties has completely vanished, much to the regret of the Democrats.

It also became apparent that if Governor Dewey is nominated for the Presidency he will not hesitate to reiterate a statement which he made in 1940 in favor of the proposed St. Lawrence seaway.

The Governor is known to feel that eventually the seaway will be put through in order to provide greater and cheaper transportation facilities.

Centennial of the Telegraph

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WARREN R. AUSTIN

OF VERMONT

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 25 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD, remarks made by me in the Capitol of the United States on Wednesday, May 24, at 11 o'clock a. m., upon the presentation of a plaque commemorating the centennial of the telegraph and honoring Samuel F. B. Morse.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

This celebration commemorates the faith, humility, genius, and unfaltering persistence of Samuel F. B. Morse. It glorifies the omnipotence and benevolence of God, working through the human spirit. It exemplifies victory for inventors over skepticism.

The act of Congress, today proclaiming its gratitude for what God has wrought, in terms of human security and freedom, unity and happiness, through Morse's invention of the telegraph a century ago, records in durable bronze and in vital history the triumph of character over resistance and ridicule.

His constant regard of the possible progress of man to higher levels of civilization through almost instantaneous communication across boundless space held the inventor to his work and inspired his word.

Here, as in many other first applications of ideas to material and practical service, the blessings of a free government and a capitalistic system of economy sustained the lone individual who beheld the vision.

Overcoming all obstacles, after 9 years of experiments and demonstrations, he persuaded Congress to appropriate $30,000 for testing the capacity and usefulness of the system of electromagnetic telegraph, invented by him, for the use of the Government of the United States.

The subsequent transmission 100 years ago today from the Supreme Court room of the Capitol to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad station in Baltimore of the first official telegraphic message, carried in one flash the news of an epoch begun and the acknowledgment of Divine inspiration: "What hath God wrought!"

The rapidity of development of telegraph communication evidences the operation of a free economy to energize and drive forward a new service to mankind.

This celebration, therefore, is an occasion for recurring to fundamental principles and for redeclaring our adherence to the institutions which had for 60 years, and for 100 years since have, kept open to every individual opportunity and incentive to explore and experiment and to pursue visions of human amelioration and uplift.

After each night a new dawn appears over the mountains.

Mr. Chairman, I have the great honor to present this bronze memorial plaque in commemoration of Samuel F. B. Morse, and of what transpired here 100 years ago today.

Announcement for Senate

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ELMER THOMAS

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 25 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a radio address delivered by me May 16 over a State-wide hook-up in Oklahoma.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The purpose of this statement is to announce that I am a candidate for reelection to the United States Senate.

In making this announcement it is proper that I should report to those I am privileged to represent and state, briefly and frankly, the platform upon which I am asking for support and votes.

I am not asking that you elect me to any new office.

I am not asking you to throw any man out of office in order to make a place for me.

In all my political career, I have never run against a Democratic official.

I am asking that you keep me in the office I now have so that I may continue the work of representing the people of Oklahoma in the Senate of the United States.

In asking to be returned to the Senate I submit for your consideration first, the record that I have made and, second, a brief statement of the principles and policies for which I stand.

I take this plan of placing my candidacy before the voters of Oklahoma.

The old-time political parades, meetings and rallies cannot be held because automobiles, tires, and gasoline are rationed.

I am reminded daily that candidates should place their claim before the voters in a plain, simple, and serious manner and then depend upon the good judgment of the voters to make nominations.

I shall conduct my campaign in harmony with the war effort. I shall expend my meager funds first, to express my appreciation for what Oklahoma voters have done for me and, second, to place my program before the people.

In 1933 the Democratic Party came into power and since that time my party has been in control of our Government.

In order to explain and justify the laws passed and the programs adopted during the past 12 years, it is necessary that we recall the conditions that existed when we came into power.

The New Deal will be an important issue in the pending campaign.

With respect to this issue the people are entitled to know the facts.

What is the New Deal?

To answer the question, we must first define the term.

To have a new deal, we must have had an old deal; hence, an added question arises—

What was the old deal?

The old deal is alleged to have brought on the depression, which broke upon the country in 1929.

All remember the unemployment, causing millions of men to tramp the streets and highways, begging for work.

All remember the vast surpluses of goods and commodities and consequently the low prices, yet the people could not buy because of a lack of money and buying power.

All remember the bankruptcies and business failures leading to still further widespread unemployment.

All remember the soup lines and the demand for governmental aid.

All remember the looting of stores and the rebellion against foreclosures.

The people have not forgotten the bank holidays leading to the closing of all the banks.

With all banks closed; with millions of men and women unemployed, ragged, and hungry; with soup lines in cities and towns; with stores and stocks being looted and with widespread rebellion against foreclosure, something had to be done.

The old deal had cost and was costing the people more money than had been lost in all the wars in which we had been engaged.

It was obvious that the people could not protect themselves.

Cities, counties, and the States could neither check nor relieve the misery, suffering, and damage being caused by the depression which broke upon the people in October of 1929.

Conditions finally became so bad that it was not a question that something should be done, but rather that something must be done and done at once.

The New Deal was the remedy proposed to cure the ills of the old deal.

Inasmuch as practically all the people were in distress, practically all had to be helped.

Two classes of relief were provided: First, temporary relief to tide the people through and, second, policies intended to be permanent were provided to prevent a recurrence of the terrible times the people were experiencing.

The temporary relief was provided by such agencies as the Work Projects Administration, the National Recovery Act, the National Youth Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, the Home Owners Loan Corporation, and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

As the ills of the old deal were cured, the depression abated and by 1939 prices of farm commodities were better, unemployment was relieved, and the country was enjoying a degree of prosperity again.

Just as fast as these temporary agencies and policies had served their missions they were liquidated, so that now they are matters of record only.

The depression brought about abnormal conditions which had to be met by special legislation and relief programs. The administration, supported by Republicans as well as by Democrats, acted, and all groups of our people were assisted in working out of the most terrible depression of all time.

At this point let me ask—what might have happened to our banks, trust companies, railroads, insurance companies, factories, farmers, the unemployed, and all who serve these groups, had not something been done?

What were some of the permanent policies provided by the Congress and the administration to prevent a recurrence of a damaging depression?

GUARANTY OF BANK DEPOSITS

One of the first New Deal laws passed by the Congress was the guaranty of bank deposits.

During the era of the old deal, bank and trust company failures were common occurences.

At the end of the last war we had over 30,000 banks and, when a failure occurred, the depositors, as well as the stockholders, stood to lose their life's savings.

The old deal witnessed the permanent closing of over one-half our banks, causing hundreds of millions of dollars of loss to stockholders and depositors.

This most important policy was established by the creation of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Under this policy banks are not failing now but, instead, they are the safest, soundest, and the most prosperous in history.

The guaranty of bank deposits is a New Deal policy and, unless repealed, it is here to stay.

PROTECTION AGAINST WORTHLESS STOCKS AND BONDS

The Securities Exchange Commission is another New Deal policy created to regulate and supervise the issuance of stocks and bonds and therefore to regulate the several securities exchanges and the over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails.

The purpose of the act was to insure the maintenance of fair and honest markets in stock, bond, and security transactions.

For generations corporations and exchanges had been issuing and selling stocks and bonds in such amounts as the public would buy, all without legal rules or regulations and without any Federal supervision whatever.

Many people are convinced that the great 1929 depression was brought about by the speculation in worthless or near worthless stocks, bonds, and securities.

ELECTRICITY FOR FARMS

The Rural Electrification Administration provides Federal aid to farmers in securing electricity; such aid being in the form of studies, investigations, reports, and loans to cooperatives for the purpose of financing the construction and operation of lines to furnish electric energy to farms and persons in rural areas.

Under this New Deal policy transmission lines have been constructed in all parts of the country and, unless repealed, this program will become a permanent institution in all the States of the Nation.

Hence, the R. E. A. is another New Deal activity and those who are against the New Deal must favor the abolition of this program.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS, AID TO CRIPPLED CHILDREN AND THE BLIND

In order to protect the aged, to assist the blind and crippled children, the Congress enacted the Social Security Act and has provided funds to be used in cooperation with the States in maintaining and developing the program.

The "old deal" program permitted crippled children and the blind to get along as best they could.

For our senior citizens who pioneered and developed the United States, the "old deal" provided only the poorhouse.

Today poorhouses are practically nonexistent and will never be seen again unless the New Deal program is repealed.

I introduced a bill to permit those receiving assistance to work and earn money without having their pension checks reduced but in passing the measure we had to limit the work to the production of food for the war effort.

SOIL CONSERVATION

Still another New Deal program was provided to prevent soil erosion and to protect and improve the food- and feed-producing lands of our country.

All know that we are dependent upon the soil for the production of our food. All know that for many years soil erosion has been destroying many millions of acres of our farm land.

In 1935 the New Deal set up a Nation-wide soil-conservation service for the purpose of saving the fertility of our soil.

Already, with the guidance of this service, soil-conservation districts have been organized all over the Nation by the farmers and landowners.

If this New Deal soil-conservation program is supported and not abolished, it will stop erosion and depletion of the soil, restore our forests, reduce dust storms, and control, if not prevent, disastrous floods.

IF NEW DEAL IS VOTED OUT

If the so-called New Deal becomes the paramount issue in the November election, and if the anti-New Deal party wins, then the Congress will have a direct and positive mandate to repeal all the laws passed and the policies inaugurated during the past 12 years for the benefit and protection of the masses of the people.

A vote against the New Deal is a vote against such policies as the old-age pension system, against aid to crippled children, and against aid to the blind.

Such a vote will be construed as being against the Federal supervision of the issuance of stocks, bonds, and securities, against the continuance of the rural electrification program, against the guarantee of bank deposits, against the Federal Communications Commission, against the Civil Aeronautics Board, and against the entire Farm Security Administration, including the Soil Conservation Service.

The Government has relinquished all control over the planting of crops, but such benefits as soil conservation, loans on farm commodities, and the broad program of farm loans generally will be retained unless the whole so-called New Deal is scrapped.

In the coming election this question must be answered:

Do you want to get rid of all these New Deal institutions and go back to the policies which caused the depression?

I favor and shall vote to retain and support the laws and policies which have helped the people.

My legislative policy is based on the conviction that sound prosperity is based upon the buying power of the masses of the people. The degree of prosperity depends upon the amount of buying power and by "masses" I mean farmers, wage earners and the small and average business and professional men and women of our country.

I contend that when farmers and producers have good prices and workers have jobs at fair wages, business of all kinds is good, but when commodity prices are low and wage earners are unemployed, business, big and little, is bad and panics, depressions, and recessions are inevitable.

The history of the past 12 years sustains my policy.

RATIONING AND CONTROLS CAUSED BY WAR

In 1939, at the identical time when the people were working out of the depression, the Second World War broke upon the world, and then on December 7, 1941, our country was attacked by the Japs at Pearl Harbor.

Since that fateful day we have been compelled to live under a strict war economy rather than under the program provided for a peace-loving people residing in a peaceful nation.

In order to meet the concentrated power of our enemies we have had to concentrate our economic and military power in the hands of our Commander in Chief, the heads of the Army, Navy, and Air Corps, and the Departments charged with the responsibility for clothing, feeding, and equipping our armed forces as well as our people here at home.

In order to mobilize and concentrate our power we have had to do things that we would not even consider in times of peace.

Since the war started, conditions have been and are abnormal, and our people should realize that the things being done are war necessities, and such rules, regulations, and policies will cease as soon as the war is over.

At that time our major task will be to promptly liquidate the war agencies, thereby permitting the people to return to normal conditions as quickly as possible.

BUREAUS—BUREAUCRATS—BUREAUCRACY

During the coming campaign we shall hear much about bureaus, bureaucrats, and bureaucracy; hence, an explanation is in order.

A bureau is a department of the Government such as the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which prints all our paper money and all the various forms of stamps and bonds.

Then we have, among others, the Bureau of Internal Revenue—which collects the taxes—the Bureau of Standards, the Bureau of the Budget, the Bureau of Census, the Bureau of Pensions, the Weather Bureau, the Bureau of Education, the Bureau of Mines, the Bureau of the Mint, the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. This latter Bureau was created to investigate and suppress crime.

Likewise, the special agencies created to help the people work out of the depression and to help win the war are additional bureaus of the Government.

The War Production Board, the Offices of Price Administration, the Office of Censorship, the Selective Service System, the War Food Administration, the War Shipping Board, the War Manpower Commission, and the Veterans' Administration are all bureaus of the Government.

The officials managing these departments, boards, and commissions are sometimes called bureaucrats, and the services provided are by some called bureaucratic government.

If we are to have these services, we must have the bureaus, and to have the bureaus we must have men and women to supervise and perform the work.

Who is there among us who would abolish the takers of the census, the forecasters of the weather, or the inspectors of our mines?

Who would abolish the coiners and printers of our money, the writers of our pension checks, the teachers of our schools, or the investigators and detectors of crime?

Those who oppose the New Deal deny that they want to go back to the old deal.

Instead, they say that they favor a better deal.

Those who support and defend the New Deal, as herein defined, say to those who oppose that at any time they suggest and bring forth a better deal for the masses of the people the Democratic Party will support their proposal.

At this point let me ask a question:

What has been the effect of these laws and policies?

All must admit that the relief policies proposed and executed by the Democratic Party were successful in bringing the people through the depression.

Now, all must likewise admit that the war policies of the administration have been successful and that under such policies we are winning the greatest war in history.

MY SENATE COMMITTEES

Again let me be frank and report that I have charge of the appropriations for the War Department in the United States Senate.

The War and Navy Department have been provided with all the necessary laws and ample money with which to wage this war.

The Senate Committee on Appropriations contains some 20 members, and I am now only third from the top.

It has taken me 18 years to reach this position, and should I be replaced it would take my successor perhaps a longer time to reach the height which I now hold on this all-important committee.

In addition, I am a member of the Agriculture Committee.

On this committee I rank next to the chairman; and if for any reason the first place should become vacant, I would move up to the position of chairman.

In addition to the foregoing, I am chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee, which takes care of the needed legislation for the 150,000 Indian citizens of Oklahoma.

Let me say a word to the Indian citizens of Oklahoma.

Since I have been in Congress I have tried to secure for them every right and benefit that could be justified.

Indian schools have been expanded and made more efficient.

Hospitals have been increased and likewise improved.

I am opposed to the removal of restrictions until such time as the owners of the land make application for such removal.

I am opposed to the Moore bill and assure you that same will not pass the Congress, if I can prevent, so long as I am a Member of the Senate.

Again—should I be replaced, my successor would have to take committee assignments that the older Senators do not want.

In such an event, during the next generation, Oklahoma may be without effective representation in the upper House of the National Congress.

Some of those who may read this statement may wonder what high places on important committees means to Oklahoma.

Only recently an unfriendly editor asked me the question, What bacon have you brought to Oklahoma?

Limited time permits the mention of only a few items.

In 1933, within the first 60 days of the new administration, I introduced and had passed one bill that made a profit in gold to the Treasury of $2,800,000,000.

The profit in this one law alone will pay my salary for the next 280,000 years.

What was that law and how did it operate? In March of 1933 prices for the things we produce in Oklahoma were so low that our people were frantic. Corn was selling for less than 15 cents per bushel, wheat sold for less than 25 cents per bushel, cotton was selling for less than 5 cents per pound, hogs and cattle were selling for less than 3 cents per pound, and oil was selling for less than 15 cents per barrel.

Prices had to be increased or bankruptcy for all was inevitable. The value of the dollar measures prices so that when the dollar value is high prices are low, and when the dollar value is low prices are high. To raise prices we had to reduce the value of the dollar so that my bill providing first, for reducing the size, hence the value, of the gold dollar; second, for an increased use of silver for money; and third, for an expansion of bank credit, was passed and became law on May 12, 1933.

In order to cheapen the dollar the President, acting under the authority of the law, reduced the size, hence value, of the gold dollar by 40 percent, and such 40 percent in gold became profit for the Treasury. When this transaction was completed it was found that the 40 percent reduction in the gold content of our gold dollars when revalued in weight by the new and smaller gold dollar amounted to the sum of $2,800,000,000.

In my statement above I referred only to the profit to the Treasury in gold and did not refer to the increased buying power due to higher prices coming into the hands of our producers of commodities in Oklahoma. The beneficial effects of this law were not limited to Oklahoma but were Nation- and even world-wide.

Early in the present administration I introduced and had passed the bill appropriating the money with which to build the Grand River Dam.

In 1936 I introduced the bill which authorized the construction of the Altus-Lugert irrigation project in Jackson County.

This great project, covering some 50,000 acres will be completed within the year and if it is the success we think, then other similar projects will be developed in western Oklahoma.

The Mangum, Fort Supply, Canton, Foss, Lower Cobb, and Mountain Park projects will all be constructed if the landowners want irrigation.

In eastern Oklahoma flood-control works are an absolute necessity.

Already the following projects have been constructed: Pensacola, Fort Supply, and Great Salt Plains.

Other projects are authorized as follows: Fort Gibson, Markham Ferry, Wister, Tenkiller, Oologah, Mannford, and Hula.

My War Department subcommittee handles the money for this class of development.

In the last year, before the war stopped such works, out of a total appropriation of seventy million for the entire United States, Oklahoma secured $14,000,000.

Money is now available to start work on three of these dams as soon as the necessary material may be secured.

Again—should I be replaced it is not likely that another Oklahoma Senator will ever have direct control of funds to build irrigation works in western and flood-control works in eastern Oklahoma.

In passing I might suggest to my critical editorial friend that while I was a member of the State Senate of Oklahoma I financed the construction of the State Capitol building without resort to a bond issue.

Also, I might suggest to him that I was one of four State Senators to vote against the fifty million road bond bill and that after the proposal was submitted to a vote I campaigned the State against this issue and in the election the people voted down the bonds by over 100,000 majority.

PROGRAM FOR POST-WAR

I suggest the following issues, my position regarding same, and my plans to accomplish the ends desired:

1. Win the war quickly to save lives, property, and money.

Inasmuch as I am chairman of the Senate committee having charge of the funds to meet war expenses, I shall vote for sufficient money to furnish the best food and the best war equipment that it is possible to secure.

2. Establish and maintain a just peace.

I favor the establishment of a just peace and the development of an international tribunal for the purpose of preventing all aggression and future war.

3. Take proper care of our returning soldiers.

I favor the soldiers' bill of rights, which provides for hospitalization, rehabilitation, education, loans, and preference for Federal positions and on Federal works.

I voted for the increase in pay for our soldiers and sailors; also, I supported the bill to give the members of the armed forces the opportunity to vote in both the primary and general elections.

In the future, as in the past, I will safeguard the security of the sons and daughters of Oklahoma in the armed services of our country.

4. Guarantee farmers full parity prices by amending their parity formula so as to include all costs of farm labor.

I have a bill pending in the Congress providing that farmers shall have all labor costs added to the parity formula.

5. Retain and expand the soil-conservation program.

I am supporting liberal appropriations to support this most valuable farm activity.

6. Irrigation and flood-control developments where needed and where favored by landowners.

My committee has control of the funds for the development of irrigation and flood control, and I favor the construction of such projects as the landowners want.

7. Convert war plants into peacetime factories.

I favor a plan whereby existing war plants may be converted into factories for the making of peacetime commodities.

The bomber plants at Tulsa and Oklahoma City should be retained to make planes for peacetime services.

8. Stabilize bond market by authorizing financial institutions to keep and report their security holdings at par.

I have a bill to accomplish this purpose now pending in the Senate.

9. Repeal all emergency boards, commissions, and bureaus as soon as their missions are completed.

I shall work and vote to accomplish the purpose stated.

10. Retain, make wholly Federal, and increase old-age pension benefits.

I am supporting amendments to the social-security law to liberalize the system, to increase the assistance, and to make the payments uniform in all the States.

11. In order to protect our returning soldiers and sailors stop all immigration for a period of 5 years after the close of the war.

To accomplish this purpose I have a bill pending in the Congress.

12. I favor increasing the price of oil to full parity with other commodities.

Should this be done the price of the standard grade of oil will be approximately $2 per barrel.

Such a policy will promote and serve the war effort and, in addition, such an increase will add revenues to our State treasury, will help our farmers, our Indians, and all the counties and cities of the State where oil is produced.

Upon my record made in the State senate, in the National House of Representatives, and in the United States Senate, and upon the program outlined for the post-war period, I respectfully solicit the support and votes of the people of Oklahoma in the Democratic primary election to be held on July 11.

What Happens After the War?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES M. TUNNELL

OF DELAWARE

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 25 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address entitled "What Happens After the War?" by the Honorable Chester Bowles, printed in the Washington Post for May 4. The address has been printed in the public interest by the International Latex Corporation.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHAT HAPPENS AFTER THE WAR?

(Address by Chester Bowles, Price Administrator)

Today our industrial production stands 125 percent above the levels of 1939. Today our farm production stands at the highest levels of history. Today jobs go begging and anyone can sell anything that he can produce.

But let's not forget that this unprecedented level of business activity is built directly upon war demand, for directly or indirectly Government is now providing half the jobs and half the pay rolls of the country.

When the war is over and when our huge war expenditures disappear, what happens then? Will there be a market for all the goods we can produce? Will there be a job then for everybody who seeks one? Will we sustain the present high level of production, employment and national income in building an economy of abundance? Or will we again return to the unemployment, the artificial scarcities, and the low standard of living which plagued so many millions of our citizens before the war broke out?

No one man or any group of men can begin to have all the answers. But we know it will take expert management and a firm hand to bring us through the reconversion period with a whole skin. War contract termination settlements will have to be made and they will have to be made on a basis of fairness and speed. Millions of war workers will have to be placed in new jobs. Millions more will be returning from the armed services.

These adjustments will all be difficult. But no one should doubt our ability to make them successfully, provided that the national buying power can be sustained and markets found for all the goods we can produce. Can we find these markets? I think the answer is yes.

The demands of a vigorous, expanding America can fill the void that will be left when Government war expenditures are tapered off. They can keep our economy running indefinitely at peak capacity. But we must remember that these are only potential demands. Whether they will materialize in actual orders on the books will depend, first of all, upon how effectively we plan the job of unwinding our wartime economy. The job will not be an easy one and a slip may well spell disaster.

THE THREAT OF POST-WAR COLLAPSE

If when the war is over we fail to take full and immediate advantage of our export opportunities, if we are not prepared to throw in public works when they are needed, business activity will slow down. If that happens, employment, pay rolls, and prices will begin to fall and the vast potential demand of 132,000,000 consumers and of 3,000,000 businesses will dry up and disappear.

Men who have lost their jobs don't buy that new refrigerator and they don't buy that new car, nor do they make a first payment on a new home. Permit employment levels to shrink and fear will hold most of the hundred billion dollars of wartime savings off the market.

Businessmen don't invest in a falling market. When prices are dropping, there won't be much replacing of equipment and building of new plants. To a large extent the twenty-five billions of reserves that business has accumulated will remain right where they are, in reserve.

What I am saying is that if we permit the economy to sag immediately after the war, we face a tailspin. We face the menace of deflation feeding upon itself, with no one knowing how fast the economy will fall or how far. It seems to me imperative that we see to it now that this will not be permitted to happen.

PROGRAM FOR THE RECONVERSION PERIOD

Full advantage must be taken of our export markets. The world will need vast quantities of our goods. If we are to have this business—and have it we must—we shall have to provide broad export credits. We must make the decision now that these credits will be extended.

Further, we must determine now that needed public works—Federal, State, and local—will be thrown into the breach at precisely the time and in whatever quantity is necessary to keep the wheels of industry running and to keep men at their jobs. Public works must be planned today and the programs at all levels of Government must be coordinated so that they may be instantly available if the need arises.

And finally, we must determine now that any broad deflation of our present price and wage structure will not be permitted. We have placed ceilings over prices and wages to prevent wartime inflation. In the reconversion period, we must protect prices and wages to prevent equally disastrous deflation.

WHAT HAPPENS AFTER RECONVERSION?

I think all reasonable men will agree that only wise management on the part of Government and business can bring us through the reconversion period with our economy still sound.

What deeply troubles many of us is the question, When does the Government step out? Do we have to reconcile ourselves to a regulated economy indefinitely? For my part, I am convinced that if extensive Government regulation is long continued, the springs of our vitality will dry up and our present free society will gradually decay.

It may be that for other peoples other systems may work effectively. But free enterprise is the system with which we in this country have converted a wilderness into the greatest industrial civilization ever built. In the past, free enterprise has served us magnificently. It can continue to do so, but very frankly I have no patience with those who can see only its virtues and are blind to its past defects or unwilling to take steps to correct them.

As our free enterprise system has worked in the past, it has periodically yielded us many years of depression. During the years of the upsurge of the business cycle we took giant steps forward only to lose, in the years of depression, a valuable portion of the ground we had gained.

It has meant that we have periodically condemned the Nation, every part of it, to idleness and poverty, to foreclosures and bankruptcies, to insecurity and despair. And this was the more galling because men went idle and mouths went improperly fed in a country that was recognized to be the richest and most plentifully endowed on this earth.

There was a time when these periodic break-downs of our economy could be tolerated. It was not so long ago when no American was more than one generation from the farm. Forty years ago, when depressions hit, when plants closed down, the industrial worker could often return to his family farm and find there a living for himself and his family.

That time has passed. Today, the industrial workers of Detroit cannot retreat to the farms. It is here—on the assembly lines of your own Detroit—that they must make their living and find their security.

There was a time when we believed that the business cycle was a disease of our system for which there was no cure. It was bitter medicine. But knowing no alternative, we accepted it.

Today we know better. With good planning, with close cooperation between Government and business, we know that the level of business activity can be sustained. We know that resulting jobs can be provided.

DEPRESSIONS CAN BE PREVENTED

In my opinion, the Nation will never again accept poverty in the midst of plenty. No longer will our people accept insecurity in peacetime, when the power of our economy to create abundance has been so vividly proven in time of war.

It has been claimed that economic security is incompatible with the free-enterprise system. That, in my judgment, is nonsense. It is nonsense because it fails to distinguish between the risks of competition, which are and must be part of our system, and the risks of depression, which no man, however efficient, however enterprising, can overcome.

During the periods of depression it is not the inefficient business alone that goes under, but the efficient as well. In depression, it is not the inefficient or the lazy worker alone who cannot find a job, but the efficient and the industrious one as well.

Americans are overwhelmingly in favor of a system in which the efficient will thrive and the productive and the resourceful can find rewards commensurate with the contribution they can make to our society. To attain this goal, it is imperative that markets be maintained for all who can produce and that resulting job opportunities be provided for all who are able and willing to work. The free-enterprise system can never fulfill its promise unless this is done.

Let me state most emphatically that this does not mean Government competition with industry or Government control of industry. It means a Government that encourages, that stimulates, that supports free enterprise and the initiative of the individual. The essential role of Government in our economic future, backed by the will of all of our people, must be to underwrite a high level of business activity and thereby to release the full energies of all our people under our democratic free-enterprise system.

And let us never forget that we are the Government. The Government responds to our will and our direction. That point will bear constant repetition because fear of government may be the most dangerous single stumbling block in the path of a vigorous, dynamic, expanding, free-enterprise economy in the years following the war.

As a public service we present this important contribution to American thinking.

Presidential Election in Argentina

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUGH A. BUTLER
OF NEBRASKA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, May 25 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a short article entitled "Argentines See Opportunity To Elect Their President," by Stanley Johnston, published in the Washington Times-Herald of May 24, 1944.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ARGENTINES SEE OPPORTUNITY TO ELECT THEIR PRESIDENT

(By Stanley Johnston)

Out of the political confusion caused in Argentina's national affairs by repeated coups d'etat in recent months are emerging indications to inspire hope among her people they may be granted the first election held in the dictator-governed republic in 7 years.

But realization of the hope is tangled with the political destiny of Col. Juan Peron, a strong man credited with the behind-the-scenes control of the present Army clique regime.

PERON HAS AMBITIONS

Informed Argentines contend that Peron has aspirations to become the nation's chief executive. But because he has a craving to be a popular figure and is being frustrated in that desire by increasing public disfavor with his junta government, these observers say his vanity may induce him to call an election at which he will be a candidate for President.

Peron emerged from virtual obscurity as a mid-rank officer to head the Army group known as the coloneis' lodge, which has engineered two revolts in the past year. He now operates from the background position of Acting Minister of War in the present Cabinet nominally headed by President Gen. Edelmiro Farrell.

The last Argentine election was held September 5, 1937, when Roberto M. Ortiz was elected President. Because of near blindness, he resigned June 27, 1942, and the Presidency automatically was assumed by the Vice President, Ramon S. Castillo.

ELECTION BLOCKED

Castillo's conservative government was overthrown on June 4, 1943, while preparing for the next constitutionally provided election, which was to have been held last fall. Castillo was removed by a swift coup headed by Gen. Pedro Ramirez, who had been minister of war in Castillo's cabinet.

Ramirez became president after his colleague, Gen. Arturo Rawson, had ruled for a few days, but was turned out February 24 in a palace coup, details of which only now are becoming known. His post was taken over by Farrell, who had been his vice president.

When Ramirez moved to join other Latin American countries in breaking with the Axis, he was opposed to the small pro-Nazi group in the Argentina foreign office and by the strongly nationalistic forces. The latter contended their country's future lay in following an independent ccurse to maintain its trade with Europe after the war.

Ramirez finally severed diplomatic relations with the Axis on January 26. Immediately the American State Department took credit for the break and hailed it as a result of our administration's good neighbor policy.

Taking advantage of the dissent in the power group, Peron moved another front man forward, Ramirez was ousted in February and Farrell became executive vice president.

It was said in Buenos Aires that Ramirez wrote into his resignation the charge that on the night of February 24 he was seized by military officers acting for Peron and Farrell, and taken to a house in a Buenos Aires suburb. There he was accused, he declared, of having lied when he explained that he broke with the Axis because of Nazi espionage in Argentina. He actually acted, his accusers contended, because he had given way under pressure from the United States, as indicated by our claim to credit for the Argentina break.

WRITES ACCUSATIONS

Ramirez submitted his resignation but wrote into it these events and accusations and his denials.

Despite efforts during the intervening 15 days to hide from Argentines the fact that Ramirez had resigned, the news leaked out, and the people learned, to their distaste, of the fight for personal power within the junta.

The Farrell junta moved early to control the press of the country. In addition to imposing a close censorship on Argentina newspapers, the new government attacked on technical allegations two United States world news services, the United Press and Associated Press, and for a short time halted their operations.

Adding to the unhappiness of the Argentines over these domestic matters was their concern over the United States' failure to recognize the new government, which has reopened the entire question of Argentina's support of the Allies against the Axis.

It is this growing disapproval, many Argentines believe, that will induce Peron to call an election.

Essential Need of an Adequate Peacetime Merchant Marine

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND
OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I include therein the recent address of Mr. Almon E. Roth, president of the National Federation of American Shipping, Inc., in San Francisco on May 22, 1944, at a Maritime Day luncheon jointly sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce, Junior Chamber of Commerce, the Marine Exchange, the Propeller Club, and the Commercial Club of San Francisco:

As a nation we have learned some bitter lessons out of the cruel experiences of this war. One such lesson is the essential need of an adequate peacetime merchant marine—prepared to serve in time of war.

There should be no doubt in the mind of any American citizen that the cost of this war in terms of time, lives, and money has been greatly increased by our lack of sufficient merchant ships to serve as Army and Navy auxiliaries at the outset of hostilities. The tragic lack of ships and the extent to which this deficiency hampered our fighting forces run like a theme through the recent reports of Admiral Ernest J. King, Commander in Chief of the United States Fleet, and Gen. George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff of the United States Army.

Admiral King said, in part—I quote—"no maritime nation has ever been able to fight a war successfully without an adequate merchant marine—something we did not have when the two-ocean Navy was authorized. Although we had made some progress and had for some months been increasing our defenses in the Western Hemisphere, our armed forces and our production were not adequately expanded and developed to permit our taking the over-all offensive in any theater. The Army Ground and Air Forces and our shipping were not yet prepared to move overseas in sufficient strength for an offensive, and the Navy, even without the losses sustained at Pearl Harbor, could not alone carry the war to the enemy. We were, therefore, forced to assume the defensive in both oceans, while preparations for an amphibious war were intensified."

General Marshall in his report said, in part, I quote, as follows: "Our developments were made in the light of limited resources in troops and equipment at the time and a continued lack of sufficient ocean tonnage or landing craft, or both, and were influenced also by the length of the turn-around required of ocean shipping and the limited dock facilities available. For both Great Britain and the United States, military operations in the Pacific area and in the Far East, created unprecedented logistical problems with respect to shipping. Time and space factors dictated our strategy to a considerable degree. To land and maintain American forces in Australia, required more than twice the shipping tonnage necessary for similar American forces in Europe or north Africa—shipping limitations precluded the early dispatch of large bodies of ground troops."

Still quoting General Marshall:

"In planning the north African campaign, the military desired to make initial landings to the east of Algiers, but the lack of shipping and of landing boats and aircraft carriers at the time made this procedure impracticable. It was desired to carry out the operation early in the fall, but it was necessary to delay until November in order to receive a large number of craft from the shipyards and provide and train the crews for the operation of these vessels." End of quote.

In speaking of the volume of shipping required for the conduct of modern warfare, General Marshall said, "the tremendous amount of shipping required for a modern army is not generally understood. For instance, in computing initial shipping requirements, an average of six measurement tons of cargo space per man is required. Maintenance requirements average one measurement ton per man per month."

These reports furnish convincing expert evidence of the vital part which shipping has played and will continue to play in the conduct of this or any other war.

But the value of an adequate merchant marine does not rest alone upon its usefulness as a means of conducting successful warfare. Ample shipping facilities are also a potent form of insurance against war.

No one can doubt that Japan's decision to wage war against this Nation, and its dastardly attack upon Pearl Harbor, were predicated upon the knowledge that this country lacked not only fighting ships, but also the merchant ships which would be required to wage an immediate and effective war throughout the broad expanses of the Pacific.

By the same token, Germany certainly counted upon the inadequacy of our shipping facilities in appraising her chances for success when she plunged the world into conflict.

It is generally recognized that the principal hope for maintaining future world peace depends upon the willingness and ability of the Allies to police the world against future wars. Our Nation's responsibility, in this connection, will require the maintenance of a navy several times the size of our prewar fleet. This means that our merchant marine, as an auxiliary to that Navy, must be strengthened correspondingly.

As a result of the difficulties which we have faced due to the lack of shipping, and because of the important role which merchant ships will continue to play throughout this war, the American public is for the moment merchant-marine minded. There is hardly a family in this broad land which does not have a very direct and personal stake in the adequacy of our American merchant marine. Millions of our sons and daughters have been carried to far distant shores in merchant ships. The speed with which they will be returned to their homes and families, when the war is ended, will depend largely upon the number of ships available for their transportation. In the meantime, their comfort, their health, and their efficiency as fighting men, will depend upon our ability to furnish them with requisite equipment and supplies. No single factor bears more directly upon the probable length of this war than our ability to transport men and equipment by ships, and to keep them properly supplied.

But we must not be misled into false security.

If history repeats itself the popular interest of the moment is no guaranty of continued support for a strong merchant marine once the war has ended.

For many years it has been the declared national policy to maintain a merchant marine adequate for purposes of defense and sufficient to carry our domestic water-borne commerce and a substantial portion of our foreign trade.

Unfortunately, however, we have been long on preachment and short on practice.

The First World War, like this conflict, found us woefully unprepared with shipping facilities. Then, as now, we built shipyards and ships without regard for cost, in a frantic race against time.

When the war ended we immediately folded our hands and allowed our new merchant marine, built at such great cost and effort, to rust and rot. Believe it or not, we did not build one new dry-cargo ship in the United States for use in foreign trade between 1922 and 1936. We became a fifth-rate maritime power. There grew up in this country a considerable body of fallacious public opinion which held that we did not need a merchant marine; that, indeed, an adequate merchant fleet was a positive national detriment because other countries, unless allowed to sell us shipping services, would not buy our products.

When this war struck the United States, two fortuitous circumstances saved us from the full consequences of our folly.

Fortunately, in 1936, Congress authorized a program which called for the construction of 500 ships during the next 10 years. Although the first ship under this program was not launched until April 1939, the Maritime Commission, under the able chairmanship of Admiral Land, and the efficient vice chairmanship of Admiral Vickery, had done much valuable planning and spade work before the outbreak of war. This pre-war planning greatly facilitated our ship construction program.

We had, at the outset of the present war, the wholly inadequate tonnage of only 6,800,000 gross tons. The output of our shipyards for 1943 totaled approximately 20,000,000 tons. In 1944 we shall reach the incredible total of 30,000,000 tons. You can gain some conception of the significance of these figures when I remind you that, at the outbreak of war, the total combined shipping tonnage of the entire world amounted to only 60,000,000 tons.

The task of recruiting and training crews to man our new ships has been carried out under the competent direction of our fellow San Franciscan, Capt. Edward Macauley. In the short space of 2½ years, our sea-going personnel has been more than tripled.

The second fortuitous circumstance, which too often has been overlooked, was that, notwithstanding the lack of popular interest in our merchant marine, we did in fact have at least the nucleus of an efficiently managed and operated maritime industry. This nucleus has proved invaluable in our war effort. The shipping industry began converting to a full wartime basis well before Pearl Harbor. Today it is the only major transportation facility in the country which is wholly devoted to war purposes. Every one of its ships, and practically all of its shore establishments, have been engaged in full-time war pursuits since Pearl Harbor.

Not many Americans understand that, while the Maritime Commission has carried on and supervised the gigantic tasks of building ships, the major portion of our American tonnage is actually operated by American private shipping firms. In cooperation with the War Shipping Administration our private operators have kept our ships moving in all the seven seas, and to and from ports where American ships never have called before.

The construction feats of the shipbuilding industry and the heroic services of our officers and crews quite properly have been widely acclaimed. Little, however, has so far been said about the spendid contribution which the management side of the shipping industry has made to the conduct of the war. So far as I know, no E's or M's have yet been awarded to shipping management.

As a part of our Maritime Day celebration, it is altogether fitting that we pause to pay tribute to the thousands of American officers and seamen who have lost their lives in the service of their country, and to applaud the many thousands who today are braving storms and military destruction to convoy our troops and equipment to the far-flung corners of the earth.

More than 10,000 American seamen have seen their vessels destroyed. One seaman has served on 13 different torpedoed ships. Notwithstanding these hazards, our seagoing personnel has increased by voluntary enlistment from 50,000 to approximately 150,000 men.

It is a significant and heartening fact that approximately 95 percent of our crews are American citizens.

We should also pay tribute at this time to the many old-timers who, at the call of their Government, voluntarily have returned to the sea from other walks of life, to assist and train the inexperienced men who comprise such a large proportion of our new personnel.

Government, management, and labor, with splendid teamwork, are accomplishing the most gigantic transportation undertaking in all history.

It remains to be seen whether we shall be able, by similar teamwork, to establish and maintain an adequate merchant marine in peacetime.

In appraising the chances for successful post-war private operation of a greatly enlarged American merchant marine, we must be realistic and take into account certain difficulties and handicaps which lie ahead.

We cannot close our eyes to the fact that even before the war our operating costs were approximately 35 percent higher than those of our foreign competitors. The cost of constructing a vessel in an American shipyard was almost twice the cost of foreign construction. One of our most difficult problems will be to meet the post-war competition of foreign maritime nations without undue sacrifice of the living standards of our operating personnel.

The Merchant Marine Act of 1936 takes cognizance of this fundamental difficulty and authorizes the payment of so-called construction and operation subsidies to equalize American costs with foreign costs. It should be noted, however, that these allowances are available only to vessels which are engaged in foreign commerce. They are not available to our domestic ships.

Incidentally, construction differentials are not bounties which are granted to ship operators. They are, in effect, equalization allowances which merely make it possible for an American shipowner to obtain ships from American shipyards at a cost no greater than that at which they might be purchased in foreign yards. Their primary purpose is to encourage the construction of American vessels in American shipyards. It has sometimes been improperly charged that these equalization payments constitute a form of unfair international competition. Nothing could be farther from the truth. There is nothing unfair in equalizing the amount of capital which which the American shipowner invests in his ships with the amount which a foreign shipowner pays for his fleet.

There are many uncertainties which make it extremely difficult to envision the future of the American merchant marine.

No one can forecast, as yet, with any degree of certainty, what the post-war volume of either domestic or foreign trade will be. Among the many indeterminable factors which enter into the foreign trade picture, are such items as embargoes, tariffs, rates of exchange, national incomes of various nations, and the rapidity with which devastated countries are rehabilitated.

The volume of foreign trade, which will be available for American ships may depend, in part, upon international understandings which will not be arrived at until the peace conference.

At present we do not even know to what extent or on what terms American-owned ships will be turned over to our foreign competitors.

Until some of these uncertainties have been resolved into known facts, it will be impossible to determine the amount of tonnage which can be soundly employed in our American merchant marine.

There is every indication that we will end the war with more ships than we will require for our own use. Unfortunately, however, many of these vessels cannot be readily utilized in some types of service. The Maritime Commission now is concentrating, very wisely, upon the construction of fast vessels of the C type. But even these fast ships do not meet all the requirements of some trades and routes. It is certain that our foreign competitors in due course will rehabilitate their decimated fleets with the most modern and efficient types of vessels. In view of our high wage scales, it is extremely important that our post-war merchant marine should likewise be equipped with equally efficient ships. No one can foretell how many of the more suitable types will be accessible for commercial use, or how soon they will become available.

We must not overlook the fact that more than half of our operating tonnage at the beginning of the war was engaged in domestic commerce. If this important segment of our maritime industry is to survive, it must be able to keep its operating costs within rate ceilings which are geared to the cost of other forms of domestic transportation.

As already pointed out, our domestic trade is not eligible to receive either construction or operating differential payments from the Government.

Some way must be found to replace and expand our domestic fleets on a capital structure which will enable them to earn a reasonable return.

A factor of prime importance to both our domestic and foreign lines is the possibility of developing more efficient and economical methods of handling cargo. Few people realize that in many instances the cost of loading and discharging cargo constitutes as much as 40 percent of the total cost of handling and transportation.

An exceedingly important item in determining whether the American merchant marine will be enabled to compete in the world shipping markets is the question of whether our steamship companies shall be permitted to operate air transports in conjunction with their surface operations.

American shipping companies have a great background of experience and foreign contacts which can prove most valuable in promoting the interests of American air transportation. Their overseas staffs are familiar with customs and other regulations, and much of their existing personnel and knowledge can be utilized to give efficient and economical air service. Common sense dictates that these valuable assets should not be wasted.

It is common knowledge that our foreign shipping competitors are prepared to integrate their surface traffic with overseas air service. Some were so doing before tne war. Others are preparing now to offer their customers a combined sea and air service after the war. Yet today it is still an open question whether this Government will permit our own merchant marine to meet this competition on an even footing.

It would be folly to ask our shipping industry to engage in a fiercely competitive enterprise while bound in an economic strait jacket. Yet that is precisely what some short-sighted persons would have us do. Fortunately, I think we can rely on plain American common sense to take care of this situation.

In this connection, I am happy to report that our own San Francisco Congressman, the Honorable RICHARD J. WELCH, is taking a leading and effective part in the effort to establish the right of steamship companies to engage in foreign air-borne commerce.

A fatal error into which we as a nation must not fall is the philosophy of "let the Government do it." We have been much too prone in the past to shrug off our responsibilities as citizens and turn the job over to Washington. In wartime, of course, there has to be a great measure of central direction of our whole economy and of its individual units, and shipping certainly has been no exception. But the shipping industry does not propose to shirk its responsibilities in planning for the peace, and I am confident that the public will lend the required support.

Admiral Land has expressed the Maritime Commission's attitude in these words—I quote:

"These war problems have obviously necessitated a considerable governmental control and direction of private business. But it is well to bear in mind that a return of that control to private business when the war emergency no longer exists is a definite part of our program. That, as you well know, has been the intent of Congress and the Maritime Commission since its establishment. There has been no change in that policy. It is evident that post-war plans for a greater merchant marine must be based upon that premise. It is equally evident that the American merchant marine must serve as the mainstay of transportation in the economic restoration of world commerce when the victory has been won"

If we are to have a strong and healthy merchant marine and keep it so in the years to come, it must attract private capital. That means that conditions will have to be such that our shipping can earn a reasonable return and present to capital a long-range incentive.

That is why, in my opinion, it is of first importance that the Government chart its own course at the earliest possible date as to those issues which fall solely within the province of government. How much merchant tonnage does the Navy think will be required to meet its needs for auxiliaries in the post-war era? How much of our present tonnage does the Government propose to turn over, if any, to friendly competing nations, and on what terms? How much does it propose to lay up as a reserve, and what types of ships are to be placed in that reserve? What commitments, if any, will our Government make as to allocation of foreign-trade routes?

We of the shipping industry pledge our wholehearted cooperation with government in arriving at answers to these and the other vexing problems which lie ahead. At the same time we pledge that we shall bend our own best energies to the solution of those problems which lie in the shipping industry's own province.

We are all agreed, I take it, as to objectives. The job now is to find the ways and means. To that end let us all—in government, in the industry, in labor, and as good citizens—dedicate ourselves on this Maritime Day.

The Communists Know What They Want

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted, there is printed herewith an article by Frank R. Kent, as follows:

BROWDER ENDORSEMENT OF FOURTH TERM DECLARED BOTH LOGICAL AND CONSISTENT

(By Frank R. Kent)

For the Communist Party, which now calls itself the Communist Political Association, to favor Mr. Roosevelt's fourth-term candidacy is entirely logical and consistent.

This was forecast many months ago by the declaration of Mr. Earl Browder, whom Mr. Roosevelt released from prison "in the interest of national unity" nearly 2 years ago, and will surprise no one.

In his demand for a fourth Roosevelt term, Mr. Browder was so far ahead of all others that he easily can establish his claim to being the original fourth termer.

The C. I. O. leaders, the city bosses, such as Hague and Kelly, all followed Mr. Browder—they did not precede him. Moreover, Mr. Browder is not swinging his party for a fourth term because of the presidential pardon. In all probability he would have taken the lead in the movement if he were still in jail.

Support of Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal has been a Communist Party policy since 1936. The Communists supported Mr. Roosevelt even when they had a Presidential candidate of their own. They supported him even when he found it politically expedient to say he did not desire their support. And the reason the Communists have been for Mr. Roosevelt so long and are for him so unitedly this time is very clear indeed.

MOVE TOWARD "OUR GOALS"

They have publicly declared it upon various occasions. In brief, it is that the Roosevelt policies and the New Deal tend in the Communist direction and, better than anything else, help move the country toward "our goals." Communist platforms have said this in so many words and Mr. Browder, the Communist leader, has proclaimed it in his speeches.

Until quite recently, one of the clearly understood goals of the Communist Party was to bring about an economic chaos in this country out of which communism would emerge. The New Deal being clearly headed toward economic chaos, the Communist support was clearly intelligent from their standpoint.

Early in 1942, during the deportation proceeding against Harry Bridges, radical West coast C. I. O. labor leader, Attorney General Biddle characterized the Communist Party as an agency which advocated the overthrow of the United States Government. A very short time ago through Mr. Browder, it was announced that the Communist Party would put no Presidential candidate in the field this year and intended to dissolve as a political party.

At its convention on Sunday it changed its name and adopted a constitution in which expulsion was pronounced upon all those who seek to "subvert, undermine, weaken, or overthrow any or all institutions of American democracy." Thus, the leopard changed its spots—or at least, such is the idea sought to be promulgated. Of course, none but the most completely credulous believe any such thing.

The change in name means nothing. The abandonment of the separate party idea relieves the leaders of both labor and expense. It in no way weakens their position as a solid voting bloc. It involves no change in either leadership or aims. It increases their political potency.

EASIER "TO BORE FROM WITHIN"

It makes it easier for the Communists to "bore from within," and anyone who does not think they have been successfully boring might ponder the completeness with which it now has taken control of the American Labor Party in New York. It would also be illuminating to read the long list of C. I. O. leaders, white and colored, who attended the first gathering of the Communist Political Association on Sunday in New York.

Certainly, that list goes a long way toward confirming the frequent charges of Mr. John L. Lewis and others that the Communists are in key positions inside the big C. I. O. unions and wield the real power within the organization. As things stand now, Mr. Browder, representing the Communists, and the Messrs. Phillip Murray and Sidney Hillman, representing the C. I. O., are the most ardent and articulate advocates of the fourth term.

The "Liberal" party, composed of the defeated right wing of the American Labor Party, has also declared for Mr. Roosevelt. So has the Daily Worker, the Communist organ, and all the other left-wing newspapers, magazines, and organizations.

It is not true, of course, that all of those who want Mr. Roosevelt for a fourth term are crackpots and radicals. But it is true that all the crackpots and radicals want a fourth term. That vote he has with complete solidity.

Moreover, the activity of this element is so great, its propaganda facilities so extraordinary and its finances so strong that it seems bound to color the fourth-term campaign—even, some think, likely to have more to do with its real management than the Democratic National Committee, itself.

It is not surprising that, as they observe these radical elements rushing to the front, regular Democrats are somewhat appalled. It is not surprising that there should be speculations as to whether in the event of another Roosevelt election, the communistic C. I. O. would not be in position really to take over the Democratic Party. At any rate, there is a great deal more fourth-term enthusiasm evinced at this time among the radicals than among the regulars. And that is logical, too.

A Partisan War Labor Board

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 23, 1944

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, David Lawrence says unions are out-guessing the War Labor Board. Here are his comments:

When Chairman Davis of the War Labor Board says that it is necessary to seize plants in order to prevent the no-strike pledge from being ignored by labor itself, he is in fact saying that it is necessary to put pressure on the employer in order to win over the employees.

For in many cases the employee unions have maneuvered the situation into one where, after they have called a strike, the War Labor Board has been unable to get jurisdiction over the strikers except by seizing the plant. The administration has never recommended the use of any penalties for striking labor unions, and the idea that the no-strike pledge has been kept is based upon the equivocal statement that strikes which are unauthorized do not count in the tally.

As a matter of fact, labor union leaders frequently maneuver the War Labor Board into the position of seizing a property in order to prove to their constituent members that they are doing something to justify their positions.

AWAKENS TO TENDENCY

The War Labor Board has recently awakened to this tendency and has started to apply some sanctions to striking unions. The National Labor Relations Board has assisted in the process only to receive the condemnation of labor unions. The fact is that as long as the labor unions can get favorable decisions from the War Labor Board and the National Labor Relations Board, they support these decisions, but once the decisions go against them, they assail the members and either withdraw from participation in the boards or ignore the hearings.

The real reason for this is that labor unions have not really appreciated the fact which employers have already recognized, namely, that the War Labor Board has taken unto itself the power of compulsory arbitration. No labor leader in his right mind will accept Government compulsion in peacetime and very few of them have been willing to accept compulsory arbitration in wartime.

The truth is that every suggestion or proposal of legislate compulsory arbitration has been rebuffed by the labor leaders. The idea that a Government tribunal can order a settlement is not relished by labor unions when the orders are unfavorable to the employee, but most of the orders of the War Labor Board have been against the employers. That is why the War Labor Board without any authority from Congress, has ordered "maintenance of membership" contracts.

The War Labor Board consists of three groups, namely, labor representatives, management representatives, and so-called public representatives. The public representatives, as reflected in their decisions, are in the main favorable to the labor unions. The policy of ordering the "maintenance of membership" clauses in union contracts has been consistently supported by the three public members of the labor boards.

THEORY BEHIND CLAUSE

The theory behind the "maintenance of membership" clause is that the labor unions should be given some sort of reward for their loyalty in not indulging in strikes. It is contended that labor unions are unable, on account of wage stabilization, to get much for their members, and this would result in a drop-off of members, and hence in the amounts of labor dues, unless the Government put into effect the "maintenance of membership" clause requiring members to stay in the union once they join.

There is no such reward for the employer who fails to lock out employees in wartime, or maintains his plant even at a loss in order to keep going in the hope of eventually getting into the black. There is no reward for the employer who is the victim of jurisdictional disputes between employees. Nobody has ever suggested that he, too, be compensated for the loss he incurs while unions fight it out. Indeed, there is no fairness in the Roosevelt administration policies where the employer is concerned.

To argue, therefore, that it is necessary to seize plants in order to prevent an epidemic of strikes is merely to scratch the surface and ignore the fundamentals. If the War Labor Board had a policy that applied equally between the employers and employees there would have been very little clamor over the seizure of the property of employers who were recalcitrant.

Must We Bankrupt Industry's Supply of Trained Technicians?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. COMPTON I. WHITE

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 18, 1944

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, in the hysteria of war we rush from one extreme to the other. First we must have unlimited supplies of raw material and commodities of every description, then we find we are oversupplied with many things we cannot use. Now we are draining our schools of the student material on which America must depend for the future technical operation of its industries—if we are not to go into a hopeless recession after the war. This mistaken policy on the part of our Government is brought to our attention in a recent communication from Mrs. J. V. Edeskuty, of the Minneapolis Federation of Women's Clubs, which is inserted herewith for the consideration of my colleagues:

MAY 16, 1944.

WAR SERVICE COMMITTEE,
Vocational Training Chairman,
Fifth District, Minneapolis, Minn.

DEAR SIR: May I ask your cooperation and help on the following information, please?

The war effort, as well as the peace and reconstruction, will depend on our industries and their trained technical men.

What have other countries done to insure an adequate supply of technical men?

Germany and Russia have retained perhaps half their technical students of science; England and Canada conserved most of their students in engineering; Canada has more than twice the pre-war number.

WHAT ARE WE DOING?

For the past 2 years no high-school graduates were permitted to enter engineering colleges. This reduced the present number of engineering students from 108,911 to 45,404 in October 1943. In January 1944 this was sharply reduced to 10,000. Of this number 6,800 are now in school. They consist of seniors and juniors.

The latest order is that all engineering students now in school must join the armed forces after June graduation exercises whether they complete their courses or not. (Quoted from article by Dr. S. C. Lind, dean of the Institute of Technology of the University of Minnesota, in the May Ben of Tau Beta Pi, magazine of an honoraby engineering fraternity which only the best students are privileges to enter.) A great majority of these students are given scholarships by industry for post-graduate work, and most of our research workers are developed from this group. They should be permitted to continue their studies.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE INSTEAD?

In 1944, 2,586 Tau Beta Pi students and graduates have been inducted into the armed forces, and 22 of these have been killed. Such a short-sighted policy can only lead to disaster to our industries, and eventually to our war effort and the peace and reconstruction. All will depend on our trained technical men who cannot be replaced for years to come.

May I urge prompt consideration be given in order to prevent the closing of our engineering colleges? That the present students be permitted to finish their courses in science. That high-grade student graduates be readmitted to colleges for post-graduate work, and that present personnel in essential jobs as essential to the winning of the war, and the winning of the peace be deferred.

With faith in your ability to help in consideration of this appeal.

Very sincerely,

MRS. J. V. EDESKUTY, M. F. W. C.,
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

A Tax That Backfired

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS ROLPH
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, an editorial captioned "A tax that backfired" recently appeared in the San Francisco Examiner.

The article calls attention to the present 30-percent Federal tax added to bills charged by those cabarets and cafes which offer entertainment. Prior to the current tax law, 5 percent was charged. In other words, the tax was raised 500 percent. Legislation is before Congress to reduce the 30 percent rate to 10 percent.

Unless granted relief, many well-known cafes throughout the Nation will be forced to close. Net result drastically reduced Federal revenue plus numbers of people thrown out of employment. The editorial is quoted in full as follows:

A TAX THAT BACKFIRED

There is a stable axiom in economics called the law of diminishing return. It is taken generally to mean that increase in capital or labor applied beyond a certain point causes a less than proportionate increase in production.

That law has never been repealed in industry—nor in taxation.

Congress, in its recent revision of the Federal tax bill tried to repeal it in the case of night clubs and cafes which offer entertainment—but the old law stands—unrepealed.

Congress put a tax of 30 percent on the bill charged in these resorts, and the result is that patrons stayed away.

That has caused loss to the establishments, and they have discharged entertainers or omitted entertainment entirely so that this new tax need not be levied on their customers.

Many of the places throughout the country have closed up, thousands of musicians and dancers and comedians have been discharged, with resulting decrease to the Government of income-tax payments which could have been collected on their usually generous salaries.

Like bad money drives out good money, bad taxes kill revenue.

Congress overreached itself in this tax, and has lost its balance in cash. The high tax defeated its purpose.

Now let Congress be sensible and practical. Admitted that cafe entertainment is a luxury, but people—including servicemen—want some luxuries and are willing to pay reasonably for them—but will not stand extortionate taxes.

So Congress should hasten to repeal that particular unsound clause in the revenue bill, make the tax reasonable and collect reasonable revenue where now it collects nothing.

Preservation of Constitutional Government

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. J. HARRY McGREGOR
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, the clash between the legislative and executive branches of government precipitated by President Roosevelt's veto of the tax bill and his recent action relative to Montgomery Ward & Co., had to come sometime if the trend toward totalitarianism is to be halted and constitutional Government is to be preserved. Not until Mr. Roosevelt became the resident of the White House, was there any noticeable evidence of a concerted and organized campaign to place extraordinary powers in the hands of the Executive, through transfer of authority from the legislative to the executive department. The first attempt to justify this change was under the guise of the emergency caused by the depression. Another emergency, created by the war, then developed. While we are all in complete accord with every activity necessary to the winning of the war, yet advantage has been taken of this critical situation to obtain from Congress authority which was vested in the legislative branch, by provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, we find that we now have scores of agencies set up by Executive directive, and, to a great extent, government by bureaucratic decree instead of government by legislation. Under this management, Government bureaus have the power of life and death over practically every individual and private business enterprise in the country.

The people are aroused, Congress should be aroused, and at once put a stop to the power of these Government bureaus which are practically destroying private business through the imposition of penalties. These bureaus have a control over industry, business and civilian life, and by directives make our laws and then serve as prosecutor, judge, and jury.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, while we are fighting the greatest war in history, to preserve our freedom, we do not want to lose our own constitutional form of government. If we continue to allow bureaucratic control and government by Executive decrees, it will not be long until the legislative branch will be so stripped of authority and the executive department so entrenched that any attempt to recover constitutional government will be doomed for defeat.

So again I say, Mr. Speaker, we, as Members of Congress, can and must stop bureaucratic control or government by Executive directives. We represent the people and we stand between government by representation on one hand and government by bureaucracy and dictatorship on the other. We must lead the fight for the survival of our American institutions, our American people, and our American form of government.

Not Feasible for Rehabilitation, Now Producing

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOSEPH MRUK
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. MRUK. Mr. Speaker, in my home city of Buffalo, N. Y., there has been successfully established one of the most amazing business innovations of our modern day, Handicapped Persons Industries, Inc.

This worthy enterprise was launched for the specific purpose of utilizing the services of and training those usually termed "not feasible for rehabilitation," and it employs today aproximately 30 persons who are either deaf, blind, have lost an arm or leg, or are otherwise disabled by congenital defect, injury, or disease.

Handicapped Persons Industries, Inc., is unique in more than one way. Not only does it pay the prevailing wage to its employees but also it pays unemployment insurance, does not seek exemption from the Minimum Wage Act, and enables every worker so employed to become beneficiary of social-security and unemployment-insurance benefits. The objective is not only to perfect our economic system by utilizing the talents and abilities of individuals ordinarily consigned to the "human scrap pile" but to lighten the tax load by taking these people off relief rolls, and so forth.

This industry, a nonprofit, beneficent, educational corporation, was conceived and founded by my fellow townsman, its president, Harold J. McMahon, himself a cripple, but possessed of a burning desire to aid his fellow handicapped. I understand that this movement is spreading to other areas, no doubt because of the fact that the enterprise has proven itself to be practical and adaptable to the needs of any given community.

Mr. McMahon is also a national vice president of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped, Inc., with headquarters in Washington, D. C. This federation, as is well known to Members of Congress, is vigorously campaigning for a national program for all the 25,000,000 physically handicapped in America, and now has pending before Congress House Resolution 230, providing that the House Labor Committee shall investigate, survey, and develop a national program for all the physically handicapped; House Joint Resolution 69 and Senate Joint Resolution 34, National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week; H. R. 1867, establishing an office of personal catastrophe loans; and House Joint Resolution 103 and Senate Joint Resolution 43, establishing a division for the physically handicapped in the United States Employment Service.

A. F. P. H. has officially endorsed the Handicapped Persons Industries, Inc., and anticipates assisting in establishing similar units in various parts of the United States of America.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I am inserting in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article appearing in the Four-F Digest, a publication devoted to the interests of handicapped people, edited by Mr. Willard H. Woods, of Springfield, Mass., descriptive of Handicapped Persons Industries, Inc., and I trust this will be read by every Member of Congress as well as those of the general public who are interested in the welfare of the millions of our handicapped citizens:

NOT FEASIBLE FOR REHABILITATION, NOW PRODUCING

(The physically handicapped were hired in the last World War and were replaced by able-bodied after the armistice. They were always the last hired and first to be fired so Harold J. McMahon spent years planning to establish a factory for them. Handicapped considered "not feasible for rehabilitation" under the Federal-State rehabilitation program are now producing in their own factory.)

Here is an introduction to America's most interesting and possibly most useful industry. It is new, unique, dramatic. It is as human and humane as the flag itself and stands for the same thing—The Handicapped Persons Industries, Inc., Buffalo, N. Y.—an organization that is operated by and for physically handicapped people in its entirety.

It is the culmination of a dream of a man who had lost a leg 33 years ago who never let that prevent him from being independent and self-supporting. However, in his years of dogged determination to succeed, he observed that there were many thousands of physically handicapped individuals who perhaps did not have the same opportunity as he had.

The story is an interesting one—it certainly is a great achievement—the organization has tremendous possibilities and from the success so far met, its activities are spreading into other cities and will spread further.

The president and founder of the organization is Harold J. McMahon—Mac to his employees. In 1911 he became infected with osteomyelitis. His left limb was amputated above the knee. For nearly a year he battled to save his left arm, which also was infected with osteomyelitis. The doctors were only able to accomplish this by removing one of the bones from his lower arm. In October 1912, because of a bone deterioration, he fractured his right leg above the knee. For three and a half years he had to fight the doctors to prevent them from amputating that leg. He was only a boy and already seemingly insurmountable obstacles had to be pushed aside in order for him to live. Fight was instilled in him. He won his battle and has been winning ever since.

STARTED AS PRINTER

Shortly after his recovery, with only a grammar school education, the boy started out in the printing trade. By hard study and perseverance he was able to go through the printing industry from the composing room on up through positions of foreman, purchasing agent, to positions as sales manager, and sales promotion manager of several prominent printing and advertising specialty houses.

Experience in other trades was gained by McMahon when, at times, jobs were scarce in the printing business. This versatile experience has been valuable to him in establishing this industry for physically handicapped people.

McMahon's idea was really in his mind since the last World War, and it took years to cultivate until it became a reality. In 1917 McMahon was engaged in a war manufacturing plant just outside of New York City. Like today, there was a manpower shortage. The management of this company was confronted with idle machines. Visualizing that these machines could be operated by physically handicapped people who could be quickly trained. McMahon proposed to the management that such people be engaged. Doubt existed in the minds of the foremen and superintendent. By working nights in the various departments he, himself, became trained and soon learned that he could run these machines. This proved to the management that what he believed, could actually be done. By his initiative a plan was effected to employ physically handicapped people. About 60 were engaged in this factory.

Shortly after the armistice of 1918 McMahon returned to the printing industry. Several years later he went to the factory to visit some of his old cronies who walked with crutches or braces. He was deeply annoyed and aggravated when he found they had been discarded and replaced by able-bodied people. Concerned as to why industry did not have room for the disabled, he began a long study of investigation and observation to determine the reason.

CLOSELY OBSERVED REHABILITATION

No one associated with rehabilitation in America has more closely observed the growth of the Federal-State rehabilitation program as has McMahon, beginning back in the early 20's when the first rehabilitation program was instituted in the State of New Jersey under direction of Dr. Fred H. Albee, noted orthopedic surgeon of New York. Dr. Albee was the surgeon who saved McMahon's right leg by a bone-graft operation, and he had become an admirer of Dr. Albee ever since. Silently he observed the doctor's efforts in behalf of the physically handicapped. That was when McMahon began to find out why the physically handicapped were not wanted in industry and commerce, and he has never once lost sight of the fact that something should be done for them.

A Philadelphia bread line back in 1930 gave McMahon a jolt that caused him to decide that something definite should be done for the physically handicapped. "Of 30 people in that bread line, 9 were on crutches," McMahon recalled. "It was a touching illustration of a fact I had long known—the handicapped worker is always the last hired and the first fired. Watching that bread line, I determined that I would some day found a factory for the handicapped, where they would get an even break in which to develop their abilities."

Born with the realization that, if the physically handicapped did not want to exist for the rest of their lives on relief rolls or charity funds, they must band themselves together into an organization and operate their own industry.

Believing that handicapped persons are creative as well as industrious, and having faith in society to sustain him in his idea, McMahon began to lay plans for his organization. For 10 years he worked in his spare hours to lay the plans for a factory-training school with versatile vocational training opportunities, planned several industries, department by department he constructed each industry, tearing up his plans and beginning again in order to gain absolute perfection.

Prior to America entering the war, McMahon abandoned his ideas somewhat, believing that the heavy demands on industry would absorb all the physically handicapped when the manpower shortage became acute. Soon McMahon learned that the war production boom was no boon to the physically handicapped. Contrary to the belief of many, that as war production expanded and the demand for workers increased, the opportunities for the handicapped would be greatly enhanced, McMahon knew different. He says, "There still remains thousands of unemployed handicapped persons. A goodly number with exceptional skills were hired, where there was a shortage of that skill. However, after seeing what occurred in the last war, I could not help but believe that these handicapped boys and girls who had been hired in defense plants would be the first to be dismissed as soon as war production ceases and with the many still unemployed that the time had arrived to found the factory." In opposition to the advices of many business leaders that "this is no time to begin a new non-war industry—wait till the war is over," McMahon felt now was the time to prove to the world that he had the right idea.

ESTABLISHED FACTORY

Searching various industries for a line that could be manufactured and sold during a war, he hit upon the wood toy industry. "There was a shortage of wood toys," McMahon said, "many toy factories had turned to defense work. There was a ready market."

During the summer of 1942, The Toymakers Guild, a division of the Handicapped Persons Industries, Inc., was established. The parent organization had already been incorporated in 1942. McMahon set out to procure some other physically handicapped persons who thought along the same lines as he. He surrounded himself with four others, all physically handicapped, and started to set up his toy factory. They formed their board of directors and elected officers.

The other officers are Vice President John Krucenski, minus a leg, teacher of four instruments at the Wurlitzer School of Music; Secretary M. Irvin Chriswell, a member of the faculty of the Buffalo Technical High School; Treasurer Harry W. White, who though able to walk only with the aid of crutches, is a master watchmaker in a leading Buffalo jewelry store. White, incidentally, learned watchmaking without the aid of any instruction. As the organization gained publicity, other interested ones were absorbed into the board of directors. They are Mrs. Gertrude Evans, housewife, who for nearly 15 years has been afflicted with arthritis; Miss Ann Ramonda, a victim of infantile paralysis, walks with aid of crutches and wears braces, employed at the famous Kleinhan's Music Hall; Bernard Aikin, arthritic victim, who is employed at an assembly bench in the factory of the Colonial Radio Corporation; Louis Varga, paralytic victim, a set-up man and supervisor in a Buffalo defense plant, and Charles Edenhofer, spinal affliction, who once worked with McMahon in a wood jewelry box factory.

These people all have lucrative positions and put in their spare time to help organize and operate the Toymakers Guild, which is the name of the toy factory the industries is known by. Only two of them received any compensation, and that has been for only a few weeks. The others received no financial remuneration whatsoever. They are happy over the fact that they are making possible jobs for other handicapped to earn a living wage. Samples were designed and produced. Arrangements were made with a selling organization. A showroom is maintained in the Toy Center in the Fifth Avenue Building in New York City.

MORE THAN $100,000 IN ORDERS

During the toy fair which ran for 2 weeks in New York orders totaling over $100,000 were procured from the best toy buyers, representing leading department stores and jobbers throughout the country. The factory is now in operation. More workers and equipment are being added. Every day brings new employees from the ranks of unemployed or relief rolls. The type of people who are provided employment are those who were considered "not feasible" for rehabilitation under the Federal-State rehabilitation program, and those who are considered "unemployables" in normal lines of industry and commerce. The aggregation of years on relief rolls of the first 21 people put to work was 125 years.

According to McMahon, the Handicapped Persons Industries does not ask exemption from the Minimum Wage Act; assures every worker of social-security benefits, including unemployment insurance; pays time and a half for every working hour in excess of the 40-hour week. It is not subsidized by private philanthrophy.

The financing of Handicapped Persons Industries, Inc., in the beginning was carried by McMahon and his coworkers on the board of directors. A plan was devised with the assistance and counsel of a number of competent businessmen serving as an auxiliary board of directors without compensation, for expansion by the issuance of "tax conserving bonds" in the denominations of $25, $50, and $100, and offered for sale to the public. The bond is redeemable at option of the board of directors without monetary interest. In the event of liquidation the bond will participate in the sale of physical properties. This being a non-profit organization, surplus earnings are earmarked for expansion. Already requests have come from other cities, urging the establishment of factories in those areas with offers of assistance and cooperation. This fits in with McMahon's original idea.

The spirit of unselfish service exhibited by the executives permeates the entire organization. Blind Alice Barber, McMahon's stenographer, opens a letter with her strong hands for Gertrude Evans, whose hands and feet are affected by arthritis. And when Alice must have a telephone number, Gertrude looks it up for her with equal willingness and pride.

HELPING ONE ANOTHER

Because of the difference in their physical limitations, these people know the satisfaction of helping one another. "Handicapped men and women can earn their way if given an opportunity," Mr. McMahon maintains. He left an executive position in a defense plant with loss in income to back up this organization. He says, "A handicapped keeps his mind alert constantly, to devise ways of doing things regardless of his limitations." That accounts for their aptness. These people are getting their first chance to make good. They know that only if every one of them to their very best can their organization continue. Ninety-five percent of the plant production-workers are doing jobs that are new to them.

Besides McMahon, the chief instructors are one of his board members and a former trade-school instructor. Some of the people who are engaged in this toy factory never had a work opportunity before in their lives.

EACH EMPLOYEE'S HISTORY

An insight into their case history gives a picture of why they are so happy and contented in this new work. Here are a few of them:

Clara Cross, age 44, uses crutches on the street but can walk with cane inside; contracted spinal meningitis at the age of 4 and spent 19 years in wheel chair; a year and a half at the Ithaca, N. Y., Reconstruction Home brought back partial recovery; never employed; not considered feasible for rehabilitation by the rehabilitation bureaus; she enjoys every minute of toy assembly to what she calls "fascinating work."

Mary Ciles, age 30, had infantile paralysis at the age of 2, affecting motor nerves, causing instability in her walk; a high-school graduate with 4 years of business training; never before regularly employed; now works as typist in direct-mail department, her first real job.

Elizabeth Buczka, age 18, born with spastic paralysis; never before worked and now regularly employed as a top packer. Unsteadiness of her hands no detriment to her efficiency.

Fred Egger, aged 54, partially paralyzed right arm, and semiparalytic right leg. Uses cane outside; unemployed for 4 years before coming to Handicapped Persons Industries, now engaged as chief spray gun operator.

Nina Fecher, age 33; almost totally deaf from bad cold 6 years ago; widow with two small children; developed a fine technique for painting faces on a clown toy although she had never done any related work.

Ruben Pratt, age 69, arthritis, as result of sprain; had been machine shop instructor at two technical high schools; is shop foreman and instructor; teaches new help, sets up machines, and builds models and works on new ideas.

Stanley Rzyski, age 59, paralyzed left arm and shoulder caused by accident at 17. Worked in mines until 1929 when the depression closed the mines in his home town; has done odd jobs since; is factory general handy man and maintenance worker; a humorous person and an indispensable part of Handicapped Persons Industries. Stanley is evidence, too, that brains are sometimes more practical than brawn. When the paint spray booth was being installed on the second floor it was necessary, from a practical standpoint, to put the 900-pound air compressor in a cool hall on the second floor and install it in a space just large enough for it. Professional movers and riggers said it couldn't be done. Today, that compressor is in its place, thanks to Stanley, who used his head and one good arm, along with the help of Fred Egger, and a husky block and tackle.

Anna Hoffman, age 38, arthritic; uses crutches; unemployed for 12 years until coming to Handicapped Persons Industries. Now paints and assembles toys quickly with only several days training.

Vincent Oberfill, age 50, arthritis; caused by strain working as plumber's helper 30 years ago. In complete charge of office routine, shipping, and expediting of orders; while unable to stand erect, he does a swell job; finds the people congenial, nice to work with.

William Nowak, age 63, amputated left leg 35 years ago in railroad accident. His regular job here is assembling toys. He is willing and cheerful to do anything he is asked to do, even to running errands on a pair of crutches.

Alice Barber, age 26, totally blind; progressive blindness since age of 7; totally blind past 8 years; high-school graduate; postgraduate year in 6 months of general stenography, substituting dictaphone for shorthand; made high-school course of 4 years in 3; regular business college course of a year in 6 months; held a responsible position in the New York State Division of Parole and also in the Erie County comptroller's office. She is one of President McMahon's secretaries, taking all of his dictation and transcribing it from the dictaphone; types 800 to 1,000 lines per day.

Leora Keith, age 26, another secretary to the president; born with progressive paralysis; affecting motor nerves, only manifest for 15 years; unable to walk outside without support; unbalanced equilibrium and stiffening of left arm and right leg muscles. Never employed until coming to Handicapped Persons Industries; keeps pay-roll records, cost records, interviews applicants for employment, and takes care of salesmen and other callers of which there are many, permitting only those in the boss' office that are necessary for him to interview.

President McMahon assures the Four-F Digest that he welcomes and will correspond with anyone who desires seeing similar industrial workshops established in their community. He believes that now is the time to prepare for employment opportunities for the physically handicapped who will again be the "forgotten men and women" when this world catastrophe is at an end.

Mr. Farley Retains Post

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM B. BARRY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial:

MR. FARLEY RETAINS POST

Retention of James J. Farley as chairman of the Democratic State Committee in New York is scarcely a surprise. Expected opposition failed to materialize at the annual meeting, and he was the unanimous choice for the ninth consecutive year.

Although Mr. Farley does not see eye-to-eye with the powers in Washington, New York would find it difficult to replace him. He is among the Nation's shrewdest politicians and one of its most popular. Only a man of his stature could break with former associates and increase his prestige.

Mr. Farley not only is a loyal Democrat, but he is a good American. With him, his country always comes first, although he has been in the thick of party politics. If he had been willing to compromise he might have been in Washington today.

As chairman of the Democratic State Committee in New York he will continue to play an important role in national politics as well.

Tribute to Hon. John H. Overton, of Louisiana

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY D. LARCADE, JR.

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include editorials from the Washington Star of March 14, 1944, and the Monroe (La.) Morning World of May 17, 1944, which have reference to United States Senator JOHN H. OVERTON, of Louisiana:

[From the Washington Evening Star of March 14, 1944]

REMEMBERING A FRIEND

Senator OVERTON's announcement that he will retire from the Senate after this term is a disappointment to the Washington community, which he served in a singularly effective and unselfish manner. He took a personal interest in Washington that went beyond the formal responsibilities of his office. The Overton plan, providing a systematic measurement of the National Government's financial obligation in Capital City financing, did not become law. But the Senator's fight for an equitable division of expenses left its mark in the improved relationship—following a period of injurious deterioration—between the House and Senate Committees on District Appropriations, with distinct benefit to Washington. It is probable that Congress eventually will turn to some form of the Overton plan, which establishes a ratio between the annual Federal appropriation and the excessive amount of Federally owned tax-exempt property in the District. Washington citizens will not quickly forget Senator OVERTON'S courteous attentiveness to their interests, his sincere sympathy over the lack of all semblance of representation in their Government, and his readiness to act in their behalf in Congress.

[From the Monroe (La.) Morning World of May 17, 1944]

OVERTON URGED TO SEEK REELECTION—50 SENATE COLLEAGUES SIGN PETITION IN UNPRECEDENTED ACTION

(By B. H. Timmons)

WASHINGTON, May 17.—Senator JOHN H. OVERTON was urged to seek reelection in a letter signed by nearly 50 of his Democratic colleagues in the Senate and in acknowledging receipt of the request the Senator said, "It unquestionably merits and will receive my thoughtful consideration."

In the unprecedented action the Senators paid high tributes to OVERTON and urged him to offer for reelection because "Your services to our country are invaluable."

The Senator announced several months ago that he would not seek to return to the Senate where he is rounding out his second term and that he would retire to his home in Louisiana.

"We, your colleagues, in the Senate, are very much concerned over the decision you made some time ago not to offer as a candidate for reelection in the Louisiana primaries next September," the letter signed by every Democratic Senator except a few who were either ill or out of Washington said.

"Because of your long experience in the Senate and your intimate knowledge of our Nation's affairs during this, the most perilous period in her history, it is your patriotic duty to remain at the helm," it continued.

"We urge you to run and we feel that the people of Louisiana will rally to your support because we believe they feel as we do that your services to our country are invaluable," it said.

The letter was dated May 13 and OVERTON'S reply sent to all who signed it was dated May 17. Both were released today by Senator KENNETH MCKELLAR, of Tennessee, who with Senator ALLEN J. ELLENDER, Louisiana's junior Senator, were the first signatures on the petition.

"It is with a sense of gratitude and pride unequaled in any other happening of my public life that I have read the letter written to me by you and other Democratic colleagues in the Senate, conveying to me your regret that I have decided not to offer for reelection and expressing the hope that I shall upon further reflection conclude to present my candidacy to the electorate of Louisiana," OVERTON replied.

"Permit me to say that I prize this evidence of your esteem for and confidence in me above any tribute that has been or could possibly be paid to me by my colleagues and very earnestly and sincerely do I express to you the great admiration and warm affection I entertain for you and my other fellow Senators," he continued.

"This unsolicited and generous joint action by you and other Democratic colleagues is, I am informed, without precedent in the Senate and your suggestion unquestionably merits and will receive my thoughtful consideration," he said.

Talking with newsmen later, OVERTON did not elaborate and referred them to his letter. He reiterated his sense of pride and gratitude and said the request unquestionably merited his careful consideration.

Senator MCKELLAR, in a statement, paid tribute to OVERTON'S efforts on the Appropriations Committee, as chairman of the subcommittees on Naval Affairs and Flood Control.

He said it would be a great loss to the committee and to the best interests of the Navy for OVERTON to withdraw now. His statement in full follows:

"I was one of the first to urge Senator OVERTON to reconsider his determination not to run for the Senate again. Senator OVERTON and I serve on the Appropriations Committee together, and he is the head of the Subcommittee on Naval Affairs. We have seen eye to eye together on building up a great Navy and we still see eye to eye together in the matter of holding that Navy intact after the war is over. I think it would be a great loss to our committee and to the best interests of the Navy for Senator OVERTON to withdraw from the Senate now. Without knowing, I should think the people of Louisiana would be tremendously interested in the Navy, too.

"In addition, Senator OVERTON and I see similarly about the Mississippi River and flood control, and he is chairman of another subcommittee on flood control. I certainly hope he will change his mind and run for the office."

MCKELLAR said other Senators who signed the petition urging OVERTON to offer for reelection are:

CONNALLY of Texas, HILL of Alabama, DOWNEY of California, MEAD of New York, BAILEY of North Carolina, JOHNSON of Colorado, WALSH of Massachusetts, THOMAS of Oklahoma, BANKHEAD of Alabama, STEWART of Tennessee, CHANDLER of Kentucky, CHAVEZ of New Mexico, RUSSELL of Georgia, MAYBANK of South Carolina, MURDOCK of Utah, BARKLEY of Kentucky, GEORGE of Georgia, MCCLELLAN of Arkansas, CLARK of Missouri, MCCARRAN of Nevada, PEPPER of Florida, GUFFEY of Pennsylvania, RADCLIFFE of Maryland, SMITH of South Carolina, TYDINGS of Maryland, O'MAHONEY of Wyoming, GREEN of Rhode Island, CARAWAY of Arkansas, WHEELER of Montana, MCFARLAND of Arizona, WALSH of New Jersey, KILGORE of West Virginia, JACKSON of Indiana, BYRD of Virginia, HAYDEN of Arizona, WAGNER of New York, HATCH of New Mexico, GILLETTE of Iowa, GERRY of Rhode Island, TUNNELL of Delaware, BILBO of Mississippi, MALONEY of Connecticut, LUCAS of Illinois, and EASTLAND of Mississippi.

Emergency Price Control Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHET HOLIFIELD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter and resolution:

CITY OF LOS ANGELES,
OFFICE OF CITY CLERK,
May 19, 1944.

The Honorable CHET HOLIFIELD,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the meeting of the Council of the City of Los Angeles held May 19, 1944, a resolution that the council memorialize Congress to reenact the Emergency Price Control Act without any weakening amendments and that the council request Congress to supply adequate funds and authority for enforcement of this act, was adopted.

In accordance with council instructions, I am forwarding a certified copy of this resolution to our State senators and to each Member of Congress from Southern California. You will find your copy enclosed.

Yours very truly,
WALTER C. PETERSON,
City Clerk.

Whereas in the interest of the war effort price controls must be continued to prevent inflation, and any interference with price controls at this time is a direct blow at our war effort itself; and

Whereas the Emergency Price Control Act expires on June 30, 1944; and

Whereas the renewal of this act now is being considered by congressional committees; and

Whereas Mayor Bowron has proclaimed the week of May 17 to May 24 as Save Price Control Week and is calling upon the people of Los Angeles "to urge the Congress to retain inviolate the principles and purposes of price control": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Los Angeles City Council hereby memorializes Congress to reenact the Emergency Price Control Act without any weakening amendments and also requests Congress to supply adequate funds and authority for enforcement of this act.

One Hundred Years of Telegraph

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OREN HARRIS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. HARRIS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech delivered by Hon. James L. Fly, Chairman, Federal Communications Commission, at telegraph centennial dinner, Statler Hotel, May 24, 1944:

The first practical use of the telegraph 100 years ago today was the beginning of communication by electricity, a method of transmitting intelligence which has led to the development of the land-line telegraph system; the ocean cable system; point-to-point radio communications; radio broadcasting, and the telephone. While many forms of communication are currently in use, by far the largest number of fast messages are sent by one or more of the methods utilizing electricity for power. Samuel F. B. Morse was the first to successfully harness electrical current for communication purposes. Indeed this was probably the earliest practical use of electricity. It staggers the imagination to endeavor to project the tremendous sweep of scientific development following in the train of the telegraph.

Morse began with two stations and a single line on poles between Washington and Baltimore. Today there are over 240,000 miles of telegraph pole lines and 510,000 miles of telephone pole lines in this country alone. Western Union has 33,000 telegraph offices and agency stations serving 90,000 points in the United States, and there are approximately 26,000,000 telephone stations. In addition, there are 350,000 miles of ocean cable line and many radio point-to-point circuits connecting numerous points throughout the world.

Morse first visualized his electromagnetic telegraph in 1832. He struggled for 12 years to develop his instruments and convince the public that telegraphy could be put to practical use. This spade work took place during an interesting period in American history. It was a time when the White House was occupied first by Jackson, then by Van Buren, Harrison, Tyler, and Polk in rapid succession; when congressional scenes were dominated by John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, and John C. Calhoun who all lived to see the telegraph and then all died within 10 years of its official recognition. It was a time when the list of lesser lights in Congress contained such names as John T. Stuart, Lincoln's law partner; James I. Roosevelt, Henry L. Pinckney, Millard Fillmore, and Franklin Pierce. The steamboat was 25 years old, and the first railroad was a budding infant. It was a time when some Congressmen were for and some against the carrying of mails on Sunday. Pennsylvania Avenue was a mudhole after a heavy rain. It was a day of horses, if you please, and horsey men; when Gen. Felix Gundy McConnell, of Alabama, appeared in Congress dressed in a blue swallow-tailed coat, light woolen pantaloons, and a scarlet vest, and accompanied by two lovely French girls dressed in native dancing costumes.

Into this scene stepped Morse, an artist of considerable renown but a novice at mechanics. He had been struck by the slowness of communications when it took 7 days for news of his wife's death to travel from New Haven to Washington. He had seen the semaphore system in operation along a French highway into Paris and he knew its limitations. He had been told that an electric current would travel instantaneously over many miles of wire and that its presence could be made visible at any point on the circuit. He constructed his crude instruments and they worked. He succeeded in arousing the interest of Alfred Vail, an expert mechanic, who got his father to finance early experiments and permitted Morse and young Vail to use his Iron Works at Morristown, N. J., as a laboratory.

After successful experiments in New York and in the White House before President Van Buren, Morse spent 5 years attempting to get public recognition and a congressional appropriation to finance further work. Finally, a bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on Commerce. On February 21, 1843, Representative Kennedy, of Maryland, moved that the House consider the telegraph bill to authorize expenditure of $30,000 to test the merits of Morse's telegraph. The Congressional Globe for that day reports that Mr. Cave Johnson, of Tennessee, wished to have a word to say upon the bill. As the Congress then had done much to encourage science, he did not wish to see the science of mesmerism neglected and overlooked. He therefore proposed that a half of the appropriation be used for experiments in mesmerism. It was suggested the motion was out of order as not germane to the bill but the chair refused to so hold because, as the chair put it, a scientific analysis would be necessary to determine how analogous the magnetism of mesmerism is to that employed in telegraphy.

Mr. Edward Stanly rose to say he would have no objection to the appropriation for mesmeric experiments, provided the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Johnson, was the subject, to which Mr. Johnson replied that he would have no objection provided the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. Stanly, was the operator.

Mr. George S. Houston, of Alabama threw in the suggestion that the Millerites, who were currently predicting the end of the world, should be recipients of part of the money.

The Johnson amendment received only 22 votes and was defeated, but there were many others who opposed the expenditure and the telegraph bill barely passed the House by the slim margin of 89 to 83. It lay in the Senate for several days, and was one hundred and fortieth on the list of bills up for final consideration March 3, 1843, the last day of the session. It passed the Senate a few minutes before midnight and was signed by President Tyler.

Morse and Vail began immediately to make plans for the construction of a line from Baltimore to Washington. Morse appealed to Louis McLane, president of the 16-year-old Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, for permission to use the railroad's right-of-way. This permission was granted, and from that day to this the railroad industry has been closely related to the domestic telegraph.

Morse originally planned to lay the line underground and got Ezra Cornell to supervise the development of a special plow for this purpose. When the construction crew was 9 miles out of Baltimore it was found that the wire wasn't properly insulated and the line wouldn't work. Rather than admit this preliminary failure and provide skeptics with additional ammunition, Cornell suggested that they break his plow, but make it appear accidental so the public would assign the lack of a special plow as the only reason for abandoning the underground method and adoption of the aerial method of stringing wires on poles. The line was finally complete, and on May 24, 100 years ago today, with Morse sending and Vail receiving, the first message "What hath God wrought!" was slowly tapped out.

The exhibition a success, skeptics became enthusiastic supporters. Representative Cave Johnson, a jesting critic in 1843, stated 3 years later that the telegraph was "an agent vastly superior to any other ever devised by the genius of man for the diffusion of intelligence."

There was a resultant period of telegraph mania. Fakirs combined short-distance telegraphy with ventriloquism to entertain and fool the public. There were precious stories of the rustic woman who insisted upon ascertaining from the operator how the letters were sent through the insulators. Within a short time the principal cities of the Union were linked by the intelligent throbbing wire. Then came the harvest for telegraph company speculators. One historian tells us that "two out of every three New England and New York villages were visited by gentlemen of the wooden-nutmeg peddler style of biography," who announced themselves as "telegraph constructors" and who proposed, on condition that a certain amount of stock be subscribed and a certain amount of "clean cash" paid down, to bring their wire into town and connect the hitherto isolated Podunk with the nearest metropolis. The inhabitants relaxed their purse strings. A flimsy line was constructed. A few salutory messages sent and for a few days business boomed. Additional stock payments were cheerfully made. Then it was that Sir Plausible, the telegraph builder, took his departure for new territory and fresh victims, and the community was left with an enterprise which proved a failure as soon as the novelty was gone. Morse must have wondered: What hath God wrought.

The Civil War spurred the use and development of telegraph. When the war began, the Army Signal Corps was still relying upon the semaphore system. When McDowell advanced in July 1861 to fight the battle of Manassas, he had no field telegraph, and the only sign given or received was the signal gun announcing that the attack should begin. Civilian telegraph operators were called to Washington and before the war was over, armies in the field from Appomattox to Arkansas were constantly informed of each other's movements. President Lincoln visited the War Department telegraph office thrice daily for late news from the battle fronts, and it is said that during the course of the war he spent more time there than at any place except the White House.

Soon thereafter the telegraph reached from coast to coast and fortunately some years before Morse's death in 1872.

In those days equipment used consisted chiefly of the Morse key and sounder. Operators could send only one message at a time over each wire, at the rate of 30 words per minute. Today, the modern teleprinter has replaced the key and sounder. It is possible to send over 250 messages at once over a single pair of wires. Efficient operators transmit at the rate of 75 words per minute. By use of modern multiplex and carrier system methods, it is possible to achieve a word volume capacity from 250 to 1000 times as great as was possible with early equipment. By a transmission process called facsimile, pictures, diagrams and tables can be sent over the wires.

It is interesting to note how many of Morse's original ideas, at first thought impracticable, are back in use today. His first receiver made pencil marks on a tape. Today, after 60 years of reception by ear, the industry has developed and adopted the teleprinter which again records messages on a tape. Morse originally planned to plow his lines underground but failure properly to insulate forced him to rely upon an aerial system with wires strung on poles. Today, after 100 years of overhead lines, the trend is to cables plowed directly into the ground with a specially designed plow similar to that invented by Ezra Cornell and used by Morse. The original telegraph transmitting and receiving apparatus designed by Professor Morse was fully automatic—a crude forerunner of the present day teleprinter.

From the Civil War to the turn of the century, the history of the telegraph industry in the United States was largely one of merging companies and warding off agitation for Government ownership of all lines. In 1856 the Sibley and Cornell interests had combined and Ezra Cornell had proposed that the merged company be known as Western Union Telegraph Co. By 1867 they had acquired 340 smaller companies.

As the Western Union's grip on the telegraph business in this country grew, there were increased demands for Government ownership. The industry definitely experienced economic growing pains. Charges of poor service, discrimination, high rates, excessive profits, retarding of technical improvements, and failure to serve small communities were hurled by the advocates of a Government-owned system who argued affirmatively that telegraph is only a more rapid method of transmitting letters, and hence a normal Government function. Many of these evils were inherent in the competitive situation where it was always possible for a new company to spring up and grab off a part of the cream of the business by serving the larger cities while permitting the small communities to remain communication Saharas. Such evils as were inherent in the prevailing competitive system have been offset by growth of the regulatory process and the recent merger in the domestic telegraph field.

The telegraph industry has come a long way from the days when it cost $7.50 to send a 10-word message across the continent. Likewise, speed of service has greatly improved since the time it was possible for Professor Ely to send a message 400 miles, give it a 24-hour start, and then beat it there by train. Nevertheless, room for improvement of the speed of service still exists, and telegraph rates must continue to go down if the industry would successfully compete with air mail and the telephone. Also, it is highly desirable that telegraph rates be made uniform, like mail rates. The accident of distance must no longer prevail as the all-important factor in determining rates.

In the congressional attitude toward problems in the telegraph industry there has also been a great development. From the jesting attitude of 100 years ago we see today a Congress with both Houses apprised and well aware of the potentialities of this industry. As a result of this congressional development, many of the evils of the past century have been eliminated by merger of the domestic telegraph companies under enabling legislation passed by Congress.

Today we see a Congress which likewise has been apprised of the problems in the field of international communications. There, American companies are at a constant disadvantage in competition with Government-owned or Government-boosted monopolies abroad. Legislation permitting or requiring merger of American communication facilities in the international field is badly needed in order to eliminate this disadvantage. It is needed still more, however, in order to place this country in a position to take the lead in enunciating and making effective a democratic program assuring the unfettered flow of intelligence to and from all points in the world.

Last November I outlined five things sorely needed in the field of international communications. They were and are (1) a uniform rate for all messages throughout the world in all directions, (2) a low rate of a few cents per word to any communications gateway in the world, (3) instantaneous radio communications between all important areas on the globe, (4) uniform and low press rates throughout the world and, finally, (5) complete freedom for all peoples of the world to communicate directly with each other.

In order to encourage and insure accomplishment of these ends, America must first put her own house in order. We must place ourselves in a position to consistently advocate lifting the barriers that now prevent the free flow of facts and information throughout the world. The next step in this direction is to accomplish merger of United States facilities for international communication in order that we may present a united front in our struggle for adoption of these principles just outlined.

There is no better way to safeguard the future peace than to make possible the free flow of communications throughout the world and at rates which all can afford. In human affairs, knowledge is power. It is also understanding. Perhaps these thoughts were in his mind when Professor Morse first began his search for a more rapid means of communications. In any event, the benefits of his invention and those which have followed, are full upon us and it is our responsibility and our duty to insure their world-wide operation to constructive ends.

Ex-Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy's Address at the Maritime Day Dinner at Boston

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS J. LANE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to include a very able address delivered by ex-Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy at the Maritime Day Dinner held in the Copley-Plaza Hotel, Boston, Mass., on the evening of May 22, 1944:

I would be pretending indifference if I did not tell you how good it feels to be with you again here in Boston. I am very much pleased and gratified that some folks in my own home town should invite me back to discuss future problems with them.

Nothing I have ever done has given me more pleasure and satisfaction than my work as chairman of the Maritime Commission. Therefore, I can discuss the subject of shipping sympathetically. Maybe it is premature. I like Lieutenant General Knudsen's comment that he always thought it was necessary to catch the bear before dividing up the hide. And this bear—the war—is not yet caught. But, as the discussion of post-war shipping has already started, I feel it the duty of everyone at all experienced in shipping administration to lend a hand to pilot thoughts thereon into safe channels.

That is why, for the first time in several years, I venture suggestions upon a public topic.

It was 7 years ago tonight that I first attempted to discuss the merchant marine in public at a Maritime Day meeting in New York. How simple the shipping business looked to me as a beginner. You just built some ships and then sailed them—with subsidies, if necessary. It wasn't long, however, before I realized that shipping was a very complex problem which had to be handled with great care if the very equilibrium of the whole world were not to be upset.

The Commission made an exhaustive study of the whole subject. Fifteen men, each an expert in some phase of one problem, were brought in to do the job. They were told to take nothing for granted and they gave the merchant marine, I venture to say, a going-over which has rarely, if ever, been duplicated in this country.

NOW BUILDING VESSELS AT RATE NEVER EQUALED

The crux of the problem, of course, was the need for replacements. We made a rather sensational start by having the United States Government go into partnership with the Standard Oil Co. for the construction of 12 large high-speed tankers. It was the first attempt, as far as I know, to have the Government participate in the additional cost of putting speed into tankers so that we would have vessels capable of following the fleet in time of war.

Admiral King has since told me that when war started those tankers were worth their weight in gold.

The Commission also perfected designs for modern cargo vessels and launched a program calling for the construction of 50 vessels a year for 10 years.

Now, in the heat of conflict, we are building ships at a rate never before equaled. More than 3,000 vessels have gone into the water since Pearl Harbor. Additional vessels are going down the ways at the rate of 5 a day. It is an incredible achievement, and one for which the Maritime Commission deserves the gratitude of a country at war. I am proud to have had a part, small as it was, in laying the groundwork for this great problem.

SURPLUS OF VESSELS IS POST-WAR PROBLEM

The end of the war—which, God willing, should not be too distant—will present us with a new kind of shipping problem. Our problem in 1937 was a lack of vessels; our problem now is going to be a surplus of vessels.

When I was in England, as Ambassador, and any discussion came up about the future of the British Navy, someone would be likely to recite a jingle which has been handed down from the time of King James I. It goes something like this:

"God and the Navy we adore,
In times of danger, not before,
The danger past—all is requited,
God is forgotten and the Navy slighted."

This has happened to the American merchant marine more than once and unless we plan with great care will probably happen again.

In laying out a plan for the future of our merchant marine we must take into consideration two very definite factors. They are, one, our attitude toward other countries after the war and, second, the speed with with the economic and social life of all countries revives after this international catastrophe, particularly with respect to foreign trade.

The answer to all these problems does not rest with us alone. We are living in one of the great periods of changes comparable to the Napoleonic era or the age of religious wars. What will the post-war world be like?

HOPES RUSSIAN JUGGERNAUT RESTS AFTER AXIS BEATEN

Forces have been unleashed which may require years and years to bring under control. It is difficult to visualize, for instance, what may occur in Asia after the war. In Europe will new powers have egress to the Mediterranean? Will the continent fall under the domination of a single great power?

Will another balance-of-power system come into existence as it always has in the past so that an armed truce is the best we can expect? The answers to these vital questions lie not in the State Department nor in the Foreign Office, but in the mind of a single statesman in Europe today—Mr. Stalin.

Let us devoutly hope that the great Russian juggernaut which has so successful routed the Nazis will come to rest when the Axis has been soundly beaten. If the Russian land power finishes its magnificent job and then goes home, turning swords into plowshares, we can be more confident of a firm basis for an enduring peace.

Now the second point that limits all the post-war problems is the question of just what foreign trade will be generated. If this increases, as our Department of Commerce feels that it will, the problem of our Merchant Fleet will be eased. If the complications of world affairs and the domination of certain countries shall grow greater, our foreign trade may well shrink.

UNITED STATES TO HAVE 5,000 VESSELS AT WAR'S END

Let us consider the post-war merchant marine problems in terms primarily of what we can do ourselves and secondly, what we would be willing to do for others.

The United States will have, from all accounts, about 5,000 vessels at war's end. This is four times as many ships as we had before the war. Foreign fleets, in the meantime, have been cut in half and the net result of all this should be that the United States will have well over half of all the shipping in existence.

For a time we should be able to employ most of our vessels. There will be millions of men and vast quantities of supplies to be brought home; devastated areas to be rehabilitated; allies, neutrals, and even belligerent peoples to be fed; stock piles of raw materials, including those which may become available under reverse lend-lease, to be transported to the United States.

MIGHT TURN OVER SOME SHIPS TO OTHER COUNTRIES

Eventually, however, emergency jobs will have been discharged. Foreign fleets, depleted by the war will begin to resemble their former selves. At that point, the American merchant marine will be presented with one of the recurring crisis which have characterized its history for the past 150 years.

That might be a very good time to turn over small portions of our fleet to some of the countries which can man them and operate them much more cheaply than we, so these nations can start bringing food and materials to their own peoples. It will give them a chance to get started. The amount of ships required would be very small and the gesture would meet with great favor in these small seafaring nations.

The big inescapable question is, What about our own merchant marine after the war? How large shall it be?

The questions go to the heart of this evening's discussion. It is both challenging and provocative.

SHIPPING OTHER FELLOW'S GAME; LET HIM PLAY IT

Now, I fully realize that I am defying the lightning of public criticism when I even suggest that there is anything to do with our surplus ships but retain all of them and wave the American flag around them.

I want no part of a merchant marine maintained merely for sentiment. I think my recital will show you merchant marine shipping is not our most profitable form of activity. It's the other fellow's game; let him play it.

I have seen the conditions under which the citizens of European countries live who live "by the sea." I refuse to believe that the dignity of the average American seaman would permit him to tolerate the only conditions of wages, quarters, family life possible to him if American shipping is to compete with foreign shipping manned as it was before the war.

In the hubbub and excitement of war we have overlooked these important differences. Economics go out the window when war enters upon the scene so that all we have been thinking about was to build as many ships as fast as we could regardless of any other factor.

After the war we must consider other factors and these I should like to enumerate to you now.

ARMY AND NAVY SHOULD MAINTAIN ADEQUATE TONNAGE

I think that the Army and Navy, having decided on what merchant ships they need to complement their fast building navies, could set aside adequate tonnage from our present fleet and see that they are taken care of and maintained. It is much easier for the Army and the Navy to get appropriations than it is for the Maritime Commission. Moreover, since these ships are reserved primarily for defense, the Army and the Navy should assume responsibility for their upkeep.

A nucleus could be maintained by replacements for our merchant fleet and possibly some arrangement with the Navy whereby their older ships, being held as a sterile group, could be scrapped and replaced by new ships. Now this, with Navy building and merchant building of the new type, would keep shipbuilding industry busy.

After the Army and Navy have taken what ships they want and after we have decided what vessels are required for our merchant marine (as we shall try to determine later) I think we should then negotiate for the transfer of tonnage to foreign countries—taking into consideration, of course, just what effect the use of these ships by foreign nations will have on our own merchant marine. After that has been done, I have no hesitancy in saying: Scrap the rest of the fleet.

MERCHANT MARINE THRIVES ONLY UNDER PRIVATE OWNERSHIP

The attitude of labor will have a great deal to do with the success of our post-war fleet. We can't expect to maintain a healthy merchant marine without providing more permanent employment for our seamen than we have in the past.

Young men should be encouraged to make a career of the sea, rather than to use it as an excuse for adventure or an escape from reality. The Merchant Navy Reserve Pool of England has revolutionized conditions of employment for British seafaring men by assuring pay and adequate leaves between voyages. We should seriously consider some similar system in this country.

Underlying my approach to the shipping problem is a conviction that our merchant marine will thrive only under conditions of private ownership and private operation. We need a merchant marine in this country, but we don't want one that will prove unduly burdensome to the taxpayer, nor do we want to ruin those nations that have to depend on the sea for a living, especially since some of these nations happen to be our best customers.

We will come out of the war with plenty of good, fast ships. We should use them to mold a compact, efficient, competitive fleet in which the operators will have a substantial interest that they can reasonably expect to make a profit. That kind of a merchant marine will have at least a fighting chance of survival.

In Norway, for example, 18 percent of the national income is derived from the sale of ship services. The figure for the United States is 0.03 percent. Obviously, the loss of shipping revenues would be catastrophic for Norway, trifling for us. The United States, to be as dependent upon shipping as Norway, would have to earn twenty or thirty billion dollars from this source.

There is also the added factor that, due to a lack of natural resources, Norway would not be able to make up the loss of shipping receipts by exporting something else. The United States, on the other hand, would only have to increase its exports by a small percentage to cover the earnings of vessels in foreign trade.

Ship services are Britain's greatest export. They are six times as important, from the standpoint of national income, as they are in the United States. Moreover, Britain has to rely on vessels to link up the far-flung units of the Empire.

LET US FOR ONCE THINK OF OURSELVES

Getting the world back on its feet is what we are after and that in the long run will help everything, including shipping. And for once, let us think of ourselves, and not forget our best customers. We can always remember that in 1929, when international trade was at its peak, China with its 450,000,000 persons, imported only 1½ American gold dollars worth of goods per head. India, with a population of 350,000,000 imported only $2.60 worth per head. On the other hand, Poland imported $11.90 worth of goods per head; Sweden, $78.30, and Great Britain, $117. So the possibilities of increased foreign trade are boundless if we use ordinary business sense, cultivating the most promising markets to the mutual advantage of buyer and seller.

Now in determining to what extent we wish to go into world shipping let us consider the various factors involved. First as to costs: It costs about twice as much to build vessels in the United States as it does abroad and it normally costs about half again as much to run them under the American flag. The differential may be equalized with subsidies but that does not alter the fact that you are running at a loss.

We must consider quality. We want a merchant fleet which our American passengers will seek out and be proud of. We want a merchant fleet which our exporters will depend on because of its superior service. If we are to become a great seafaring Nation again we should insist upon quality—the best—not the biggest.

Our merchant fleet today is not a quality fleet. It is two-thirds composed of the slow-moving cumbersome Liberty ships. When these were first designed in 1941 they were christened "ugly ducklings." Some of them have cracked up, as we all know, but in wartime we needed ships fast and we had to take short cuts to obtain them. They have built a bridge to Europe and to our forces overseas and have run a fierce Nazi gauntlet to Murmansk. They have served America well. However, they would be of doubtful commercial use to this country after the war. We will want a quality fleet of fast long-range vessels for the peacetime merchant marine.

We must consider size.

WE MUST TAKE GOODS AND SERVICES OF OTHERS

Having said, therefore, that we want not the biggest, but the best—let me explain why I think we cannot insist on the biggest. Others have something to say about this.

To Britain, Norway, and Denmark, for example, a merchant fleet is not a matter of of dalliance but of day to day survival. With these nations it is import or starve. Before the war the British paid for one-tenth of their imports by shipping services. Holland, Greece and other nations over-run by the Nazis also depended heavily upon shipping to earn their daily bread. The United States ordinarily sells more than she buys.

We want to be the world's greatest exporter of goods—we want to be great on the sea and in the air, and we want to dominate international communications—we want to be the world's banker.

Now, there is no sense in talking about expansion of foreign trade after the war unless we give other nations an opportunity to acquire dollars, and that, unfortunately, is a thing which we resist.

The money we spend with others is the ceiling for what we can sell. Having grasped this fact, the next thing we have to decide is, What do we want to sell? Do we want to sell goods? Do we want to sell shipping? Do we want to sell air transport? Do we want to sell communications? And, finally, do we want to sell money? Remember, the amount you buy is the ceiling, and the more you sell of one item the less you sell of something else.

SHIPPING VITAL FOR NORWAY BUT TRIFLING FOR UNITED STATES

American farmers have a lot of cotton, tobacco, fruits, and meat which can't be absorbed by the domestic market. We also want to sell automobiles, radios, refrigerators, and machinery. The more ship services we export the less we are likely to export of something else. Let's not lose sight of this fundamental fact in our consideration of the shipping problem.

It is quite possible that, for defense or some other reason, it would be well worth while to reduce our exports in some other direction in order to have a larger merchant marine. This is a matter of national policy which will, no doubt, be settled on other than economic grounds. Let's not fool ourselves, however; we cannot have our cake and eat it, too.

After all, one of the ideals we are fighting for is to make the world safe for peaceful nations. There isn't much point to it, if after winning through to victory we then deprive them of an opportunity to make a living.

GENERAL PUBLIC INDIFFERENT ABOUT MERCHANT MARINE

What is true of Britain and Norway is true—to a greater or lesser degree—of many other countries

In citing these factors which, in my opinion, must be taken into account when we decide upon a shipping policy for the United States, I do not mean to imply that we should not maintain a merchant marine of substantial proportions under the American flag.

If this were a perfect world, never beset by the menace of war, we might well depend on foreign vessels for the carriage of our goods. However, we are obviously not living in a perfect world—yet—and it behooves us to keep substantial shipping that will be subject to our own control in time of emergency.

The plain fact, which we might as well face, is that the general public is quite indifferent about the merchant marine. Millions of people think it has something to do with the Marines; other millions are vaguely aware that we should have an American-flag fleet, but they don't relish the idea of paying taxes to support it. The 1936 act passed the House with a margin of eight votes.

Even those who give lip service to American shipping haven't strained themselves to support it. American shippers before the last war gave 90 percent of their cargo to foreign lines, and they have rarely given less than two-thirds; three-fourths of our travelers, at least.

TEN MILLION TONS OF SHIPPING ADEQUATE TO SERVE US

There is another factor we should not lose sight of—one which has affected shipping in the past and threatens to affect it even more in the future. That is the competition of other forms of transportation. The railroads, the motortruck, the bus, and the automobile have been cutting in on shipping for years. Now we have the airplane to contend with.

The airplane brings a brand new threat, especially in the carrying of passengers. I believe the ocean liner has reached its peak in speed and in size, and it probably will decline from now on as revenues are diverted to the air lines. I don't think we have to worry about cargo, for a long time to come, but I'll be surprised if we don't lose at least a substantial percentage of our passengers. Mail, of course, hitherto a good source of revenue for shipping, will all go by air.

What, then, is our forecast of a post-war merchant marine? That question was asked in the House of Commons recently of the Ministry of War Transport, and with all of the experience and tradition of England's marine history at his disposal the very wise Secretary replied: "I believe the British Government would be unwise to state any fixed mercantile marine tonnage that we intend to have and by what methods we intend to secure it."

Nevertheless, not being a member of a government or a ministry, I dare to make a concrete suggestion. Not 7,000,000 tons—not 50,000,000 tons—as popularly proposed, but a merchant marine large enough to serve us adequately, starting with a base figure of 10,000,000 tons, is my earnest recommendation.

BEAVERBROOK MISTAKEN ON POST-WAR AVIATION PLAN

I remember spending a few hours with Justice Louis Brandeis before his last illness, and I shall not soon forget a recipe he gave me. "How much better we do things," he said, "when we act leisurely and not from necessity."

I have suggested that we work out cautiously our post-war merchant marine program, and by cautiously I mean with full knowledge, painstakingly, and not hurriedly. We should realize what we need, what we want, and what other peace-minded nations need to make resort to war less and less frequent. This counsel I venture to offer for the solution of all post-war problems. Until we can see clearly the shape of the new world, nothing should be concluded, though, meanwhile, all can be analyzed and made ready for final negotiation.

Blueprints, but not contracts, should be in the briefcases of those who will meet in the conferences of peace. The contracts can be let after the designs have been carefully inspected for fundamental errors that can be corrected on the blueprint but not in a finished structure.

I was interested to note in this connection that Lord Beaverbrook was mistaken when he told the House of Lords the other day he had with us what amounted to a post-war aviation contract, and to learn, instead, that our Government had merely looked at his drawing of free skies over the United States and paid it a polite compliment.

If we give away nothing we need for our basic security and to maintain our standards; if we keep nothing we do not need for these; if we help others in every reasonable way to earn and support the blessings that have been ours, and yet treat no other people as mendicants whom destiny obliges us to finance for the whole world, then we shall lead the nations to enduring peace and prosperity. That is the formula I have sought to apply in my outline of a post-war American merchant marine.

Acceptance by the Honorable Sam Rayburn, Speaker, House of Representatives, of Plaque Commemorating the Centennial of the Telegraph

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALFRED L. BULWINKLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of the Speaker of the House, Hon. SAM RAYBURN, in the small rotunda of the Capitol yesterday:

Miss Morse, Senator AUSTIN, ladies and gentlemen, it is a great privilege to participate in this ceremony commemorating the centennial of the telegraph and, at the same time, to pay tribute to the genius, life, and character of the American inventor, Samuel F. B. Morse.

The transmission of the first official telegraph message 100 years ago was an unparalleled event in the history of our Republic. The Congress of the United States a year before appropriated $30,000 for testing the capacity and usefulness of the system of electromagnetic telegraph invented by Samuel F. B. Morse, of New York, for the use of the Government of the United States. This is the only time in the history of the country that the Congress has ever made such an appropriation, and likewise it is the only time that the Congress gave an inventor the privilege of using the Supreme Court room as the inventor's office or laboratory.

Again the Congress acted, for on Tuesday evening, April 16, 1872, 2 weeks after the death of Professor Morse, a joint session of the Congress was held to pay tribute to the memory of this great American, a man who never held a public office, who was a great artist but who, by invention of the electromagnetic telegraph, benefited mankind for all generations.

In accepting this bronze memorial which is placed here in this small rotunda close to the old Supreme Court room, now the law library, which was the scene of Professor Morse's labors here in the Capitol, I deem it appropriate for me to quote part of the resolution of the Congress on April 4, 1872, 2 days after Professor Morse's death:

"His distinguished and varied abilities have contributed more than those of any other intellect of our generation to the development and progress of the practical arts. His invention of the electromagnetic telegraph, which was at first received with incredulity by the people, and with the meager favor if not distrust of Congress, has during his life attained an eminence which, so long as human thought is disseminated by the lightning will form an ever-growing tribute and enduring monument to his fame. While his name will be forever associated with those of Gutenberg, Watt, Fulton, and others, who made science useful, benign, and civilizing, his purity of private life, his loftiness of scientific aim, and his resolute faith in truth, render it eminently proper that the Representatives of the people and the Senators of the States should solemnly testify to his worth and greatness."

Mr. Chairman, I accept this plaque for and in behalf of all Americans and I dedicate it as an ever-present reminder to those of our fellow citizens who, in the days to come, will by their genius make possible future benefits for mankind the world over.

St. Lawrence Seaway

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARENCE E. KILBURN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. KILBURN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include herein copy of resolutions adopted at a seaway dinner meeting of the Massena Chamber of Commerce, at Massena, N. Y., on Monday, May 22, 1944, urging the enactment of legislation authorizing the St. Lawrence seaway and power development:

RESOLUTIONS PASSED AT SEAWAY MEETING

MASSENA, May 23.—Three resolutions on the St. Lawrence seaway project were passed at the seaway dinner meeting of the Massena Chamber of Commerce, Monday night at the town hall here. The resolutions follow:

URGE MEAD SUPPORT

"Whereas the President of the United States on March 3, 1944, again strongly recommended the authorization of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project and gave full approval to the terms of the pending Aiken-Pittenger bill; and

"Whereas ROBERT F. WAGNER, senior Senator from the State of New York, on April 20, 1944, declared his active support of this measure, stating that its prompt enactment provides the most direct means of insuring substantial and lasting benefits to the people of the State, through construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project; and

"Whereas the President and the senior Senator from the State of New York, by this action have sought to redeem the pledge contained in the New York State Democratic platform of 1942: "We urge the construction of the St. Lawrence power and seaway project"; and

"Whereas JAMES M. MEAD, junior Senator from the State of New York, was a candidate for the nomination for governor of the State of New York on the platform adopted in 1942 and has consistently voted for hundreds of millions of dollars of appropriations for multiple purpose power, navigation, and flood-control projects of benefit to labor, agriculture, and industry in the areas served by such projects: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this conference on the St. Lawrence project calls upon JAMES M. MEAD to give his active, able, and valued cooperation to the President, to his colleague in the Senate, to the War and Navy Departments, to the Maritime Commission, and to other administrative agencies which have joined in recommending this development; and be it further

"Resolved, That this conference appoints a committee of three to wait upon Senator MEAD and to acquaint him with conditions in the State of New York which make this development imperatively necessary in the interest of industry, agriculture, and labor and to insure equality to this area with other sections, under pending plans for post-war development of navigation, power, and flood-control projects."

COMMEND DEWEY

"Whereas the Associated Press on May 7, 1944, reported in a dispatch from Albany that Thomas E. Dewey, Governor of the State of New York, at a press conference on that date reaffirmed his support of the St Lawrence seaway and power development, recalling that on March 27, 1940, and again on October 10, 1942, he had endorsed the entire project, and publicly declared: 'I favor the St. Lawrence seaway and always have'; and

"Whereas the Governor also gave his approval to the Graves-Daniels resolution, unanimously adopted by the New York State Legislature, March 15–16, 1944, placing the State of New York definitely on record in favor of 'prompt measures' for development of the St. Lawrence River to meet urgent needs for cheap power for industry and for 4,000,000 commercial, rural, and domestic consumers in this area; and

"Whereas the Aiken-Pittenger bill now pending before the United States Senate and the United States Houre of Representatives authorizes the St. Lawrence seaway and power project on terms consistent with the position taken by the Governor and by the Legislature of the State of New York; and

"Whereas President Hoover, President Coolidge, and many other Republican leaders for more than a generation urged the need for this development to provide low-cost navigation and low-cost power; and

"Whereas President Roosevelt has likewise repeatedly endorsed the St. Lawrence development and has recommended the enactment of the Aiken-Pittenger bill as a nonpartisan measure; and

"Whereas events of the World War have confirmed the soundness and foresight of advocates of this development and of the program embodied in the Republican platform of 1932, declaring that 'the Republican Party stands committed to the St. Lawrence seaway project,' and that 'its completion will confer inestimable benefits' upon producers and consumers in all parts of the Nation: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That this conference in the St. Lawrence project, representing civic, farm, labor, commercial, and industrial organizations in the States of New York and Vermont, commends the position taken by Governor Dewey and looks to him with confidence for active support in every effort to obtain prompt enactment of the pending Aiken-Pittenger bill; and be it further

"Resolved, That this conference appoint a committee of three, to be designated by the chairman, for the purpose of conferring with the Governor at the earliest possible date, to present this resolution, and to discuss the means of securing the development of New York's principal natural resource through prompt enactment of the Aiken-Pittenger bill."

PRAISE BILL SPONSORS

"Whereas this conference on the St. Lawrence project has received a message from WILLIAM A. PITTENGER, Representative in the United States House of Representatives from Minnesota, and author of the bill (H. R. 2280) authorizing construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project; and

"Whereas a companion measure has been introduced in the United States Senate by GEORGE D. AIKEN, United States Senator from Vermont, and

"Whereas the joint authors of this legislation by their vision, courage, and constructive statesmanship have brought the St. Lawrence seaway power project to the point of successful accomplishment and have helped to give this great multiple-purpose improvement its deserved place as the No. 1 project in any sound program for post-war development and reconstruction: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That this conference on behalf of all its constituent membership in northern New York and Vermont extends its hearty commendation to the joint authors of this legislation and acknowledge with sincere thanks the inspiring message received from Representative PITTENGER; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the chairman to Senator AIKEN, to Representative PITTENGER, and to the membership of the Vermont and Minnesota delegations in the United States House of Representatives."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALFRED L. BULWINKLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following poem by Horace C. Carlisle:

"WHAT HATH GOD WROUGHT!"

One hundred years ago today,
From Washington to Baltimore,
The telegram first found its way
Along a wire, and safely bore,
Officially, its message through,
Exclaiming, as it did, and ought—
As wonders and amazements grew—
In wisdom's words, "What hath God wrought!"

One hundred years ago began
A great network, expressly wired,
To take the messages of man,
As his necessities required,
Both back and forth, without mistake,
A true transcription of his thought,
Which followed swiftly in the wake
Of this apt wire, "What hath God wrought!"

One hundred years we have enjoyed
The blessings of the telegraph—
Delays whereby we were annoyed,
Before Morse wrote their epitaph,
Have ceased to be, and we rejoice
That time and distance seemed as naught
For years, before we heard the voice
By telephone, "What hath God wrought!"

—Horace C. Carlisle.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM P. LAMBERTSON

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, trouble is brewing between the Army and the Navy over the inequality of decorations.

It is devastating to Washington the beautiful to have so much talk about a rat-control bill.

Wars will continue until the end of time unless the great powers abandon imperialism.—Alexander Wilson.

When O. W. I. was asked how the praising in Europe of the T. V. A. aided the war effort, the answer was—unsatisfactory.

The argument during the consideration of the (eighteen) war agencies bill was—do not cut it for that might affect the invasion.

The stage is getting set for Congress to recess June 24 till after Labor Day, for the O. P. A. extension is finally coming out in June.

Decoration Day this year should be a day of prayer for those who are ready to fight in the greatest battle the wicked world ever knew.

After pensioning the Panama Canal workers of 40 years ago, some are proposing to pension all persons who did 90 days or over on W. P. A.

It is difficult to reason how a nation can lend-lease in reverse into the billions as reported, when she refused to pay the interest on old war debts.

When the President pardoned the Communist Browder from the Atlanta Federal prison he said it was for national unity. It proves to be for political unity.

The Jeffersonians, F. D. R., and Browder have all been in the same political bed, only now Earl has pushed the Democrats over and gotten in next to the Chief.

WALLACE will be back from China in time to accept second place on the ticket which has been his all the time, even when he was knocking down the ears of Jesse Jones.

The Star and the River

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK CARLSON

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I am including an editorial from the Kansas City Star, issue of May 21, 1944:

THE STAR AND THE RIVER

For many years the Star has been advocating a Missouri Valley program of development which would be comprehensive, just, and constructive. Such a program is now under discussion in Congress. It is the Pick plan for flood control, navigation, and irrigation under Army administration.

Since the policy of the river program has reached a decisive focus, it seems time to restate the principles for which the Star has stood in the years past, and for which it now stands.

This newspaper has been one of the pioneers in the long fight for a comprehensive program for dealing with the waters of the Missouri and all its tributaries. That fight began years ago, first as a struggle for navigation, because of the freight-rate situation. It has been a long fight, with many ups and downs. There has been a continual development in scope and vision and today, although navigation is still an objective, it has become a relatively small feature of a much larger and more complete program, with flood control of first importance.

Some years ago the Star was instrumental in the organization of the Missouri River Association to bring unity of plan and purpose in the development of a Missouri River program. The depression slowed up major developments, and then came the war. But by dint of constant missionary work, Congress was induced to vote money for a comprehensive survey and program, not only for the Missouri, but for its tributaries.

This survey was carried out by Col. Lewis A. Pick, a brilliant officer of the United States Corps of Engineers, who, because of his competency, was subsequently promoted to brigadier general, and assigned to the construction of the great Ledo Road to connect China with India. The program which he worked out is known as the Pick plan.

It was the first time a detailed program for the development of the Missouri and its tributaries had been reduced to real engineering form. The tributaries enter into the scheme as fully as the main river. The projects for Kansas alone are large in scope, as are those for the other valley States.

The Star has devoted many columns to this program. It has sent its reporters up and down the river, to meetings from Fort Peck to St. Louis. Before it launched into the program it made a study of the T. V. A., to obtain lessons for application to the Missouri Valley.

Throughout the long history of the project Kansas City has taken the lead in the fight to get something down on paper which would be practical and form a goal to strive for. Large delegations from Kansas City, headed by Mayor John B. Gage and the chamber of commerce, have been attending meetings up and down the river, pushing for adoption of the Pick plan as the most feasible yet offered. Delegations from this city have also attended hearings in Washington, not once but many times.

The Star does not care by what name the program is called. What it desires is results. Twice in the last 2 years a flood with ghastly potential consequences to this city has been averted by the narrowest of margins. The two States which the Star primarily serves, Missouri and Kansas, have sustained damages amounting to many millions of dollars because of inaction upon a river program.

It is to be recognized, of course, that during wartime any work must be of limited scope, since all effort is concentrated upon the war effort. Yet there are certain phases of the flood-control program which the Star feels are so imperative that all preliminary work at least should be done now, so that with the firing of the last shot immediate work can start on them.

Questions of method have been raised in the discussions of the program. The Pick plan is not perfect, of course. For one thing, it does not provide for the extremities of drought, such as those of the 1930's. If such droughts should occur again there would have to be restrictions both up and down the river. The engineers, on the other hand, contend that such occurrences are too infrequent to warrant the huge expenditures which would be necessary for the additional reservoirs to take care of every possible contingency.

The whole question of the advisability of adding millions of additional acres of Government-irrigated land to the present crop-producing area is susceptible of considerable debate. Yet the Pick plan does not, as has been charged, overlook a basis for irrigation. The various reservoirs provided for could develop enough power to pump impounded water over the 4,000,000 acres that it has been suggested should be added to our cultivated land through irrigation. The fall of these streams is of an entirely different character from the fall in the Tennessee Valley. The T. V. A. can be primarily a power project, whereas there are no such power possibilities in the Missouri Valley, although, as has just been said, a certain amount of power can be developed. The Pick plan, then, provides for a reasonable amount of irrigation, a limited power program, flood control, and, finally, a 9-foot navigation channel from the mouth of the Missouri to above Omaha.

The run-off of the western streams is so rapid that flood peril is always hanging over them. The Star believes that if Missouri River development is to be a national project, nationally paid for, the lower States have a right to protection from floods from the same waters the upriver States would exploit. Furthermore the farmers of the lower river, faced with overproduction and low prices until war temporarily altered the situation, have certain rights against land which would have to be forced into production against them at excessive costs in the way of Government subsidy for irrigation.

The more the Star has studied the Pick plan, the more convinced it is that a happy medium has been struck for a meeting of flood control, navigation, and even irrigation interests. If the program is short anywhere it is on power, and even there it does not propose to waste any possible source that can be developed.

As the result of many meetings and the fine work of the engineers, a real program for the Missouri and its tributaries has been placed before Congress, so that the minute the war ends a useful, constructive project can be launched. Not until this work was completed did the superirrigation or reclamation interests enter into the picture.

The Star does not challenge the good faith of many of the proponents of the amendments and counterproposals which have been brought forth in Congress—not even of the sponsors of so obviously dangerous a measure as that which would declare all water of tributaries west of the ninety-seventh meridian subject to State control, even though the irrigation projects were to be Government financed.

It is an old war between Secretary Ickes and the Reclamation Bureau on the one hand and the Army engineers on the other. The Star is not concerned over who does the job, except that it knows the Reclamation Bureau loses its interest entirely the moment it passes below Montana, the Dakotas, and western Nebraska.

On the other hand, the engineers have viewed the flood-control aspect as of major importance. The engineers also assert that a 9-foot channel from St. Louis to Omaha will in no way impair the proposal for irrigation in the upper valley as proposed in their report. The Star has sent members of its staff upriver to talk with Governors in the upper States, and it believes enough unity can be brought about to obtain adoption of the program in its general phases.

So the Star stands for the general principles proposed in the Pick plan for the following reasons: It is the only comprehensive plan thus far brought forward; it is fair to all interests and sections, and if it were discarded a delay of years might be required to prepare a substitute for it—with the danger that it might not even be adopted by the Congress.

There are details to be completed in the Pick plan, and there is ample time to work them out satisfactorily before the end of the war. The major thing, as the Star sees it, is that efforts of special interests should not be permitted to sabotage a flood program already under way for the entire valley, nor should there be any disagreement over the final authority.

It would be a shameful waste to throw away the engineering of years and the efforts of unselfish, public-spirited citizens from South Dakota to the Missouri's mouth because of differences over details. The Star above all urges that the valley be ready to move when the war ends, and that the basis of approach should be kept on the solid engineering that has been done, with the perplexing details where local interests enter to be worked out as the program goes along.

Honor the American Lineman

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GORDON CANFIELD

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, 100 years ago yesterday, Samuel F. B. Morse sat in the United States Capitol and tapped the keys which sent out the words "What hath God wrought!" on the first telegraph line, Washington to Baltimore. The anniversary was fittingly observed with special congressional exercises and a statement by the President coupling Morse's invention with "conquest of the air" as the two greatest achievements in modern history.

Special salutes were accorded the men at the keys and properly so. Honorable mention, however, must also be awarded those hardy stalwarts who have built and maintained the lines—we have more than seven million miles of telegraph wire in the world, one-third of them in the United States.

From the time I was a small lad I have always admired the American lineman. I came to know him well because my father is his prototype. Since 1899 he has been building and keeping clear the lines of telegraphic communication for Western Union.

What a thrill it was for me as a boy to see my father run up and down a 60-foot pole, to handle the hot wires, to ride the messenger for the running of cables. In my 'teens I learned to do the tricks myself in summer vacations, and it was most natural for me in 1918 to join the Army's Signal Corps.

The American lineman is rugged, strong, clean. He loves to see a job well done. He likes nothing better than to accept the challenge of blizzard or storm. He is at his best in sub-zero weather, in war he always performs a major role.

Next time you see the man on the pole or come across a line or cable gang, just think how much we owe to those who have united us by communication. Usually, the lineman smiles first. He always returns one.

Bureaucracy With Bayonets

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EVERETT M. DIRKSEN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, on April 28, 1944, there appeared in the Peoria

Journal-Transcript, of Peoria, Ill., an unusually persuasive and analytical editorial dealing with the Montgomery Ward case, and I insert it in the RECORD so that it may come to the attention of a larger group of readers:

BUREAUCRACY WITH BAYONETS

One of the soldiers who carried 69-year-old Sewell Avery out of the mail-order store of Montgomery Ward & Co. looks a bit shamefaced, in the picture published in yesterday's Journal-Transcript.

It is easy to understand why. What happened in Chicago when the Army—armed with bayonets—marched into the Montgomery Ward offices is not in the American tradition.

The issues behind the controversy between Ward and the Government are not particularly important. No dispute between employer and employee, between capital and labor, or between stockholders and workers is ever one-half so important as the general welfare of the country. If Montgomery Ward & Co. were a war plant, its seizure would be entirely justified. If it were engaged in the production of matériel for the armed forces, Sewell Avery would be guilty of an unpatriotic act in refusing to accede to the orders of the Commander in Chief, no matter how much he might believe the order to be unjust.

But Montgomery Ward & Co., in Chicago, is a retail store. It is engaged in merchandising. The operations of a mail-order house are not essential to the welfare of the country. Indeed, there was a time—just before Sewell Avery took over at Montgomery Ward & Co.—when there was grave danger there might not be a Montgomery Ward & Co. for very long. The company was then doing business with a deficit of nine millions. He turned that nine millions into a nine-million profit—demonstrating once again, that sound business methods can justify themselves in the preservation of any merchandising service.

If the situation which has developed between Montgomery Ward & Co. and the President of the United States were one which involved winning the war, the seizure would have had the support of patriotic citizens. If Montgomery Ward & Co. were a coal mine, a railroad, a munitions plant, an aircraft factory, a newspaper plant, a radio station, or some other war-essential service, none could defend Avery's action.

But it is none of these things. The President ordered the seizure of the Chicago offices of Montgomery Ward & Co., because the management refused to accede to a W. L. B. order. Whether the order was justified or not is beside the point. There are still courts in this land to determine the rights of both workers and employers. There are—we sincerely hope—courts in the land to determine the rights of individuals even against a government. And in their hands is the Nation's welfare in this matter.

The Constitution provides protection against the seizure of property without due process of law. No law, either written or based on common sense, can justify the argument that Montgomery Ward & Co. is needed to win the war. It could go out of business tomorrow, and the war effort would not be seriously hurt. The facilities seized by the Army are not engaged in the manufacture of any goods. They are not engaged in the wresting from the soil any natural resource. They are not engaged in the physical task of distributing civilian goods, save as they supply civilian goods to those who wish to buy them.

This time Franklin Delano Roosevelt has gone too far. He has made a laughing stock of Uncle Sam, has invited the disdain of thoughtful Americans. The seizure of a retail business at bayonet's point merely to enforce an order issued by bureaucrats is highly dangerous and dangerously high-handed.

Winston Churchill's Survey of Main Trends in British Foreign Policy in War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. RANKIN

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article from the New York Times of May 25, 1944:

THE TEXT OF CHURCHILL'S SURVEY OF MAIN TRENDS IN BRITISH FOREIGN POLICY IN WAR

The meeting of the Dominion Prime Ministers, which covered the best part of 5 weeks, is now concluded and very full statements to Parliament and the public have been made individually by the Prime Ministers themselves and collectively by the declaration to which we have all subscribed.

I should not pretend that we have arrived at hard and fast conclusions or precise decisions upon all questions which torment this afflicted globe, but it can be fairly said that, having discussed a great many of them, there was revealed a core of agreement which will enable the British Empire and Commonwealth to meet in discussion with other organizations in the world in a firmly knit array. We have advanced from vague generalities to more precise points and agreements and we are in position to carry on discussions with other countries within limits which we have imposed upon ourselves by this debate upon foreign affairs; and nothing was more remarkable than the cordial agreement which was expressed by every one of the Dominion Prime Ministers in the general conduct of our foreign affairs and in the principles which govern that conduct, or, I should add, in the skill and consistency with which they have been treated by the Foreign Secretary.

CONFIDENCE IN EDEN

The utmost confidence was expressed in him and in his handling of all the very difficult affairs, in spite of complications by which they were surrounded, in spite of the need for prompt action, which so often arises, by the mother country before there is time to have a full consultation.

In spite of all those difficulties, the utmost confidence and pleasure were expressed in the work which my right honorable friend had done. We therefore embark upon the present debate with the backing and hearty good-will from all representatives of the Commonwealth and Empire.

The word Empire is permitted to be used, which may be a great shock to a certain strain of intellectual opinion.

We embark on the present debate, not only with this backing of hearty good will but with the feeling that this meeting of Prime Ministers from all over the Empire and the representatives of India in the midst of a second deadly war is in fact that highest pinnacle which our world-wide family association has yet reached.

At this time, in policy and in war, our objective is the same—namely, to beat the enemy as soon as possible. And I am not aware of any action, or any studied inaction, for which His Majesty's Government is responsible that has not been directly related to this single and dominant purpose.

The duty of all persons responsible for the conduct of foreign affairs in a world war of this deadly character and of all who in different ways exercise influence is to help fighting men perform the heavy task entrusted to them by insuring them of all possible ease in execution and advantage in victory. Every one who is in position to guide public opinion, like members of this House, or of another place, or newspaper editors, broadcasters, and columnists, and others, should keep this very clear duty before their eyes.

They should always think of the soldier in battle and ask themselves whether what they say or write will make his task easier. We long for the day to come when this slaughter will be over and when this additional restraint which imposes itself upon every conscientious man in wartime can be relaxed or will vanish away entirely.

SEES PRECEPTS FOLLOWED

I must make my acknowledgment, first of all, to the very great degree with which these precepts are followed among those who accept the task of guiding public opinion and of those especially in this House, which is always so careful of public interest, and which in other ways has shown itself to be possessed of those steadfast and unyielding qualities in the face of danger and fatigue for which it has always been renowned, but never more renowned than now.

I shall try to practice what I have been preaching in the remarks I have made and I am sure the House will remember how many different audiences I have to address at the same moment, not only here but out of doors not only in this island but throughout the empire, not only among our allies great and small west or east and finally among our enemies, besides, of course, the satellites and neutrals of various hues. I must therefore pick my way among heated plowshares, and in this ordeal the only guides are singleness of purpose and a good, or at any rate, well-trained science.

Since I last spoke here on foreign affairs just about 3 months ago, almost all of the purposes which I mentioned to you have prospered severally and collectively.

First of all, let us survey the Mediterranean and Balkan spheres. A great disappointment which I had last October when I was not able to procure the necessary forces for gaining command of the Aegean Sea following collapse of Italy and gaining possession of the principal Italian islands—that disappointment has, of course, been accompanied by an exaggerated attitude of caution on the side of Turkey.

The hopes we cherished of Turkey boldly entering the war in February or March, or at least according the necessary bases for air action—these hopes have faded.

After giving £20,000,000 worth of British and American arms to Turkey in 1943 alone, we have suspended the process and have ceased to exhort Turkey to range herself with the victorious united powers with whom she has frequently declared that her sympathies lie and with whom I think there is no doubt that her sympathies do lie. But Turks in those discussions at the end of last year and at the beginning of this have magnified their danger.

Their military men took the gloomiest view of Russian prospects in south Russia and the Crimea. They never dreamed that by early summer the Red armies would be on the slopes of the Carpathians, drawn up along the Pruth and Sereth Rivers, or that Odessa and Sevastopol would be liberated and regained by the extraordinary valor, might and energy of the Soviet onslaught.

FINDS TURKS ERRED

Consequently the Turks did not measure with sufficient accuracy what might occur or what occurred in Rumania and Bulgaria nor, I might add, Hungary, and what would be the result on those countries of those tremendous Russian hammer blows struck even in months which are particularly unsuitable for operations in those regions and which would be normally devoted to the process of replenishing advancing fronts for future action.

Having overrated their dangers, our Turkish friends increased their demands for supplies to such a point that, having regard to means of communication and transport alone, the war probably would be over before those supplies could reach them.

We have, therefore, with great regret discontinued the process of arming Turkey because it looks probable that, in spite of our disappointment in the Aegean, the Allies will be able to win the war in the Balkans and generally throughout southeast Europe without Turkey being involved at all, although, of course, the aid of Turkey would be a great help and acceleration in that process.

This, of course, is a decision for Turkey to make, and we have put no pressure other than the pressure or argument, of not giving supplies we need for ourselves and other nations that are fighting upon our side, but the course which is being taken and has been taken so far by Turkey will not, in my view, procure for the Turks the strong position at the peace table which would attend their joining the Allies.

I must, however, note the good services and significant gestures rendered to us by the Turkish Government. Recently—and it is said that it has been rendered to us on the personal initiative of Turkey's honored President, General Inonu—namely, the complete cessation of chrome exports to Germany.

It is not too much to expect the assistance given us in respect to chrome will also be extended in a short time to cover other commodities, export of which, even if of less importance than chrome, is of material assistance to the enemy. If so, we shall endeavor to compensate the Turkish people for sacrifices which their cooperative action may entail by other means of importation.

PREMIER SPEAKS BLUNTLY

I thought it right to speak bluntly today. Turkey and Britain have a long history. They entered into relations with us before the war when things looked very black, and they did their best in very difficult times. Notwithstanding anything I have said in criticism, we hope with increasing confidence that still a better day will dawn for the relations of Turkey with Britain and, indeed, with all of the Allies.

Always in recent decades there has been in the Mediterranean a certain tension between Turkey and Italy on account of Italian ambition in the Greek islands and also, possibly, in Adana Province of Turkey. The Turks could never know which way the Italian dictator would take his would-be conquering sword. On that score Turkey's anxiety has been very largely removed.

The fate of Italy is, indeed, terrible, and personally I find it difficult to nourish animosity against the Italian people. The overwhelming mass of the Nation rejoiced in the idea of being released from the subtle tyranny of the Fascists, and they wished when Mussolini was overthrown to take their place as speedily as possible by the side of the British and American Armies, who, it was expected, would quickly rid the country of the Germans. However, this did not happen.

All Italian forces which could have defended Italy had either been squandered by Mussolini in the African deserts or by Hitler amid the Russian snows or were dispersed in combating, in a half-hearted way, the patriots of Yugoslavia.

Hitler decided to make great exertions to retain Italy, just as he has decided to make great exertions to gain the mighty battle which at this moment is at a climax south of Rome.

It may be that after the fall of Mussolini our action might have been more swift or audacious. It is no part of my submission that no mistakes are made by us or by the common action of our allies. But anyhow, here is this beautiful country suffering the worst horrors of war, with the larger part still under the cruel and vengeful grip of the Nazis, and with the hideous prospect of a red-hot rake of battle lines being drawn from sea to sea right up the whole length of the peninsula.

HOPES TO SPARE ROME

It is clear that the Germans will be driven out of Italy by the Allies, but that will happen on moving battle fronts; and what the Germans will do on their way out in the way of destruction to a people they hate and despise, and who they allege have betrayed them—that cannot be imagined or forecast. All I can say is we shall do our utmost to make the ordeal as short and as little destructive as possible.

We have great hopes that the city of Rome will be preserved from the struggle of our armies.

The House will recall that when I last spoke on foreign matters I expressed the view that it would be best that King Victor Emmanuel, and above all Marshal Badoglio, should remain as head of the executive of the Italian nation and armed forces until we reached Rome, when it was agreed by all that a general review of the position must be made.

Such a policy naturally entails differences of opinion which were reflected not only among the Allied Governments but inside every Allied country. However, I am happy to say that, after various unexpected happenings and many twists and turns, the situation is now exactly what I ventured to suggest and as I described it to the House 3 months ago.

In addition to that, far beyond my hopes, an Italian Government has been formed of a broadly based character around the King and Badoglio, and the King himself has decided that on capture of Rome he will retire to private life forever, transferring his constitutional titles to his son, the Prince of Piedmont, with the title of Lieutenant of the Realm.

I have every confidence in this Italian Government which has been formed. It will require further strengthening and broadening, especially as we come more closely in touch with the populous industrial areas of the north. But, at any rate, it is facing its responsibilities manfully and is doing all in its power to aid the Allies in their advance.

We are doing our best to equip the Italian forces willing to fight for us and not under the power of the Germans. They have played their part in the lines on more than one occasion. Their fleet is discharging most useful and important services for us, not only in the Mediterranean but in the Atlantic, and the loyal Italian air force has also fought so well that I am making special efforts to supply them with improved aircraft of British manufacture.

ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE GIVEN

We are also doing our best to assist the Italian Government to grapple with difficult financial and economic conditions which they inherited from fascism and which, though improving, are still severe behind the line of the Army.

It is understood throughout Italy, and it is the firm intention of the United Nations, that Italy, like all other countries which are now associated with us, shall have fair and free opportunity, as soon as the Germans are driven out and tranquillity is restored, of deciding whatever form of democratic government, whether monarchical or republican, they desire.

I emphasize the word democratic because it is quite clear that we shall not allow any form of fascism to be restored or set up in any country with which we have been at war.

From Italy one turns naturally to Spain, once the most famous empire in the world and down to this day a strong community in a wide land with marked personality and distinguished culture among the nations of Europe.

Some people think that our foreign policy toward Spain is best expressed by drawing comical or even rude caricatures of General Franco, but I think there is more than that. When our present Ambassador to Spain, Sir Samuel Hoare, went to Madrid almost exactly 4 years ago to the month, we arranged to keep his airplane waiting on the airfield, as it seemed almost certain that Spain, whose dominant party were under the influence of Germany because Germany had helped them so vigorously in the recently ended civil war, would follow the example of Italy and join the victorious Germans in a war against Britain.

Indeed, at this time the Germans proposed to the Spanish Government that triumphal marches of German troops should be held in the principal Spanish cities, and I have no doubt that they suggested to them that the Germans would undertake, in return for a virtual occupation of their country, the seizure of Gibraltar, which would then be handed back to Germanized Spain.

HEAVIER TASKS AVERTED

This latest feature would have been easier said than done. But there is no doubt that if Spain had yielded to German blandishments and pressure at the juncture, our burden would have been much heavier.

The Straits of Gibraltar would have been closed, and all access to the Mediterranean would have been cut off from the West, and the Spanish coasts would have become a nesting place for German U-boats. I certainly did not feel at the time that I would have liked to see any of these things happen, and none of them did happen. Our Ambassador deserves credit for the influence he rapidly acquired and which continually grew.

In his work he was assisted by a gifted man, Mr. Yencken, whose sudden death by an airplane accident is a loss which I am sure has been noted by the House. But the main credit is undoubtedly due to the Spanish resolve to keep out of the war. They had had enough war, and they wished to keep out of it. I think some sentiment may have been due to the fact that looking back, the Spanish people should remember that Britain had helped Spain free herself from Napoleonic tyranny 130 years ago.

At any rate the critical moment has passed.

The Battle of Britain was won. The island power which was expected to be ruined and subjugated in a few months was seen that very winter, not only intact and far stronger in the homeland, but also advancing in giant strides under Wavell's guidance along the African shore, taking about a quarter of a million Italian prisoners on the way.

But another very serious crisis occurred in our relations with Spain before the operation designated as "torch." That is to say, the descent of United States and British forces upon northwest Africa was begun.

Before that operation was begun the situation of Spain or Spain's power to injure us was at its very height. For a long time before this we had been steadily expanding our airfield at Gibraltar and building it out to sea, and for 1 month before the zero hour on November 7, 1942, we had sometimes 600 airplanes crowded on this airfield in full range and full view of Spanish batteries.

SPANIARDS KEPT CALM

It was very difficult for Spaniards to believe that all these airplanes were intended to reinforce Malta, and I can assure the House that passage of these critical days was very anxious indeed.

However, the Spaniards continued absolutely friendly and tranquil. They asked no questions and raised no inconvenience. If in some directions they have taken an indulgent view of German U-boats in distress or have continued active exportations to Germany, they made amends on this occasion, in my view, as far as our advantage was concerned, for these irregularities by completely ignoring the situation at Gibraltar where, apart from the aircraft, enormous numbers of ships were anchored far outside neutral waters inside the Bay of Algeciras, always under command of Spanish shore guns.

We should have suffered the greatest inconvenience if we had been ordered to remove these ships.

If we had been, I do not know how the vast convoys could have been marshaled and assembled.

I shall always consider it a service rendered at this time by Spain, not only to the United Kingdom and the British Empire and Commonwealth, but to the cause of the United Nations.

I have, however, no sympathy with those why think it clever and even funny to insult and abuse the Government of Spain whenever the occasion serves. I have had the responsibility of guiding the Government while we have passed through mortal perils, and, therefore, I think I have some means of forming a correct judgment about the values of events at critical moments as they occur.

I am very glad now, after prolonged negotiations, that a still better arrangement has been made with Spain which deals in a satisfactory manner with the Italian ships which had taken refuge in Spanish harbors and which has led to the hauling down of the German flag in Tangier and the breaking of the shield over the consulate, and which in a few days will be followed by the complete departure of the German representatives from Tangier, although they apparently still remain in Dublin.

Finally, it has led to an agreement about Spanish wolfram which has been reached without any affront to Spanish dignity and has reduced the export of wolfram from Spain to Germany during the coming critical months to a few lorry loads per month.

VICTORIES AIDED ACCORD

It is true that this agreement has been helped by the continuous victories of the Allies in many parts of the world, and especially in north Africa and Italy, and also by the immense threat by which the Germans conceive themselves to be menaced by all this talk of invasion across the channel. This, for what it is worth, has made it quite impossible for Hitler to consider reprisals on Spain. All his troops have had to be removed away from the frontier, and he has no inclination to face bitter guerrilla warfare because he has got quite enough to satisfy himself in so many other countries which he is holding by brut- force.

I am here today to speak kindly words about Spain. Let me add this hope: That she will be a strong influence for the peace of the Mediterranean after the war.

The internal political arrangements in Spain are a matter for Spaniards themselves. It is not for us to meddle in these affairs as a government.

(Laborite Emmanuel Shinwell here interposed: "You said as regards the restoration of government in Italy it could not be effected. What is the difference?")

The reason is that Italy attacked us. There is a clear line of distinction between nations who go to war with you and nations who leave you alone.

(Laborite Haden Guest asked here: "Is not a Fascist government a preparation for attack?")

We do not include in our program of world renovation any forcible action against any government whose internal form of administration does not come up to our ideas, and any remarks I have made on that subject refer only to enemy powers and their satellites who will be struck down by the force of arms. They are the ones who have ventured into the open and they are the ones whom we shall not allow to become again an expression of those peculiar doctrines associated with fascism and nazi-ism, which undoubtedly have brought about the terrible struggle in which we are engaged. Surely anyone can see the difference.

(Mr. Shinwell asked, "What is the difference?")

There is all the difference in the world between a man who knocks you down and a man who leaves you alone. You might conceivably take active interest in what happens to the former in case his inclination should recur, but we pass many people in ordinary daily life about whose internal affairs we do not feel ourselves called upon to make continued inquiry.

We speak plain words to the Spaniards in the hour of our strength as we did in the hour of our weakness. I look forward to increasingly good relations with Spain and extremely fruitful trade between Spain and this country, which I trust will grow during war and expand after peace

Iron from Bilbao and north Spain is of great value to this country both in war and peace.

AMBASSADOR RETURNING

Our Ambassador goes back to Spain for further important duties, and I have no doubt that he goes with the good wishes of a large majority of the House and of all thoughtful and unprejudiced persons.

Mr. Shinwell made a further remark, and Mr. Churchill said to him: "No one more than Mr. Shinwell would wish that he should be successful in anything that would do good for the common cause." Mr. Shinwell nodded and Mr. Churchill smiling broadly, added: "You have failed as a real opposition figure because you never could conceal your satisfaction when we win—and we sometimes do."

I am happy to announce a hopeful turn in Greek affairs. When I last spoke of them I described them as the saddest case of all. We have passed through a crisis of serious character since then. A Greek brigade and a large proportion of the Greek Navy mutinied, declaring themselves in one way or another on the side of an organization called E. A. M.—Greek Freedom Movement—and, of course, against the King and his Government.

The King of Greece, who was in London, was advised by nearly everyone concerned in Cairo not to go back and warned that his life was in danger. He returned to Cairo the next day. The situation was then most serious.

The Greek brigade was encircled by British forces some 30 miles away from Alexandria, and Greek ships which had mutinied in Alexandria Harbor were lying under the guns of both shore batteries and our superior naval forces, which had rapidly gathered.

This tension lasted nearly 3 weeks. In due course the mutiny was suppressed, the disorderly ships were boarded by Greeks under the Greek Government, and, with about 50 killed and wounded, the mutineers were collected and sent ashore.

BRITISH QUELLED MUTINY

The mutinous brigade in the desert were assaulted by superior British forces which captured the eminences surrounding the camp, and 4,000 men there surrendered. There were no casualties among the Greeks, but 1 British officer was killed in an attack upon an eminence. This is a matter which cannot be overlooked.

The greatest patience and tact were shown by the British military and naval authorities involved, and for some weeks past order has been firmly established and the Greek forces who were misled into evil deeds by subversive movements have been interned for the time being.

The then Prime Minister, Mr. Tsouderous, had already tried, before this thing happened, to arrange a meeting of all representatives of Greek opinion and to construct his administration so as to include them. He acquitted himself with dignity, and was helped by Mr. Venizelos, son of the great Venizelos whom we all esteemed so highly in the First World War.

At this moment, there emerged upon the scene Mr. Papandreou, a man greatly respected who had lived throughout the war in Athens and who was known as a man of remarkable character and one who could not be swayed by party interests, his own party being a very small one.

Mr. Papandreou became the King's new Prime Minister, but before forming his government he called a conference which met last week in Lebanon. Every party in Greek life was represented, and there were included the E. A. M., Communists, and others—a dozen parties or more. The fullest debate took place and all expressed their feelings freely.

This disclosed an appalling situation in Greece. Excesses of elamas, which is a military body operating under the E. A. M., had so alienated the population in many parts that the Germans had been able to form security battalions of Greeks to fight the E. A. M. Those security battalions were made up in many cases of men who would far rather have been out in the hills maintaining guerilla warfare. They had been completely alienated.

At the same time a state of hostility and suspicion, which led last autumn to actual civil war, existed between the E. A. M. and other resistance organizations, especially the edes under Colonel Zervas, who commands the undivided support of the civilian population in his area and has always shown the strictest compliance with orders sent him from Allied general headquarters in the Middle East, under whom all these forces have been placed.

CONFEREES REACHED UNITY

Thus it seemed to be a question of all against all and no one but the Germans rejoicing. Now after prolonged discussions, complete unity was reached at the Lebanon conference and all parties will be represented in a new government.

It will devote itself to what is, after all, the only purpose worthy of consideration—namely, the forming of a national army in which all guerilla bands will be incorporated and the driving with this army of the enemy from the country or, better still, destroying the enemy where he stands.

On Monday there was published in newspapers a very agreeable letter which I received from the leaders of the Communists—which is more than I received from the honorable gentleman [William Gallacher] who represents the party here. I received a very agreeable letter from the leaders of the Communists and Extreme Left Parties, and today there have also been published in the papers a letter I have received from M. Papandreou and another to the Foreign Secretary, expressing the hopes which he has for the future of his Government and thanks for the assistance we have given in getting around these troubles which I call diseases of defeat in Greece, which she now has a chance of shaking off.

The present situation—I hope and pray this may be so—indicates that a new and fair start will come to Greece in her struggle to cleanse her soil from the foreign invader.

And I have also to report to the House that a very marked and beneficial change has occurred in the situation in Greece that I could not give when I last spoke on this subject.

There was trouble with a destroyer we were giving Greece here, and matters remained so uncertain we were not able to hand it over, but I hope that as part of this reconstructed government and this new start which has been made this ship will soon be manned and will go to strengthen the Greek Navy as it returns to discipline and duty.

I gave some lengthy accounts last autumn of the position in Yugoslavia and our relations with the different jurisdictions there. The difficulty and magnitude of this business are very great. It must be remembered that not only three strongly marked races—Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes—are involved, but farther south Albanians in the area also are making a bold bid from German rule. They, too, at present are split into several competing and even antagonistic groups.

AVOIDS TAKING SIDES

Nothing is easier than to espouse any one of the various causes in these different countries with all their claims and counter claims, and one could find complete satisfaction in telling the tale from that particular standpoint. It is possibly the easiest kind of speech to make, to take a particular case and run it home on a single-track mind without any consideration for anything else, but we have to think of policy as well as oratory.

We have time to think of the problem as a whole and also to relate our action to the main purpose which I proclaimed at the beginning of my speech, namely, to beat the enemy as soon as possible and to gather all forces together for that purpose in priority to any other purpose. I can only tell you today the further positions which have been reached in Yugoslavia as a result of unremitting exertions of our foreign policy. They are, in my opinion, far more satisfactory than they were.

I have received a message from King Peter that he has accepted the resignation of Mr. Puritch and his Cabinet and is in the process of forming a new and smaller Cabinet with the purpose of assisting active resistance in Yugoslavia and of uniting as far as possible all fighting elements in that country.

I understand that the process of forming a new government involves the severance from the Royal Yugoslav Government of General Mihailovitch in his capacity as Minister of War, and I understand also that the B. A. N. of Croatia is an important factor in the political arrangement around whom or at the side of whom certain other elements may group themselves for the purpose of beating the enemy by a united Yugoslavia.

This, of course, has the support of the British Government. We do not know what will happen in the Serbian parts of Yugoslavia. The reason why we have ceased to supply General Mihailovitch with arms and support is a simple one. He has not been fighting the enemy, and, moreover, some of his subordinates have made accommodations with the enemy from which have arisen armed conflicts with the forces of Marshal Tito, accompanied by many charges and countercharges and the loss of patriot lives to the German advantage.

POSITION STILL POWERFUL

Mihailovitch certainly holds a powerful position locally as the commander in chief, and it does not mean that his ceasing to be Minister of War will rob him of his local influence. We cannot predict what he will do or what will happen.

We have proclaimed ourselves strong supporters of Marshal Tito because of his heroic and passive struggle against the German armies. We are sending and planning to send the largest possible supplies of weapons to him and to make the closest possible contacts with him.

I had the advantage of having long conversations with General Velebit, who has been over here on a military mission from Marshal Tito, and it has been arranged among other things that Marshal Tito shall send here a personal military representative in order that we may be kept in the closest touch with all that is being done and with the effect of it in Yugoslavia. This is, of course, additional to the contacts established with Marshal Tito and General Wilson's headquarters in the Middle East and in Algiers, and will, of course, be coordinated therewith.

It must, however, be remembered that this question does not turn on General Mikhailovitch alone. There is also a very large body, amounting perhaps to 200,000 Serbian peasant property owners, who are anti-German but strongly Serbian and who naturally hold the view of the peasant ownership community in regard to property. They are not as enthusiastic in regard to communism as some of those in Croatia and Slovenia.

Marshal Tito has largely sunk his communistic aspect in his character as a Yugoslav patriotic leader. He has repeatedly proclaimed that he has no intention of reversing the property and social systems which prevail in Serbia, but these facts are not accepted yet by the other side.

The Serbians are a race with a historic past. It was from Serbia that there came the spark which fired the explosion of the First World War. We remember the heroic retreat over mountains, and a very large number of Serbians are fighting with Marshal Tito's forces.

Our object is that all forces in Yugoslavia and the whole united strength of Serbia may be made to work together under the military direction of Marshal Tito for a united independent Yugoslavia which will expel from native soil the Hitlerite murderers and invaders until not one remains.

CITES EPIC OF RESISTANCE

The cruelty and atrocities of the Germans in Greece and Yugo-Slavia exceed anything of which we heard, and we have heard of terrible things. But the resistance of these heroic mountaineers has been one of the most splendid features of the war, and they will long be honored in history. I am sure that children will read the romance of these struggles and will have imprinted in their minds that love of freedom, that readiness to cast away life and comfort and all there is around one, in order to gain the right to live unmolested in your native home.

All I can say is that we must be given a little reasonable latitude to work together for this union. It would be quite easy to take wholeheartedly one side or the other. I have made it very plain where my sympathies lie, but nothing would give greater pleasure to the Germans than to see all these hardy mountaineers engaged in internecine strife against one another.

We cannot afford at this crisis to neglect anything which will obstruct real unity throughout the wide regions where, at the present time, upwards of 12 German divisions are gripped in Yugoslavia alone and 20 in all—that is, another 10 in the Balkans and the Aegean Islands.

All eyes must be turned on the common foe. Perhaps we have had some success in this direction in Greece. At any rate, it sums up our policy toward Yugoslavia, and the House will know that all questions of monarchy or republic or leftism or rightism are strictly subordinate to the main purpose we have in mind.

In one place we support a King, in another a Communist. There is no attempt by us to enforce particular ideologies. We only want to beat the enemy, and then, in happy and serene peace, let the best expression be given by the will of the people.

For a long time past the Foreign Secretary and I have labored with all our strength to try to bring about a resumption of relations between the Soviet Government and the Polish Government which we recognized, and have always recognized, since the days of General Sikorski.

REFUSES TO SHIRK TASK

We were conscious of the difficulties of our task, and some may say that we should have been wiser not to attempt it. We cannot accept that view. We are an ally of both governments. We went to war because Germany made an unprovoked attack upon our ally, Poland. We have signed a 20 years' treaty with our ally, the Soviet Union, and this treaty is the foundation of our policy.

Polish forces are fighting with our armies and have recently distinguished themselves remarkably in Italy. Polish forces under Russian guidance are also fighting with the Soviet armies against the common enemy. Our efforts to bring about a renewal of relations between the Polish Government in London and the Soviet have not succeeded.

We deeply regret that fact, and we must take care to say nothing that would make an agreement more difficult in the future. I must repeat that an essential part of any arrangement is the regulation of the Polish eastern frontier, and that in return for any withdrawals made by Poland in that quarter she should receive other territories at the expense of Germany which will give her an ample seaboard and a good, adequate, and reasonable homeland in which the Polish nation can safely dwell.

We must stress that we are all engaged in the struggle with the common foe and that nothing can surpass the bravery of our Polish allies in Italy, on the sea and in the air, and in the heroic resistance of the underground movement to the Germans.

I have seen over here men who came only a few days before from Poland and have told how they are under orders of the present Polish Government in London. I am most anxious that this underground movement shall not clash with the advancing Russian armies, but should help.

Orders have been sent by the Polish Government in London that the underground movement is to help the Russian armies in every way possible. There are many ways possible whereby guerrillas can be of assistance, and we must trust that statesmanship will find some way through.

I have an impression that things are not so bad as they may appear on the surface between Russia and Poland. I need not say that we and, I think I might add, the United States would welcome any arrangement between Russia and Poland, however brought about, whether directly between the powers concerned or with the help of His Majesty's Government or any other government.

NO QUESTION OF PRICE

There is no question of price on our part, but only sincere good will to both and an earnest and anxious aspiration for the solution of a problem fraught with grave consequences to Europe and the harmony of the grand alliance.

Meantime, our relations with the Soviet and Polish Governments remain as stated and regulated by public statements which have been repeated from this bench during the course of the present war.

I leave this question, and I trust that if it is dealt with in debate those who deal with it will always consider what we wanted—namely, a united action of all Poles with all Russians against all Germans.

We have all rejoiced at the skilful and brilliant fighting French, Moroccan, and Algerian divisions, brilliantly led, as they have been, by their officers in the heart-shaking battle to which I have referred and which is now at its climax.

The French Committee of National Liberation in Algiers have the credit of having prepared these troops which were armed and equipped by the United States under President Roosevelt's personal decision. The French committee have also placed at the full service of the Allies its powerful navy, including the Richelieu, one of the finest battleships in the world.

They guide and govern a vast empire, all of the strategic points of which are freely placed at the disposal of the United Nations. They have a powerful underground army in France, sometimes called the maquis and sometimes the underground army of the interior, which may be called upon to play an important part before the end of the war.

There is no doubt that this political entity, the French National Committee of Liberation, provides and directs forces at the present time which, in the struggle against Hitler, give it fourth place in the Grand Alliance.

The reason why the United States and Great Britain have not been able to recognize it as the Government of France or even as the provisional government of France is because we are not sure it represents the French Nation in the same way as the Governments of Britain, the United States, and Soviet Russia represent the whole body of their people.

The committee will, of course, exercise leadership in the matter of law and order in the liberated area of France under supervision, while the military exigencies last, of the Supreme Allied Commander in Chief.

WANTS MORE INFORMATION

But we do not wish to commit ourselves at this stage to imposing a government on any part of France which might fall under our control without more knowledge than we now possess of the situation in the interior of France. At the same time, I must make it clear that we must have no dealings with the Vichy Government or with anyone tainted with that organization, because they have decided to follow the path of collaboration with our enemies, and many of them have definitely desired and worked for German victory.

In Norway and the Low Countries it is different, for there we shall find that the continuity of lawful government is maintained by governments which we recognize and with whom we are in intimate relations.

The Governments of King Haakon and of Queen Wilhelmina are lawfully founded governments with perfect and unbroken continuity and should our liberating armies enter those countries, we feel that we should deal with them, and also with the Belgian and Danish Governments as far as possible, although their sovereigns are prisoners.

On the other hand, we are not able to take the decision, at this time, to treat the French Committee of National Liberation, or the French Provisional Government, as it has been called, as the full, final, and lawful embodiment of the French Republic. It may be that the Committee itself will be able to aid us in the solution of these riddles. And I think their decree governing their future action constitutes the most forceful and helpful step in that direction.

With the full approval of the President of the United States, I have invited General de Gaulle to pay us a visit over here in the near future.

I have just received a telegram from Mr. Duff Cooper [British Minister] in Algiers saying he will be very glad to come. There is nothing like talking things over and seeing where we can get to. I hope that he will bring some members of his Government with him so that the whole matter can be reviewed.

As this war has progressed it has become less ideological in its character, in my opinion. The Fascist power in Italy has been overthrown and will, in a reasonable period of time, be completely expunged, mainly by the Italian democracy themselves. If there is anything left over after that, we will look after it.

CHANGES IN SOVIET RUSSIA

Profound changes have taken place in Soviet Russia. The Trotskyite form of communism has been completely wiped out.

(William Gallacher, Communist Member, interposed: "There was never such a thing.")

The victories of the Russian armies have been attended by a great rise in strength of the Russian state and a remarkable broadening of its views. The religious side of Russian life has had a wonderful rebirth. The discipline and military etiquette of the Russian armies are unsurpassed. There is a new national anthem. [Laughter and interjection by a Member, to which Mr. Churchill replied: "The honorable gentleman had better be careful to keep in step."]

There is a new national anthem, the music of which Marshal Stalin sent me and which I have asked the B. B. C. to play on the frequent occasions when there are great Russian victories to celebrate.

The terms offered by Russia to Rumania make no suggestion of altering the standards of society in that country and were in many respects, if not all, remarkably generous. Russia has been very patient with Finland. The Comintern has been abolished—that is sometimes forgotten.

Quite recently some of our representatives from the Ministry of Information were allowed to make a considerable tour in Russia and found opportunities of seeing for themselves what they liked. They found an atmosphere of candid friendliness and keen desire to see British films and hear of our country and what it is doing in the war. Children in schools were being informed about the war on the seas and of its difficulties and perils and how the northern convoys got through to Russia. There seemed a great desire among the people that Britain and Russia should be friends.

These are marked departures from conceptions which were held some years ago for reasons we can all understand.

(Mr. Gallacher interposed: "On both sides." Mr. Churchill replied: "Certainly, on both sides.")

AFFIRMS UNITY WITH RUSSIA

We have no need to look back to the past and to add up a tale and tally of recriminations. Many terrible things have happened, but we began 30 years ago marching forward with the Russians in battle against the German tyranny of the Kaiser then. We are now marching with them, and I trust we shall until all forms of German tyranny have been extirpated.

As to nazi-ism, the other ideology, we intend to wipe that out utterly, however, drastic may be the methods required. We are all agreed on that in this House, I think, whatever our political views or doctrines may be. Throughout the whole of the British Dominions and the United States and all the United Nations there is only one opinion about that.

For the rest, whatever may be said of former days, there is nothing which has occurred which should in any way make us regret the 20 years' treaty we have signed with the Russians and which will be a dominating factor in the relations which we shall have with them.

I see in some quarters that I am expected today to lay out quite plainly and decisively the future plan of world organization and also to set the Atlantic Charter in its exact and true relation to subsequent declarations and current events. It is easier to ask such questions than to answer them.

We are working with 33 united nations, and in particular, with two great allies, who, in some forms of power, far exceed the British Empire. Taking everything into consideration, including men and money, in the war effort and expanse of territory we can claim to be the equal of these great powers but not, in my view, superior.

As the head of the British Government or, I may add, as speaking to this House, as a most respected institution in the grand alliance, it would be a great mistake for me or the House to take it on ourselves to lay down the law for all these countries, including two great powers with whom we have to work if the world is to be brought back into a good condition.

BRITAIN'S POST-WAR ROLE

This small island with this marvelous structure of States and dependencies which it has gathered around it will, if we all hold together, occupy a worthy place in the vanguard of nations, and it is idle to suppose that we are the only people who are to prescribe what all the other countries for their own good are to do.

Many other ideas and forces come into play, and nothing could be more unwise than for the meeting of prime ministers for instance to prescribe the way that all countries should have to go.

Consultations always are proceeding between the three great powers and others, and every effort is being made to explore the future to resolve difficulties and to obtain the greatest measure of common agreement. A few things have already become quite clear and were very prominent at the conference just concluded.

The first is that we must fight on all together until Germany is forced to capitulate and until Nazidom is extirpated and the Nazi Party is stripped of all continuing power of doing evil.

Next is that the Atlantic Charter remains the guiding signpost, expressing the vast body of opinion among all the powers now fighting together against tyranny.

The third point is that the Atlantic Charter in no way binds us about the future of Germany. It has no quality of a bargain or contract with our enemy. It was no offer to the Germans to surrender. If it had been an offer, that offer would have been rejected.

But the principle of unconditional surrender which has also been promulgated will be adhered to as far as Nazi Germany and Japan are concerned, and that principle itself wipes away all idea of anything like Mr. Wilson's 14 points being brought up by the Germans after their defeat, claiming they surrendered in consideration of those 14 points.

I have repeatedly said that unconditional surrender gives the enemy no rights, but it relieves us from no duty. Justice will have to be done and retribution will fall upon the wicked and cruel. Miscreants who set out to subjugate first Europe and then the world must be punished. So must their agents who in so many countries have perpetrated horrible crimes. They must be brought to face the judgment of the populations they have outraged to the very scenes of their atrocities.

NO GUARANTY TO REICH

There is no question of Germany enjoying any guaranty of any kind that she will not undergo territorial changes if it should seem that the making of such changes would render more secure and more lasting the peace of Europe.

Scarred and armed with experience, we intend to take better measures this time than could previously have been conceived to prevent a renewal in the lifetime of our children or our grandchildren of the horrible destruction of human values which has marked the last and present World Wars.

We intend to set up a world order and an organization equipped with all necessary attributes of power in order to prevent future wars or the planning of them in advance by restless and ambitious nations. For this purpose of preventing wars there must be a world-controlling council. I am not talking about our purposes, but for the purpose of preventing wars there must be a world council comprising the greatest states which emerge victorious from this war who will be obligated to keep within certain minimum standards of armaments for the purpose of preserving peace.

There must also be a world assembly of powers whose relations to the world executive or controlling power for the purpose of maintaining peace I am in no position to define. If I did I should be stepping outside the bounds which are proper to us and our allies.

The relations of three bodies and their relations with each other can only be settled after the formidable foes we are now facing have been beaten and reduced to complete submission. It would be presumption for any one power to try to prescribe in precise detail exactly what solution we found. The mere attempt for us to do so and to put forward what is a majority view on this and that might prejudice us in gaining consideration for our arguments when the time comes, and I shall not even attempt to parade the many questions and difficulties which will arise and which are at present in all our minds.

Anyone can write down on paper at least a dozen large questions of this kind: Should there be united forces of nations or should there be a world police, and so on? There are other matters of highly interesting character which should be discussed, but it would be stepping out of our place in the forward march for us to go beyond the gradual formulation of opinion and ideas which are continuously going on inside the British Commonwealth and in contact with our principal allies.

QUESTIONS UNANSWERABLE

We must not suppose, however, that these questions cannot be answered and that these difficulties cannot be overcome, and that complete victory will not be a powerful aid to the solution of all problems and that good-will and practical common sense which exists in the majority of men and the majority of nations will not find its full expression in that new structure which must regulate the forces of every people as far as they may clash with another people.

The future toward which we are marching across bloody fields and frightful manifestations of destruction must surely be based upon broad and simple virtues and upon the nobility of mankind. It must be based upon a rule or law which upholds the principle of justice and fair play, which protects the weak against the strong when the weak have justice on their side.

There must be an end to the predatory exploitation of nationalistic ambitions. This does not mean that nations should not be entitled to rejoice in their traditions in all the splendor of their achievements, but they will not be allowed by armed forces to gratify appetites of aggrandizement at the expense of other countries just because they are smaller and weaker or less well prepared, and measures will be taken to have ample armies, fleets, and air forces available to prevent anything of that kind coming about.

We must undoubtedly in our world structure embody a great deal of all we have gained for the world by the structure and form of the League of Nations. We must arm our world organization and make sure within the limits assigned to it that it has overwhelming military power.

We must remember we shall all be hard put to it to gain a living, to repair the devastation which has been wrought and to give all the wider life and more comfortable life which is so deeply desired.

We must strive to preserve the reasonable rights and liberties of the individual.

We must respect the rights and opinions of others while holding firmly to our own faith and conviction. There must be room in this great new structure of the world for happiness and prosperity of all, and in the end it must be capable of giving happiness and prosperity even to the guilty and vanquished nations.

There must be room within this great world organization for an organism like the British Empire and Commonwealth, as we now call it, and I trust there will be room also for a fraternal association of the British Commonwealth and the United States.

We are bound by our 20-years' treaty with Russia, and beside this—for my part, I hope to have deserved to be called a good European—we should try to raise the glorious Continent of Europe, parent of so many powerful States, from its present miserable condition as a kind of volcano of strife and turmoil, to its old glory as the family of nations and as the vital expression of Christendom.

I am sure these great entities I have mentioned will in no way disturb the general purpose of a world organization. The British Empire, the conception of a Europe truly united, a fraternal association with the United States—they will in no way disturb the general purpose of a world organization

In fact, they may help powerfully to make us run smoothly. I hope and pray all this may be established and that we may be led to exert ourselves to secure those permanent and glorious achievements which alone can make amends to mankind for all the miseries and toils which have been their lot and for all the heroism and sacrifices which are their glory.

House Resolution 547

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS LUDLOW

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 18, 1944

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, on May 15 I introduced in this House a resolution (H. Res. 547) for a congressional investigation of bureaucracy and unconstitutional trends of government.

I believe that no greater duty ever rested on the Congress of the United States in all of its history than the duty of demobilizing the bureaucracy which has taken a lethal grip on our Nation. To curb this bureaucracy and to restore Government to its ancient bearings where it will operate within the boundaries of the Constitution is the responsibility of Congress. A logical first step in that direction would be the adoption of the resolution I have introduced and which is now before the Committee on Rules.

This is the resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed to make a study of the Washington bureaucracy with a view to initiating as soon as may be practicable a program of limitation and liquidation of said bureaucracy and the restoration of government within recognized constitutional bounds.

SEC. 2. The committee is authorized to employ such clerical and other assistance as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. The committee is directed to report its findings and conclusions to the House of Representatives before the close of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

I submit for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the text of a letter which I have sent to every Member of Congress, regardless of politics. The issue involved is in no sense political. The correction of unconstitutional trends of Government is not a job for Democrats alone; it is not a job for Republicans alone; it is a job for Americans. The Congress of the United States represents all Americans. I believe this resolution is the voice of America.

The text of the letter referred to is as follows:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The enclosed resolution undertakes to translate into concrete form the widespread national demand that something shall be done about our Federal bureaucracy. That bureaucracy stands indicted in public opinion on many unts for encroachment on congressional rights, for taking over legislative functions, for harassing the people with intolerable orders and directives, and for all but destroying local self-government in America.

To correct these trends in Government, which nearly all of our citizens believe to be unwholesome and which many believe to be lethal, is not a job for Democrats; it is not a job for Republicans; it is a job for Americans. There is nothing in the slightest degree partisan or political about the resolution I have introduced.

There is not, and there will not be, any effort on my part to inject politics or personalities into the investigation which I propose. To say that a great deal of the amazing growth of bureaucracy is due to war does not do away with the fact that these conditions exist and should be corrected if we are to save our American form of government.

Besides, bureaucracy is not entirely a recent development. Bureaucracy has been flowering for more than two decades. Eighteen years ago HATTON W. SUMNERS of Texas proposed a similar investigation and made a speech in the wel` of this House forecasting with far-seeing vision events which have since taken place. He told the House last year that his efforts 18 years ago did not attract enough attention at that time even to provoke adverse criticism. The world now knows how wise he was.

If this resolution is adopted Judge SUMNERS and the members of his able Committee on the Judiciary will go into this subject thoroughly and will bring in a report before the present Congress adjourns which will offer definite recommendations in regard to controlling bureaucracy, decentralizing the Federal Government to constitutional bounds, and restoring the local self-government that has been taken away from the States and communities. This will be an incalculable service to America. Under our form of Government Congress has a special responsibility as the guardian of constitutional rights. This investigation is distinctly a job for Congress.

I am sending a copy of the resolution and this accompanying statement to every Member of the House to try to get a consensus of opinion as to the advisability of this proposed investigation. If you approve this approach toward a rational control and ultimate demobilization of the Federal bureaucracy of which the entire country is complaining I will be grateful if you will give me the benefit of your advice in a letter which I may be privileged to use in speaking on the subject in the House and over the radio.

Very sincerely yours,

LOUIS LUDLOW.

Policy of Great Britain Toward Palestine

REMARKS

OF

HON. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, some time ago I spoke on the floor of the House about the Palestine policy of the British Government, and called attention to the sad fact that under the policy laid down by the British white paper Jewish immigration to Palestine completely ceased on March 31, 1944.

Until that date there was still the hope that our Government would exercise sufficient pressure on the British Government to keep the doors of Palestine open for the thousands of Jews who are being completely exterminated by the ruthless policy of Hitler and his satellites. But it seems that the protest fell on deaf ears and that the policy laid down in the white paper is being continued and has by now become fully established.

Now the last hope of the Jews has turned into despair and yet a prominent magazine, the Reader's Digest, sees fit to publish in its current issue an article entitled "Report on Palestine," in which this policy of the British white paper is apparently accepted with approval.

The Reader's Digest starts out with a seeming desire to be fair and impartial. The statement is made that its correspondent in the near-eastern theater, one Frederick C. Painton, was commissioned to obtain the true facts of the situation, which as the Reader's Digest states "is so thoroughly obscured by passion and by politics."

This special correspondent made a trip to Palestine, interviewed leaders of both sides, and claims to present a report which is "as honest and objective as it is in his power to write."

The editors of the Digest apparently fully approve of Mr. Painton's conclusions, for they say that although this report was originally intended to be merely a memorandum for the editors "it is so informative and so important as to warrant publication." Now, what does this report state? It tells us what we all know—that the British white paper intends to repopulate Palestine on the basis of one-third Jews and two-thirds Arabs. In other words, the Jews of Palestine will always remain a minority. But, then, the author of the article does not think that the poor Arabs were really properly taken care of by the British. It goes on to say that "the Arabs look around them and see autonomy in Lebanon, Iraq, Trans-Jordan, and Saudi Arabia. The Palestinian Arab would like that autonomy too, but does not see how he can get it."

I do not know how much of an expert on Near East affairs Mr. Painton really is, but I cannot for the life of me see how a Palestinian Arab can envy the lot of an Arab in Saudi Arabia. The King of that country has full power of life and death over his subjects. From his decisions there is no appeal. All the big offices of state are preempted by the King's large family, his brothers, and his cousins.

The cultural standing of the Arabs in Saudi Arabia is on the level of nomad barbarism. It is amusing to think that any Palestinian Arab who has been able to observe the effects of modern civilization in the many fine communities which were built by the Jews in Palestine in the last 25 years can look upon the status of his brethren in Saudi Arabia with anything but contempt.

Nor are conditions much better in either Trans-Jordan, or even Lebanon and Iraq. Of course, the populations of Lebanon and Iraq are not Arab. The people of Lebanon are Syrians and predominantly Christian, and there surely is no basis for comparison between the Palestinian Arab and the Christian Syrian.

The Palestinian Arab until 25 years ago lived under very primitive conditions. Most of the land in Palestine was owned by rich Turkish landlords, and the Arabs were exploited by their masters under conditions approximating serfdom or peonage.

Twenty-five years ago, when the Balfour Declaration opened the doors of Palestine to the Jews, fresh capital came into Palestine. The land was put under effective cultivation and many Arabs for the first time in their lives became owners of property, where heretofore they were merely slaves for Turkish masters. It was because of the enterprise and the ingenuity of the Jewish settlers that the same thing happened in Palestine which happened in these United States 300 years ago. Just as the American Indians never understood proper cultivation of land until this country was settled and colonized by the Anglo-Saxons and others who came to these shores from Europe, so did Palestine begin to thrive only after Jewish immigration to that country began.

As a matter of fact, Britain recognizes the Jewish contribution to the settlement of Palestine, because they feel that without the Jews Palestine will again become a barren waste as it was 25 years ago. But Britain would like to have its cake and eat it. It wants to retain the Jewish population of Palestine, but it wishes to curtail future Jewish immigration, so that the Jews of Palestine will become a helpless and hopeless minority and be forever the wards of the British, instead of a self-dependent and autonomous community.

I am sure that a great deal of the opposition to the free Jewish immigration into Palestine is due to subtle anti-Semitic propaganda which found its way into the councils of Britain from sources inimical to the Jewish people, which perhaps can be traced to German origin.

I am positive that there can be no real objection to free Jewish immigration, that a Jewish Palestine will be a boon not only to the Jews but to the Arabs, and that without Jewish enterprise and the pioneering spirit exhibited by the Jews in the settlement and development of Palestine that country can neither grow nor prosper.

Retired Commissioned Officers in Civilian Positions

REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE W. GILLIE

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that there is a bill in the Civil Service Committee of the House which I introduced last December, which, if enacted, would be of great help in the war effort, inasmuch as we are told that there is a great shortage of manpower in the War Department. This bill is H. R. 3872, to remove for the duration of the war certain limitations upon the appointment and compensation of retired commissioned officers in civilian positions by the Government. Mr. Speaker, there are 3,000 retired officers experienced and exceptionally capable who, under the present law, are denied the privilege of accepting employment in or under the executive branch of the Government if they happen to be on the retired list of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Geodetic Survey, or Public Health Service. Under the present law, these experienced men are prevented from doing their bit for the present war, and yet at the same time, we do not let them accept jobs which would lessen the shortage of manpower.

I have taken this matter up with a number of people and I thoroughly believe that if we can get this bill acted on by the committee and permit these officers to help in the war effort, we shall have righted the wrong suffered by these retired officers for many years and, also, we shall have aided greatly in the war effort. Although the committee has submitted this bill to some half a dozen agencies for a report and received an adverse report by each of them through the Bureau of the Budget, I request that the Civil Service Committee hold hearings on this bill and consider the bill on its own merits. It is my understanding that the chairman of the Civil Service Committee is very busy all this week and next with important matters and I therefore respectfully request that he immediately appoint a chairman of a subcommittee to conduct hearings on this very important bill, that the matter may come to the floor of the House before the summer recess.

The bill referred to follows:

H. R. 3872

A bill to remove for the duration of the war certain limitations upon the appointment and compensation of retired commissioned officers employed in civilian positions by the Government

Be it enacted, etc., That, nothwithstanding the limitations of existing law, any commissioned officer on the retired list of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, or Public Health Service may be appointed to, or may hold, a civilian office or position in or under the executive branch of the Government or the municipal government of the District of Columbia, and may receive both the pay attached to such civilian position and his retired pay.

SEC. 2. This act shall be in effect during the period beginning on the date of its enactment and ending 6 months after the termination of hostilities in the present war, as proclaimed by the President.

American Prisoners of the Japanese Government

REMARKS

OF

HON. LUTHER A. JOHNSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, Chairman BLOOM, of the Foreign Affairs Committee, recently appointed a subcommittee to investigate the facts relating to the possibility of accelerating the further exchange of American citizens interned or held as prisoners of war by the Japanese Government, and also to investigate as to the condition and treatment of such persons, and to aid in sending supplies to them, and so forth.

I was named as chairman of this subcommittee, and the other members of the committee are Mr. RICHARDS, of South Carolina; Mr. BURGIN, of North Carolina; Mr. VORYS, of Ohio; and Mr. SCHIFFLER, of West Virginia.

This committee had its initial meeting last week with representatives from the State Department, and secured much valuable information as to what has been done and is being done, but we have not yet concluded our investigations and will shortly have another meeting and continue to do everything we can to secure all information and devise all possible ways and means toward the accomplishment of the purposes for which this committee was appointed.

Our Government has been very active and doing everything possible in regard to this important matter. Publicity of what is being done or what is proposed to be done would hurt rather than help, and for that reason very little information can now be made public. Some of the information ascertained at our hearing is contained in a press release issued day before yesterday by the State Department, and same is submitted herewith:

The War Prisoners' Aid of the Young Men's Christian Association was recently informed by its Stockholm office that the Japanese authorities in the Philippine Islands had extended permission to the neutral delegate there of the War Prisoners' Aid to purchase locally relief supplies to an amount not exceeding $25,000 monthly for shipment to civilian internment and prisoner-of-war camps in the Philippine Islands. United States Government funds have been made available for expenditure by the War Prisoners' Aid delegate for this purpose. These funds are in addition to monthly remittances of official funds which are being transmitted regularly through Swiss Government channels to the executive committees of civilian internment camps in the Philippine Islands under authorization obtained from the Japanese authorities in August 1943. Although information has been received that the American Red Cross relief supplies sent on the exchange vessels to Japan and Japanese-occupied territories, including the Philippine Islands, have been distributed by the Japanese authorities, permission has so far not been given by the Japanese Government for the inspection of civilian internment camps or of prisoner of war camps in the Philippine Islands by representatives of the Swiss Government, which represents American interests in the Far East, or by representatives of neutral organizations. The United States Government is continuing to press the Japanese Government to grant full reciprocity in this respect.

States' Rights Include Justice for Negro G. I.'s

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANCIS J. MYERS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Philadelphia Record of May 23, 1944:

STATES' RIGHTS INCLUDE JUSTICE FOR NEGRO G. I.'S

One point stands out above all others in the recent illuminating series by Orrin C. Evans in the Record on the treatment of Northern Negro soldiers in southern camps:

Application of good will and common sense can and does provide easy solution to what at first may appear a difficult race problem.

In touring 14 camps in 7 Southern States, Evans founds that, while discontent among Northern Negroes was greatly exaggerated, one abuse particularly promoted bitterness.

That is the failure of local transportation firms to serve the needs of the Negro soldiers. Purely on the basis of race discrimination.

Unwanted as bus passengers, badgered and bullied by club-toting drivers, they are compelled in seeking free-time recreation to hike miles from camp to neighboring towns—and then back.

Either that or, as increasing numbers of Negro soldiers are doing, they remain in camp denying themselves a holiday in order to escape degrading slights and trouble.

They have before them the shocking, inexcusable violence visited upon one of their comrades, Pvt. Edward Green.

Green was shot and killed by a vicious quick-triggered bus driver in Alexandria, La.

Unfortunately, as the Attorney General of the United States discovered after an inquiry, there is no Federal statute under which the driver can be prosecuted.

Since Louisiana, where intolerance and prejudice corrupt the law, has taken no action, the driver is a freeman—free to shoot down other American soldiers.

There was impassioned southern oratory in support of States' rights when the soldier-vote and poll-tax bills were debated in Congress. Here is a State right and a State duty for Louisiana:

Prompt arrest and trial for a man charged with a brutal slaying.

Genuine hatred has been promoted among northern Negro soldiers. It is reflected in the decreasing purchase of War bonds by their families at home. Here is a cancerous condition.

It has been seized upon by the politically unscrupulous and the out-and-out enemies of this country, multiplied a hundredfold in order to foment disunity.

Yet such problems as transportation failure at the camp exist, only because somebody lacks will or imagination to solve them.

Brig. Gen. George Horkan provided an answer pronto at Camp Lee near Petersburg, Va.

He entered into an agreement with the local bus company to furnish busses exclusively for soldiers, white and Negroes alike, to travel from camp to Petersburg.

That didn't take genius. A simple solution Yet, with but one other exception, Camp Lee is the only one visited by Evans to do anything about so serious a problem.

Perhaps the War Department—now apprised of the transportation problem if hitherto uninformed—should establish adequate service at all the camps.

It would be only fair treatment to hundreds of thousands of American soldiers. It would be a shot in the arm to national unity and a shot in the heart to sponsors of race hatred.

As We See It

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. E. C. GATHINGS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by Mr. Fred McCollam for the Forest City (Ark.) Times Herald of May 19, 1944:

AS WE SEE IT

(By the Editor)

The speaker at the young businessmen's club last evening gave an outline of the expanded social-security program, as contemplated by those in charge of the program. It will be asked that it be enlarged to include medical and hospital care, total and permanent disability, and that it be made all-inclusive in scope. We have previously discussed the so-called socialized medicine program in this column, and we are still of the opinion that it is un-American.

The speaker made a very able presentation of his subject, but we still do not agree with the proposed plan of enlarging the present benefits of the security program. We think it illtimed to carry on social reforms and experiments, with resultant heavy increases in taxes, what with our war to be financed and paid for, and with the many staggering problems of post-war settlement which will soon be demanding an immediate and expensive action.

The speaker made the statement that social security was not an experiment, that it had been in actual practice in England and in other European countries for more than 200 years. Since we have been called upon to feed Europe from time to time, lest her inhabitants die of starvation—since we have lent her large sums of money, and later been forced to cancel the debt without repayment—and since we have been required to supply her with armament and munitions to fight her wars, we question the advisability of imitating any national plan that might lead us to be placed in any positions similar to these. At any rate, we don't want to accept the European formula too readily unless we can be given the name of the country that is to wet-nurse and care for us after we have reaped the permanent benefits (?) of any such system.

The speaker also made the statement that because of a scarcity of office space in the National Capital, the Social Security Board was forced to go to Baltimore, a distance of some forty-odd miles from Washington, in order to secure adequate office space for the force necessary for keeping the social-security plan in operation, and for storing the voluminous records necessary to be kept. He defended his particular board by saying that they only employed approximately 4,000 in this department. But with 200 departments of comparable size, this gives us an army of approximately 800,000 employees. That is nearly a million persons who leave their homes in various States, and are congested in the small area adjacent to the Capital of our Nation, where they live in apartments, furnished rooms, governmentally operated hotels and dormitories, with a relative few in their own private homes.

This giant army must be fed and clothed, and provided with shelter, just the same as a fighting army in the field. They produce not a head of grain, not one stalk of cotton, they drive not an individual rivet in any war industry; in short, they create no wealth or food. They are supported entirely by tax money.

If security were all we are born to experience, we question the right of many of us to occupy the space we do on this globe. And to us, the present social-security program seems to sap all individual initiative, and personal desire to accomplish, to succeed, and to provide for the individual members of the family.

Do you know the people who enjoy the most complete security on the face of the earth today? They are the inmates of Alcatraz, the Federal Government's rock-island prison off the coast of California. Jesus Christ could have chosen security over death on the cross, but the world would never have recovered from the loss, had His choice been security over service to mankind.

The pages of history are composed of the deeds of those who choose rather to accomplish than to sit supinely and securely secure. Columbus, Magellan, Drake, DeSoto, Marco, Polo, Dr. Livingstone, Cecil Rhodes, our own Daniel Boone, Lewis, and Clarke, and countless other discoverers and explorers enriched the world because they clung to individual initiative, rather than leaned upon personal security. In the list of world heroes, Charlemagne, Constantine, Caesar, Lord Nelson, General Wainwright on Bataan, General Stilwell in Burma and China, the tail gunners on every Flying Fortress shot down over bloody and war-torn Europe, John Paul Jones, George Washington, Stonewall Jackson, Robert E. Lee, Abraham Lincoln, all discarded security for accomplishment. In religion, Martin Luther, Charles Wesley, Lord Calvert, our Puritan fathers, all displayed the sparks of initiative accomplishment, rather than eat the soft sop of security alone.

These figures contributed to the greatness of our present-day world. If we are to preserve it, we must not be content with the spine-softening security, as offered in present-day planning. We must preserve the sparkling talent God gave us, and use it intelligently and bravely.

We must stand up and be men, face the issues squarely and win by conquering our problems, rather than by evading our responsibilities.

Patrick J. McGrath

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARY T. NORTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following newspaper editorials:

[From Facts, of Bayonne, N. J.]

EX-POSTMASTER M'GRATH

After serving as acting postmaster for a period of 2 years, Patrick J. McGrath was nominated by President Franklin D. Roosevelt for permanent appointment after having attained the highest rating in an examination conducted by the United States Civil Service Commission, but the Senate refused to confirm him just because the junior United States Senator from New Jersey, ARTHUR WALSH, had said that "McGrath is personally obnoxious to me."

We realize that Senator WALSH of New Jersey is a bosom friend of former Gov. Charles Edison, and in an effort to show antagonism to Mayor Frank Hague, of Jersey City, McGrath became the innocent victim of the circumstances.

Regardless of what the Senate of the United States decrees in such matters, one thing is certain—that McGrath was the best news source the representatives of the press ever had in Bayonne, and therefore from standpoint of personal friendship and admiration the newsmen of Hudson County are exceedingly sorry to hear that McGrath was not confirmed.

The fact is that McGrath enjoys the finest reputation in Bayonne. He is endowed with a gift of executive ability, business acumen, and an understanding heart. There must be a mistake. There must be a misunderstanding. The smartest F. B. I. agents working for the Post Office Department had been in Bayonne looking into the record of McGrath, and their report was too obvious when the United States Civil Service Commission certified him as being a man with the highest reputation, honesty, and integrity.

Unless Senator WALSH of New Jersey can prove anything concrete against the record of McGrath, we feel that the Congress should demand an investigation; otherwise the people of Bayonne would feel with a spirit of hesitation and distrust to our august body of Senators at Washington.

The publisher of Facts hopes that McGrath's name may be submitted to the Senate again for vote, and it is more than likely that there would be a change of heart.

[From the Jersey Journal of May 22, 1944]

THE CASE OF POSTMASTER M'GRATH

In forcing the rejection under so-called senatorial courtesy, of Postmaster Patrick J. McGrath, United States Senator WALSH of New Jersey said Mr. McGrath was "personally obnoxious to him."

The Senator's statement was pure bunk, such obvious "bunk" that even Mr. WALSH of New Jersey and his political and business godfather must be able to appreciate the facts.

The reason for the rejection of Mr. McGrath's nomination for further service as Bayonne's postmaster is that he is a Hague Democrat caught in the middle of the Hague-Edison fight. Mr. WALSH's motives were blatantly political. He would have made a much better impression if he had honestly admitted his motives.

Mr. McGrath was not "obnoxious" to George B. Mettam, a high executive of the Standard Oil Co., nor to Eugene Newkirk, head of the Bayonne Trust Co.; nor to Patrick Fraher, Broadway Businessmen's Association; nor to Harry Dembe, Broadway National Bank; nor to Joseph McCormack, principal of the Horace Mann School.

These men signed his references for appointment. They are his neighbors, and it is said a man is known best by his neighbors. A gentleman who enjoys himself much of the year in the beautiful suburbs of Essex, in Essex County, and on occasion has enjoyed truffles and steel-head salmon and other things at the "Little White House," at Sea Girt, is not likely to know much about a fellow from Bayonne.

Mr. McGrath's personal record is also worthy of comment. He has a wife and four children—a fine family. Having served in the armed forces in the previous World War, he is a member of the American Legion, Post 19, and the Catholic War Veterans. His party regularity is indicated by the fact that he is a charter member of the Bayonne Democratic Club, not counting other similar affiliations. On top of all that is the fact that he stood first man on the civil-service list.

Senator WALSH of New Jersey indulged in a cruel procedure.

Address of Bernard M. Baruch

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ED ROWE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I include therein an article from the New York Times, Wednesday, May 24, 1944, being the text of Baruch's speech in urging the United States to lead the world:

My deep thanks for the compliments paid me by the Churchman's Medal, by the distinguished speakers, and by your presence here.

After the flattering words, spoken about me, I should like to say a few kind words about a certain relative of mine—a relative of yours—the one who made me possible—the one who makes you possible—our Uncle Sam. We gaze on him with a sort of toleration and amusement, but he is a pretty sturdy soul. He is always on the side of right—sometimes a little slow getting there, but when he does arrive, he makes himself felt. He is better than we think, he is stronger than we know. Let me state a few of his claims to your respect.

There is a tendency among us to wonder whether he—let us say we—have done all we should have done in the world cataclysm. We search our souls for reassurance.

Perhaps we have not done as well as we should have done, or as we could have done. Nor yet will do. But, even so, we do not have to hang our heads. Without us, could the Russians have held? Could the Japanese have been stopped? Could the valiant Chinese have done as well as they have? And what of the magnificent fight of the British? Were we not of help to them? Churchill has proclaimed his debt to us. Even Stalin has admitted the effect upon his battles of the war-making power of America. Today the bloody Nazis and the Japs face a defeat that without us could not be.

STRESSES WORLD-WIDE TASK

We are fighting—and helping—not on limited fronts, but on the whole circumference of the globe, and from the North to the South Poles. Even now our men are poised ready for the great invasion and the blow at Japan. We feed the hungry and we clothe the naked. We build roads, airports, harbors, and plants. We supply our allies all over the world with machines of death and supports of life, in food, medicine, and shelter.

We are the most powerful Nation in the world. Let us not forget that. By keeping it in our mind we shall not ignore the obligation power carries with it—to use it justly and helpfully. And we shall be a force, perhaps the greatest, when the peace of the world is set.

When the war is over no country will be able to improve the well-being of its people without our help. Peace will be almost meaningless without betterment of daily existence. In that crisis Uncle Sam will show himself to be neither profligate nor parsimonious. He will be fair, and that means to himself as well as to others. I have no economic radar to penetrate the future, but we can make it what we will it to be. Of that I am sure.

In assessing our position, let us remember that great as our physical strengths are, they are made even greater by the fact that our spiritual armor is untarnished by self-gain; all our steps toward self-protection are steps to save the world—to bring peace to all nations of good-will.

America has never forgotten—and will never forget—the nobler thing that brought her into being and that light her path—the path that was entered upon only 150 years ago—a little more than twice my own age. How young she is. It will be centuries before she will adopt that maturity of custom—the clothing of the grave—that some people believe she is already fitted for.

FIGHTING WITH HIGH PURPOSE

Our people are hard bitten. They owe only to themselves what they have, but, somehow, they have always preserved the chivalry and idealism that others mistakenly assume is softness.

Soft? Who dares say that? Have we not fought whenever the test showed that fighting meant national existence and self-respect? When did we ever fail to fight? And when did we ever fight without high purpose, with one possible exception?

I see the leaven of time at work. The precepts of the great Woodrow Wilson are bearing fruit. Both of the major parties have consecrated themselves to the principle of international cooperation and force. This may have the effect, as has been said, of "taking the peace out of politics and politics out of the peace." That is the way it should be.

Today we are deep in war, where we shall be for some time to come. We can survive only through victory, and that will come by tensing every muscle on the job and by making every effort of spirit. Then, with the vista of peace before us, a peace which we shall make beautiful—or distort—we will have the contentment that comes from duty well done, or the contempt of failure.

In another day, Cicero said the proudest boast a man could utter was "Civis Romanus sum" (I am a Roman citizen). It is my prayer that our conduct may always be such as to carry greater praise in the accolade: "I am an American."

One last word. Some ask why we fight? This is my answer: We fight for

"Ancient rights, unnoticed as the breath we draw,
Leave to live by no man's leave, underneath the law."

My thanks again.

The Great Surplus

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN J. COCHRAN
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, again I am calling attention to the disposition of surplus property which must be disposed of by the Government. There is a tremendous amount of surplus property available now, and it is my contention that those in charge of disposing of this property should lose no time in getting it on the market. First, if it is sold now, the Government will not in any way be interfering with business because the commodities are not available on the open market. On the other hand, there is a tremendous demand for such commodities. As you are aware, the agency in control of surplus property is now operating under an Executive order. The President waited a very long time for the Congress to provide proper legislation for the disposal of surplus property before he issued his Executive order.

The House passed a bill in the last session of Congress that had to do with the disposition of surplus property. Extensive hearings were held by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. That bill has been in the Senate and seems to be peacefully sleeping. I have urged time and again that the Senate consider the House bill, even if it does nothing else but strike out everything after the enacting clause and substitute new language. If that is done, the bill can go to conference, the question will be wide open, and the conferees should be able to write a satisfactory measure for the consideration of both bodies.

No less than seven committees of the House have from time to time taken up the question of surplus property. Jurisdiction properly lies with the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to handle this matter. Situations have developed since the passage of the House bill that warrant many amendments; but, as I said, if the Senate will pass the bill, the conferees can iron out the disagreements without trouble.

A timely editorial on this subject appears in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch; and under the leave granted me, I include it as part of my remarks. It follows:

THE GREAT SURPLUS

Creation of an advisory board, in legislation pending in Congress, would carry the Surplus Property Administration to a fairly well advanced stage in the setting up of machinery for the most gigantic selling job any nation has ever attempted, but not as much can be said for the setting up of policies.

When and how is the extent of surplus in every one of the great number of items to be determined? Is the small manufacturer to have a chance at the enormous plants and the enormous amounts of equipment the Government has on hand? Is the small retailer to be allowed to compete on equal terms with big business for consumer goods? Will sales be by bid or by fixed price? Will the Government explore every method of making continuing use of its war factories—by lease and by Federal operation as well as by sale?

These and other major policy determinations are even more important than matters of machinery. So much, at least, we learned from the unbusinesslike way in which we disposed of the surplus left from the First World War. Then, there was only too much machinery for doing the job. Failures occurred, to an overwhelming extent, on points of policy. The Government never made up its mind what was to be done, or when or how it was to be done.

Surplus stocks in 1918 amounted to $6,000,000,000. Because of our vague and vacillating national policy concerning them, they were handled with tremendous waste and delay. Yet, they represented 22 percent of the whole cost of the war to our Nation.

The surplus that will be left from this immeasurably greater war has been estimated at amounts varying from twenty-five to one hundred fifty billions. It will be so big as to give the Government an alternative of accomplishing almost the impossible or of making a mess of things for which we shall continue to pay for many years to come.

Some of the surplus will be useless for peacetime purposes. A great deal of it will be not only useful but direly needed, in our country and in many other countries. Upon our manner of putting it to use will depend, in large measure, the health or illness of our productive economy in the years after the war—the ability of industry to produce and find markets and earn profits and, above all, to employ people.

The Government will have airplanes and army trucks and jeeps to put to peacetime uses, aluminum and rubber and steel manufacturing plants, merchant vessels, shoes, clothing, blankets, cots, food, and virtually every other thing required either for peace or war.

Shall we muddle through again as we did after 1918? The costs of muddle-headedness a quarter-century ago were heavy.

We sold $750,000,000 worth of armaments to the French Government for $400,000,000, and, unpaid for, it rusted and was ruined on the fields of northern France. Fifty-two thousand bales of cotton rotted for a year in the rain and sun at Nitro, W. Va. Eleven thousand Army cars, some of them never uncrated, were exposed for a year at Baltimore.

Two years after the war was over the Army still had 3,000,000 wool coats, 2,000,000 leather jerkins, 6,000,000 flannel shirts, 1,000,000 woolen trousers. Six years after the armistice, $100,000,000 of surplus was still unsold and unused.

These failures were largely failures of policy. The automobiles abandoned in the elements were left to ruin because—according to the only explanation ever given—someone in control was ordered by someone else not to sell them.

The lesson of the First World War surplus is clear: We must have surplus-disposal policies. They must be clearly defined. They must be conceived and executed with courage. They must be brought into existence, and into action, now.

As We See It

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. E. C. GATHINGS
OF ARKANSAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by W. Fred McCollum from the Forest City (Ark.) Times Herald of May 16, 1944:

AS WE SEE IT
(By the Editor)

Added to the other agitation for "equal rights" for Negroes is the question of their voting in the Democratic primaries of the Southland. A recent Supreme Court decision has apparently granted to them this right. If they are fully qualified Democratic voters, the Court may have ruled correctly. If they are not, they have no more right to vote in a Democratic primary than any other member of any other party. They have never been denied the right to vote in general elections.

Because we are a sincere friend of the Negro race, we are writing today with them as our subject in our column. We would suggest to those who clamor loudest for the "equal rights" privilege, that the question is not one of racial color alone. Many white people do not have "equal rights," either socially, economically, or politically, with others of their own race. Unfortunate as it may be, this is undeniably true. After having been expounded for more than 1,900 years, the golden rule has not yet been accepted as the standard of living, and we have not yet accepted the statement that "I am my brother's keeper."

It may be hard-boiled, but the facts are that most of us, both white and black, get what we deserve out of this life. Fortunately for some of us, our treatment is even better than we deserve; rarely is it worse.

As to the matter of voting in our elections, we seriously question that it would be advantageous to the large body of Negroes as a whole to have this occur at this time. As most of us know, many of our so-called politicians are long on promises and short on performance. They depend upon fooling the electorate with high-sounding phrases and glib words; then when once firmly seated in the saddle of authority of the position to which they are elected they immediately "sell out" the interests of their constituents for selfish gain, and, so to speak, actually prey upon the ones who elevated them to office. In the case of the Negro as a voter, many of them would not be able to determine the good from the evil, and the selfish and scheming conniver could sway them to his own selfish plan, and in the end penalize them and their white friends alike.

We would rather suggest to our colored friends a parallel civilization alongside of ours, rather than what some strangers to the two races suggest. With better educational facilities becoming available both to the white and to the colored, better opportunities are being offered for both to carve out their own destinies and to have more to do in shaping the particular pattern these destinies may follow.

Look around you here in St. Francis County. You see members of the Negro race prospering and enjoying the fruits of their labor. They own some of the best farm land in the county; they fill professional positions; they own rental property—and none deny to them the fruit of their labors.

"Equal rights" is no magic formula that can be conferred by any legislation or any so-called social reformer. Equal rights are the fruits of long years of honest labor.

In this connection, we would urge our Negro leaders to advise our colored people as to who are their friends, as proven by the years past, years that have been filled with common disasters and common periods of depression and of prosperity. Some of the agitators come from areas in the United States where the Negro population residing there have been abused the most. Very few of them have ever studied the Negro mind and manner of reasoning. They are foreigners to you and you to them. Far too many of them have a "dues collecting" angle to their work they say is being done solely in your behalf.

We have always felt, and we are still of the opinion that the white man of the South is better acquainted with the Negro, is sincerely more concerned about his problems and their solution, and can aid him more in advancement than can any individual or group whose motives are directed either by selfishness or ignorance, or both.

We hope this expression will be received in the spirit in which it is written—and that it may serve in a small way to help both our white and colored friends solve their problems. After all, it seems to us that most of them are mutual problems of equal concern to both races. We are certain they can be solved more satisfactorily by our working together than they can by any distinct outsiders.

Can the Government Discharge 3,000,000 of Its Employees, or 2,000,000, or 1,000,000, or Any Large Number, and Continue to Function Efficiently in War Effort and Domestic Matters?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WRIGHT PATMAN
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, in recent months it has become a common practice for certain enthusiastic writers and speakers to hold up their hands in horror and bemoan what they term to be the tremendous growth of a great bureaucracy and a political machine which they say has fastened itself in a permanent fashion upon the American people. I do not believe that one unnecessary Government employee should be permitted to remain on the Government pay roll, but we cannot dismiss them without doing so in an intelligent way, and in a way not to cripple efficient Government service.

These charges have naturally aroused my curiosity. To determine their validity or lack of basis, I have sought information from what I believe to be a qualified and unbiased source of information—the United States Civil Service Commission.

This is what I find:

In March 1944, 63 percent of all Federal employees in this country, a total of 1,791,000 civilian employees, were working in field establishments of the War and Navy Departments. These civilian Federal employees were all engaged in performing services directly related to the war program and were engaged in industrial work concerned with war production, construction, storage, distribution, supply, communication, inspection, testing, repair service, and other related war activities which are the direct functions of the War and Navy Departments.

In addition to the above civilian employees, 419,111 other civilians were employed at that time by the War and Navy Departments in March. The breakdown on these other essential employees was as follows:

Those employed in departmental headquarters' offices of both War and Navy Departments in this country	65,111
Those employed outside the continental limits of the United States:
By the War Department	288,600
By the Navy Department	75,800
Total	419,111

This means that, in March 1944, 2,210,511 of all of the civilian employees of the Federal Government were employed by either the War or the Navy Departments on matters directly connected with the war program.

For anyone to assume that these employees in these two vital departments are part of a great political machine which has fastened itself upon the American people is nothing short of ridiculous, in my opinion. What do these critics think is required in terms of employment to do this job of winning this war? Do they propose that the officials of the War and Navy Departments stand idly by and attempt to perform all of the vital services for which civilian as well as uniformed labor is required with only that skeleton organization of peacetime employees regularly employed by those two departments in times of peace? Should they take that attitude and not increase their working staffs just for fear that they might be criticized and accused of building up a political machine? Is that what Secretary Stimson and General Marshall are doing—building a political machine by hiring these extra civilians? I, for one, resent the implication and classify it as unpatriotic, to speak mildly.

The record shows that on March 31, 1944, 180,731 civilians were employed in what are known as our emergency war agencies. This constituted less than 5½ percent of all known Federal employees at that time; 173,831 of these persons were employed in this country, 6,900 were employed abroad.

The record shows that in June 1939, the Post Office Department employed 288,979 persons. In March 1944, that department employed 348,076 persons, an increase certainly justifiable in view of the added load of wartime mail.

In June 1939, the old line nonemergency agencies had 436,045 employees. In March 1944, in the midst of war, they had 471,348 employees. Surely this increase is more than justified by wartime loads which have added to the burden of these regular agencies. A substantial part of these are employed by the Veterans Administration.

I just wonder if these critics would have preferred that the Government should only have permitted the War and Navy Departments to have added to their essential employees through enlistment or through Selective Service and would have preferred that these additional employees only be recruited into the service of these departments as uniformed soldiers and sailors at the prevailing wage scale of uniformed personnel. The answer to that is obvious.

I feel that we should be fair in these matters and if persons are going to decry the admitted increase in Federal civilian employment, I hope they will take full cognizance of the duties which have been assigned to these wartime employees and not imply that there is no patriotic justification for their services.

Submitted herewith is a letter from the Honorable Harry B. Mitchell, President of the United States Civil Service Commission, which contains the official figures upon which I have based the above remarks:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., May 24, 1944.

Hon. WRIGHT PATMAN,
Congress of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following information on Federal employment in March 1944 is provided in accordance with your verbal request of May 15.

Paid civilian employment in the United States totaled 2,839,366 in all executive departments and agencies combined as of March 31, 1944. Of this number, 1,193,641 were in the War Department; 652,470 in the Navy Department; 172,831 in emergency war agencies; 348,076 in the Post Office Department; and 471,348 in all other departments and agencies. These figures do not include 285,000 persons serving without compensation or at the nominal compensation of $1 per year or per month—90 percent of these are local board members of the Office of Price Administration and Selective Service. Also these figures do not include approximately 415,000 persons who are employed outside continental United States.

Of the 2,839,366 Federal employees, a total of 1,791,000 civilian employees, or 63 percent, were working in field establishments of the War and Navy Departments throughout all sections of the country. These civilian workers were performing services directly related to the war program and were engaged in industrial types of work concerned with war production, construction, storage, distribution, supply, communication, inspection, testing, repair service, and other related war activities. (This figure excludes all civilian employees in departmental headquarters' offices of the War and Navy Departments but includes all workers in these field establishments regardless of whether performing white-collar, mechanical, or manual work.)

A break-down of the 1,791,000 civilian employees reported in field establishments of these two Departments, according to type of work, is as follows:

Approximately 349,400 were employed in Government navy yards building battleships, submarines, cruisers, and other naval craft as well as performing repair and service work on naval vessels.

Approximately 84,100 were engaged in naval procurement activities concerned with supply and maintenance work, and the inspection of naval machinery, ordnance, aircraft, and material.

Approximately 51,600 were employed in naval ammunition depots, torpedo stations, and other naval ordnance plants.

Approximately 71,800 were employed at the naval air stations and reserve aviation bases.

Approximately 22,800 were in naval training stations, reception and induction centers, and other field personnel activities.

Approximately 51,700 employees were engaged in miscellaneous naval activities, such as hospitals, medical supply depots, dispensaries, operating bases, proving grounds, research, etc., including civilian personnel in Marine Corps and Coast Guard.

Civilian employees in various operating activities of the Army Air Forces were distributed as follows: 176,300, Air Service Command; 34,700, Materiél Command; 59,600, Training Command; 13,500, Air Transport Command; 35,900, First, Second, Third, and Fourth Air Forces; 10,000, all other commands, stations, and centers.

Approximately 330,100 were in service commands of the Army Service Forces.

Civilian employees in the technical services of the Army Services Forces concerned with such activities as the manufacturing, storage, and distribution of tanks, guns, bombs, bullets, and other material; construction, repair, and maintenance of utilities; procurement of munitions of war and related work were distributed as follows: 25,200, chemical warfare; 78,700, engineers; 8,500, medical; 170,500 ordnance; 74,200, quartermaster; 46,700, signal; 76,800, transportation; 17,000, miscellaneous.

Approximately 1,900 were in miscellaneous services.

It should be noted that these figures include all civilian employees working in field establishments in the above categories of work and represent, therefore, an industrial or actively classification as distinguished from an occupational distribution of employment. Only a small proportion of such workers in the above categories was working in the Washington, D. C., metropolitan area.

The attached table provides a comparison of the number of Federal employees and their distribution among war and other agencies at the end of March 1944, November 1941, and June 1939.

If we can be of further assistance to you, please do not hesitate to call upon us.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY B. MITCHELL, President.

Amendments to the Price Control Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HOWARD J. McMURRAY
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a speech on the subject of amendments to the Price Control Act which I broadcast over the Columbia Broadcasting System on Saturday, May 20, 1944:

Everyone favors the extension of the Price Control Act. No one would dare to oppose its extension while the Nation faces the greatest dangers of inflation in its history. Nobody can openly advocate knocking down our defenses against economic chaos or permitting industry, landlords or agriculture to profiteer out of the war. Nobody will openly accept responsibility for creating an enormous national debt, required to finance an inflationary war-production program, with its crushing burden to present and future taxpayers.

For these reasons, one never hears anyone suggest that the Price Control Act should be permitted to expire. The actual proposals now before Congress all relate to amendments, to changes in the provisions of the act—sometimes the change of a single word. All these proposals are made by people who declare that they are strongly in favor of price control during this emergency, "but * * *" These "buts" are what the American people must watch, for they may mean the difference between effective price control and a mere sham battle against inflation. I want to discuss a few of these "we want price control, but" amendments, in order to bring home to the American people the fact that freedom from inflation, like freedom in general, requires the vigilance of all citizens and their representatives.

Before looking at the proposed amendments, let's look at the record, to judge the effectiveness of the act as it now stands. We will see then why any proposal to alter the present act and the policies which have been followed under it should be greeted with great skepticism. The stabilization program has worked, and when any program so difficult is working it should not be disturbed except for very strong cause.

Most of you remember that during the last war the cost of living rose by 65 percent before the armistice was signed and by 106 percent—more than double its 1944 level—before the inflation ran its course and we tumbled into deflation and depression. In this war, by contrast, the cost of living has risen only about 25 percent, and over the last full year, since the President's hold-the-line order was issued, it has been held absolutely stable. Industrial materials—the things we pay for with our taxes and War bonds in the form of tanks, ships, planes, and guns—rose in price by 165 percent during the inflation of the last war, but have risen by only 22 percent since this war began in 1939. Steel plates for our ships and heavy equipment rose in price by 700 percent in the last war. In this war their prices have been held absolutely stable.

Think what this has meant to you as consumers and as taxpayers. It is reliably estimated that the cost of war munitions and construction would have been some $65,000,000,000 greater since our defense program began if we had had to pay for them at World War No. 1 inflated prices. An additional $22,000,000,000 has been saved by American people as consumers. That is, if the goods and services you have consumed since June 1940 had risen as much in price as they did during the comparable period of the last war they would have cost all of you combined an extra $22,000,000,000. A program which has already saved Americans more than $65,000,000,000 as taxpayers and $22,000,000,000 as consumers should not lightly be scuttled by "but" amendments.

But, say those who seek to amend the act: What about production? Has not our price-control program been at the expense of industrial and farm production? Shouldn't we ease up on control to insure full-blast production?

When you look at the facts it is pretty evident that, far from stifling production, the stability of costs and prices which the stabilization program has provided has enabled industry and agriculture to achieve the most remarkable production records this country has ever known. Industrial production has risen about 130 percent over the course of this war. In the last war it rose by only about 25 percent at the peak and slumped in 1918 and 1919 when inflation really got going. Farm production in the last war rose about 5 percent. In this war, despite the great difficulties agriculture has had to face, it has risen about 21 percent. What accounts for these differences? I think it is safe to say that a good part of it is explained by the fact that the disorganization which always accompanies inflation was present in the last war and not in this—thanks to our stabilization program.

Have these results been achieved only at the expense of reasonable profits for industry and the farmer? Some would think so if they listened to those who want to change the Price Control Act in one way or another. I think you will know by looking around you that this is not true. But here are some facts: The profits of American industry in 1943, even after war taxes, were 156 percent above the average for the 4 years immediately preceding the war. Almost every branch of industry shared in these gains and no important branch has fallen short of peacetime levels. Business failures were at an all-time low in 1943. Most small businesses, from all indications, were doing just as well as the larger ones in their industries. Consider food stores: In 1939 small independents did about 68 percent of the total business. In 1943 they got a larger share—about 67 percent.

Farmers, in general, have also prospered under the present Price Control Act. In 1940 American farmers' net income, after all operating costs, was slightly more than $4,500,000,000; in 1942 their net income reached $10,000,000,000; in 1943 it rose further to almost $13,000,000,000. The highest previous level of net farm income was less than $9,000,000,000—in 1919—when the farm dollar brought much less than it does now.

The income of landlords operating under rent control has likewise shown an advance over peacetime. The average increase in net operating income for a large number of apartment houses under rent control by O. P. A. was about 27 percent between 1939 and 1943. The average increase for 10,000 small dwellings was about 44 percent.

Keep all these facts in mind when you hear that the Price Control Act should be amended.

Now let's look at some of the amendments which are being considered in the committees of Congress. More than 100 have already been proposed. I can deal with only a few, which will fairly represent the whole lot. They all have one thing in common. They would weaken our inflation controls and lead, directly or indirectly, to higher prices. These amendments can be divided into three broad groups. First, those which attack the principles used in setting or adjusting ceiling prices or rents; second, those which would weaken the enforcement of the act by technical or procedural changes; and third, that large number which looks for special favor for some group or other.

First, the attacks on pricing principles. My sample will illustrate that the mere changing of a word here or there may mask a destructive attack upon the whole program. At present the Price Control Act requires that ceiling prices be "generally fair and equitable." One of the proposed amendments is to strike the word "generally" and leave the words "fair and equitable." What difference could this make? Well, it is quite clear from what its advocates say that this proposal is meant to require ceiling prices which will insure that every last seller, no matter how inefficient, unlucky, or unfavorably situated, will make a profit. This amendment means, first, that the ceiling price will have to be fixed so high that most of his competitors will reap extortionate profits, since, in general, the price must be the same for all sellers of a given commodity. Secondly, it would amount to a guaranty of profits under the guise of maximum price control designed to protect buyers in wartime when competition no longer operates effectively. Such a guaranty has no precedent in peacetime, when competition fixes prices at which many firms, for one reason or another, make losses. Thirdly, it amounts to cost-plus pricing, since the ceiling would have to be raised as the costs of the high-cost producers rose. It would thus encourage inefficiency, waste, and spiralling costs, and, of course, would mean spiralling prices. No wartime price control act in history ever sought to apply such a self-defeating principle. Even in World War No. 1, when our price control was pretty lax, prices were fixed at fair levels for the bulk of the industry and it was up to the individual producer to conduct his business enterprise to keep within those limits.

A second basic principle in our present price control is that prices should not be raised if the earnings of an industry substantially exceed its peacetime earnings, adjusted, of course, for any increased investment. In other words, higher profits made from increased business volume, the streamlining of production, or reductions in selling or other costs should provide a cushion against those costs which do increase, and prices should not be raised unless, on balance, normal earnings are threatened. This is not only fair and equitable; it is imperative if the cost-of-living line is to be held. Yet many are those who would amend the act to require O. P. A. to raise a price whenever any element of cost increases, even though profits may still be inflated. Some want prices adjusted upward on a cost-plus percentage basis, thus actually increasing prices and profits whenever costs rise. The only grounds put forth for such cost-plus pricing is the slogan, "O. P. A. should control prices, not profits." As if one can fix a fair price without considering the net return which the buyer is asked to give the seller. Clearly the test of a fair price in wartime is a reasonable yield.

Similar proposals are made for raising rents in defense areas.

Some short-sighted representatives of farmers propose to alter the time-honored principle of parity for fixing ceiling prices on agricultural products. The argument for this is usually that wage rates have risen since the parity base date back in 1910–14. The proposal ignores the facts that labor costs affect various farm products very differently and that increases of productivity and reductions in unit costs of producing many farm products have far more than offset the increased costs due to higher farm wages. It blandly ignores the astonishing increase in net farm income after all expenses, including labor, which I have already mentioned.

I think most farmers will agree that their prices are already high enough. I think they also realize that the loosening of our inflation controls will raise the cost of the things they buy, including farm labor, and result in a severe post-war agricultural depression, leaving them in a prostrate condition similar to that after the last war.

Such "but" amendments aimed at present pricing principles would destroy the very basis of our stabilization program.

But it is not necessary to attack basic pricing principles to cripple the program. It would be done as certainly by amendments affecting administration, procedure, and enforcement. Let me mention a few of these.

There are, for example, proposals that O. P. A. must follow the methods recommended by industry in setting its ceilings. In other words, real authority over ceiling prices would pass from Congress, the Chief Executive and their appointed agents to representatives of each industry. O. P. A. now consults industry. But this proposal to let industry make its own rules is going too far. Similar proposals ask for a much greater voice for trade associations in regulating prices. This country, I am sure, does not want its prices fixed by trade associations or cartels.

There are other procedural amendments, such as to prevent consumers from suing for triple damages or $50 when overcharged, or reducing the fine which manufacturers and wholesalers must pay for overcharges from triple the amount to little more than the excess they have charged. Another proposal would restrict the publication of ceiling prices where, as in food stores, ceiling prices differ as between chains and independents. These are examples of how technical amendments might destroy the actual effectiveness of price control.

The strongest attack along these lines, however, is against the court review provisions of the act. Under the act, a business which objects to its ceiling price must first protest to the Administrator, and, if the protest is not granted, take its appeal to a special court of judges appointed by the Chief Justice of our Supreme Court. It can appeal from there to the Supreme Court itself. Lower Federal courts and State courts are prohibited from entertaining his complaint or enjoining enforcement of the price regulations.

The purposes of this procedure are to prevent lack of uniformity in enforcement of price control throughout the country; to set up an orderly procedure for adjustment of prices; to insure that the courts which consider price-control cases will understand the problems with which they deal; and, finally, to expedite final appeal to the Supreme Court. The emergency nature of price control in wartime requires such procedure. If any lower court anywhere in this country could strike down price regulations at any time, it would simply be impossible to make control effective. Those who argue that the Emergency Court of Appeals is too distant overlook the fact that it can and does sit in every part of the country and gives prompt consideration to all cases. This legal limitation upon business is a very small price for the protection which effective stabilization provides.

I come finally to those amendments which seek special favor for special groups, those which say in effect, "Yes, I want effective price control, but I deserve exception. The prices I pay should be firmly controlled but those I charge should be higher."

Some producers want their products exempted from control on the grounds they are luxuries. Their products are unimportant, they say, regulation is irritating, and O. P. A. should concentrate on essentials. Why cannot such a line of distinction be drawn?

In the first place, who is to define a luxury? In the second place, these products compete with necessities for plant facilities, raw materials and labor. If prices for luxuries could rise without limit while prices of necessities were controlled, much bigger profits could be earned by producing luxuries, and production of goods vital to the war effort and civilian needs would suffer at the expense of nonessential goods. Exemption of luxuries would also be unfair discrimination. Dealers in luxuries could make a killing while the prices and therefore the profits of those who produce the things we really need would be restricted by government action. These are the reasons why the scope of O. P. A. control must be left, as at present, to administrative discretion

A number of industries would set up special standards or procedures for regulating their prices, while leaving the standards applied to other groups unchanged. Oil producers, for example, want Congress to legislate a price increase of 75 cents per barrel, and want oil prices to be fixed to bear the same relationship to other wholesale prices as in 1926, almost 20 years ago. This is proposed despite the fact that earnings of oil producers are at record highs, that 1926 price relationships bear no necessary relation to present costs and, therefore, to fair prices, and that the principle of adjusting every price upward to the average would, by continually raising the average, lead to a continuous spiral of inflation.

Cotton textile mills want their prices fixed on a parity price for raw cotton, even though the price the mills actually pay is below this and raising textile prices could not possibly raise the price of cotton to farmers under present surplus cotton conditions. The textile industry also wants, on top of this, a separate cost-plus factor for manufacturing expense on every single kind of textile product they produce, plus what they call a reasonable profit on each. At present some textile prices are much more profitable than others, although all of them adequately cover cost for the great bulk of producers. The slimmer profits made on some types of textiles are more than compensated by very high profits made on others. As a result, profits of 148 cotton textile mills have risen by more than 800 percent before taxes and by 288 percent after taxes, between the years 1936-39 and 1943. There is obviously no injustice being done to textile producers, and the present pricing system is helping hold the line in the very difficult wartime clothing situation.

These are outstanding examples of the "special favor" amendments. Somewhat similar ones are being asked for by miscalled representatives of dairy farmers and cattlemen, by growers of certain vegetables, and by some retail trades. The general standards of the act protect all consumers, all taxpayers, all farmers, and all businessmen, by protecting the economic future of this country. We must not let them be undermined by "everybody but me" amendments.

In conclusion, keep your eye on the amendments to the act. Chester Bowles, O. P. A. Administrator and Judge Vinson, the men who have the tough job of administering price control, testify from experience that the act is good as it stands, and they oppose any weakening of its provisions. The records bear them out. The Secretaries of War and Navy and the Chairman of the War Production Board also want the act extended without any weakening. Even the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce asks the Congress to reject all amendments that would directly or indirectly have the effect of raising prices during the war. In this he is accurately reflecting the long-run interests of American business as a whole, rather than the short-run interests of special business groups. It is clear that even a few of the proposed amendments would cripple its effectiveness. I urge all citizens to protest against these "price control but" amendments, and thus help insure our safety from inflation.

What the Tennessee-Tombigbee Inland Waterway Means to the Northwest

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. RANKIN

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, after hearing Gen. Thomas M. Robins, Assistant Chief Army Engineers, and other experts, answer the arguments of the opposition, the Senate Commerce Committee has restored the Tennessee-Tombigbee Inland Waterway project to the river and harbor bill, by an overwhelming vote.

The argument presented by General Robins was simply unanswerable. He is not only Assistant Chief of Engineers, but he is one of the ablest men who has ever occupied that position. He was on the Board that made the original report recommending this project, and forcibly sustained that recommendation in his statement before the committee.

General Robins said that if the Army Engineers were to assure the Congress that they could provide a slack water route up the Mississippi River to Cairo with the amount it will cost to construct this Tennessee-Tombigbee Inland Waterway, "You would all stand up and cheer." Yet, he said, this Tennessee-Tombigbee Inland Waterway would do that very thing—and more. That it would provide a slack water route up the Tombigbee to the Tennessee River, and a downstream route from there to Cairo, and at the same time save the swift current on the Mississippi for downstream traffic.

Now come people from the Northwest and point out what this barge traffic means to the farmers of that section of the country. Mr. L. R. McKee, of Muscatine, Iowa, says:

We have noted from time to time that some Members of Congress have expressed their opinion that the farmers and the producers of grain along the interior water-ways do not receive the benefit of low water transportation. No statement can be farther from the truth. The farmer does and is at this time receiving the benefit of lower rates on corn from this district to southern points.

The Government itself acknowledges that the farmer is receiving the benfits because at the present time we have a ceiling price at Muscatine delivered on barge of $1.14¼ for No 2 yellow corn and we are paying today to the producer $1.11¾. The price which we receive, namely, $1.14¼ is applicable only to water shipment. It we were to sell by rail we could only receive $1.1.07⅝ and the bid to the producer would be $1.05⅛. Therefore, at this very moment the farmer is receiving 6⅝¢ more per bushel for his grain at Muscatine than he would receive if it weren't for river transportation.

If the Senators or other interested parties desire to check up on this, refer them to Second Revised Maximum Price Regulation 346 which was effective as of February 21, 1944.

We shipped the first barge of corn from Muscatine on the Mississippi on the completion of the 9-foot channel and there has never been a year when water transportation was open but what we were bidding from 4 cents to 8 cents a bushel more for corn than we could have paid if this grain was shipped by rail.

We believe the information given above will dispel any doubts in the mind of any reasonable person that the farmer or producer does receive the benefits of the water rates.

You will note that Mr. McKee says that in shipping grain to the South these barge lines enable them to pay the farmers from 4 cents to 8 cents a bushel more for their corn.

If this Tennessee-Tombigbee inland waterway is provided, so that those barges can return by this slack water route for about 50 percent of what it now costs them to return against the swift current of the Mississippi, it will further add to the price the farmers of that section may receive for their grain, and when the 9-foot channel is provided to Omaha and Sioux City, it will further extend the benefits of this cheap transportation.

Mr. J. O. McClintock, of the Continental Grain Co., Chicago, has this to say:

The writer is very much interested in the outcome of the pending legislation of the rivers and harbors bill and the flood-control legislation. This interest reaches back to the producers in the territory tributary to the Illinois, Mississippi, and lower Missouri Valley.

We wish to oppose any legislation now that would tend to limit the navigation possibilities that now exist on the streams above referred to. There is no question but what the producers have received substantial benefits from cheap water transportation that has been available on these rivers for the past several years.

The writer has engaged extensively in the development of water transportation from the movement of grain out of the Illinois Valley into Chicago and distributing it into eastern consuming territories, and has some familiarity with the advantages accruing to the origin areas. There is one area along the Illinois River, not over 75 miles in length and not over an average of 50 miles in width, that has been developed more extensively than any similar area along the inland waterways. Due to the cheapness of water transportation into Chicago, there has during the past 5 years been a sum of money (at least $3,000,000) left in the communities above described that would not have remained there had this same community been obliged to depend only on rail transportation.

Three million dollars saved to a community of this size is a creditable sum. This sum of money is more than the combined capital stock of all the State and National banks in the same area. It represents the value of one hundred and fifty $20,000 farms; it would build a fine agricultural college or a fine hospital, and subsequent annual savings would likely maintain such institutions.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, that entire area benefits vastly from the use of this great inland waterway, and will benefit immeasurably more when this slack-water route is provided for the upstream traffic.

From Kansas City, Mo., Mr. Paul F Bartlett, president, Hart-Bartlett-Sturtevant Grain Co., writes:

We are prompted to write you thinking that our experience in handling grain may be of some interest. Our firm operates two terminal grain elevators, one of 3,000,000-bushel capacity located in Kansas City, Kans.; the other of 2,500,000 capacity at St. Joseph, Mo. In adition, we operate country elevators in 5 States in the Middle West Grain Belt. In the writer's opinion, when and if a 9-foot channel is provided on the Missouri, it will not be at all unusual for a producer who sells his grain to a country elevator equipped and able to load and transport grain on barges, to receive from two to five cents per bushel more than he otherwise could.

As I have pointed out before, the opposition to this great inland waterway is coming from certain railroad interests that have fought every project for the development of an inland waterway that has ever been proposed. The following statement by the Mississippi Valley Association will explain that opposition:

Our records show that in the years 1941–43, 5,203,700 bushels of grain and grain products were shipped by water from Kansas City to Chicago, St. Louis and other points on the Mississippi River system, although the movement was greatly curtailed in 1942 and 1943 due to the transfer of barges to other waterways for emergency war use. The comparative rates for water and rail representative destinations, and the savings when shipped by water are as follows:

From—	To—	Water	Rail	Savings per car of 80,000 pounds
		Cts. per cwt.	Cts. per cwt.
Kansas City	St. Louis	4¼	12	$62.00
Do	Chicago	9½	16	52.00
Do	Vicksburg	12¾	21½	74.00

If the 1941–1943 water movement of grain from Kansas City were equally divided between St. Louis, Chicago, and Vicksburg, the saving in freight rates would have amounted to $244,562.

What is true with reference to the shipment of grain, is also true with reference to the shipment of beef, pork, flour, meal, cheese, condensed milk, hides, oil, gas, machinery, and all other manufactured products.

Every barge that goes downstream must return, and by the development of this Tennessee-Tombigbee Inland Waterway, the cost of that return trip will be reduced approximately 50 percent; while at the same time the swift current on the Mississippi, Missouri, and other rivers for downstream traffic will be preserved.

I again call your attention to the statement of Colonel Feringa of the Board of Army Engineers, and ask you to examine the figures at the close of his statement showing the amount of savings this inland waterway will provide for upstream traffic.

The matter referred to follows:

STATEMENT OF COL. P. A. FERINGA, UNITED STATES ARMY, RESIDENT MEMBER, BOARD OF ENGINEERS FOR RIVERS AND HARBORS

Colonel FERINGA. Is it your wish that I just go ahead and briefly describe the project, like the other projects?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; if you will.

Colonel FERINGA. The Tombigbee River rises in northeastern Mississippi. The point where it rises is about 20 miles from the Tennessee River. It flows in a generally southerly direction for about 410 miles until it joins the Alabama River, and from its confluence with the Alabama River it becomes the Mobile River and flows to the south 45 miles to enter Mobile Bay.

The Mobile-Tombigbee-Warrior system is a more or less parallel developed river system serving Birmingham. It is a developed waterway 9 feet deep, minimum width 200 feet. I looked up the latest figures before us and I found that in 1941 that developed waterway carried over 2,000,000 tons of commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, which one was that?

Colonel FERINGA. That is the Mobile-Tombigbee-Warrior system. I thought the figure would be interesting as the actual figure of traffic that is moving over an existing waterway generally in that area, although possibly it is not as fortunately situated.

The Tombigbee River itself has 4 feet of water from its confluence with the Alabama River to Columbus, Miss.

However, that 4 feet is available only about 4 months of the year. That again, is a waterway which is hindered by the lack of all-year-round water.

The Tombigbee is further developed slightly, just by snagging and removing of obstructions, for the next 135 miles above Columbus, Miss., so that there presently exists a waterway from the Gulf through Mobile Bay, the Alabama River, the Tombigbee River above Columbus, Miss., to fairly close to the Tennessee River. That waterway farther up its length, though not developed, through its tributaries reaches within 20 miles of the developed Tennessee River. The basin, like the Alabama-Coosa River, is rich in resources. Foremost would be agriculture, and when I was stationed in that area not so many years ago, I was struck by the richness of the soil. It goes through parts of Alabama and Mississippi where some of the most prosperous looking farms are located that I had seen up to that time. They call that part of the country the Black Belt, and it is remarkable for its development. They have recently gotten much into cattle raising, and it is a wonderfully prosperous country.

Mr. RANKIN. It is called the Black Belt because the land is black?

Colonel FERINGA. That is right, sir. It is also rich in timber resources and in minerals. The principal minerals are coal, sand and gravel, limestone, copper, zinc, iron ore, and in addition to those principal minerals there is a long list in the report showing the lesser minerals that could be developed if it were economically feasible to do so.

Before this report was submitted to Congress, to your committee, several routes were given consideration in order to develop the best one and that there might be no hesitancy on account of lack of information. It was found that the best route was from the Pickwick Pool in the Tennessee River, then down Yellow Creek, which flows, or flowed originally, into the Tennessee River and now flows into the Pickwick Pool, and Mackys Creek—Mackys Creek flowing into the East Fork of the Tombigbee, down the Tombigbee into the Mobile River, and down the Mobile River to Mobile Bay and into the Gulf.

The construction contemplates a cut through the summit. That cut would be about 39 miles long and would provide a waterway 12 feet deep by a minimum width of 115 feet. I would like to mention the fact that, although this report was made some years ago, even at that time consideration was given and the figures which support this report were based on a 12-foot excavation through the cut, possibly the most expensive part of the work, and also through the lateral canal. That was done, as it was seen that 12-foot navigation probably would be a fact in the future, and that therefore any of these expensive cuts or locks should be developed to their logical dimensions.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Colonel, that 39-mile cut, how deep would that cut have to be made?

Colonel FERINGA. That is 39 miles long, and at its deepest portion, but a comparatively short portion, I think, would reach around 175 feet from the very top of the existing ground to the very bottom of the proposed canal.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the bottom of the 12-foot cut?

Colonel FERINGA. Of the 12-foot cut. And that canal would be dug deep enough so that we would have 12 feet of water throughout its length, even though the Pickwick Pool might be lowered, due to possible inordinate low stages of water in the Tennessee River.

The CHAIRMAN. Would the bottom of that cut be on a level with the pool, Pickwick Pool?

Colonel FERINGA. The bottom of the cut would be 12 feet below the lowest possible elevation in Pickwick Pool, so we would have slack water navigation from Pickwick Pool through the summit cut until we came to the dam and lock at the end of the summit cut.

The CHAIRMAN. Where would the first lock be down from Pickwick Landing?

Colonel FERINGA. The first lock would be at a high dam and lock which would be constructed at a location called the Narrows, and that would be on the southerly end of that land cut.

The CHAIRMAN. Of that 39 miles?

Colonel FERINGA. That is right, sir. After we go through the summit cut we come to a point where there now exists the east fork of the Tombigbee River.

Mr. RANKIN. Colonel, I think you ought to explain to the judge at this point that the bed of the Tennessee River at the mouth of Yellow Creek, where this cut begins, is more than 100 feet higher than the Tombigbee River 20 miles away, so while we must have a lake-level canal down to the first lock, there will be a drop of 100 feet down to the level of the Tombigbee. That is correct, isn't it?

Colonel FERINGA. Yes. I think so.

Mr. RANKIN. The Tennessee River is up on a plateau 100 feet above the Tombigbee just 20 miles away, but by cutting through this sand ridge, the peak of which you said would be a little over 100 feet—by cutting through this sand ridge the canal would be on a level with the Pickwick Lake from the Tennessee River at the mouth of Yellow Creek, down to the first lock, where it drops down to the level of the Tombigbee River.

Colonel FERINGA. That would be the high lock and dam. The proposed waterway would then join the present valley of the East Fork of the Tombigbee. The East Fork of the Tombigbee has a comparatively wide flood plain and is a tortuous, winding stream, so it has been found cheaper and in the interest of the project to dig a lateral canal rather than develop this tortuous part of the river. This lateral canal would be 41 miles long, again would be 12 feet deep, and a minimum width of 170 feet.

If I may, I would like to digress back to where I described the Narrows and say that that waterway, although narrow, 115 feet, would have passing places about every 4,000 feet, so that up- and down-bound tows would be able to negotiate the waterways successfully.

The CHAIRMAN. They can do that on 115 feet, cannot they, without difficulty?

Colonel FERINGA. I think they could, sir, but it might possibly be desirable to have a tow tie-up, and there would be passing places. I think it depends a whole lot on how wide the tows are, that will be carried. It was found better to have passing places available.

Mr. RANKIN. What width do you provide for these locks; 110 feet?

Colonel FERINGA. Seventy-five feet.

The CHAIRMAN. On the Intracoastal Waterway the channel width in some places is only 90 feet.

Colonel FERINGA. Yes, sir.

The lateral canal which I have been talking about would have at its lower portion one lock and dam at the mouth of East Fork, and the drop of the lateral canal to its southerly extremity would be accomplished by a series of 10 locks. From the lateral canal you go into the main stream of the Tombigbee River, which flows 211 miles to Demopolis. However, it is also a tortuous stream, and it is proposed by a series of cut-offs to reduce its length to 180 miles. This stream would be developed to 9-foot depth and 170-foot width. The locks, however, would provide for future improvement to the full 12 feet.

There is also proposed in the bill a new dam at Demopolis, and that dam would have a decidedly beneficial effect for this proposed project, and by means of that new dam at Demopolis and six other locks they would have slack-water navigation all the way up to where the Tombigbee joins the lateral canal.

The CHAIRMAN. Is Demopolis a place where the Tombigbee and the Black Warrior join?

Colonel FERINGA. Yes, sir. The total number of locks proposed for the project is 18. The locks would be 75 feet wide and 450 feet long. That is inside dimensions of the lock chamber.

The total cost of the project, which has been conservatively determined, is $66,000,000, and $500,000 for annual maintenance.

I think I have given you the over-all picture.

The CHAIRMAN. I think so; yes. Thank you very much, Colonel.

Mr. RANKIN. Colonel, this connection with the Tennessee and Tombigbee Rivers here would shorten the water distance from the Tennessee River to the Gulf of Mexico by 630 miles, would it not?

Colonel FERINGA. I think that is right, sir.

Mr. RANKIN. And it would shorten the distance from the Tennessee River to Mobile itself by approximately 1,000 miles?

Colonel FERINGA. The water distance; yes, sir.

Mr. RANKIN. In other words, traffic going from Mobile at the present time to the Tennessee River would have to go across to the Mississippi River and then up that tortuous stream to Cairo, Ill., and then go up the Ohio for a short distance and then up the Tennessee River. It would have to travel upstream on the Mississippi, the Ohio, and the Tennessee, and go approximately 1,000 miles out of the way, whereas, if this project were completed, it could go up, as you say, the slack-water route on the Tombigbee less than half the distance, and the fuel cost for propelling the barges, boats, and so forth, would be infinitely less than it would going around the other way.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, the water distance from the Tennessee River to Mobile down this Tombigbee inland waterway is about as far as it is from Vicksburg, Miss., to the mouth of the Mississippi River on the other route. So you can make those comparisons and see the vast difference it will make when this inland waterway is opened up. It will not only provide a shorter route, cut the distance for all downstream traffic on the upper Tennessee River as far up as Knoxville, and all traffic going upstream to points on the upper Tennessee by anywhere from 630 to 1,000 miles; but it would also save fighting this terrific current on the Mississippi. It would have the same effect on traffic going down this stream from the mouth of the Ohio River. It would save more than 200 miles in distance, and the up-bound traffic would probably save 50 percent of its fuel cost.

In other words, all the ascending traffic on the Ohio, the Tennessee, the Allegheny, the Monongahela, and the Wabash would use this inland slack-water route, and traffic going up even to Memphis, Tenn., from Mobile could much better afford to follow this slack-water route to the mouth of the Ohio River and then down the Mississippi to Memphis. There is only 8 miles difference in the distance of the two routes between Memphis and Mobile.

It would really be much cheaper for them to follow that route than it would to go up against the current of the Mississippi River to Memphis.

This would also furnish a protected inland water route and at the same time greatly shorten the distance from all these points, even from Pittsburgh, Pa., to the Gulf, by more than 200 miles, and it would also furnish an additional route for this traffic and furnish a slack-water route for the ascending traffic. It would be of untold advantage to the shippers who are bound to use those streams in the years to come.

Now, the engineers have gone over this proposition time and time again. There was a proposition to bring this route down what they call Bear Creek, which empties into the Tennessee River exactly on the line between Alabama and Mississippi, but it was found that in order to do so we would have to have a lift coming up to the top of the ridge from the north as well as one from the south, with no sufficient water supply at the summit.

Individuals appeared here to advocate cutting across from the Warrior River to the Tennessee, but they found it would be impractical because they would have to have lifts through that mountainous country in there, hilly country—they would have to have lifts from the Warrior River up to the crest of the ridge, and also would have to have lifts from the Tennessee up to the crest of the ridge——

The CHAIRMAN. Those routes have all been rejected.

Mr. RANKIN. And there was no water supply at the summit, but on this route your summit is in the Pickwick Lake, so you have ample water, all the water that is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. How high is Pickwick Landing Dam? Do you recall, Colonel?

Colonel FERINGA. I have seen it, but I don't know its height.

Mr. RANKIN. The Tennessee River, I will say to the chairman, was about 100 feet above the Tombigbee before the Pickwick Landing Dam was built. The Pickwick Dam raised the water level at the mouth of Yellow Creek about 50 feet. So really, the Tennessee River now is approximately 150 feet above the Tombigbee.

All the locks on the Tennessee above Pickwick Landing are narrow, I believe, 60 feet. That is right, isn't it?

Colonel FERINGA. I think you are right.

Mr. RANKIN. And the ones below Pickwick Landing are 110 feet. There are only two below Pickwick Landing—Pickwick and Gilbertsville, and they are both 110 feet wide, so these 75-foot vessels would have no trouble in going into the Mississippi River coming from the Tennessee, and all the vessels that now use the upper Tennessee would be able to use this Tombigbee route.

The CHAIRMAN. If I remember correctly, the locks on the Warrior River are about 50 feet, are they not?

Colonel FERINGA. They are, sir. There is one larger one, but all of them except one are 50 feet.

Mr. RANKIN. With the exception, Mr. Chairman, of one other place, and that is the connection of the Don and Volga, there is no other place on earth that I have ever been able to find where the traffic can be transferred from one major watershed to the other with so much saving in distance, so much ease, and so little expense.

So there, with a short connection and with these locks down to the mouth of the Warrior River on the Tombigbee, we can complete one of the greatest inland waterways in the world and connect it up with the entire island waterway system of the whole United States. I hope I have not overdrawn that picture, Colonel.

Colonel FERINGA. I don't think you have a bit, Mr. RANKIN.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me repeat, Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important waterway projects in America. With the possible exception of the one in Russia, connecting the Volga River with the Don, which I have mentioned before, there is no other place on the face of the earth where the traffic can be transferred from one major watershed to another with so much ease, at so little expense, and with such enormous saving in transportation costs and distances.

It is now 1,121 miles by water from the junction of this proposed Tombigbee inland waterway with the Tennessee River at the mouth of Yellow Creek, to the Gulf at New Orleans, and 156 miles from New Orleans to Mobile.

By this new Tombigbee route, it would be 491 miles from the Tennessee River at the mouth of Yellow Creek to the Gulf at Mobile, or 630 miles nearer than to the Gulf at New Orleans down the present route, and 786 miles nearer to Mobile. In other words, instead of following the old route down the Tennessee, the Ohio, and Mississippi Rivers down to New Orleans, 1,121 miles, and then going along the Intracoastal Waterway 156 miles to Mobile, a total distance of 1,277 miles, traffic would simply go down this Tombigbee route to Mobile, a distance of 491 miles, saving, as I said, 786 miles, or almost two-thirds of the distance.

All points on the upper Tennessee River clear to Knoxville would be 786 miles nearer to Mobile by water than they are today and 630 miles nearer than to the Gulf at New Orleans.

All points on the Ohio above Paducah would be 356 miles nearer to Mobile and 200 miles nearer New Orleans.

All points on the upper Mississippi and its tributaries, all the way up to Chicago, St. Paul, and Minneapolis, would be 108 miles nearer to New Orleans by water and 264 miles nearer to Mobile.

Even Hickman, Ky., which is on the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Ohio, would be 36 miles nearer to New Orleans and 144 miles nearer to Mobile; while Memphis, Tenn., would be 38 miles nearer to Mobile via the Tombigbee route than it is by the present route, and only 123 miles farther from New Orleans.

This new route would reduce the water distance from Birmingham, Ala., to the Tennessee River from 1,687 miles by the present route to 441 miles by the Tombigbee route—a saving of 1,246 miles, or approximately three-fourths of the distance. It would place Birmingham, Tuscaloosa, and Demopolis 1,246 miles nearer to Florence, Sheffield, Tuscumbia, Guntersville, Chattanooga, or Knoxville, by water transportation than they are now, and provide a slack-water route for the ascending traffic that would greatly reduce the fuel cost per mile traveled.

It would restore navigation on the Tombigbee and cut the water distance from Columbus, Miss., to the Tennessee River from 1,635 miles to 133 miles, a saving of 1,502 miles, placing Columbus 1,502 miles nearer Chattanooga or Knoxville.

It would reduce the water distance from Aberdeen, Miss., to the Tennessee River from 1,673 miles to 95 miles, placing Aberdeen 1,578 miles nearer all points on the upper Tennessee, and greatly reduce the distance to all points on the upper Ohio, clear to Pittsburgh, Pa., as well as to all points on the upper Mississippi and its tributaries.

It would cut the water distance from Amory, Miss., or Cotton Gin Port, to the Tennessee River, from 1,690 to 78 miles, placing it 1,585 miles nearer to all points on the upper Tennessee, to say nothing of the saving in distances to all points on the upper Ohio and the upper Mississippi and their tributaries.

It would cut the water distance from Fulton, Miss., to the Tennessee River from 1,711 miles to 57 miles, placing Fulton 1,654 miles closer to all points on the upper Tennessee, and likewise reduce the distances to all points on the upper Ohio and the upper Mississippi.

Columbus, Aberdeen, Amory, or Cotton Gin Port, and Fulton were at one time served by steamboat traffic on the Tombigbee River. This project will restore that traffic with these enormous savings in distance, as well as in the costs of transportation.

I know it will be said that the Army engineers never approved this project until 1939. But it must be remembered that it was not considered as feasible as it is now until the present dams were constructed on the Tennessee River. Those dams not only made the Tennessee River navigable but the Pickwick Dam raised the water level 50 feet at the mouth of Yellow Creek, the terminus of this Tombigbee Canal, making it possible to construct and operate this project without any lifts from the Tennessee River, since the summit of the project will be in the Tennessee River, in the lake behind Pickwick Dam. The water level in the Tennessee River at this place is now about 150 feet above the level of the Tombigbee River, only a few miles away, with just a slight sand ridge to cut through to make the connection.

Again, I say, it is the most feasible project of its kind to be found anywhere in the United States.

Mr. BOYKIN. Mr. Chairman, I don't think there is any way to overdraw that picture, and I don't think anything can be added to what JOHN RANKIN has said. He has been making a study of this all his life and certainly has it well in mind.

The CHAIRMAN. That has not been very long.

Mr. BOYKIN. No; not very long, and when he gets to talking about this he gets younger, and what I hope is that we will be able to put this in pretty soon, while we are all here to see it. It is just what he says about it, one of the greatest undeveloped waterways on earth.

Mr. RANKIN. It will provide employment, Mr. Chairman, for about 6,000 men. Is that right?

Mr. BOYKIN. I think the figure has been stated at 6,000 that it will employ. Is that right, Colonel?

Colonel FERINGA. I think that figure has been stated, but I really don't recall.

Mr. RANKIN. Between five and six thousand, if I remember correctly.

Colonel FERINGA. I think it practically stands on its own feet regardless of the employment feature, and the employment benefits will just be an added feature.

Mr. RANKIN. I think you are entirely right, but I want to add this proposition: One of our greatest problems when this war is over is going to be the absorption of unemployment.

Mr. BOYKIN. And that is one thing this committee wants to do.

Mr. RANKIN. This is one project that will take up five or six thousand men and keep them employed for several years, until this project is completed.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. McCann has given me the figures on the Pickwick Landing Dam. The height of it is 110 feet, and the lift at the lock is 61 feet.

Mr. RANKIN. Pickwick Landing is some little distance below the mouth of Yellow Creek, and m recollection is that it raises the water only about 50 feet at that point, so it makes the Tennessee River at that point about 150 feet higher than the Tombigbee River, 20 miles away. That is my recollection, Colonel.

Colonel FERINGA. I don't know the exact figures, but it will be taken care of by the high dam and the canal through the narrows and the slack-water pool, which is really an extension of the Pickwick Pool.

Mr. RANKIN. That's right. Down to where the first drop takes place it will merely be an extension of the Pickwick Pool. Now, some gentlemen from Tennessee got excited for fear we were going to take water out of the Tennessee River and let it go down to the Tombigbee, but this will just take enough water to run that first lock. The water used for operating the other locks on this project will come from Browns Creek, Mackys Creek, and the Tombigbee River itself.

The CHAIRMAN. Is any portion of the Tombigbee above Demopolis now under improvement for navigation?

Colonel FERINGA. Yes; there is 4-foot navigation for 4 months of the year from the confluence with the Black Warrior all the way to Columbus, Miss. For 4 months of the year there is 4 feet of water.

Mr. RANKIN. And the river is legally navigable up to the confluence of Browns Creek and Mackys Creek.

Colonel FERINGA. That is about 160 miles farther up.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the decision in the New River case it is navigable anywhere.

Mr. RANKIN. But the point I make is that in the old days when my grandfather first went there the steamboats during the high-water season, in the latter part of the winter and early spring, navigated that river up to a place called Walkers Bridge, just a few miles below the confluence of Browns and Mackys Creeks.

I can remember when the steamboats came up above Aberdeen. There was a time when they not only navigated the main stream of the Tombigbee, what the chairman calls the East Fork, but they also navigated the West Fork of the Tombigbee, which does not show on this map, to a place called Comargo. That was my great-grandfather's shipping point. He shipped his cotton from there to Mobile, up to about the time of the Civil War. The Mobile & Ohio Railway went through there in 1856, and the railroads have been fighting the waterways ever since. But up to that time that river was the main artery of commerce, and by putting in these locks and making these improvements you will not only add a most necessary length to our present inland waterway system but you will also provide one of the most necessary and most feasible developments of its kind on earth, as I said before, except that one connection between the Don and the Volga Rivers down near Stalingrad, I believe it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, who will we have next?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, as the lawyers say, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur takes care of this proposition. That is that the thing speaks for itself, and with the colonel's explanation, and with those maps and the physical facts, I think they are sufficient to answer any arguments against it.

Colonel FERINGA. Mr. Chairman, Mr. RANKIN asked me, with your permission, to put into the record the saving in waterway distances to Gulf ports. May I place that table in the record?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

(The table of waterway distances to Gulf ports referred to and submitted by the witness is as follows:)

Mr. RANKIN. Colonel Feringa, I wish you would insert, at this point, a statement of the comparative average costs of water transportation via existing routes and via the proposed Tombigbee-Tennessee waterway.

(The statement referred to follows:)

"COMPARATIVE AVERAGE COSTS OF WATER TRANSPORTATION VIA EXISTING ROUTES AND VIA THE PROPOSED TOMBIGBEE-TENNESSEE WATERWAY

"The following computations are based on the average performance of a representative tow of one 1200-horsepower Diesel towboat and 8 barges of various standard types and dimensions loaded with a typical mixed cargo, at 55 percent load factor, of 3,500 revenue tons, to and from locations previously mentioned:

"Over-all cost per hour	$21.25
Average speed of tow in slack water (miles)	5½
Cost per mile in slack water	$3.86
Average current in Mississippi River below Cairo (miles per hour)	2½
Cost per mile against 2½ miles per hour current	$7.08
Cost per mile with 2½ miles per hour current	$2.66
Average lockage time:
Tennessee-Ohio River section 30 minutes	$11
Tombigbee section 45 minutes	$16
Warrior section 1 hour	$21
New Orleans to Cairo via Mississippi River, 860 miles in slack water (no lockages)	$6,273
New Orleans to Cairo via Tombigbee-Tennessee, 908 miles in slack water, $3,504; 24 lockages, $364	$3,868
Saving in cost per trip in favor of Tombigbee route	2,405
New Orleans to Paducah via Mississippi River:
866 miles against current	6,273
46 miles in slack water	177
2 lockages	22
	6,472
New Orleans to Paducah via Tombigbee-Tennessee:
826 miles in slack water	3,327
22 lockages	342
	3,669
Saving in cost per trip in favor of Tombigbee route	2,803
New Orleans to junction of Tombigbee Canal with Tennessee River via Mississippi River:
886 miles against current	6,273
261 miles in slack water	1,007
4 lockages	44
	7,324
New Orleans to junction of Tombigbee Canal with Tennessee River via Tombigbee River:
647 miles in slack water	2,497
20 lockages	320
	2,817
Saving per trip in favor of Tombigbee route	4,507"

Similarly, the cost comparisons between other points on the inland waterways via the two routes are as follows:

From—	To—	Via Mississippi River			Via Tombigbee River			Saving per trip via Tombigbee River
		Running	Lockages	Total	Running	Lockages	Total
Mobile	Cairo	$6,875	0	$6,875	$3,221	$364	$3,585	$3,290

	Tombigbee junction	9,556	268	9,824	221	96	317	9,507

It should be noted that the cost tables have been prepared using the best figures presently available. An average current of 2½ miles per hour against upstream traffic has been set up for the Mississippi, this rate of flow being assumed in the tables to compensate for the necessary double tripping through the cut-offs and crossing from bank to bank to avoid breasting the full force of adverse currents. Arbitrary time factors for lockages of one-half hour for Ohio River types; three-fourths hour for the proposed Tombigbee type; and 1 hour for Warrior type locks have been used in the absence of any definite figures therefor and lack of time for having test runs. No time was available for field check; hence the figures were prepared from composite office data.

Mr. Speaker, in a letter addressed to me under date of November 3, 1943, Colonel Feringa also submitted figures to show the cost per ton-mile of transporting oil by rail, by tankers, by pipe lines, by barges, and by railroads. I quote from that letter, as follows:

There is also herewith a table showing comparative costs per ton-mile of tankers, barges, pipe lines, and railroads. These figures were used by the Chief of Engineers in his address at Corpus Christi, Tex., on April 18, 1942, at the dedication of the extension of the Intracoastal Waterway:

	Mills per ton-mile
Rail tank car	8.3
Deep-draft tanker	1.25
Pipe line	3
Barge	2–5.5

Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I have said before, and what the testimony of the Army engineers shows that this great project will not only furnish water transportation for a great section of the country that is in dire need of it, and greatly shorten the water distance between all points on the Gulf of Mexico and all points on the Tennessee River, the Ohio River, the upper Mississippi River, and the Missouri River, and all their tributaries, including the Cumberland, the Wabash, the Allegheny, and the Monongahela, and in that way greatly aid the marketing of products from these areas, but it will also furnish the cheapest possible method of transporting the great oil supplies of the South and Southwest to the markets of that area at reduced costs to both producers and consumers.

It is the most feasible and the most desirable inland waterway project to be found in America.

Important Matters Affecting the Nation After the War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES F. O'CONNOR

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, in the great northwestern State of Montana, that I have the honor to represent, our hardships are not altogether due to the remoteness from market, the severity of our winters, nor the droughts that frequently visit us. My people are fully aware that political denseness, oversight, and neglect on the part of their national lawmakers can be as devastating and calamitous to them as the vagaries of climate. And they are with justice asking that certain alleviating laws be enacted by the Federal Government which would do much toward mitigating the physical hardships their environment forces them to undergo.

My people are as ready as ny other on earth to sanction a good-neighbor policy toward all the world, but they are not willing to impoverish themselves in expressing their desire to be good neighbors to the rest of the world. They cannot see that to lower their standard of living will in any manner help to raise the standards of backward countries. And they are firm in their belief that the best way to demonstrate their interest in their less fortunate foreign neighbors is to show them by example that the broad highway to prosperity lies through adopting the American methods of production and then to cooperate with us in attaining constant improvement in equitable distribution. My people believe that the good-neighbor policy should begin at home; that before going abroad with our benevolence we should see to it that no American citizens shall be compelled to live in abject poverty and ignorance such as afflicts millions of subjects living in the countries toward which we have almost forcibly been wafting our good-neighbor policies.

My people are chiefly engaged in agricultural pursuits and in stock raising. They cannot see that to lower our tariff barriers and allow the grains and the meats to pour across our borders from countries whose living standards are far below ours and competing with them in our own markets can possibly be of benefit to the foreigners or to us. Our own importers are the only ones who benefit from these foreign shipments, for, of course, they buy the grains and meats in foreign markets at the prevailing pauper prices abroad; these importers exhibit a total disregard for the good-neighbor principle as it applies to our own citizens who live by producing these same food products. Millions of bushels of grains and millions of pounds of meats from abroad are flooding our markets every year with the effect of holding prices for similar products down below the cost of production. My people are strenuously objecting to this. They are vehement in asserting that to continue this national neglect to rectify the tariff laws not only fails to benefit the foreigner but does drastically injure them—my people—through curtailing their buying power for American-made goods and thus injuring all Americans.

My people have gone through terrible hardships during the past decade, due to unjust freight rates, inclement weather, and the great depression. They have suffered most from the latter cause, and while they know that the control of the weather is beyond them, they are firmly convinced that depressions are man-made affairs and that there is no rational reason for permitting them to afflict us with their devastation. I am in thorough accord with them in this decision. I am convinced and my people are convinced that a proper control of money by the Government would make depressions impossible, while banker control will make their recurrence inevitable. I do not attribute any Machiavellian purpose on the part of bankers to force depressions on the Nation, but bankers are human beings, subject to timidity and fear, like the rest of us. They are a comparatively small group in our population. To allow them entire control over the circulation of money—a commodity that is so essential to the welfare of all of us—is as senseless as it would be to give control of all the water we use to a handful of men.

Money is the lifeblood of commercial business. To restrict its use, its flow into any community, is to sound the death knell of business in that community and destitution of its people. Money can be likened to the blood in our bodies. Deprive any member of the body of its blood and in a short time that member will die for want of nourishment. Leaving the control of this vital blood of business in the exclusive hands of bankers is folly of the first magnitude. We saw what happened in 1929 when the banking fraternity became fearful of their investments and ordered all banks to call their loans and restrict their credits. Business was paralyzed from one end of the country to the other. The 10-year depression that followed this unofficial order ran up a cost on the citizenship of America beyond all computation. It must not happen again. The control of the flow of money must inhere in the National Government itself. We must never again resort to the folly of trying to offset the shortage of money movement by restricting the output of goods—plowing under crops, killing off meat animals, and so forth, for the purpose of holding prices at a high level.

When this war ends, if we are not foresighted enough to insure against it, we are likely to see business paralyzed again by a tightening up on the flow of money. We are bound to have a period of great unemployment when the war ends. Unless our Government establishes a system that will take the place of wage spending, which is now going on at an unprecedented pace, and sets up a compensatory movement of money in lieu of wages, there will be an immediate business slump that will discourage all new business ventures, frighten capital into hiding and precipitate us back into a worse depression than we have ever dreamed of. Every family in this land of ours is saddled with a share of the national debt to the tune of more than $10,000. If business is permitted to die, how will that debt ever be paid? No; we must not let business die. We must insure, now, that it shall not die for want of wage and salary expenditure.

But how shall we insure against this threatening collapse of business? The answer is obvious: Something must be done, some system adopted that will serve to keep money flowing steadily into every community in the land in lieu of wages and salaries. If money is moving steadily and dependably in every community, no matter how it gets there, business will not die. Little business will be encouraged to open up and big business will be sustained.

Such a system has been offered the Government for the past 10 years and the offer has been flouted. It is offered to this Congress and has been available to it since the Congress first convened. This system is embodied in House bill numbered 1649. It is a proposed national, mutual, all-citizens' insurance against the hazards of life, such as the incapacities of old age, sickness, accidents that cripple and maim, widowhood, with the support of children entailed. One-tenth of our entire population can at all times be classified as unemployable if we include the men and women above the age of 60 years together with the sick, crippled, blind, and otherwise helpless. The bill proposes that movement of money be maintained at all times by paying these incapacitated ones an equal amount each month from an insurance fund that will be collected each month through a gross income tax of 3 percent levied against all individual and business incomes of whatever character that results from the selling of goods and services. The tax will be collected monthly and paid out monthly and will be distributed into every community in the land in the proportion that the unemployables bear to the entire population, which on the average is 10 percent.

Thus the steady flow of money throughout our population will be established under national control and become our national insurance against depressions; insurance against the national ravages of disease and crime and despair that afflict a nation when millions of its citizens are dead broke. Here is a proposed law that will cost the Nation nothing if enacted, for it will set in motion a movement of money that will be collected from the profit stream monthly and returned again into it monthly, but it will steadily augment business, and business is the only thing that I know of that creates wealth. I advise all my colleagues to study H. R. 1649.

Encroachment on American Liberties

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. J. PARNELL THOMAS

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I include a radio address delivered by me May 25, over the Blue Network, entitled "Encroachment on American Liberties":

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, President Roosevelt and his governmental creatures, with the open aid of the Communist Party, are attempting to bring to an end the traditional American way of life.

Law means as little to the New Deal as its broken promises. The President's loyal satellites will tell you that plain English does not mean anything.

Justice Felix Frankfurter, of the United States Supreme Court, in a dissenting opinion, recently observed: "The notion that because the words of a statute are plain, its meaning is also plain, is merely pernicious oversimplification."

Let it be said about the New Deal and its bureaucratic satellites they have never engaged in any oversimplification in their interpretation and administration of the acts of Congress—at least, not in recent years; nor have they indulged in any degree of oversimplification in the drawing up and issuance of their thousands of edicts and regulations which have provoked the citizens of this country into a state of confusion never dreamed of.

What Justice Frankfurter say in this "learned" opinion is that Congress, the representatives of the people, do not really mean what they intend when they enact a law, but that it remains for the brilliant and superendowed New Deal "brain trusters" and bureaucrats to interpret and construe what the Congress really had in mind. This is dangerous dictum for Justice Frankfurter and a dangerous practice for the bureaucratic hierachy. They should keep in mind that if our democracy and system of government is to survive, it must function as the Constitution intended and not by White House directives and bureaucratic edicts. Congress is the law-making branch of our Government. This simple and yet essential fact has deliberately and wantonly been ignored by many of our Government officials who have seized upon the emergency of war to attempt to relegate the Congress to an insignificant role in our governmental system.

I regret to say that in recent years there has developed within the New Deal administration, a growing and dangerous trend to ignore and treat with contempt the Congress of the United States. This trend, however, is not limited to those in the bureaucratic New Deal but extends and gets strong encouragement from certain groups in the United States who are intent upon destroying our Republic and substituting a totalitarian system. Their attack is aimed at the Congress because they know that so long as the parliamentary system prevails unimpaired so will our democracy live. I do not have the time tonight to deal with the outside groups who are bent on this course, but I should like to go into some detail regarding the efforts within the Government to defy and undermine the legislative branch of the Government.

A number of things have happened recently which should focus attention on this strange and undemocratic procedure. The President's order to seize control of a great department store in Chicago, which resulted in the physical eviction of the head of that concern, was never authorized by the Congress. Of late the President has not found it necessary to come to the Congress. All he need do is to command his obedient Attorney General, who can forthwith, without the slightest deliberation, furnish him with a decision to justify almost anything, whether it be the seizing of a business concern or refusing on the grounds that it's "against the public interest" to supply the Congress with the subversive record of a Government employee.

When Congress empowered the Office of Price Administration to establish rationing and price control it was believed that this action was being taken solely to combat the rising tide of uncontrolled inflation. But within a year Congress learned that this agency it had created had a far broader conception of its powers over the American way of life.

So confident was O. P. A. of its opportunity, and of its legal or illegal right, to devise its own bureaucratic program, Congress was forced to conduct a searching investigation of its complex and amazing activities. "Near dictatorship" was the verdict issued by the special House investigating committee, headed by Representative HOWARD W. SMITH, Democrat, of Virginia. The Smith committee complaint required a 30-page report, which charged O. P. A. with flagrantly misinterpreting acts of Congress, setting up its own Nation-wide system of espionage and judicial tribunals, scheming to establish control of profits without sanction of Congress, maintaining an army of snooping enforcement officials, and attempting to avoid legal review of its self-written edicts of the war as the supreme opportunity to dissolve the fundamental rights of the American people.

When the President decided to set up an agency to engage in economic warfare with the Axis, he didn't bother to consult the Congress, he simply issued an Executive order and brought into being the Board of Economic Warfare, an agency which he placed under the direction of Mr. HENRY WALLACE, that dreamer of dreams who loves the stars and imagines in his simple faith that they are all ardent New Dealers. This Bureau, which the President created, spent millions and millions of dollars and employed thousands of experts, including such outstanding economists as Maurice Parmelee, authority and practitioner of nudism and John Bovingdon of dancing fame, before the Congress had an opportunity to pass upon its worth or activities.

And then there is that strange phenomenon in our governmental set-up known as the Writers War Board. It is neither fish nor fowl. It was certainly not created by Congress, but, nevertheless, it is very much a part of that much-discussed agency known as the Office of War Information. That this Board enjoys the privileges of a quasi governmental agency is clearly evident from a most recent statement of Mr. Elmer Davis, Director of O. W. I., which I quote:

"Neither the members of the Board nor any of its writers are paid for the service they render Government agencies. In consideration of their usefulness and the value of their contributions, however, this Office [O. W. I.] furnishes office space, clerical help, and some research assistance in connection with writing projects undertaken at the instance of the Government. Projects undertaken by the Board without Government sponsorship and writings by individual Board members are, of course, undertaken on their own responsibility in the capacity of private citizens."

In other words, the Government furnishes the facilities and some of the research assistance and the Writers War Board furnishes the brains. Now this Board is headed by one Rex Stout, who may be remembered as a former associate editor of the Communist magazine New Masses. Mr. Stout recently wrote and published A Message calling for the reelection of Mr. Roosevelt and pointing out how disastrous it would be should a Republican be elected. Let me quote for a few moments from this fourth-term propaganda message written by the head of this quasi-government board:

"Imagine him (a Republican President) at a table with Churchill, Stalin, and Chiang Kai-shek. They will know, and he will know, that he is there because our isolationists, our chauvinists, our reactionaries, our labor-baiters, our anti-Semites, our home-grown Fascists, helped to put him there. Even if he possessed a loftiness of mind that enabled him to ignore the obligation of an elected person to service the interest of those who helped to elect him, the other three could not know that and would under no circumstances believe it. Whenever he spoke they would cock their ears and watch him like a hawk."

A more ridiculous and insulting message to the electorate of the United States was never written, and when we consider that it was penned by the head of a fourth term propaganda mill financed and maintained by the Government and without any authority from Congress, it is, to my mind, time for a housecleaning.

Last year the Appropriations Committee of the House investigated certain Government officials who had been termed "unfit for Government service." After careful hearings and review of these cases, the Congress amended the appropriation acts to provide that no part of the funds should be paid to these employees. Such action was necessary because the executive heads refused to obey the mandate of Congress and dismiss them. The President promptly replied to this action on the part of Congress by stating that the Congress had no right to say who would be on the Government pay roll. He was again supported in this contention by the Attorney General, who publicly suggested that these Government employees remain on the pay roll and file action in the Court of Claims for their salary. Mr. Biddle advised the Congress that he would not defend the Government in the suit, and it was necessary for the House of Representatives to employ special counsel to defend the Government.

Recently the Special Committee on Un-American Activities, of which I am a member, served a subpena on the President of the Civil Service Commission, asking him to produce the complete files of 30 Government employees who had been charged with subversive and disloyal activities. To our surprise, the President of the Commission wrote back that he declined to comply with the subpena and that he was acting with the approval of and at the direction of the President of the United States. He gave as the reason that it would be "against the public interest" to supply the Congress with the personnel files of these suspected Government employees; and here again we find one of the Attorney General's "celebrated" opinions being relied upon by the President and the Commission in refusing to supply this information to the Congress.

Now I ask, Why should the President take such extraordinary precautions to keep the Congress and the public in ignorance of the records of 30 persons in key positions in the Government whose loyalty to our American system has been questioned? What information or evidence could there be in the files of a Federal employee which would be "against the public interest"? I can easily understand that certain information in these files would probably be against the interest of the New Deal but certainly not against the interest of the Nation. Is it not fundamental that if the Congress is to provide the funds to pay the salary of a Government employee that certainly it should have the right to examine the files and records of those who are suspected of disloyalty?

As a matter of fact, the Attorney General seems to be so busily engaged in preparing opinions that he has not had time to prosecute any of the Communist officials who, 4 years ago, were cited by the Congress for contempt. Not one of them has been brought to trial as is provided under United States statutes, and I am sure it is confusing to you to understand why the Communists in this country, whom the Attorney General himself has found "advocate the overthrow of our Government by force and violence," enjoy such a privileged status with the New Deal. The Congress cannot get the files of Government employees accused of Communist activities. The Attorney General refuses to carry out the law in prosecuting Communists in contempt of the United States Congress. Earl Browder, secretary of the Communist Party, is pardoned from a Federal penitentiary by the President in the interest of "national unity," and the Department of Justice recently announced that they would not deport Mrs. Browder, who was illegally in the United States.

Although difficult to appreciate, the answer is plain why Communists are treated with such favor by the New Deal. It is politically expedient to keep them happy. The Communist Party has developed a tremendous following in our Nation, with the encouragement of the administration, and their strength at the polls—100 percent for the New Deal—is something to be reckoned with.

That this Communist coddling has borne fruit is ably summed up in an article by Mark Sullivan, appearing in the Washington Post this past Monday. Mr. Sullivan states, and I quote:

"The most radical political party in the United States, the Communist (now calling themselves the Communist Political Association), endorsed President Roosevelt for a fourth term.

"In another left-wing political party, the American Labor Party, a group led by the party's head passed a resolution declaring, '* * * steps are being taken to mobilize the great army of A. L. P. voters * * * behind President Roosevelt.'

"Another left-wing party, a split-off from the American Labor Party, somewhat less left wing than the latter, calling itself the Liberal Party, formally nominated President Roosevelt for a fourth term.

"The most left wing of the national labor organizations, the C. I. O., acting through its committee for political action, endorsed President Roosevelt for a fourth term."

Now then, what can we do about this—this flaunting of the law—this riding roughshod over the will of the people as expressed by their duly elected representatives—this bending the knee to the Communists, the avowed enemies of our America? There is only one way to meet them and that is for every man and woman in America who loves his country, who loves our Constitution, and who venerates our Declaration of Independence, who believes in the system of free enterprise, and the opportunity of every citizen to live his life under our system of law, to go to the polls in November and vote to rid ourselves forever of this New Deal and its leaders. Wake up, America.

New Ward Plant Seizure Exposes Avery's Hypocrisy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MICHAEL J. BRADLEY
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Philadelphia Record of May 23, 1944:

NEW WARD PLANT SEIZURE EXPOSES AVERY'S HYPOCRISY

The House of Representatives yesterday began its investigation of the Army's seizure of the Montgomery Ward store in Chicago. Not many hours before the Government had seized another subsidiary of Montgomery Ward, the Hummer Manufacturing Co. plant, 70 percent of whose output is for the war effort.

Neither of these developments, however, changes the basic picture. That picture should not be confused. It boils down to this:

Sewell Avery and the Ward management will not cooperate with the War Labor Board or the Federal Government or obey the orders of either.

Much legalistic controversy has been employed to confuse the public on seizure of the Ward store in Chicago. It was not, we were told, a war plant. The W. L. B. therefore had no authority where it was concerned. It was argued that the C. I. O. union did not represent a majority of Ward employees, and hence there was no necessity for Avery to bargain with them.

But the one thing that mattered, the cause of the strike was: Avery refused to sign a maintenance-of-membership contract with the union as directed by the W. L. B.

He had refused that a year ago, when the C. I. O. union won a plant election. After the recent second election, in which the C. I. O. won again, Avery still insisted he would not sign the contract specified by the W. L. B.

That same issue is behind the dispute in the Hummer plant.

Avery is boss of this plant, too. Here, again, the management has refused to sign a maintenance-of-membership contract.

But in the Hummer case all the legalistic obfuscation woven about seizure of the Ward store is stripped away. The firm is clearly engaged in war work. The W. L. B. has jurisdiction beyond dispute or quibbling. There is no claim that the union does not represent the employees.

The only real issue here, as in the case of the Ward store, is whether Sewell Avery can tell the United States Government to go to hell in the midst of a war for survival—and get away with it.

Any congressional probe which does not keep these facts clearly in the record will not be worth the taxpayers' money spent on it.

Finally, to those who are anxious to be legalistic about this matter, we cite a recent decision by Justice MacSwinford, in the United States District Court for western Kentucky. Denying a plea for an injunction to end Army seizure of the Ken-Rad Tube & Lamp plant, of Owensboro, Ky., after its officials defied the W. L. B., Justice MacSwinford said:

"Did the President act arbitrarily in ordering the facilities to be taken over by the Army? Proof that he did so act shall be upon him who asserts it.

"If this seems to be an extreme view, it should be called to the attention of those who so claim that, with the country at war fighting for its very existence, extremities are commonplace. No war hysteria should prompt the adoption of basically unsound legal reasoning; neither should blind complacency or a false sense of the country's security cause the courts of the land to grant to those charged with preserving the Nation less than the full measure of constitutional and legislative authority."

Here, in essence, was the argument of Attorney General Biddle in the Ward case.

Our courts seem to know there's a war on, even if Avery does not.

The Road Through China

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FRED L. CRAWFORD
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, in my remarks on the lend-lease extension bill appearing in the RECORD of April 19, 1944, I drew attention to a new offensive Japan has started along the Peiping-Hankow railway line—a move which, according to the A. P. correspondent in Chungking, is interpreted by military authorities there as the beginning of a Japanese drive to establish a north and south land communication line across China. I pointed out that as Japan's shipping lines continue to suffer it is only natural that she will attempt to strengthen her land communications, especially in China, where she is not only vulnerable to attack but in which country she will conceivably require to make her last line of defense outside of the home islands themselves.

On April 20 the New York Times carried an editorial headed "The road through China," in which this latest Japanese move is regarded as an attempt to better their land communications because of the damage Chennault's planes and American submarines are inflicting along their shipping lanes:

THE ROAD THROUGH CHINA

Resumption of fighting in China may mean merely that spring has come again. But the direction of the present Japanese attack suggests that the invader is being forced by necessity to open an alternate land route to supply his armies in Burma. General Chennault's bombers and our American submarines have made the convenient sea lanes through the Formosa Strait too hazardous.

The Peiping-Canton railway cuts straight down through the heart of China. It is the natural land link between Japan's great pool of military strength in Manchukuo and her forces assembled in Indochina, Thailand, Malaya, and Burma. But it is a broken link. The Chinese hold long stretches of the trunk line both north and south of Hankow, the central junction in which the enemy is firmly established. Since the beginning of the war the Japanese have repeatedly tried to open this road to traffic, thus far in vain. Last year they were blocked on the southern section by their failure to take Changsha. This year they are attacking the northern section, halfway between Peiping and Hankow, in a three-pronged drive from Chungmow in Honan Province.

It will take a real offensive to wrest this railroad from the Chinese, as the latest reports of heavy fighting attest. If the enemy succeeds in the north an even greater effort will be required in the south toward Canton. Rail communication was not absolutely vital to the Japanese as long as their water routes remained open. But now their marine transport is cut by an estimated third and their remaining ships must run a gantlet along the China coast, with American planes frequently overhead. Even though their vessels sail chiefly by night their losses are growing. Meanwhile Allied pressure in Burma has increased supply problems on that front as Imphal holds and Allied forces redouble their efforts at Kohima to the north. British naval forces are gathering in the Bay of Bengal and the American fleet is closer to the Philippines. If the Japanese are ever going to establish through communications on the continent itself this spring and summer may offer them their last chance.

Mr. Churchill Keeps Us Informed

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. SCOTT. Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer of May 25, 1944:

MR. CHURCHILL KEEPS US INFORMED

It's a good thing for war news-hungry Americans that Prime Minister Churchill from time to time makes a full-dress report to the British Nation.

By this means we are able to pick up items of interest upon which our own Government either maintains a dark and mysterious silence or which it mentions casually with a disquieting lack of clarity and thoroughness.

Thus we learn from Mr. Churchill's address to the Commons yesterday that Turkey, by failing to join up with the Allies, has sacrificed a strong position at the peace table; that internal strife and mutinous conditions in Greece some weeks ago were very serious; that in Jugoslavia Mihailovitch is definitely out of allied favor and Tito definitely in.

We learn, moreover, that Britain and America are in closer agreement on a policy toward France than had been thought and that General de Gaulle is going to London for belated talks; that Britain is fully committed to a lenient attitude toward Spain and will not tolerate criticism of the Franco Government; that, in British estimation, the Atlantic Charter in no way binds the Allies in determining the future of Germany.

The important point about Mr. Churchill's speeches, apart from the news they invariably contain, is that they not only highlight the course of the war but present a full satisfying political picture of the world.

From no member of our own Government do we obtain reports comparable in breadth, depth, and perspective with those of the Prime Minister. That we do not receive from our own officials well-rounded statements on the political as well as the military scene is an injustice that should be corrected.

However questionable the British policy of soft-soaping Spain, Mr. Churchill's insistence that unconditional surrender will be required of Germany and Japan and his vigorous insistence that a world structure for the enforcement of peace must have overwhelming military power are heartening.

Unconditional surrender of Germany and Japan is not a new objective in this war, but it is one that should be emphasized again and again. In the last few months an increasing number of quavering voices have been raised in opposition to such a policy.

The plea is made that by harping upon the theme of unconditional surrender the Allies will only stiffen German resistance and prolong the war, and that, in any event, the unconditional-surrender demand is unfair.

Such reasoning is utterly unsound. The main purpose growing out of this war is to prevent future wars. The sort of world organization envisioned by Mr. Churchill will, we trust, help to do that. But first the German people must be made to understand completely the enormity of the crime which their power-crazed leaders perpetrated. Without unconditional surrender such an understanding would be impossible.

Germany must be made a respectable member of the family of nations. The German people must be given every possible aid toward establishing economic and governmental stability. But the first essential toward this goal is Germany's unqualified capitulation to the Allies.

Mr. Churchill again has given the British Commonwealth of Nations a clear, explicit view of his government's, and, in part, the Allies' policy. We recommend that our own Government do the same and do it regularly. Our people are not children. They are interested not only in American victories, but in world politics and trends. They are certainly entitled to broader, more thorough information along those lines.

Seventy-three Percent of Veterans Ask Job Priority

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. FOGARTY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article from the Providence Evening Bulletin of May 24, 1944:

SEVENTY-THREE PERCENT OF VETERANS ASK JOB PRIORITY—SURVEY OF FORMER SERVICEMEN NOW IN FACTORIES ALSO SAYS 90 PERCENT BELIEVE IN UNIONS

NEW YORK, May 22.—Seventy-three percent of this war's veterans feel they are entitled to job preference, the Iron Age reported after a survey of former soldier now working in eastern and middle western factories.

The balance, the magazine said, believed that the welfare of the Nation depended on jobs for all, soldiers and civilians.

The majority group answers, the Iron Age said, included one comment that "ex-servicemen will get what they want. There are too many to get pushed around."

"All wanted private enterprise to provide jobs, but 14 percent thought the Government should supply jobs in civil service if industry defaulted," the report on the survey said.

"Ten percent would give industry about 8 months to prove its ability to provide jobs and then should private enterprise fail to do so the Government should by subsidies maintain these industries which could not absorb sufficient workers."

Questioned regarding unions—some analysts have held that soldiers resent strikes and would direct that resentment at unions—the magazine said 90 percent believed "unions were good things," since they were the only voice an employee possessed. Of this group, it added, 10 percent inclined toward the description "necessary evil" and 24 percent felt union political power should be curbed. Sixty-four percent thought unions should keep the power to strike, and 59 percent would permit the closed shop.

Furlough Gas

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS J. LANE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to include the following editorial which appeared in the Lawrence Evening Tribune, Lawrence, Mass., under date of May 24, 1944:

FURLOUGH GAS

Gas rationing for service folks on furlough is becoming a much-discussed question, and the families of many are becoming so aroused that unless new policies are adopted by O. P. A. officials some concerted action may be taken toward a show-down.

The rule locally and as far as is known throughout the State is to grant 5 gallons of gasoline to any person on furlough whether it be for a few days or for a few weeks. The exception to this is in the case of denial of gasoline working a hardship. There is already considerable agitation for liberalization of the policy because it is regarded as it is carried out today as manifestly unfair and inequitable.

The feeling about this matter has increased lately because more who have seen foreign service are returning home on furloughs and bear messages from those in the ranks to relatives and friends at home. In some instances it is pointed out that these messages involve considerable mileage and cannot be conveyed otherwise because of time limitations.

One strong argument forwarded in favor of a readjustment affecting those on furlough is the presence of so many autos at the race tracks, at amusement places, beaches, and places that allow for a doubt as to the necessity of the presence of the occupants of those cars. The frequent and regular use of autos by persons whose right to do so seems questionable is also forwarded as a reason for liberalizing the allotments to those on furloughs.

Stories of plenty of gasoline in the tanks of many dealers but no buyers because of lack of coupons also stand out as proof of the demand for some action. Stories to the effect that bootleg or black-market gasoline is easily obtainable for those who are willing to pay the bonus per gallon are not comforting to the families of servicemen home on furlough and particularly those who are enjoying a few precious days of home life after traveling thousands of miles from far off scenes of battle. The fact that there are in existence many counterfeit coupons and the fact that thieves are active in breaking into service stations to get coupons is proof positive that there is far more gasoline in this area than necessary to meet the demands of the legally authorized use under the coupon system.

There are many circumstances and much in the way of evidence that seems to warrant a revised policy. If there is enough gasoline to provide cars with fuel to take them back and forth daily to race tracks and places of amusement, and enough to honor counterfeit coupons and to sell to those who would patronize the black markets, then there must be enough gasoline to liberalize the allowance to those of our armed forces who are on long awaited furloughs. If there is gas for the pleasure seeker and for the black-market patron there must be gas for the soldier.

The Maryland Tradition and Spirit

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. J. GLENN BEALL

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. BEALL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address given by the Honorable EVERETT M. DIRKSEN, of Illinois, as the keynote address at the Maryland State Republican Convention, Baltimore, Md., May 23, 1944:

THE MARYLAND TRADITION AND SPIRIT

Ladies and gentlemen, I find rare pleasure in the fellowship of this convention.

Here in Maryland one receives new inspiration for the tasks which lie ahead.

Here one receives fresh courage to serve our greatest legacy, the heritage of freedom.

Here in one of the Thirteen Original States, whose delegates affixed their names to the Declaration of Independence and covenanted with their lives, their fortunes, and their honor to secure and preserve those inalienable rights, one finds an energizing force to do no less in preserving those blessings for our people.

The tradition of homespun freedom is so deeply imbedded in the hearts of your people as the star upon the flag which marks the exalted place of this State.

You are the heirs of a great trust and nobly will it be administered.

REVERENCE FOR THE LIVING AND THE DEAD

In the air is a memorial spirit.

We approach that day which has been set aside for honor and reverence to those who in every generation have so nobly served that great unseen mistress, the Republic.

Men and women of Maryland, like the men and women of every Commonwealth in the land today, man freedom's frontier.

The blessed endowment of remembrance gives us sacred kinship with the spirit of those who freely gave their lives for the Nation and awakens our prayers for those who are ready to take the tasks which destiny may assign.

As we ponder their absence and reflect upon the grim business to which they have been called, may it give us a living faith, a swelling hope, and a new reverence as we approach our own responsibilities upon the home front in a year of great decision.

The battlefront is but an extension of the home front.

Faith, hope, and honesty, all of which are so necessary to give a durable purpose to victory, are not rationed.

It requires no points for a supply of courage with which to meet the tasks at home.

It requires no priority for materials with which to fashion our vision of a greater and nobler future when war shall be no more and amity dwells upon the earth.

In this spirit, we best memorialize the living and the dead by a reaffirmation of our faith in genuine freedom.

In this spirit we breath a prayer that they who are now away on service may manfully endure the hard tasks before them and on their return, will find us practicing freedom and justice.

THIS IS A YEAR OF DECISION

This is a year of decision.

Even as young Americans strike for victory on every battle front, so we must strike with the peaceful weapons of free government on the home front in order to give victory a dynamic purpose.

This year will be one of time's crucibles.

It will and it must yield leadership, policies, purpose, and faith to meet our common task and bring a revitalized confidence to the Nation.

How priceless, even in time of conflict, is the right of people to assess policies and leadership and save the Nation.

Government by the people is the greatest gift to freedom.

How strange it is that even before our great party has spoken on men and issues, that the sergeants of smear should already be at work

Those charged with the conduct of Government so glibly welcome popular judgment upon their accomplishments but entertain a singular fear of letting the record speak for itself.

Those charged with the conduct of government so earnestly urge judgment upon their stewardship but somehow lament the close scrutiny of the citizenry and the growing demand for change.

They claim a rendezvous with destiny but entertain grave doubt about the coming judgment of destiny.

They have a troubled conscience as the day of decision draws near.

HIGH PURPOSE

Let us be moved by no small purposes.

Let us seek victory as befits a party with great traditions.

Let us hew to the line of abiding principle and seek power, not for it's sake only but for the sake of what we can do with power in serving the general welfare and preserving freedom.

Let us seek leadership, not for it's own sake but for the sake of giving direction to the Nation in a period of confusion.

Let us seek power to provide durable solutions for the problems that have stalked us through a foggy decade.

A CHALLENGE AND A HOPE

I know of no better place to find inspiration for this occasion than that quiet bivouac of the dead, not far distant from here, where, in 1863, a humble man from my own State, with deathless magic phrased the challenge and uttered the hope that has been our guiding star in every generation since.

There at Gettysburg, Lincoln phrased the challenge.

Whether a nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to equality can endure.

There he uttered the throbbing hope that "This Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

That challenge is vital in this anxious hour.

That hope is like the steady light of a candle in an hour of darkness as we see freedom menaced by the forces which are loosed in the earth.

OUR TASK

Our task in a year of decision is to analyze confusion.

It is to assess the state of the Union.

It is to get a basic sense of direction and not be di.erted.

It is to distinguish between duties and issues.

It is to strip away the froth and go to the heart of vital issues.

Our task is to rediscover the spirit of our land.

It is to make certain that young men, suckled upon the soil of this Republic, and those who are now the living instruments of freedom upon some farflung battlefield will not have served and die in vain.

It is to make certain that there will be no erosion of time's greatest gift to man, the freedom and dignity of the individual.

UNITY AND MORALE

In time of bewilderment, fear, and uncertainty, let us as the task force of the home front, examine into our assignment.

We agree that the preservation of the fabric of unity and morale is our first business.

It is the foundation for victory.

It is our secret weapon to combat weariness as war draws close to every hearth and fireside.

It furnishes the spiritual reserve upon which we must draw as the lengthening casualty lists throw their shadow upon the Nation.

It is the steady quiet force which enables us to make the second mile.

This responsibility we freely embrace.

We best discharge it by an alertness to every national problem and by bold and constructive criticism of blunders, incompetence, extravagance, and of every subtle endeavor to encroach upon the ideal for which young men daily die.

In that spirit, let us here remind those conducting the affairs of government that it also shares this responsibility for national morale.

In its every act, there should be a fine restraint and that measure of common sense which is conducive to, rather than destructive of, unity.

Can it be said that the use of troops, active under the command of a bewildered Attorney General, to seize a retail store and carry its executive head from the establishment is in the interest of unity and morale?

Can it be said that a government which at once confesses the impotence of its civil authority before it has been tried and resorts to the glistening symbolism of the bayonet serves that quietude of spirit and fortitude of mind which is the essence of morale?

Can so gross a breach of civil liberty develop a resurgence of faith in the cause for which young men bravely fight and die?

Government should be the first to defend and the last to infringe by military force the rights of people in an hour when many of them seek a restatement of war aims and freely wonder whither we are tending.

There is complete agreement on our duty to preserve the very foundation upon which the structure of victory must be built and we propose to discharge that duty. It is not in issue.

VICTORY

Our second task is victory.

But it is not an issue.

It is on the "must" list of every American.

There is no cleavage of thought or spirit here.

It calls for the best brains and brawn of the Nation.

It is not the personal or peculiar domain of those in charge of government. It is the business of the Nation.

The bitterness of defeat or stalemate would be visited upon every citizen alike.

Mistakes, blunders, and incompetence will be measured in the tears and taxes of every father and mother in the land.

There is no party label on a casualty.

Audacious action and speedy victory is a solemn duty and that cause can be fruitfully served by ending ideological wars on the home front.

PEACE

Our next task is peace.

It is the people's business.

There must be no frustration this time.

To fail in giving peace a chance to endure will be a reflection upon our moral courage and our leadership.

To fail in achieving durable peace will make a mockery of every sacrifice.

A peace treaty may record but does not assure peace.

It requires something more than parchment.

It must be written in the minds and hearts of the people and must come from the bottom up.

Peace is not an issue. It is a solemn duty.

It is for those in authority to freely and abundantly inform the humble citizens whose sons are the instruments of victory, concerning every aspect of peace and peace preparations that we may not again have the spectacle of leaders becoming the prisoners of public opinion.

COOPERATION

Cooperation is the law of human progress.

We have a duty to responsibly cooperate that aggression might be curbed and justice applied to the frictions which produce conflict.

To participate in the world's affairs is one thing, but to shoulder all of its burdens is another.

Our problem is not to cooperate, but how to cooperate.

The world remains gracious and solvent when the promises by which men and nations live are fully kept.

Broken faith is the bitter fruit of broken promises

How important then that we explore our present and future capacity in the light of every promise which might be made and to promise no more than we can reasonably expect to perform.

As the arsenal and larder of all the world, we have the responsibility of moral leadership in a confused world.

Shall that leadership be impaired by promises which we cannot perform or by a glamorous optimism which is unwarranted by realities.

No greater catastrophe could befall the world than for our own land to fall from the pinnacle of moral leadership through broken faith.

But this is not an issue.

Republican leadership meeting at the Mackinac conference in the autumn of 1943 enunciated a foreign policy which is vital, inclusive, restrained, and geared to reality and expressed the hope that a matter so vital to our national welfare might be removed from the arena of politics.

It is a duty.

THE ISSUE IS FREEDOM

The agreed tasks of unity, victory, peace, and participation we freely embrace.

They become every citizen's responsibility.

But the real issue is freedom.

The real issue is the preservation of human dignity, personality, and the moral basis upon which it rests.

To abandon even a small part of the freedom we have known and which accounts for the greatness and leadership of this land is to abandon the greatest spiritual adventure of civilization.

Without it there can be no full healing at home

Without it there can be no strength to bring succor to a confused world.

One of our greatest attributes is our power of example to bewildered people everywhere.

As we boldly announce our devotion to the "four freedoms" shall we set a dismal example for other peoples in an hour of doubt and confusion by departing in the slightest degree from the ideal for which we fight?

If so, we may well ask why young men fight and die.

To the Congress the President in his annual message spoke of a second bill of rights.

How can there be a second bill of rights if the first Bill of Rights is impaired?

How can there be security unless the freedom of action and the incentives to achievement are kept intact to provide that security?

Long ago we had a legacy of freedom and today it is in issue.

WHAT FREEDOM HAS DONE FOR US

What has the climate of freedom and incentive done for us?

Ours is a young civilization.

Compared with China, we are as infants in the cradle of time.

Yet, consider our accomplishments in one and one-half centuries.

We have but 7 percent of the world's population.

That 7 percent enjoys one-half of all the telephones, one-third of all the railway mileage, and one-third of all the surfaced highways of the world.

That 7 percent owns four-fifths of all the life insurance and 80 out of every 100 motorcars in the world.

We spend more on education than the rest of the world combined.

We have a radio for every three people.

An hour of labor in this Nation will buy more of everything than an hour of labor in any other Nation on earth.

Since that day when the Maryland delegates affixed their names to the Constitution in 1787, the real wages of our people have increased from four to seven times while hours have been measurably reduced.

The right to freely own land and the genius for making the land produce has made us the leader of the world.

In every field of human endeavor we have gone far and done much.

All this we have done, not because we have a monopoly of skill, intelligence, and resources, but because these resources of mind and soul and nature could be generously processed in a climate of freedom and an atmosphere of reward.

NOR HAS IT REMAINED UNCHALLENGED

That freedom was not without challenge in our national life.

Consider the ferment of ideas and schemes in other generations.

Our history reveals countless experiments in communal life and socialism.

There has been an unending stream of cults and crusades.

The whitened bones of utopian schemes and collectivist endeavors can be found in every section of the land.

Migrants from Europe, and native citizens as well, entranced with the idea of a collective civilization, have for a century made assaults upon the citadel of individual freedom, but it remained intact and we went forward to new accomplishments.

TODAY IT IS THE TRANSCENDENT ISSUE

Today that basic freedom is threatened.

It is the real issue, for every other apparent issue leads to it.

It is threatened with the gospel of collectivism which would subjugate the individual to the group for the common good.

The collective philosophy is but another name for totalitarianism.

It is the spiritual weapon with which individual freedom is encircled and with which man can be enslaved.

The very thing against which young men fight and for which they die has raised its ugly head in subtle fashion back home.

It began a decade ago.

To make life more abundant, freedom was to become less abundant.

The forgotten man became the common man and it became the purpose of Government to keep him common.

THE SUSTAINED ASSAULT ON FREEDOM

Consider the growth, the centralization, and the ruthlessness of Federal power.

It begins with the delegation of broad powers to the Executive and the issuance of more than 3,600 Executive orders in the first 10 years of the present administration.

There is the unending stream of directives and orders and the building of a structure of administrative law which prompted one administrator to say: "We do make the law."

There is a wilderness of alphabetical agencies, so baffling and varied in character and number as to bewilder citizens and public servants alike.

There is a staggering public civil pay roll of nearly 3,000,000 persons, half of whom are not directly engaged in the war effort.

There is the subtle management of public opinion by more than 30,000 full-time and part-time persons who annually release hundreds of millions of pieces of literature to keep the people submissive.

There has been the use of more than one-half billion in blank checks by the Chief Executive.

There is the calculated erosion of the lawmaking power of the Congress by means of Executive orders.

There was the noxious scheme to pack the Supreme Court for the purpose of securing packed decisions.

There was the shameful use of relief funds with which to debauch free elections.

There is a brigade of financial magicians, who because of an enormous debt, much of which was created before the demands of war began, are now suggesting that our fiscal solvency demands that controls continue and that they become the managers of the people's business.

There is the constant effort to keep emergency agencies alive, despite the fact that the emergency has long since ceased to exist.

There is the habit of taking objectionable personnel from agencies liquidated by Congress and transferring them to other agencies that their bold radicalism might continue to ferment in Government.

There is the practice of agencies created by the Congress, prohibiting their employees from testifying before courts or committees of Congress concerning the contents of their files.

There is the coddling of "reds" in various agencies of Government to such an extent that Congress felt impelled to exercise its power over the purse to dislodge them.

What is all this but a part of the design to centralize power, destroy government by the people, and thus destroy individual freedom.

THE EXPANSION OF THE COMMERCE CLAUSE

There has been a slow and steady expansion of the commerce clause of the Constitution to the point where States become but convenient geographical designations for tourists.

By this expansion janitors and charwomen in a Pennsylvania office building come within the scope of the Federal Wages and Hours Act only because certain products manufactured in that building move in interstate commerce.

A modest Illinois dairy, producing and selling milk wholly within the State must knuckle under a Federal order becaue the milk which it produces and sells might come in competition with milk which moves in interstate commerce.

When the Federal Government becomes so powerful that all human endeavor becomes subject to Federal law, what happens to our Federal Union, what happens to the grass roots, what happens to freedom as we knew it?

THE ASSAULT UPON THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

For a decade there has been an erosion of the lawmaking powers of the Congress.

The planners are steadily planning for continued controls which lodges in the hands of bureaucrats complete power over the people.

The Congress is regarded as but a convenient appendage of Government to provide authority and funds for such plans.

When it displays some independence of spirit it is forthwith castigated and vilified that the duly elected representatives might be demeaned in the esteem of the public.

It had its culmination in the calculated assault upon Congress by the Executive which reached such proportions that the majority leader of the Senate displayed his anger and resentment by proclaiming on the floor of that body: "This is a calculated and deliberate assault upon the legislative integrity of every Member of Congress of the United States."

When the courts and the Congress become the object of attack by the executive branch to bring about personal government in this Nation, what happens to freedom, to balanced government, and to government by the people?

CONCLUSION

These are but some of the exhibits which rise from the record of the past to plainly indicate that human dignity and personality must be sacrificed for the common good and that the spirit which made America great must be made over.

It finds its fruition in the statement of the Attorney General that, "No business or property is immune from Presidential order."

It is the march of collectivism, of defeatism, and of the gospel of maturity toward a managed nation.

Every effort will be made to divert attention from this, the larger issue, but we shall not be diverted.

There is no twilight zone between collectivism and freedom.

There is no halfway house between freedom and complete domination by bureaucracy.

From ringside seats, we are watching the destruction of the Republic, the impairment of freedom, and the abandonment of the American way of life in a turbulent hour when young men die for freedom.

What do we propose to do?

It is later than you think.

Pennsylvania Soldier-Voting Law

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN C. KUNKEL

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, under the magnificent leadership of Gov. Edward Martin, Pennsylvania has passed the most liberal and practical soldier-voting law of any State in the Union. It is recognized as such everywhere. Governor Martin deserves great credit, not only for this achievement but also for the manner in which it was accomplished—that is for securing unanimous agreement from the members of the legislature of both sides. He proved conclusively that real leadership can achieve unity on potentially controversial domestic issues during wartime. It would be well for our Nation and for our war effort if our executives in Washington would study the methods of our distinguished Governor and put them into practice in the Nation's capital.

The fine cooperation of the Republican and Democratic legislators must also not go unnoticed nor unsung.

With the thought that this will be of interest to everyone, particularly those in the State of Pennsylvania, I am including as part of my remarks a summary of the essential provisions of the soldier-voting law enacted by the Pennsylvania General Assembly at the special session of 1944, prepared under the direction of William E Habbyshaw, chief clerk of the lower house, and William P. Roan, its secretary:

SUMMARY OF THE ESSENTIAL PROVISIONS OF THE SOLDIER-VOTING LAW ENACTED BY THE PENNSYLVANIA GENERAL ASSEMBLY 1944

1. Any qualified elector serving in the Army, Navy, Merchant Marine of the United States, American Red Cross, Society of Friends, Women's Auxiliary Service Pilots, or the U. S. O. attached to and serving with the United States armed forces, may vote by an Official Military Ballot, whether registered or not and absent anywhere during the war and 6 months thereafter.

2. The Official Military Ballot will be sent or delivered to such elector in military service at least 65 days before election by the county boards of elections (county commissioners), as well as to such electors whose names are brought to their attention later.

3. The names of all electors entitled to military ballots will be supplied under supervision of the State Council of Defense through the local and district councils, or they may be submitted by anyone, to the precinct election boards sitting on a date proclaimed by the Governor as Military Ballot Day (on or before August 1, 1944).

4. Military ballots will be mailed with two envelopes. On the smaller one shall be printed "Official Military Ballot" and on the larger one, an affidavit with the name and address of the county board.

The ballot may be marked by crayon, ink, or pencil in the presence of a person or officer authorized to administer the oath but in such a manner that he cannot see how the same is marked.

It is then placed in the small envelope, sealed, enclosed in the larger envelope, the affidavit taken, dated on or before election day, and mailed to the county board.

It must be received on or before 10:00 a. m. of the third Wednesday following election to be valid.

5. An alphabetical list of electors to whom military ballots were mailed will be posted in a conspicuous public place at its office by the county board of elections 45 days before, and a supplemental list, 5 days before election day. Such elector may in writing request a military ballot from the secretary of the Commonwealth or his county board of elections, giving citizenship, residence, age, voting district, party choice in case of a primary, name, rank military address, branch, and serial number. The application shall be verified from the district register or from the lists prepared as in 3 above.

6. Such elector may also vote by a "military ballot" in person at his precinct voting place and in the same manner as if he were away. Such ballot shall be counted by the county board as in the case of mailed ballots.

7. In cases where there is not sufficient time for the county board to print the names of the various candidates on the ballot, blank spaces shall be provided in which the names may be inserted. In such cases, a list shall be furnished to the electors containing the names of all candidates legally nominated.

8. A qualified elector, under the Constitution and the Election Code, is a person 21 years of age, a citizen of the United States for 1 month, a resident of the State for 1 year, (unless having formerly resided here, has returned and resided here 6 months) and resides in the election district 2 months preceding the election.

9. A commissioned officer, any member of the merchant marine designated by the Administrator of the War Shipping Administration, or any person of any State or territory of the United States authorized to administer oaths, may take the oath of electors voting by military ballot.

10. The judges and inspectors of election will sit from 7 a. m. to 8 p. m. (eastern standard time) on "Military Ballot Day" and be paid the same compensation as on election day.

11. The counties will be reimbursed for the actual expenses incurred in preparing, handling, mailing, delivering, counting, and storing official military ballots.

12. Candidates nominated at the primary must withdraw at least 105 days before the general election and substitutions must be filed at least 95 days before the general election.

13. Penalties have been provided for violating the provisions of these laws.

Congress a Prey to Minorities

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS J. LANE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to include an article by James Morgan which appeared in the Boston Sunday Globe, Boston, Mass., under date of December 19, 1943:

CONGRESS A PREY TO MINORITIES—THIS A PERILOUS TIME FOR LEGISLATIVE HALLS TO BE TURNED INTO SWAP SHOPS FOR SPECIAL INTERESTS

(By James Morgan)

If you should see your Congressman while he is home for his Christmas vacation, pray, do not tell him which way to vote on any of the legislation pending in Washington. On the contrary, ask him to stop letting anyone tell him whether to answer "yea" or "nay" on a roll call—or else. Beseech him to have the courage, the self-respect, to listen only to the promptings of his own conscience or judgment as to what is best for the country as a whole.

It is none of our business, as private citizens, nor is it within our competence to solve the complex problems of a government at war. We have chosen an administration and a Congress to do that for us. But it is our duty to understand the existence of those problems and to see that our Representatives provide a solution for each of them.

TIME TO SOUND A WARNING

I know it is an old American custom to nag Congress. There always has been a studied and patient avoidance of that in this place because of an awareness that the first weapon of Fascists, at home as well as abroad, is to cast discredit on representative institutions.

Nevertheless, candid friends of Congress are in duty bound now to sound a sharp warning that many favorably disposed minds are seriously disturbed by what has been going on at the Capitol recently. The National Legislature appears to have been falling apart into a lot of little, irresponsible blocs of special interests. Too many Members have been playing partisan politics with the national welfare or cravenly jumping through the hoop at the crack of a whip by a pressure group in the lobby.

FEAR OF AN ELECTION YEAR

Let us take a look at our major problems in legislation and at what our legislators are doing about them. Start with taxes. The Treasury asked for an increase of some ten billions in revenue this year, and it presented a scheme for a rather clumsy distribution of that added burden. Congress is cutting the increase to some two billions, or to one-fifth.

We well know that we can afford to pay more than that at a time when the national income is at the highest point on record. We know, too, that it is not right for us to shirk our fair share of the costs of the war and leave it as a mortgage on our people when they may be less able to carry it, when the bottom may have dropped out of war wages and war profits. Congress would admit this fact and face it if it were considering the interests of the country, instead of its own political interests in an election year.

Next, take the question of inflation. The administration is trying to hold the line against rising prices with subsidies, which are designed to compensate and encourage producers. That plan may be faulty, but we know that it cannot be as bad as no plan at all. Yet the House light-heartedly voted to stop the subsidies without putting anything in their place. The House also has overruled with a whoop the administration's denial of a big boost in the price of oil, and the Senate has almost unanimously voted a larger wage increase than a White House ruling granted to a category of railroad labor.

The action of the House on subsidies would remove the ceiling, take the roof off the price structure, and leave prices—and wages—free to soar like a rocket * * * and to come down like a stick after the war. We know the evil of that course in the other war, which was followed by a boom and a collapse that left us floundering in a 10-year depression.

SIDESTEPPING AN ISSUE

What is happening to the urgent problem of securing to the millions in the armed services their right to vote in the 1944 election? A plan was presented for the Federal Government to distribute and collect their ballots for President and Vice President and for Senators and Representatives in Congress. The bill impliedly admitted that Congress had no authority to make provision for the choice of Governors and State officers, and its opponents insisted that the Constitution leaves to the States the conduct of all elections.

As too often happens, the States have neglected their rights and duties. The legislatures of 41 States met early this year and did nothing about the soldier vote. Only 7 or 8 legislatures will meet again in regular session before the election.

But even if all the States should wake up and call extra sessions, it would be absurdly impossible to have 48 sets of State officials holding elections in training camps and at the fighting fronts, with a separate ballot for every one of the some 3,000 counties.

This will be our first Presidential election in wartime since 1864, when 14 of the 25 States within the lines of the Union Army provided for the soldier vote and the remaining 11, including Massachusetts, made no provision for it. It was such a slipshod affair that it produced only 150,000 votes from among the many hundreds of thousands of boys in blue.

The Senate has rejected the bill for a federally conducted election and substituted an ironical invitation for the States to do their constitutional duty. That merely sidesteps the issue. There must be sufficient constructive statesmanship for harmonizing this conflict of authority. If Congress has the power to draft men by the million, it is morally bound to see that they are not disfranchised. It is obligated to do nothing less than provide a framework in which the States could effectively function. The one thing we cannot afford to do is to stultify a war for government by ballot by denying the ballot to the men who are fighting it.

NO TIME FOR BLOCS AND PRESSURE GROUPS

There is another thing we can still less afford in this crisis. That is a Congress divided into labor, farm, oil, and sectional blocs. Such divisions are a treasonable betrayal of our cause in the face of the enemy.

Free government is the best means ever devised for harmonizing the rights and interests of minorities with the general welfare. This result can be defeated by a cowardly surrender of Congress to minorities with their hired lobbies. Our legislative halls must not be turned into swap shops for special interests. There is where Hitler and Mussolini came in and there is where France fell, with governments paralyzed by self-seeking factions.

This country is in no such peril. The American people are not and never have been politically divided into farm or labor or sectional blocs. Even in the tragic schism of the Civil War the misleaders of the South dared not submit their ordinances of secession to a vote of the people.

There would be no solid South today if any opposition were permitted down there in those totalitarian States, where public opinion is stifled by a one-party system. A minority maintains control of the political machine only by devices for preventing a vote by the whole people, including the disfranchisement not only of the colored population but of large numbers of whites as well.

We have a Federal union for the purpose of reconciling the interests of States and sections with the over-all interests of the entire country. If minorities in Congress can successfully conspire to thwart the will of a majority of the people, the purpose of the union will be defeated.

The excuse for the existence of political parties is that they are a necessary evil in welding minorities into a majority that can govern. But Congress lately has not been voting along party lines. Instead, we have seen States' rights Democrats of the South combining with federalist Republicans of the North against the Soldier Vote bill. "Sound money" Republicans of the East have alined themselves with traditional inflationists of the West and South to remove the curbs on inflated prices and cost of living.

The great unorganized public has no hired officials, press agents and lobbyists, with form letters and telegrams signed with names grabbed by the fistful out of telephone directories. Yet, it never fails to wake up and somehow contrive to make itself heard when organized minorities wax too insolent and begin contemptuously to push it around.

The latest illustration of that is the halting in the Senate this past week of the runaway movement to wipe out subsidies as a means of price control.

We cannot afford to lose faith in Congress now while we are fighting a war to save it from the fate of the German Reichstag. But lately there has been a rapid growth of an estrangement between it and public opinion. This is a perilous breach in our democratic armor when our youth are being maimed and killed that Government by the people shall not perish from the earth. Every one of us, in Congress and out, needs to search his heart to make sure that he is doing nothing, saying nothing, thinking nothing unworthy of that sacrifice.

The Coming Campaign

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

THIS SHOULD SHOCK YOU

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, sincerely believing that our national and individual welfare depends upon the maintenance of constitutional government here at home, realizing that our men are supposed to be fighting to establish liberty and freedom throughout the world, I have been bitterly opposed to certain New Deal policies which smack altogether too much of Hitlerism and despotism. Being so thoroughly convinced that our liberty and freedom were being taken from us, many harsh criticisms of the New Deal have been made by me.

DON'T TAKE MY WORD FOR IT

David Lawrence, a skilled, accurate observer of national events here at Washington, editor and publisher of the United States News, long a Roosevelt admirer and frequently outspoken in praise of the New Deal, just cannot go along with all the program of this Administration. May 23, after commenting that the Democratic Party was being taken over by the American Labor Party, the Communist Party, the C. I. O. Committe for Political Action, and the recently formed so-called Liberal Party, he among other things wrote, and I quote:

> The fact that Earl Browder and the Communists have indorsed President Roosevelt for a fourth term and will now become active in the Democratic Party is not relished by the Democrats of the South.
> Also, it is apparent that a large slush fund has now been made available for the left-wing groups to enter the Democratic primaries and unseat the regular Democrats. Although Congress, while writing the Smith-Connally law, adopted a provision amending the Federal Corrupt Practices Act so as to prohibit labor unions from making political contributions, this has not as yet cramped the style of the C. I. O. Political Action Committee or any other labor unions.

BAYONET AIDS DUES COLLECTION

> Many millions of dollars have been collected by assessments, membership dues or otherwise from the labor union members throughout the country. This drive is, curiously enough, being assisted by the Federal Government itself, which is using the armed forces of the United States, to compel employers at the point of a bayonet to accept clauses in union contracts whereby members of the union cannot withdraw from such unions once they join. This helps increase the amount of dues collectible by the unions. * * * There really is no authority in law either for the maintenance-of-membership clauses, but the President feels that he has sufficient power as Commander-in-Chief to use the bayonet to compel maintenance of membership in labor unions.

Lawrence then called attention to the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, which for years has prevented corporations from contributing to political campaigns, but which, even if amended, Attorney General Biddle holds does not apply to primary elections or the present activities of labor unions, and stated that Congress might hold a Congressional investigation.

He then wrote:

> The difficulty about a congressional committee investigation is that the administration can put rubber-stamp members into control of the committee. * * * Eleven years ago when the Roosevelt administration came into power, it talked a good deal about driving the "money changers from the temple". It professed high ideals. It spoke of itself as a liberal administration. But it has turned out to be not a bit different from its Republican predecessors—ready and anxious to use political funds and public power to perpetuate itself in office.

WORSE IF POSSIBLE

But the foregoing is not all of the shocking story. As is well known, the Communists have been exerting a powerful influence in certain (by no means all) C. I. O. unions and, while the Communist Party last week went out of legal existence, the same powerful group headed by Earl Browder formed the Communist Political Association, which is the old Communist Party under another name, and that organization has joined the C. I. O. in endorsing Roosevelt for a fourth term.

Members of the governing body of the old Communist party are members of the new party and control its action. Browder, released from prison by the President, is now out making political speeches for his reelection. Browder, secretary of the old Communist Party and twice its presidential candidate, is the newly elected president of the new association demanding the President's reelection.

It should not be forgotten that the 1940 Communist Party platform carried the following plank:

> Combat the imperialist acts and policies of the President. * * * No aid to the imperialist warmakers in London. * * * Oppose all war loans and credits to the warring imperialist powers. * * * Stop the sale and shipment of munitions to the belligerents. * * * Resist the militarization and armaments program of the administration and Congress. * * * Not a cent, not a gun, not a man for war preparations and the imperialist war.

An editorial in a local paper, commenting on the foregoing quotation, reads:

That was when Russia, under its nonaggression pact, was a de facto partner of Nazi Germany. Now that Russia is at war with Germany, the American Communists have adopted a new line and changed their name. But the spots remain the same.

It is apparent that the Communists, the C. I. O., and the new dealers, are now taking over the Democratic Party organization and that, in the coming November election Mr. Roosevelt, if renominated, will be the candidate of the Democratic Party, the Communist Political Association, the American Labor Party—left or Communist wing—and of the C. I. O. Political Action Committee.

The issue now clearly defined and in the open, as heretofore it has been buried and under cover, will, of necessity, be between the new dealers, the C. I. O. committee for political action, the Communist Political Association on the one side, and Republicans and Democrats who believe in constitutional government in the American way of doing things, on the other.

There is no longer any excuse for anyone who reads and thinks to be deceived as to the importance of the coming national election.

Reclamation in the Northwest

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY C. DWORSHAK

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, reclamation has played a prominent part in the development of the arid West, and our irrigated farms are producing vital foodstuffs during this wartime emergency. Many projects, such as Grand Coulee, have also contributed materially to the power needs of the Nation and to our war industries. In the post-war era reclamation development will help to cushion the impact of demobilization.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I insert an interesting address delivered at the annual meeting of the Idaho State Reclamation Association on May 13, 1944, by Mr. F. A. Banks, Regional Director of the Bureau of Reclamation:

The new regional organization of the Bureau of Reclamation and the manner in which it will affect dealings between us undoubtedly will be of particular interest to you. The area which has been assigned to me and to Mr. Newell is Region No. 1 of six regions. In addition to Idaho, Region No. 1 includes the Snake River Drainage Basin of Wyoming, the States of Washington and Oregon, and the extension of the Klamath development in California. In recognition of the importance of reclamation in Idaho, Boise has been named regional headquarters.

I propose to tell what I can of our plans for this region. Before doing so, however, I should like to speak briefly about a few matters with which I know you are familiar, but which have such importance to the developments ahead, both in Idaho and in the rest of the region, that they will bear repeating.

One of these things is the relative importance of alternative ways in which the waters of the region may be used. You all count, I am sure, a wide variety of natural resources among the foundation materials on which you have built and will continue to extend your commonwealth. I suppose that none of you would dispute the point, however, that arable land and water are your most valuable resources. One automatically thinks of land and water together, because in so much of the State and region you have to put them together to make them mutually productive. Mining developments have come; some of them have gone; and still others will make their addition to the tangible wealth of the area when favoring conditions permit. Your forests have provided a basis for an important industry and, with careful management, will continue to do so. Scenic resources will contribute further to the growth of the region through further development of a recreation industry.

It is water and land together, however, on irrigated tracts that make the enduring base for support of the farm and dependent town populations which have come so largely to constitute the population of Idaho. Together they will provide the basis for substantial further growth within the region. Used separately for other purposes, they offer far fewer opportunities for earning a livelihood, and for adding to the real wealth of the region. Among alternative uses for water, therefore, its application to arable lands is of primary importance.

The familiar fact that the water supply is limited raises even higher the priority which must be given to use of the available supply for irrigation purposes. The Northwestern States Development Association, in which Governor Bottolfson has been the moving spirit, has indicated that in the event of competitive uses for water, use for irrigation should in general rank only below use for domestic purposes.

In attainment of the fullest practicable use of water of the region, we plan full cooperation with other Federal agencies and with State and local agencies. Arrangements with respect to the cooperation of the Federal agencies involved—the Corps of Engineers, Department of Agriculture, Federal Power Commission and the Bureau of Reclamation—have already been made through establishment of the Interagency River Basin Committee composed of representatives of the agencies in Washington, D. C., and through establishment of procedures designed to promote cooperation in the field. In subsequent studies the Bureau's general position will parallel that of the Northwestern States Development Association indicated above, namely, that in event of competitive demands, the use of water for irrigation should be given a dominant priority.

The limited supply of water makes important also the relative weight given to alternative irrigation uses. The manner in which the limited supply is used for irrigation will affect the extent and character of the development ultimately achieved. Most everyone will agree, I suppose, in the general proposition that water should be applied to those lands and in that manner which will result in maximum benefits. It may not be so easy on occasions to reach agreement as to what maximum benefits are. Questions are involved which in the last analysis people of the State and region must answer. It seems clear, however, that the long-run interests of Idaho and of the region will be best served if water is so used as to provide the maximum practicable acreage with an adequate, but conservatively used supply. If maximum benefits defined in this way are to be obtained, such things will be involved as giving preferences among prospective developments of otherwise equal promise to those from which return flow will be available for reuse on other lands. Attainment of such maximum benefits also will entail, not a sacrifice of essential water by those with a generous supply, but a careful use of water to the end that the total area irrigated may be extended to the greatest extent practicable. An immediate answer to the question of what constitutes maximum benefits has been provided in the first objective of your association stated on the program. That objective is to provide an adequate supply of water for lands already under irrigation. In this I concur. The other considerations mentioned must be realistically faced in the future, however, if maximum benefits from the use of water for irrigation are to be achieved.

It is a familiar fact that irrigation developments have been growing more and more costly. Equally familiar, however, is the fact that the multiple purpose projects undertaken in recent years have more widespread and varied benefits than the simpler projects of earlier years.

The feasibility of future projects will probably turn to an increasing extent upon the value of benefits other than those directly chargeable to the irrigation farmer. The farmer can, and will be expected to, repay only in proportion to his benefits. The balance of the cost must be shouldered wherever the benefits accrue. The willingness of water users and other beneficiaries to carry their fair share of the burden under the established principle of reimbursement has made Federal funds more readily accessible to aid in irrigation developments of the past. This will be even more significant, I am confident, in securing the funds requisite for carrying out the program being planned for the years following the war—years in which it seems likely that requests for Federal funds will be very closely scrutinized by Congress.

The contribution of reclamation developments to the war effort, though of great importance, I shall not dwell upon. Through participation in war-food programs, many of you know better than I the contributions which are being made to that phase of the effort in Idaho. Similar contributions on old lands, and the development of new lands to swell the production of war foods, are being made in the Yakima project, Klamath project, and others within the region. I take pride in the power we have been in a position to generate at Grand Coulee Dam for use in war industries. Ranking currently as the world's greatest power producer, with an average output during each of recent months of about 600,000,000 kilowatt-hours, more than 90 percent of which goes into war industries, the Grand Coulee power plant has provided from 33 to 38 percent of the power transmitted by the northwest power pool in the five-State area served by it. A half dozen aluminum plants, a magnesium plant, a carbide plant, major shipyards, and various military installations are among the industries to which power is being delivered.

Ahead of us, the contributions which reclamation developments can make toward cushioning the impact of post-war demobilization are of two general sorts. First, in the construction of projects, employment can be provided immediately for thousands of men discharged from the armed services and from the war factories. Second, as the development of projects involving new lands is advanced, opportunities will be opened for thousands of other families as settlers on the lands, and as merchants, carpenters, mechanics, and the like in the project towns.

Developments by the Bureau, of course, will give rise to a related expansion in private construction and in business. Contractors will need vast amounts of equipment, materials, and supplies. New farms will need machinery, houses, barns, and other structures; wells must be drilled; domestic water systems installed, and roads constructed to join farms with the towns. The new communities springing up on the projects will require additional housing, public and business buildings, paving, water and sewer systems, and electrical distribution systems.

Although the nature and extent of the problems to be encountered in the post-war period are problematical, it seems likely that demobilization will hit the Pacific Northwest relatively hard. In the minds of people who have studied the problem from a national standpoint, this region ranks high in prospective difficulties of post-war adjustment because of the great expansion in industries with little or no previous peacetime background.

Another significant aspect of the post-war outlook is the fact that a high percentage of people who have moved to the Northwest to work in war industries have indicated the intention of remaining here after the war. Having come from the East myself, I can readily understand the reason for this. In the long run, this is highly desirable from the standpoint of regional growth. In the long run, the availability of adequate opportunities to care for these and additional newcomers to the Pacific Northwest cannot be questioned. It is the readjustment immediately following the war which may be difficult and which promises to tax our ingenuity and our preparedness.

The provision of employment on a large-scale construction program of reclamation projects, supplemented by the provision of farm opportunities as demands of qualified settlers develop, will help fill the needs in prospect. The program will include works to provide supplemental water in some areas and to provide for the irrigation of new lands in other areas.

Of further significance is the flexibility of such a program. If plans being made by private industry largely fill requirements, then a construction program of moderate proportions, extended over many years will be in order. If, however, especially large demands for employment should develop during the years when private industry is converting to peacetime production, the program could be greatly speeded up.

Now to look briefly at where we stand in the preparation of a blueprint for developments within the region. Among the list of projects currently under development is the Anderson Ranch Dam on the Boise project. In the Columbia Basin, finishing work in connection with the dam and powerhouses continues, and land is being purchased for the balancing reservoir in the Grand Coulee. Construction of the irrigation works we expect will await the conclusion of the war. The repayment contracts with the three irrigation districts formed within the project will soon be negotiated; plans for the distribution system have been prepared; sites for four dams on the project have been explored; some canal locations already have been staked out; and designs are rapidly being worked up to the end that contracts for construction can be made promptly at the conclusion of the war. Other projects now being developed in the region include the Deschutes, in Oregon; the Modoc unit of the Klamath project in Oregon; and the Roza division of the Yakima project in Washington.

Here in Idaho, the Post Falls unit of the Rathdrum Prairie project has been authorized. The Cascade Dam and the Black Canyon pumping unit are ready to go as soon as relief from war conditions permits. Another, the Palisades Dam, is approaching the same state of readiness.

The list is long of the additional projects which are scheduled for continuing investigation so that, if proved feasible, they may be added to the others already planned for construction in the post-war period. The list includes, incidentally, projects emphasized by the Northwest States Development Association for prompt post-war development.

High on the list for further investigation are the Mountain Home project and four units in the Weiser Basin. Others in Idaho are the Challis project, rehabilitation of the Lewiston Orchards development, and the Rathdrum Prairie project in the northern part of the State. The full program of continuing studies also includes many projects in Oregon and Washington.

The work done on these projects and on drainage basin studies will provide the backbone for a comprehensive report on the Columbia and Snake drainage, setting forth a full program for irrigation development in those basins. The objective, working with people of the region, will be to select, schedule, and forward the development of those projects which promise to contribute most to the growth and stability of the region.

Experience on lands settled in the recent past has suggested that further studies and preparations can profitably be made which are designed to forward the success of the settlers. It has been possible to make extensive studies of this nature for the Columbia Basin project. They promise to put the settlers, and to put us, and the State and local agencies in a better position to attain the kind of development everyone wishes to see than has been the case on some projects in the past where such preparations have not been possible. Studies looking toward the same ends on other new projects are included among our plans for the region. Without going into detail, they include such things as more complete studies of the type of farm economy which settlers may expect to find profitable; studies looking to the closer adjustment of the size of farm to capabilities of the land to provide satisfactory farm income; the adjustment of farm boundaries to topographic conditions in the interests of saving time and money in irrigation and in other farm operations; the establishment of programs to provide settlers with qualified assistance in the preparation of raw lands, the laying out of farm distribution systems, and the like.

The furtherance of these briefly outlined plans and an increase in the effectiveness of all reclamation activities within the region are the principal objectives of the new regional organization.

To begin with, that end of the Bureau's organization with which your direct contacts have been largely limited in the past, there are the field offices of various kinds. These have included offices for investigation, construction headquarters, and project offices for operation and maintenance. In the past these offices have reported directly to corresponding parts of the Chief Engineer's office in Denver. That office, in turn, reported to the Commissioner. Differing from this organization were the legal arrangements, with an office of district counsel reporting to the main legal department in the office of the Commissioner. The territory served by the district counsel's office, which in the past has been located in Portland, Oreg., is essentially the same as the territory included within region No. 1.

As the number and complexity of projects have increased it has seemed that the remoteness of contact between you and the field offices on the one hand, and between the field offices and Denver and Washington on the other, left something to be desired in expediting activities of various kinds. You may have had the feeling on occasion that a full appreciation of your problems and of the action required on them has not carried through the several steps involved.

Comparative figures indicate the expansion of our activities which have contributed to problems of these sorts. Ten years ago the Bureau served 2,000,000 acres of land on 25 projects. Today, the acreage receiving water from our systems and the number of projects in operation are twice those totals. In addition, more than 20 other projects are in various stages of construction. Expenditures during the last 10 years have averaged about $60,000,000 annually, as compared with early-day outlays of $10,000,000.

To bring closer to you representatives of the Bureau with greater authority and responsibility than it was practicable to confer on the many field offices, regional directors were appointed under the new organization to head up the work of the Bureau in the 6 regions. The field offices are to be continued. The regional office will coordinate construction activities in the region, but construction offices will be closely tied to the office of the Chief Engineer. Other field offices will be responsible to the regional headquarters. The regional office will maintain general direction over the operation of all projects in the region. The Regional Directors, in turn, will report to the Commissioner. The Denver offices, under the reorganization, have been designated as branches of the Commissioner's office. They will assist and act for the Commissioner in many matters, and also are to assist the regional offices in their major problems. The office of District Counsel, hereafter to be known as Regional Counsel, is being consolidated with the regional office in Boise. All contract negotiations and renegotiations will be undertaken by the regional office.

To quote the statement concerning the purposes of the new organization made by Secretary Harold L. Ickes in announcing the plans: "The increasing number of interrelated and complex problems arising from the construction and operation of the many Bureau of Reclamation projects for irrigation, power and related problems makes it imperative at this time, in the interest of maximum efficiency, to establish area offices to coordinate the organization's activities in each of the six areas. The plan developed by the Bureau under former Commissioner John C. Page, will bring the Bureau into closer touch with the people affected by its functions. It will provide for a more thorough understanding of area problems and of the needs and potentialities of each area than has been possible heretofore through the Washington, D. C., headquarters and the Denver office. Close coordination of Bureau operations and the full consideration of local operation, essential in meeting the Bureau's wartime responsibilities and the preparation for post-war needs, will be realized."

Or, to put it in more personal terms, and with reference to this region, Mr. Newell and I will be accessible; we will be in close touch with the field offices, and with your problems and those of other groups in the region; and we stand ready to assist to the best of our ability in planning and in forwarding developments which promise to bring the maximum benefits to you and other residents of the region.

We are moving as rapidly as practicable toward the full discharge of the new regional responsibilities, but we contemplate that this will necessarily and advisedly be a rather gradual process. Difficulties will be experienced in obtaining qualified personnel. Problems originating in the past have many threads running throughout the earlier organization which will be time-consuming and difficult for the regional office to pick up and follow out. In general, we look toward a greater and more immediate contribution of the regional office to the solution of current problems and the advancement of the post-war program.

In short, although you are not to expect us to act immediately and independently on any and all matters which you may lay before us, you may rest assured that your problems will receive not only our careful consideration, but our best efforts for prompt and satisfactory solution.

Handbook of United States of America by O. W. I.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WRIGHT PATMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I am inserting in the RECORD at this time an editorial, which appeared in the May 10, 1944, issue of The Independent, published at Grand Island, Nebraska, entitled "The Controversial Handbook."

The article follows:

THE CONTROVERSIAL HANDBOOK

The recently published Handbook of the United States of America, which was published for distribution to foreign countries for the information of their officials, newspaper editors, commentators, and others, has aroused a good deal of controversy and not a little ridicule at home.

The Independent, taking its information at second hand, had a little fun a few weeks ago at the expense of the O. W. I. for publication of the handbook. The result was that the O. W. I. sent this newspaper a copy, with the request that it be thoroughly read.

After a thorough reading of the handbook, we have decided that the original critics, from whom we derived our information, were searching diligently for an excuse to be critical. The handbook could have no political significance since it was not published for distribution either among the American troops overseas or at home. It is purely informational, and the information it provides is valuable, and so far as we can tell factual.

The handbook does devote considerably more time in its chronological record to the last decade than to previous American history, but as Elmer Davis points out, so does the World Almanac. This is a picture of the United States now, not the United States as it was in 1789, 1861, or 1896.

There will be campaign issues against the New Deal between now and next November. But this handbook will not be one of them.

INTERESTING REPORT ON O. W. I. BY APPROPRIATION COMMITTEE

I am also inserting a portion of the Report of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives on the national war agency appropriation bill for 1945, relative to the officer of War Information.

It is as follows:

OFFICE OF WAR INFORMATION

1944 appropriation	$38,222,504
1945 Budget estimate	64,390,000
Committee recommendation for 1945	58,625,367
Recommendation exceeds 1944 appropriations	20,402,863
Recommendation less than Budget estimates	5,764,633

The Office of War Information is strictly a war agency engaged in minor degree in connection with war informational activities on the home front and extensively and in major part in psychological warfare and propaganda activities on the foreign front. In this latter effort it is a supplement to, and, in large part, integrated with the operations of the military and subject to their directives. It seems hardly necessary to repeat the value of propaganda and psychological warfare as an adjunct to purely military operations. Such methods have been employed throughout the history of wars and the Nation which does not use them is as much at disadvantage in waging its war as though it were short of men and weapons. The enemies we are fighting in this war are past masters in the employment of propaganda. They started long before the war to deceive, intimidate, and weaken the peoples they sought to conquer and destroy, and their success in conquest was due in no small degree to their unscrupulous propaganda and psychological methods. They are still at it on a broad scale, seeking to poison the minds of peoples in occupied and neutral countries as to the war aims of the United Nations, the alleged weaknesses and impotence of the democracies, and the might and ultimate success of the so-called master races.

The Nazis and Japanese are following the same pattern but the latter with not so much skill or resources as the Nazis but still effectively. The Nazis have skillfully endeavored to picture the people of the United States and our institutions as those of a soft, decadent, pleasure-loving population. They circulate literature and pictures which are misrepresentative of what America stands for. They employ the radio, motion pictures, publications, and the lavish use of money to carry on this deception in the neutral and occupied countries. Their facilities are expansive and the amounts they expend for propaganda and psychological warfare are fantastic compared to those of the United Nations. The London Economist recently placed the German figure of expenditure for these purposes at $540,000,000 a year. The German Government owns or directly controls every newspaper published in Germany and the entire German radio system is operated by the German Government. Those who are interested in obtaining more complete details of the methods and resources of propaganda utilized by the enemy will find an informative and interesting memorandum on the subject commencing on page 30, part 2, of the hearings.

The Office of War Information is the instrumentality of the United States, the "voice of America," to tell to the people of the world the truth about this war, our part in it, the power of the United States, to convince the German and Japanese people that their defeat is certain, to encourage the people in occupied countries to continue their resistance, and to convince enemy soldiers through leaflets and otherwise that continued resistance is futile, and to induce them to surrender.

The great proportion of this work is directly and indirectly a supplement to the military operations. Military men participate on the work of the committee which weekly prepares the directives governing the issuance of propaganda by the Overseas Branch. In the psychological warfare operations in the field, the operations of Office of War Information are directly integrated with the operations of the military and subject to the immediate control and jurisdiction of the respective theater commanders. If the theater commander is an officer of the United States Army he has as a part of his forces the personnel of the Office of War Information, and the Office of Strategic Services and their counterpart organizations and personnel from the British forces. If the theater commander is a British general, the same situation exists.

The New York Times, in a recent editorial, stated: "The Nazis have to be beaten on two fronts, on the military front and on the propaganda front." The Office of War Information is the agency of the United States authorized to conduct propaganda against the enemy. If it is to succeed it needs to be implemented adequately with the personnel and material for that task. It needs to do this with news, broadcasts, leaflets, pamphlets, motion pictures, posters, and every material suitable and proper to influence the feelings of the people abroad. It must be done incessantly, intelligently, and truthfully.

The Office of War Information requested a large budget for the fiscal year 1945, which, all hope and believe, will be the crucial year of the war. With the exception of a very small amount, the entire increase is asked for the operations of the Overseas Branch and specifically for the Outpost Service. The invasion of Europe is an impending event and these additional amounts for the Office of War Information are funds required for the support that is needed for the propaganda and psychological warfare to aid in military operations.

The total amount recommended for the next fiscal year is $58,625,504, which is a net increase of $20,402,863 resulting from a decrease of $502,444 in funds for the Domestic Branch, an increase of $20,676,031 for the Overseas Branch, and an increase of $229,276 for the Administrative Branch.

The committee has made a decrease of $5,764,633 in the Budget estimates. This amount consists of $264,633 in the Domestic Branch, $1,000,000 in the specific allotment to the Overseas Branch, and $4,500,000 in the contingency fund for allocation, when approved by the President, to the Overseas Branch in conjunction with actual or projected military activities. The contingency fund was requested in the sum of $10,000,000 for the entire fiscal year and has been allowed in the amount of $5,500,000, a sum which the committee believes adequate considering the fact that Congress will be available for further consultation as the fiscal year progresses if unforeseen needs develop. The decrease of $1,000,000 in the amount for the Overseas Branch is not specifically applied, the distribution of the cut being left to administrative determination. The reduction in the Domestic Branch is discussed later in this report.

Aside from $229,276 in administrative expenses, the entire increase of $20,402,863 is for the psychological warfare and propaganda work of the overseas branch of which $5,500,000 is for a contingency fund for use in connection with projected or actual military operations.

The major part of the increase is for the Outpost Service now maintained at 20 major offices and 18 branches in 22 countries of the world scattered from Sweden to Australia. They are the focal points from which is distributed much of the material of the O. W. I. which is prepared, directed, and sent from the United States, as well as conducting local informational activity. Most of these centers are engaged in pyschological warfare in some form. Those which work directly under the Army on psychological warfare are at London, Algiers, New Delhi, and Sydney, and at Honolulu with the Navy. At other outposts, psychological warfare constitutes a large part of their activities, such as Stockholm, Bern, Madrid, Lisbon, and Istanbul, because they are on the perimeter of Europe and are in a position constantly to see that material goes into occupied and enemy countries.

The increase for the Outpost Service and the contingency fund are for this type of psychological warfare operation. Provision is made for the establishment of 35 new outposts at the direction of the military authorities. These additional funds are for the establishment of new outposts in Europe and the extension of psychological warfare activities in the China-Burma-India theaters. The London office of the Office of War Information has received specific instructions from the Army, covering some 500 pages, approved in detail by the Combined Chiefs of Staff, and providing for the establishment of outposts at 27 points in Europe and the Balkan area following invasion activities. The funds for these are included in the bill.

The committee has expended a considerable amount of time in examination of the activities and operations of the Office of War Information. Five days were given to the testimony and cross-examination of Director Davis and his assistants. The printed testimony takes up 333 pages of part 2 of the hearings. The committee invites each Member of the House to examine these comprehensive statements. Mr. Davis' statement commences on page 2; the statement of Mr. Robert Sherwood, Director of the Overseas Branch, commences on page 68; the statement of Mr. Edward W. Barrett, Executive Director of the Overseas Branch, commences on page 71, and Mr. Owen Lattimore, Deputy Director, Overseas Branch, in charge of Pacific operations at San Francisco, on page 170.

Committee investigators were sent prior to the hearings to the New York and Washington offices and to the training school on Long Island to obtain information for use in the hearings. Members of the subcommittee preparing this bill personally went to New York and went through the Overseas Branch operations in that city. They listened to broadcasts, talked with executives and employees, examined the preparation of scripts for broadcasts, inquired into the preparation of publications and material for distribution abroad, witnessed a remarkable motion picture that has just been completed at request of the Army for use in one of the liberated areas, and examined such confidential directives and other material as could be crowded into one day of investigation.

The subcommittee found the New York office functioning 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, and its personnel enthusiastic and highly interested in the work they are doing. This finding is also corroborated by the report of committee investigators who previously had visited these offices. It is regretted that the subcommittee did not have an opportunity to visit the Pacific Branch of San Francisco, headed by Mr. Owen Lattimore, formerly personal political advisor to General Chiang Kai-shek. His interesting testimony on the organization, direction, and correlation with the Army and Navy as to propaganda and psychological warfare in the Pacific, commences on page 170 of the hearings. The Pacific office is also on a 7-day, 24-hour schedule. From New York and San Francisco offices, the Office of War Information employs 28 radio transmitters. From these stations go approximately 3,500 radio programs a week; 2,650 from New York and 875 from San Francisco. On a daily basis this means approximately 380 from New York and 125 from San Francisco. From New York the programs are divided into 22 basic languages depending upon the direction of the program and from San Francisco into 10 basic languages and 13 dialects. United States station operations are also carried on from ABSI, a new station in Great Britain, and from stations in north Africa and Italy. The United States will operate 36 transmitters in the next fiscal year compared with more than 60 of the Germans and 46 of the Japanese. The combined number of United States and United Kingdom transmitters is less than the combined number of stations of the enemy.

The committee believes that the Office of War Information is making a valuable contribution to the war effort of the United States and in direct aid of the military operations. It bases this belief not only on its own examinations but on the testimony of men competent to judge and whose responsibility in connection with the war effort enables them to speak with authority. These expressions come from our representatives in the military and the diplomatic field.

A letter from the Secretary of State, Hon. Cordell Hull, appears on page 20 of the hearings. On pages 78 and 79 are communications from Ambassador Winant in London, Ambassador Harriman in Moscow, and Mr. Merrell, Acting Chief of the United States Mission at New Delhi, India.

The committee, in connection with its previous hearings and reports on appropriations for the Office of War Information, has printed letters from military leaders as to its usefulness. These are in House Report 852 of this Congress on the first supplemental national defense appropriation bill, 1944, and came from General Marshall, Lt. Gen. George S. Patton, Lt. Gen. Jacob S. Devers, and Maj. Gen. Lewis H. Brereton. In the present hearings, on page 79, is a message from Maj. Gen. T. G. Hearn, chief of staff to Lieutenant General Stilwell, of the China-Burma-India command. Last session the committee also had before them Brig. Gen. Robert A. McClure, now on General Eisenhower's staff in charge of psychological warfare. His testimony will be found commencing at page 1251 of the hearings on the first supplemental national defense appropriation bill, 1944.

Last summer a committee of five United States Senators visited the battle areas of the world where United States activities were being carried on. In November, following their return, Senators MEAD and BREWSTER appeared before the Committee on Appropriations of the United States Senate to inform that committee of the work of the Office of War Information in the foreign-propaganda field which had come under their observation. Their testimony is found commencing on page 344 of the Senate hearings on the first supplemental national defense appropriation bill, 1944. Their observations were complimentary to the work of the agency and Senator MEAD in response to a direct question as to whether it was being overdone replied, "In my judgment, it is too thinly spread about."

The committee has not relied entirely upon these various judgments, upon its own visit, nor upon the testimony of the officials of the Office of War Information. Chairman CANNON of Missouri prior to the preparation of this bill, addressed a letter to General Marshall, Chief of Staff, citing the fact that both the Office of Strategic Services and the Office of War Information had requested increased sums for the fiscal year 1945 for operations in the foreign field and had based these increases upon enlarged and continuing activities in connection with military operations. General Marshall was asked to express an opinion as to the part of these organizations in connection with military operations and also as to whether it was desired to have their work continued in civilian status or transferred to the military arm. He was further requested, if he felt it necessary, to contact the commanders in the various theaters of operations on these points.

A confidential answer has been received from Lt. Gen. Joseph T. McNarney, Deputy Chief of Staff, replying in the temporary absence of General Marshall. His letter includes the confidential comments from the theater commanders who were contacted. These comments indicate increased and important use to be made in military operations of both organizations. The committee, with special permission, can quote the two concluding paragraphs of General McNarney's letter:

"The War Department believes that both the Office of War Information and the Office of Strategic Services are performing essential functions overseas. Approved plans do call for increased activity on the part of both of these organizations, and as military operations expand, it is to be expected that their work will increase.

"No further militarization of the Office of Strategic Services and the Office of War Information is planned. As you know, the Army is finding it difficult to remain under the present manpower ceiling of 7,700,000 men and still furnish all military personnel and units required for planned operations. Because of our manpower limitations, it is mandatory that the Office of Strategic Services and the Office of War Information be manned so far as possible by civilians."

The Domestic Branch of the Office of War Information is recommended to receive $2,200,000, which is $502,000 less than the 1944 funds and $264,633 less than the Budget estimates. The new Director, Mr. George Healy, Jr., is an experienced newspaperman, formerly vice president and treasurer and managing editor of the Times-Picayune Publishing Co., of New Orleans, and on leave from his paper for work with the O. W. I. for the duration.

The part of the Domestic Branch is clearly stated by the following excerpt from Mr. Healy's statement, found in full commencing on page 241:

"The Domestic Branch plays the part of a service institution in getting information about home-front needs to the American people. Charged with responsibility for their information policies, Office of War Information works with Army, Navy, and the civilian agencies as counselor and colleague. On the other hand, it provides a welcome service to newspapers, radio, magazines, and other mediums of public expression which carry information about home-front needs to the people. These privately operated channels depend on the Domestic Branch of Office of War Information to tell them what home-front needs require greatest attention.

"May I call to your attention the booklets which you have before you? Page 2 of your booklets asserts that 'a well-informed public is America's greatest security. The Office of War Information is dedicated to that practical ideal.'

"Office of War Information serves as a coordinating and liaison agency doing four basic jobs.

"On page 3 we place our No. 1 job: Getting out the war news to the American people. This includes home-front information as well as battle-front information.

"In reality, what we seek to do is to see that the established news-gathering agencies have an opportunity to present a clear and accurate picture of the war's progress. Mr. Davis and I consider ourselves advocates for the people in obtaining prompt release by the War and Navy Departments of all the news which will not endanger American lives or jeopardize the American cause. Daily conferences in the Director's office and frequent consultations at the Pentagon and Navy buildings are part of this procedure.

"The Branch Director and O. W. I. deputy directors follow a similar procedure to obtain prompt release of adequate home-front news by the several civilian war agencies. Developments deserving public attention frequently involve two or more agencies, and O. W. I. tries to see that this overlapping does not result in agencies escaping responsibility for keeping the public informed.

"The respective deputy directors are assigned to specified war agencies and are responsible for supervision of the information programs of those agencies. Periodically the information officers of the agencies themselves meet in the O. W. I. conference room to discuss their joint and separate problems. When a development is impending which might concern several agencies, an O. W. I. deputy takes precautions to insure that responsibility for releasing information concerning this development is accepted by the proper agency.

"In addition to serving the various agencies as information consultants, the deputies assist in the conduct of special war information programs concerning the agencies to which they are assigned.

"Our ask No. 2 is: 'Eliminating confusion by coordinating news from all Government war agencies.

"No matter how carefully worded an official release by one agency may be, there is a possibility that this announcement will go beyond the functions of the issuing agency and refer to the practices or policies of some other agency. O. W. I. gives the second agency an opportunity to say whether references to it are accurate. There are cases also where a release by one agency concerns a problem which affects several other agencies whose expressions should be published with that of the first agency if the public is to have a clear picture of the whole problem.

"Job No. 3 of this Branch is: 'Enlisting public support of measures deemed essential to the prosecution of the war, such as avoidance of careless talk, waste-paper salvage, staying on the job, and Victory garden planting.'

"Under the philosophy outlined by Congress for this Branch, our responsibility is discharged when we make available to established publishers, broadcasters, picture producers, billboard owners, advertisers, or other regular channels of expression, information about war needs. We supply the various mediums with facts obtained from official sources concerning the urgency of war needs. How they handle these facts is their decision. It is my opinion that all of these private institutions are serving patriotically and well as avenues through which Office of War Information informs the people of things they can do to help the war effort.

"Our fourth task is: 'The clearance of all speeches and statements by policy-making officials in the executive branch. Also clearance of Government printed material of an informational nature.'

"In connection with the latter responsibility, Office of War Information has 'killed hundreds of publications and thousands of propaganda items of the type Congress wishes eliminated.' If you will turn the page you will see that this quotation is from the Report on the Reproduction and Distribution of Printed Matter for Executive Agencies to and at the request of the Bureau of the Budget submitted by the Printing and Distribution Control Branch of the War Production Board on March 25, 1944.

"In discharging this fourth responsibility we promote conservation by eliminating duplication and waste of printed material and prevent confusion by clearing the public speeches and magazine articles by officials in the executive branch. In this instance, clearance means checking for accuracy with other officials whose policies or practices might be involved."

The Domestic Branch has been operating within the philosophy prescribed by Congress in connection with the drastic reductions that were made in the appropriations for this fiscal year. The current appropriation of $2,702,444 provided funds for liquidation of the more extensive operations that were under way and $295,335 will have been obligated for that purpose, leaving a total of $2,407,109 for other operating expenses in 1944. The Budget estimate of $2,464,633 provided an increase of $57,524 represented by overtime pay absorbed in the fiscal year 1944. The committee has provided $2,200,000 which is $204,107 less than the 1944 funds, exclusive of liquidation funds, and $264,633 less than the Budget estimates. In making this decrease the committee has eliminated the Surveys Division of the Special Services Bureau ($61,000) and a contract item ($43,500) for sampling polls of the effect of domestic programs. The committee believes that these may be desirable but are not a necessity. With the home front better organized and the requirements for citizen cooperation with programs more clearly established, the committee feels that as the fiscal year 1945 progresses the Domestic Branch will be able to apply the remainder of this cut without impairment of the war effort.

The Domestic Branch is fulfilling an important function as now organized and conducted and the committee is glad to report to the House that its action at the last session has had a beneficial effect and an improved service from the Office of War Information on the home front.

O. W. I.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. MURPHY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement:

Inasmuch as the Office of War Information is primarily a news organization, the public may be interested in the policies which it is following in dealing with news of the Presidential campaign.

We are a war agency, staffed by members of both political parties or of no party, existing to serve a national interest which would not be served by any partisan misrepresentation or misinterpretation of the news. Our Domestic Branch has no concern with political news; its sole function is to provide information to the American people on the status and progress of the war effort, and the war policies, activities, and aims of the Government.

Our Overseas Branch, however, performing the same function for foreign nations, conducts a more general news service. Its purpose is not to furnish news to American citizens overseas, whether military or civilian; but to provide foreign peoples with such news as will serve our objectives. These objectives are, in enemy countries, to undermine the morale of enemy populations and thus to promote the disintegration of the enemy's war effort; in enemy-occupied countries, to keep alive the hope of liberation and to stimulate resistance to the forces of occupation; in neutral countries, to convince the populations of the inevitability of our victory and to win their moral support to our cause; and in Allied countries to counter propaganda aimed at dividing the United Nations, to enhance the confidence and determination of our allies, and to foster a better understanding of the United States—this last in the confidence that the more foreign peoples know about us the better they will think of us and the more effective shall we be at the peace table.

These must be the objectives of an American war information agency, regardless of what administration may be in power; they will still be the objectives on January 21, 1945, no matter who may have been inaugurated as President the day before. Accordingly, we have followed and shall continue to follow the policy laid down in May 1943, with my complete approval, by Robert E. Sherwood, Director of the Overseas Branch. This declaration, which to my knowledge has never been published, is as follows:

"We should advertise and dramatize the fact of the campaign and the free election as a demonstration of American democracy continuing freely in the midst of war. Every attempt should be made to create the best possible impression of both candidates, with absolute impartiality; for one or the other of them will become the President of the United States, and it will then be our duty to convince the world of his good faith, his statesmanship, and his wisdom in handling all the manifold problems of the war and beyond the war."

In accordance with that policy, and in pursuance of the objectives outlined in the foregoing, we conduct our foreign news service. It is as accurate and truthful as possible but its content is determined to some extent by the interest of foreign audiences, most of whom care little about the details of American politics. Generally speaking, what they want to know about the forthcoming election is simply this: Will whoever may be elected be determined to conduct the war to complete victory, and will the successful candidate and party be willing to cooperate with other nations in some form of collective effort to keep the peace hereafter?

On both these points the Office of War Information is able to reassure the peoples of the world. Every possible nominee of either party is determined to carry on the war to the total defeat of all our enemies; and the overwhelming support by Congress of the Connally and Fulbright resolutions, the Mackinac declaration of Republican leaders, and the statements of administration policy enable us to speak with confidence on the second point.

Beyond that, much news of great importance to the American public is of little or no interest overseas. This is true of most purely domestic issues; though the self-governing nations of the British Commonwealth and such neutral democracies as Sweden and Switzerland have a good deal of interest in the workings of American democracy, and in such of our problems as happen to resemble problems of their own. In such cases our staff is under instruction to report the issues objectively, without partisanship or editorializing on either side. Otherwise we say little about domestic issues to foreign audiences. We endeavor to maintain a general balance between Republican and Democratic statements that will give the world a fair impression of the principles of both sides, but we do not aim at a rigid mathematical equality; we make as wide as possible a selection of quotations from political personalities of all parties, and we use whatever there may be in their statements that serves the purposes of a war agency promoting the national interest abroad.

The policy outlined above has been detailed, in recent months, in a number of directives to the staff of our Overseas Branch. The full text of those directives will be found in the report of our hearings before the House of Representatives Appropriations Committee, which will soon be published.

Montgomery Ward Seizure Must Be Probed

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 24, 1944

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, although the administration has attempted to abandon the legal proceedings in the initial Montgomery Ward seizure, yet the issue of that wanton and unnecessary act is by no means settled. The Sunday seizure of its subsidiary, The Hummer Manufacturing Co., is not directly pertinent to my remarks.

The House committee will proceed with its investigation of the seizure of the parent company without let or hindrance, so that the American people may settle in their own minds the limits of the Executive power. Indeed, the House investigation may well cover the whole War Labor Board set-up, because the Ward seizure is merely a part of a whole plan.

The action of the administration sets uneasy in the minds of the American people; they want to know the motives, the attitude of mind, of those who prompted that action.

The issue is presented in the words of the Attorney General:

> The President has a great constitutional reserve of power. The President clearly had the power to take the action he took here. The statutes recognize that the right is there. In time of war, it is true that in taking over plants the Government is subject to the regulation of the fifth amendment (that is, no person to be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law) but no business or property is immune to his order * * * particularly in time of war, the court should not substitute its judgment for that of the Executive.

Virtually all Americans heard about the initial seizure of this retail organization. The War Labor Board determined in the Montgomery Ward case that the company was an essential war industry, but in the case of Sears-Roebuck, engaged in the same business and practically with the same set of facts surrounding that company, the War Labor Board held that Sears-Roebuck was not an essential war industry.

The American people are confused by the conflict of decisions on the part of the administration agencies. No man in this country knows whether the Government will take over his property, irrespective of military necessity.

The public supports the position of the company in its opposition to the administration's illegal action, and they do not believe that Montgomery Ward is an essential war industry.

At no time did the Congress contemplate authorizing the President to take over property not essential to the war effort. This was clearly determined at the time of the passage of the Smith-Connally Act. The issue was raised at that time and the administration claimed to reject any thought of such purpose. Hence, no specific barrier was then raised against the administration.

The subsequent change in attitude on the part of the administration requires that such a specific statutory barrier be raised by the Congress. To this end, the House Investigating Committee must determine the facts to support such congressional action.

It has been clearly ascertained that the Government exceeded its rights, and the great majority of the American people support this view. I am constrained to believe that the majority of the American people refuse to support the Government seizure of plants that are not engaged in the war industry, in order to enforce the War Labor Board's decisions.

Thoughtful Americans know that such illegal seizure is identical with the arbitrary and capricious acts of the dictators whom our armed forces are fighting and dying to overthrow. Yet at home the same issue arises. This unnecessary seizure of Montgomery Ward cannot be justified by the widest stretch of the imagination. Only capricious and irresponsible officials would attempt such action.

The courts have not shown themselves disposed to assume the responsibility involved in interpreting and applying the basic law, due to the paramount power of the Executive. The action of the Supreme Court in excluding labor unions from the conspiracy restraint of the Antitrust Act in the Hutchinson case from St. Louis, which involved carpenters' and teamsters' jurisdictional disputes, and in the Jersey trucking case, wherein the Court held that farmers had to pay union truckers extra to haul their produce into New York City notwithstanding the fact that the Antiracketeering Act barred such extra-pay requirement under the circumstances of that case, clearly show that the Court, in failing to interpret the basic law, implies that the Congress must again do what it had already done. The legislative history of the Antiracketeering Act clearly shows that the bill was so broad as to include all persons without naming any group or class.

The Congress is the last bulwark of American freedom. Capricious and irresponsible officials take advantage of the chaos of war, under the cloak of war necessity, to further their personal ambitions and schemes.

Philosopher H. D. Thoreau, in his Essay on Civil Disobedience, 1849, says:

> There will never be a really free and enlightened State until the State comes to recognize the individual as a higher and independent power, from which all its own power and authority are derived, and treats him accordingly.

The issue in the initial Ward case and the action of certain Government officials requires that the House Investigating Committee make a searching investigation.

I quote another view:

> Whatever crushes individuality is despotism, by whatever name it may be called.

Only last week in Washington, an incident arose which I think perfectly illustrates the possible consequences of capricious and irresponsible acts by officials. The press reported that a policeman arrested a streetcar motorman for a traffic violation. Witnesses said the policeman motioned the car forward and then stepped into its path. Boarding the car, the officer wrote out a traffic summons as the car proceeded to the next stop, opposite the Treasury. En route the policeman and the motorman discussed the merits of the case. The press reports that the motorman stated he was "burned up," and thereupon stopped the car. While policeman and passengers stared, the motorman gathered up his lunch box and change carrier and quit the job. In seconds, street cars were lined up behind the stalled vehicle and passengers, piling out of the cars into Pennsylvania Avenue, blocked automobile traffic. That was a small matter, but in Detroit at the same time a Foremen's Union strike caused the failure to produce and deliver 250 P-38's, fighting planes badly needed at this time. The armed forces must not be made to submit to capricious whims, and they will hold those accountable at home who impede the war efforts.

Had the policeman foreseen the consequences of his ill-considered action, the incident would not have arisen. The same is true of the Ward seizure. Irresponsible officialdom must be curbed before the consequences ultimately destroy us. The House investigating committee has a necessary duty to perform; not because the Ward plant was seized, but because any non-war plant was or could be seized.

The words of Samuel Johnson, spoken in 1768, are as true today as when they were uttered:

> They make a rout about universal liberty without considering that all that is to be valued, or indeed can be enjoyed by individuals, is private liberty. Political liberty is good only so far as it produces private liberty.

The seizure of the Hummer Manufacturing Co. plant on May 21, which is so recent that it has not fully developed, does, however, raise certain fundamental questions.

In that case I note the President cited his authority for seizure, but the Army Public Relations officer announced, according to the press:

> That the wage scale approved by an order of the War Labor Board on April 14 would be paid. With a general increase of 4 cents an hour, this ranges from 60 cents to $1.24 an hour.

The authority cited by the President for his action also contains the provision that—

> Such plant, * * * while so possessed, shall be operated under the terms and conditions of employment which were in effect at the time possession of such plant * * * was taken.
> When possession of any plant has been taken * * * (the Government or the union) may apply to the War Labor Board for a change in wages or other terms or conditions of employment * * *. Upon receipt of such application and after such hearings and investigations as it deems necessary, such Board may order any changes.

The clear mandate of the statute would seem to require an order of the Board after May 21, 1944, when the Government took possession.

The failure of the administration to follow the clear will of Congress makes it essential that the House investigating committee investigate thoroughly, and do so without delay.

Rent Control in Minneapolis

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letters:

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., May 15, 1944.

The Honorable JOHN W. McCORMACK,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MCCORMACK: Every Member of Congress, I understand, recently received a copy of a booklet with an orange cover on which there appeared "Exposed Warner Alleges Report by O. P. A. Psychologically Is an Intended Fraud."

We cannot let charges of this nature go unchallenged. So I am attaching a copy of a reply to Mr. Warner by Paul M. Green, Director of Accounting of the Office of Price Administration. If you will read this you will agree, I believe, that there has been no misrepresentation in our presentation. It followed recognized practice of real-estate accounting and made no claims for conclusions not warranted by facts shown.

Maximum legal rents in Minneapolis were established at the levels of March 1, 1942, about 20 percent above the 1934–35 low level of the depression. At that time nonfarm real estate foreclosures in the Minneapolis area were at the lowest point in 17 years. By 1943 they had declined from a depression high of 2,302 in 1933 to an 18-year low of 73. A recent survey disclosed that during the first year of rent control Minneapolis rental housing was in a substantially better operating position than in each of the years 1939, 1940, 1941, and also showed improvement over 1942. Even Mr. Warner, it is worth noting, does not deny that residential rental real estate is doing considerably better under wartime rent control than it did before the war.

Sincerely,

CHESTER BOWLES,
Administrator.

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., May 9, 1944.

H. L. WARNER,
President, Constitution Forever, Inc.,
Minneapolis, Minn.

DEAR MR. WARNER: A booklet attacking the statements made in the publication, Income and Expense Under Rent Control—Minneapolis Rental Housing, has reached our office. I shall attempt to answer the specific and implied criticisms of the accounting survey set forth in your booklet as well as correspondence will permit.

Among other duties, my office is charged with the responsibility for collecting operating revenue and expense data from rental properties for submission to the Rent Department of O. P. A. It should be understood that there is a clear line of demarcation between the Rent Department and the Office of Accounting Service within the Office of Price Administration. The publication you have criticized was prepared by the Rent Department on the basis of data included in the report of the Office of Acounting Service on the operating experience of Minnneapolis property owners.

1. TIME OF SURVEY

It is stated on page 9 of your booklet that the survey was made in the early summer months of 1943, and the implication is made that O. P. A. waited 9 months to release the report. Our records show that the accountants left Washington, D. C., for Minneapolis on September 27, 1943, and left your city on November 5, 1943. Our report to the Rent Department was dated November 13, 1943, and the Rent Department published their analysis in February 1944.

2. NET OPERATING INCOME

The statement is made on the same page that "the terms 'net operating income' and 'total expense' as used in O. P. A. chart 1 are but a half truth" and upon this statement you have based practically all your conclusions. Yet you have admitted that if a person took time to read the explanations of the chart the correct interpretation would be evident.

You have criticized the use of the phrase "net operating income" primarily because interest and depreciation were not included in its determination. (In regard to our exclusion of interest on investment, please refer to Accountants' Handbook, pp. 144 and 145, Ronald Press Co., 1943.) In support of this position, a letter to you from Mr. J. L. Lonegren is presented wherein he defines gross operating income, net operating income, and total expenses, assuming that all these terms were used in the same statement of operations. Mr. Lonegren has been asked to define terms removed from their context and, as a result, his definitions cannot be accepted as valid. Contrary to Mr. Lonegren's definitions, if these terms are used in the same statement, the amount of interest incurred on borrowed money, including debt discount and expense properly amortized during the year, and income and profits taxes accrued would be excluded from operating expenses in determining net income from operations. Financial expenses must be considered in determining net profit but they are not operating expenses. It is unfortunate that Mr. Lonegren included income and profits taxes accrued since they are not an expense. They are a charge against net profit and should be treated as such. Unlss there is a profit, there is no income and profits tax. Technically speaking, there is serious question as to whether they accrue since they cannot be determined until the year end. Also, you do not follow Mr. Lonegren in your discussion of interest since he properly qualifies it as interest on funds borrowed and you show interest on the actual value of the land; the actual replacement cost of the buildings and their furniture and equipment (less depreciation) regardless of its debt ratio.

Your attention is called to the September 1941 issue of the National Real Estate Journal, wherein Mr. W. H. Carpenter, of the Governing Council of the Institute of Real Estate Management, in an article on management accounting, uses the terms "total expenses" and "net operating income" in the same manner as these terms are used by O. P. A.

This office recognizes the depreciation of fixed assets as an expense, but it has been our practice to arrive at an amount for net operating income before depreciation. This practice has resulted from the fact that in the overwhelming majority of cases it has been absolutely impossible to find any reasonable record of depreciation. Minneapolis properties do not show depreciation on their records even though you properly point out that it is an important element of expense. Any accountant from our staff is ready at all times to report depreciation on the property if it can be shown that reasonable depreciation has been recorded. As you well know, records on property operated by management companies are, in the great majority of cases, set up to furnish reports to the owner showing cash received and cash disbursed. In order to determine the depreciation on such property, if it can be determined at all, the accountant would be forced to visit the owner personally and convince him that it is to the owner's advantage to submit copies of his income-tax returns for examination. Such a procedure would be not only costly but extremely cumbersome. The records maintained by persons operating their own property are also incomplete. In these cases it is usually necessary to develop the records from check stubs, scraps of paper, and other miscellaneous sources with the difficult job of separating personal from business transactions and finding all the data necessary to determine the operator's income and expenses. The weight of accounting opinion seems to be that even if we could have determined the depreciation charges, those charges should have been based on original cost and not on replacement value as shown in your figures. Graham, in volume 15 of the Accounting Review, as quoted in the 1943 Accountants' Handbook, page 811, states: "This argument (that depreciation included in operating charges should be based on replacement cost) is directed more toward the determination of selling prices than to an accounting for profits. Undoubtedly many of the data employed in accounting for profits * * * are an invaluable aid to the management in determining future selling prices and in estimating what the results of future years may be. Recognition of this fact, however, does not imply that predictions as to the future should be injected into the summary of past operations, or that the costs involved in the computation of profits for a past period determine selling prices for a future period." The determination of interest expense actually incurred poses the same problems plus the difficulty arising from the secrecy which often surrounds this element of expense. Up to the present time any advantages that might be obtained have not appeared to be important enough to warrant undertaking the tremendous job of searching out these elements of expense.

3. DEFERRED MAINTENANCE

You have stated that "any sound businessman knows that a reserve must be built now to pay for deferred maintenance which will require to be performed later." (Warner, page 19). However, there is some question as to the amount of true deferred maintenance that "must be performed later." Certainly you are not contending that interior painting formerly necessary to maintain the earning power of your property but now made unnecessary in the present market for rental property is a maintenance expense that must be made good in the future. There may be some true deferred maintenance existing today because of the lack of material and labor supply but your claim is grossly exaggerated. My office has extensive material available to establish this point. Further, you have stated that "every sane apartment-house operator is setting aside a reserve for future expenses of repair and maintenance." In our examination of property records in Minneapolis and in other cities we have not been able to find such provision being made and reflected in the books and records.

4. INCOME RESIDUE

You have objected, on page 14, to the statement that the net operating income (as defined in the O. P. A. publication) less interest and depreciation results in profit. The statement would have been more inclusive if it had also spelled out the fact that the same calculation may result in a negative profit figure known as a loss. However, the possibility of a loss is implied, since this is generally accepted terminology.

In your criticism of the above statement a table is presented which, according to your views, proves the statement "fallacious" and a deception. Let us examine the case presented.

First, you have assumed an arbitrary value for purposes of calculating interest and depreciation. The basis of the value given to this hypothetical property is known only to you, but it is apparent that the amount of interest and depreciation can be varied by changing the value used. Secondly, you have seemingly used hypothetical interest in your calculation—interest that is neither paid nor accrued.

The gross rental income of the property producing $188 net operating income amounts to $465 per unit, or $11,160 for the 24-unit building you have assumed in the illustration. The present value of the theoretical property is 7½ times the gross rental which would be high under normal conditions and is especially inflated in comparison with the depressed conditions you ascribe to Minneapolis real estate at the present time. As a result, the depreciation and interest figures used by you are inflated even if some way could be found to justify your basic reasoning. The conclusions which you draw from this presentation and expect the reader to draw are fallacious. You have assumed the property to be worth $84,000, and in your calculations you have applied 6-percent interest on $84,000. The only conclusion possible in accordance with Mr. Lonegren's letter is that the property must have a mortgage against it for the full present value. Consequently, the owner's equity in this property would be zero, and the return upon the owner's equity would be infinite. Your statement on the same page that "A landlord is entitled to a percentage net return on his investment" is not now nor never has been true. As a real-estate man, you know that at all times there have been thousands of properties that have not earned enough to cover their operating costs when depreciation has been properly determined. There are many and varied causes for this situation; but it exists, has existed in the past, and in all probability will continue to exist in the future. As this is the case under normal business conditions, there is no responsibility on O. P. A. to attempt to alter it at the present time. Your so-called net operating deficit might better be labeled "Return desired by landlord less net operating income." No financial statement based upon accepted accounting principles will show imputed interest as an operating expense as yours has done.

5. PROPERTY SURVEYED

You have objected to the properties included in the Minneapolis survey because some may have been secured from management companies. The sole criticism appears to rest upon a misconception of law and fact. A management company, operating property for an owner, acts as an agent of the owner, and the laws of agency apply to this relationship. The owner does not lose control of the amount of money to be spent for repair and maintenance. Is this not the same situation that exists when the owner manages the property? Further, your generalization that few, if any, properties operated by management concerns are possessed for permanent estate is not in agreement with the conclusions to be drawn from from a study of properties operated by management concerns. Many properties may be placed in the hands of management concerns for sale, and institutions that have acquired bankrupt property may turn it over to these companies for operation; but your statement implies that all property managed by these companies is of this type. This is not in accord with the conclusions drawn from the study of management-company records from coast to coast.

You have alleged further that a 4-percent sample of properties in Minneapolis is too small to determine "an accurate graph of actual facts." How is it, then, that you can consider 244 units adequate in your analysis (see Warner's chart 2), but 3,111 units inadequate when presented by O. P. A.? If 3,111 units are 4 percent of the Minneapolis rental properties, then your 244 units are only three-tenths of 1 percent of the rental properties in Minneapolis. Furthermore, our examination of approximately 200,000 dwelling units in leading cities substantiates the results found in Minneapolis.

Further, you have implied that the sample was picked by the O. P. A. as the "most suitable for their purposes." Our accountants have been instructed to secure a cross section of rental property, and to the best of our knowledge they make an objective selection. If you have any evidence whatever in support of your suggestion, we should appreciate your citing us the specific cases where such selection occurred.

Much of your criticism is fundamentally an indictment of the accounting records maintained on rental property. The property management industry has suffered in its account preparation because of the separation of owner from manager, and the large number of property owners operating their property as a side line. A good accounting system is one that will provide the owner with the information he needs in such a way and at such times that it will be most useful. It seems that the methods generally in use are not fulfilling their purpose, since they do not set forth properly the condition which the owners and managers constantly contend is the true state of affairs. The only correction can come from within.

Our accountants are willing to accept all costs that have actual existence and have been reflected in the books of account. However, records are looked at in terms of accepted accounting practice and any information of real estate records that adheres thereto is made a part of our report to the Rent Department.

On page 10 of your booklet you contend that O. P. A. implies that landlords in Minneapolis are enjoying a 16.4 percent better return for 1943 than they did in 1939. The O. P. A. report, in table 1, states that net operating income increased 16.4 percent in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, over the calendar year 1939. On the basis of figures given to us by property owners in Minneapolis this statement is correct. Your contention is that Minneapolis property suffered constant losses from 1930 or for over 10 years before rent control and apparently you complain that rent control has not cured these alleged ills of previous years. Regardless of whether you are right or wrong in your contentions, Minneapolis landlords generally are still in a substantially better position than they were in the years before rent control.

Although this letter does not reply in detail to all the charges made in your letter and in the attached booklet, I believe that I have pointed out enough of the serious errors and omissions to show that these charges are erroneous. My office is attempting to do a sound job of accounting and my knowledge of the Rent Department convinces me that it is doing a sound job of rent control, both departments cooperating in their part of the war effort. The accounting principles and practices used by us are those followed by the best-known accountants in the United States, and we have worked in close association with all the leading national accounting associations. Your statements and implications that buildings may have been deliberately selected to show a desired result or that acccounting figures may have been developed in such a way as to prove a desired point have no foundation whatever. If you have any trace of support for such contentions, I shall appreciate your stating the specific buildings which you think were selected to show a desired result and also citing competent accounting authority to show any place where you may think that our accounting methods have been incorrect.

Very truly yours,

PAUL M. GREEN,
Director of Accounting.

More About Swapping Horses in a Stream

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. J. GLENN BEALL
OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. BEALL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Cumberland News, Cumberland, Md., of May 24, 1944:

MORE ABOUT SWAPPING HORSES IN A STREAM

This newspaper has pointed to the fact that President Lincoln, reputed author of the saying about swapping horses while crossing the stream, never hesitated to change horses when the national welfare and safety demanded it. He changed them frequently until he found the right kind of horses, just as the Nation changed horses in the inception of the great Civil War when it sent Lincoln to the Presidency. The historical reminder was made in view of the fact that the new dealers and their huge army of Federal pay-rollers are making use of the Lincoln saying in this campaign just as they did in the third-term campaign.

But the Lincoln practice was not the only one. There are numerous historical instances of horse-swapping while crossing streams made to great advantage.

In November 1917, Georges Clemenceau took over the supreme command in France's darkest hour of the First World War, ousting the wabbling Malvy cabinet and organizing a real victory cabinet.

In March 1918 the Allies, in another black hour—a black hour—displaced the generals in command and made Marshal Ferdinand Foch commander in chief of all the allied armies, one of the most vital steps taken toward ultimate victory.

In December 1916 the British King and Parliament ousted Herbert Asquith as Prime Minister and made Lloyd George supreme. The First World War began in 1914.

A strikingly comparable political situation to that which exists today obtained in 1918. President Wilson made a partisan political plea to the American people before the fall elections to give him a Congress that would uphold his policies—a rubber-stamp Congress. Although this country was still at war, and there was uncertainty in the public mind as to how long it would continue, the voters of the United States answered by electing an anti-Wilson Congress. That is to say, they changed horses while yet crossing the stream. They objected to being told that there was an indispensable man in the White House, yet, despite the overwhelming defeat of all the Wilson policies in 1920, the United States went on to achieve greater and greater things along the path of its political destiny.

In the present global war, another vital change was made on the Allied side also in another dark hour. Great Britain had declared war on Germany (September 3, 1939), and thus had entered upon its greatest struggle for existence; but on May 10, 1940, it decided that changing horses in the middle of the stream was necessary, and it reformed its government entirely, making Winston Churchill prime minister, succeeding the appeaser Chamberlain.

But the present incumbent of the White House, who is being rated by his supporters as the indispensable man of the hour, himself, repudiated that theory in the course of a speech delivered April 18, 1932, at St. Paul, Minn., with particular reference to the horse-swapping idea.

"There will be many in this Nation during the coming months," he said, "who will implore you not to swap horses while crossing a stream; there will be others who will laughingly tell you that the appeal should have been worded, 'Do not swap toboggans while you are sliding downhill.' But it seems to me that the more truthful, the more accurate, plea to the people of the Nation should be this: 'If the old car, in spite of frequent emergency repairs, has been bumping along downhill on only two cylinders for 3 long years, it is time to get another car that will start uphill on all four.' "

The phrase "for 3 long years," should now read "for almost 12 long years," with which slight alteration the analogy is as applicable now, even more so, as it was when originally proffered.

Address by Hon. Elbert D. Thomas of Utah, on Tenth Anniversary of the American Birobidjan Committee

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ABE MURDOCK

OF UTAH

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 29 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD an address delivered by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York on May 16, 1944, on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the establishment of the Jewish autonomous region, Birobidjan, in the U. S. S. R., and on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the American Birobidjan committee—Ambijan.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is a pleasure indeed to meet again with the Ambijan Committee tonight. Especially on such an occasion as the tenth anniversary of the establishment of the Jewish autonomous region of the Soviet Union—Birobidjan. And especially at the moment when the United Nations stand poised for the final blow against fascism.

Eight years ago, when we met together for the first time, it was to honor the man who was then the representative of his great country to ours—Alexander Troyanovsky. It was also to consider the rescue of some 1,000 Jewish families from the tragedy which fascism was making of their lives. The Jews in Germany and their brothers and sisters in eastern Europe were the first to learn the full meaning of fascism—as it is now known around the globe. Hitler was consolidating his power in the newly organized Third Reich. His ideology was still a matter of debate outside the borders of the unhappy countries where the people were beginning to feel the power of its blows. There was still easy talk about the trains running on time in Italy, complacent opinion on order coming out of chaos in Germany, order restored by one strong man.

The diplomatic representatives of the Soviet Union were the first to call out to an unheeding world for unity against this new order—this common foe. It was they who pointed to collaboration among the great free nations to save the world from the fire and the sword.

Coming as I do from the recently completed conference of the International Labor Office, where the unity welded on bloody battlefields is beginning to be practiced in the corridors of peace—I want to draw attention to another lesson we have learned from that great country. It was clear to all the delegates at the I. L. O. conference that the hope of a high standard of living in peace is intimately related to attaining the objective of full employment. The productive possibilities of full employment impress us most strikingly when we recall that it was possible for the Soviet Union to raise the standards of its people by conscious effort. Unbelievable improvement took place as 5-year plan succeeded 5-year plan. It took the war to show the whole world that the Soviet Union had used the skills of its own scientists, professional people, managers, and workers to bring about not only a marked improvement in the standards of living of its people, but in addition it has created the apparent miracle of the Red Army.

The Red Army has covered itself with undying glory. It has earned the admiration and the gratitude of all freedom-loving people. What is one of the elements in the many that went into the making of this great army?

It is an army that is composed of as many peoples as go into the family of nations which is the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. These peoples—Mongols, White Russians, Georgians, Ukrainians, Jews—thanks to the far-sighted policy of their government in regard to national minorities—received more than the legal—constitutional—right of full equality. They were given every opportunity and encouragement to live as equals. The history of Birobidjan—whose anniversary as the Jewish Autonomous Region we are marking here tonight—is an outstanding example of that policy. It was to fulfill—to implement the equal rights of the Jewish people that the Russian Government set aside for them a territory. Its settlers would then add to their general rights as citizens representation on the national councils of the family of nations of the Soviet Union. The true—the genuine equality which is shared by all the national groups in the Soviet Union has shown the way to all the world. It is the unshakable foundation from which Jewish soldiers in the Red Army were able to strike such heroic blows—strike hard—against the murderers who were exterminating their brother Jews with machine-gun bullets—fired into their backs—as they stood on the edges of the common graves they had themselves been forced to dig.

Fascism and Hitler have only slavery—torture—death in sealed gas chambers to offer to national minorities. The Soviet Union gave them full and untrammeled equality. Hitler used anti-Semitism as a banner with which to rally the scum of the earth into his legions of death. In the Soviet Union, anti-Semitism is severely punished as treason against the entire nation.

The debate against Hitler and his morality is now being conducted in simple, fundamental language. His dream of world conquest lies crumbled in the ruins left by the pounding he is getting from the skies over his fortress. His plans for lebensraum are left weakened for the kill by the most powerful blows of all—the blows at Stalingrad, the defense of Leningrad, the beating at Moscow, the crushing defeat at Sevastopol. The united might of the United Nations led by the United States, the U. S. S. R., and Great Britain, will seal his doom.

Democratic America hates fascism and all it stands for.

To the American people, the ideal of unity and of equal rights for national minorities is part of our great heritage. Our country was settled and has grown into its powerful present from multi-national and racial beginnings. Our strength is the strength brought to our shores by all the national groups who came here longing to be free. These pioneers of liberty founded a great nation.

Its charter of liberty, the Declaration of Independence, was the first to say for all the world to hear, "That all men are created equal, that all are endowed by their Creator with the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." The author of that Declaration made no reservations separating freedom from happiness nor relegating them to one section of the population as against the other—granting them to Gentiles but not to Jews. "The equal rights of man and the happiness of every individual," said Thomas Jefferson, "are now acknowledged to be the only legitimate objects of government." Today these equal rights of Thomas Jefferson and the "four freedoms" of President Roosevelt are being fought for and won on a battlefield that covers the earth.

To insure the rights of all people to equality, to assure their right to work out their own destinies freed forever from the threat of enslavement and domination by a "master race," a united peace must follow a united victory. The friendship of the United States and the Soviet Union in war must be followed by a permanent unit, a permanent alliance, in peace. In such an alliance lies the only guaranty of lasting peace, of equal rights of the individual, the only guaranty to the rights of nations.

One almost wonders if Jefferson foresaw the present struggle in which the survival of democracy depends so much on the successful cooperation between the democratic powers of our day, when he said: "These nations, holding cordially together, have nothing to fear from the united world. They will be the models for regenerating the condition of man, the sources from which representative government is to flow over the whole earth."

Victory for democracy is in sight. But the price we, of America, will yet have to pay for its achievement is great indeed. The price in the lives of our youth. The price in widows and orphans left to face the future alone. Thanks to the sacrifices of the Russian people, that toll will be smaller than it might otherwise have been.

I feel, therefore, that the work of your Ambijan committee, in behalf of the orphans of Russian heroes, of orphans of the tragic Jewish refugees driven from land to land before the Nazi scourge, is a great and patriotic effort, an effort worthy of the great generosity of the American people. It is small payment to make on a debt of eternal gratitude. It is a fine thing to participate in the restoration of the lives of the children of those who died for freedom. For it is a fundamental of the concept of freedom and liberty that although they are gained by one, all profit. Freedom and liberty cannot be clutched selfishly by one. If it is, it is lost.

The orphans in Russia paid a great price for our freedom and for the freedom of our children. Sharing with the Russian people in their care is a fine expression of the unity which has saved the world from barbarism—and will preserve a lasting peace for generations to come. It is a fine way of cementing the bonds of friendship between peoples.

Some day, when the Russian children at Stalingrad and the Jewish children in Birobidjan have grown up into strong and splendid men and women, fully equipped to enjoy the equality of opportunity their country offers them, they will remember that the people of America and their children, through such efforts as those of your committee, stood with them and by them.

United together—these citizens of the future—in a world made truly safe for democracy by the permanent unity of the thre most powerful nations in it, they will be able, with happiness and confidence, to live as strong world citizens in a strong world—a world of freemen—where Jew and Christian, black man, yellow man, and white, will live together in peace and security.

In the tragic lesson of the slaughter of the Jewish people we have learned at great cost that an attack on one is an attack on the whole. Let us hope that in the world catastrophe it launched we will have learned the great lesson that our wisest policy is peace and friendship with all mankind.

How Shall We Pay for the Peace?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KENNETH S. WHERRY

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 29 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an excellent and timely address entitled "How Shall We Pay for the Peace?" delivered by the very able junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] on May 26, 1944, in Boston at a meeting of the Boston Chamber of Commerce on the occasion of the annual observance of Research Day in Boston.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I understand this meeting is dedicated to research. I am not here primarily to discuss this subject, but, before I proceed, I do want to pay my respects to research both in peace and particularly in war.

In normal times no business can expect to progress or even continue to exist without a considerable expenditure of time and money in research work. This is axiomatic. The war, however, for perhaps the first time, has popularized and dramatically illustrated the necessity for research and, when victory is won and the story can be told, I venture to prophesy that we in this country and the United Nations generally, will clearly understand how hard put to it we should have been but for the stupendous contribution made to the war effort by the scientists and research men who operate under the overall supervision of the Office of Scientific Research and Development. The contribution these men have made is incalculable and I for one do not believe that we could possibly foresee victory today or hope to maintain ourselves as a nation tomorrow without continuous and constructive effort along the lines pursued during this war by the patriotic Americans who have been in charge of this branch of our war effort.

In looking forward to the post-war world, it must be clearly apparent that the accelerated pace of research brought on by the war is truly going to produce a new world in which to live when industry takes the ball after the war starts to run with it on a peacetime basis. Outstanding developments in the fields of electronics, plastics and synthetics, in aviation and in many other lines, are not only going to give our people a better world in which to live, but are going to prove a stimulus to productive enterprise in this country, the results of which in my judgment will dwarf into insignificance the tremendous spurt ahead into mass production by the automobile after the last war. It is singularly appropriate that we pause today to pay some attention to research which may well be titled the keystone of our arch of industrial development and expansion.

As I have pointed out, however, it is not my intention to discuss this subject in any detail. What I particularly want to touch on today are some aspects of post-war fiscal policy which, in my mind, all add up to the question, How shall we pay for the peace?

It might be in order, in phrasing a question of this character, for me to apologize for introducing a post-war discussion of any character, because I am one of those who strongly believes in taking care of first business first, first business today being to dispose of the Nazis and the Japs. However, post-war planning seems to be the vogue, and on the assumption that we shall have several problems to plan for and to solve, I have no hesitation in posing the question, Not how shall we pay for the war but how shall we pay for the peace?

Some years ago, after 6 years of endeavoring to administer the city government of Newton, I recall making a statement to the effect that innumerable individuals and groups of individuals had been to see me during my several terms of office urging me to recommend this or that appropriation, but that in all the 6 years I recalled not even a single, solitary voice being raised in opposition to the expenditure of money. At that time, at least, it just wasn't the fashion to oppose the expenditure of public funds, and as I see the post-war picture beginning to unfold through the spy glass of legislation presently in the hopper in Washington, I am quite impressed that those who oppose excessive and unwise expenditure of public funds are still to a considerable degree crying alone in the wilderness.

As we take stock and try to find out where we are going—as we survey the route—I should like to start off with a short simile.

When the modernistic era commonly known as the New Deal took off in 1932 there commenced the process known as pump priming or boot-strap lifting. Deficit financing became the order of the day.

After 8 years of injecting this type of morphine into our system, the day of reckoning began to approach, when suddenly—out of a clear sky—the evil day was put off by the use of a new and powerful stimulant, known as war economy; comparable in effect to the drug marijuana. There isn't any doubt in any one's mind that the type of financing indulged in since 1940 drastically stimulated the patient. There is no argument about the use of this latest and most powerful stimulant because we are in a life and death struggle and must do whatever is necessary to win regardless of cost.

However, we expect this war is some day going to be won and over with and then is when we have to begin to stop, look, and listen, because when we start off the post-war period with an estimated indebtedness of $250,000,000,000, we're just going to be faced with one fact: the fact that science hasn't yet discovered a financial drug powerful enough to continue to keep us whipped up as we have been for 12 years, and so we have to begin to level off and get back to the point where we can live a normal life without depending upon financial drugs and stimulants.

Prof. W. L. Crum of Harvard University, chairman of the Conference on Research and Fiscal Policy, in his latest forecast of budgetary prospects for the first post-war decade, estimates expenditures will average $24,000,000,000 annually over this 10-year period. To this we must add a rough total of $13,000,000,000 for the cost of State and local government. Thus on a minimum basis it will cost the American people $37,000,000,000 per annum in the post-war period for the luxury of being governed, and in this Federal Budget, estimated at $24,000,000,000 average, I would point out most forcibly that there is no provision whatsoever for debt retirement. From a perusal of the debate last month on lend-lease in the House of Representatives, however, it would appear that at least one Member of the House, Mr. MCMURRAY of Wisconsin, is a complete devotee of the Alvin H. Hansen school of thought on the question of indebtedness. Mr. MCMURRAY on this point about the debt is quoted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as follows:

"Mr. MCMURRAY. On this point about the debt, remember that every dollar of public debt also represents in the pockets of certain American people, that much assets. We are no worse off, as a total economy, because we have that debt; because the debt is property in the vaults of your own banks and of your own accounts, and if you cancel the public debt completely—do not misunderstand me on this—if you cancel that public debt completely, you would not increase the wealth or decrease the wealth of the United States of America one cent. You would merely redistribute the wealth.

"Mr. KNUTSON. How about the people?

"Mr. MCMURRAY. Some people would gain, and some would lose. You take the money out of one pocket and put it into another pocket, but the two pockets are in different pairs of pants.

"Mr. KNUTSON. I know the President says our national debt is not a debt, because we owe it to ourselves."

And a little later in this interesting colloquy:

"Mr. MCMURRAY. I said that if this debt were repudiated—let us assume the debt is $300,000,000,000—if the debt is repudiated, all the American people would gain $300,000,000,000; all of them put together, and some of them would lose the $300,000,000,000 which is represented by the bonds they now own.

"Mr. KNUTSON. I get you. It is a bookkeeping transaction."

I suppose if we were to follow through with this interesting bit of economics that it would be next in order to legalize theft and highway robbery on the theory that by such action all that happens is that some of the people lose while others gain.

Now in estimation these post-war budget figures and prospective tax receipts, the conference on fiscal policy assumes "at least a resolute and intelligent attempt by those responsible for public policy to balance the Budget." Possibly an elaborate assumption, but let us start with it and now assume this picture: A debt of two hundred and fifty billions, which of course economists of the Rooseveltian school think is really no debt at all, because it is owed to ourselves; an annual cost of government, for the 10-year period after the war, of thirty-seven billions each year with the Budget supposedly balanced but with absolutely no provision whatsoever for retirement of the debt, and here we have a picture which seems to be serious enough without looking for the further difficulties which I am now about to describe.

I see a tendency evidenced by pending legislation which unless restrained, will, I can promise you, throw our Budget out of balance in perpetuity. There isn't time today to go into great detail nor do cold figures ever add much to a discussion of this character. However, let me just touch on a few of the bills which are pending before the House and Senate and which would create new obligations in addition to the prospective Budget figures I have just discussed. We find that they cover a multiplicity of subjects—agricultural relief, post-war public works, post-war highway construction, veterans' relief, adult education, farm home aid, flood control, reorganization and readjustment of aviation, Federal housing, assistance to small business, world-wide relief programs, world-wide economic adjustment, stabilization of international finance, as well as many others. It is impossible to give any accurate forecast as to what the aggregate cost of this proposed new legislation might be. The great majority of the bills merely authorize that a particular thing be done or a certain form of relief be granted and that the necessary moneys to carry such programs into effect are authorized to be appropriated without any estimate or provision in the bill for specific authorizations. However, to give some idea of the staggering figures involved, I list herewith a few of the bills which do specifically authorize the appropriation of Federal funds:

Adjusted-service pay, fifteen billions.

Several different kinds of highway bills, totaling approximately eight billions.

A bill for municipal development, one billion.

For highways and airport systems, twelve billions.

For Federal-aid post-war planning, public works, eighty-five millions.

Varied agricultural bills totaling approximately seven hundred and twenty-five millions.

Adult education, per annum, fifty-six millions.

Fifteen millions for farm homes, and the same amount for Hawaiian highways.

Five hundred millions for a central reconstruction fund and so on, almost ad infinitum.

One sample of the spirit of the times was well evidenced the other day in the Senate in connection with the passage of the agricultural appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1945. Included therein was an item of $50,000,000 for a project titled, "School Lunch Program." This is in the picture only for the next fiscal year but there are several bills presently before the Senate designed to make the project a permanent fixture.

Now it is a difficult proposition for a man in politics to stand on his feet before any audience and appear to oppose a project which seems to be as worthy as this one. In such remarks as I may make to illustrate my point, however, I am not opposing lunches for school children as such, but I am distinctly questioning the wisdom of having lunches for school children in the city of Newton or the town of Brookline, and in the 350-odd cities and towns in Massachusetts paid for by the Treasury of the United States—in whole or in part.

I am a firm believer in home rule and State rights and in having the Federal Government leave to the States and the States to the local communities all projects which can possibly be so directed. There is no city or town in Massachusetts that cannot afford to take care of a school-lunch program in its budget. If by chance, there is a community which cannot, then it should seek help from the State Government. But when we start to Washington to dip into the Federal Treasury for a project of this character, we start a procession which can end in only one graveyard—the graveyard where bankrupt governments have been laid to rest.

To the general subject of post-war Federal expenditures above and beyond the twenty-four billion budget total, before referred to, there may be added another item—aid for foreign countries—evidenced already by the recent authorization of Congress—the initial U. N. R. R. A. authorization, totaling $1,350,000,000. I voted for this initial authorization and I shall be glad within reason to vote for further authorizations and appropriations but I say to those who evidence a desire and a willingness to extend aid to the peoples of the war-devastated countries, that the question is, how far can we go in this direction without wrecking our own country. Obviously no one ever saved a drowning man by jumping in and drowning with him—no nation can save another nation by merely becoming poverty stricken with it, and only by staying a solvent, sound, free America can we help the peoples anywhere in the rest of the world to help themselves back into a state of peace, prosperity, and progress. In this phase of post-war expenditures as in every other phase, emotionalism and worthy desires must be tempered by cold figures, hard facts, and common sense.

Had I time, I should like to more than just mention another leak in our post-war financial stability, a device recently grown in favor in Washington—the device of Government corporations.

Previous to 1916 the corporate form was being very sparingly used by the Government and, when used, it had been the general policy to liquidate such corporate entities as soon as they had served their purpose. The New Deal administration seems to have abandoned such a policy and favors the use of the corporate device for governmental operations because it appears to have flexibility and speed of action plus the ability to achieve complete absence of control. In the past 10 years Government corporations have increased their assets 500 percent. Some have no limit on their authority to issue obligations. A partial list of these corporations shows a total of 110,000 employees with an annual pay roll of $228,000,000. Thirty-two are not even under the supervision of the General Accounting Office. Their total assets over a year ago were upward of twenty-three billions. These are a few high spots in this picture which becomes vastly more disquieting when we find that any attempt to analyze these corporations and their operations is practically frustrated by the complicated and mixed up nature of their financial control. Investigation agencies have thus far had great difficulty in securing a complete list by name alone. New corporations seem to appear suddenly. Dormant ones seem to become active overnight.

The great danger here is twofold. The first is that these corporations, without the knowledge of the Congress or the people, have obligated the taxpayers to stand behind scores of billions of dollars of commitments. The second danger is that these corporate agencies compete with private business, do it without control, without accounting, without good business operation and at the expense of the taxpayer including the business taxpayers with whom they compete. Here then in the Government corporate device is another nail in the coffin of prospective Government chaos and bankruptcy unless we can, when the war is over, induce the appropriating branch of our Government, the Congress of the United States, to learn the lesson of uncontrolled Federal expenditure.

I do, however, want to say to you and to every citizen of this Commonwealth, that unless minority groups interested in their own pet projects, unless the type of worthy but in my opinion misguided citizens who have been deluging me with pleas to have the United States Treasury pay for the lunches served in the cafeterias of our schools in Massachusetts, unless all of us here at home can learn to practice some degree of restraint and take the pressure for appropriating money for this, that, and the other thing off the backs of their Representatives and Senators, you and I will never live long enough to see a balanced budget or anywhere near a balanced budget in these United States as far as the Federal Government is concerned.

I need not remind an audience of this character that in the post-war world, people can, of course, have what they want. They can have state socialism or free enterprise but they cannot indefinitely have a mixture of the two.

The Treasury of the United States Government is just as good as the productive capacity of the free people in the United States, and no better, and when you mix your economic drinks as we are trying to do in this country, a drink of state socialism will crowd out the productive growth of the economic garden just as weeds will destroy the Victory garden on which you hope to subsist this summer.

We are going to win this war, because it has been clearly demonstrated that American fighting men are as good as they ever were in the history of this country and because they are better than the enemies they must conquer. They could not win, however, without the tools of war which have been produced in this country on a scale never even imagined or dreamed of and never thought even remotely possible by Hitler, Tojo, and their satellites who so tremendously underestimated the productive capacity of a free people. These tools of war in turn could never have been produced even by a free people unless a few brilliant and patriotic souls were fortunately at hand and available and able by the inexhaustible processes of research and development to give to industry the know-how to produce these tools which our enemies have not yet been able to equal.

So in the final analysis, brains in the research field, ability in the management field, know-how in the field of skilled tool makers and mechanics and the quick adaptability of the average American workman have given us the equipment with which to wage a successful and victorious war, and in the post-war world, we need have no fear of unemployment, of distress or hardship or of a low standard of living, just so long as the Treasury of the United States is run on a prudent basis just as your business and mine as well as our own personal affairs must be run. If this example can be set us in the post-war world by the Government of the United States, research, management, skilled and unskilled workmen under the aegis of free enterprise will do the rest. If this pattern is not before us, no man in this room will live long enough to see the end of the difficulties which will face the American people.

India's Soft Spot

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KARL E. MUNDT

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I am attaching hereto an interesting and informative article from the May issue of Common Sense. The proper approach and solution to the problems of India and Asia are of vital importance in the Gargantuan tasks of winning our war in the Pacific and helping to develop a new era of prosperity and peaceful advancement in that section of the world.

INDIAN'S SOFT SPOT

(By Louis Fischer)

The presence of Japanese troops on Indian soil is much more than a military fact. It has explosive political possibilities. Japan, of course, cannot conquer India or any large part of it by force of arms. Tojo will therefore try to win India with a weapon called Bose.

Subhas Chandra Bose is the stormy petrel of Indian politics. He has fought Mahatma Gandhi and Jawaharlal Nehru, India's nationalist leaders. India knows him well. In 1938, he was elected president of India's biggest political party, the Congress. Today he is the chief of the Indian Nationalist government formed in Singapore under Tojo's umbrella.

If Japan seizes an important Indian city, Bose will plant his government on Indian territory and appeal to his fellow Indians for support. As head of his so-called free India he would ask Indians to rebel against the rule of the British Raj.

Bose is not only the prime minister of Tokyo's quisling Indian government. He is also commander in chief of an Indian army. When the Japanese quickly occupied Hong Kong, Malaya, Singapore and other British colonies in the Far East shortly after Pearl Harbor, they captured thousands of Indian soldiers. Later, these prisoners of war were released and, together with Indian residents of Japan, Burma and the Dutch islands, they were organized into Japan's Indian army estimated at 100,000 strong.

Several times each day, Nippon's radio now announces that it is not Japan which is invading India; it is this Indian army that is coming home to expel the British. Already Bose is calling on Indians in the British Army to refuse to fight their Indian brothers under his command.

India's strange climate may facilitate the task of this Tokyo puppet. By May the monsoon rains start and any Japanese forces that are entrenched in India at that time will remain until the dry season begins late in October. More than 100 inches of rain falls in the Assam border area during the 6 monsoon months, and fighting stops. So Bose would have until the end of 1944 to foment an Indian mutiny.

Irrespective of military developments, Subhas Chandra Bose is a person to be reckoned with in Indian affairs. Many Indians regard him as a romantic, fanatic, fiercely-intransigent foe of British rule. He is tubercular and tempestuous. In college he organized a strike of the student body and attempted to beat up a British professor who had spoken disparagingly of Indians. He was suspended from school for 2 years.

During this interval in his educational career he underwent a strange religious experience. Bose's father was a prosperous, worldly lawyer but his mother was devout and well versed in Indian religious philosophy. Under her influence, he decided to dedicate himself to the search for God. One still night in 1914, Subhas Chandra Bose, in his late 'teens, stole away from his family like Buddha and started walking to the Himalaya Mountains, the traditional home of Indian spirituality. He trudged from one height to the other consulting holy men and viewing shrines. He did not find what he was seeking. So he descended into the valley of the Ganges, bathed at sacred Hindu sites and debated with the pious.

A serious illness cut short the young man's quest. Penniless and unknown, he languished in dirty huts until, by chance, someone learned of his identity, telegraphed his parents who had been tracing him for months, and arranged that he return to his home in Calcutta.

After this shaking adventure, he was admitted to the Scottish Churches College in India. Subsequently he was an honor student at Cambridge University in England. Upon his return to his native land, he became a civil servant.

Then, in the early twenties of this century, Mahatma Gandhi launched his first noncooperation movement against the British. Disregarding the entreaties of his family and friends who endeavored to convince him that a brilliant official career awaited him in the service of the British, Bose resigned his government post and joined the nationalist movement. He edited publications, sat in jail, made speeches, and organized. His former friends, whom I met in India in 1942, look upon him as an excellent political organizer.

Bose's talents and energy won him followers and nation-wide popularity, but his individualism and impetuosity made him a disruptive influence in Indian politics. He threatened to split the Congress Party led by Gandi and Nehru. Yet he could not be downed, and in 1938 he became the president of the Congress Party.

At the annual convention, Bose made a ringing plea for socialism. He spoke warm words for the Soviet Union. India could only gain her freedom, he declared, "if Great Britain becomes a Socialist state." As for India, he asserted, "socialism is not an immediate problem for us; nevertheless, Socialist propaganda is necessary to prepare the country for socialism when political freedom has been won." And he added, "I have no doubt in my mind that our chief national problems relating to the eradication of poverty, illiteracy, and disease and to scientific production and distribution can be effectively tackled only along Socialist lines." At that time, however, he believed that there should be more than one political party; he did not favor dictatorship.

Numerous Indian leaders differed sharply with Bose. These differences were accentuated when the Second World War broke out in September 1939. Without consulting India's leaders, the Viceroy immediately announced that India was at war. Gandhi nevertheless interviewed the Viceroy and promised not to obstruct the war effort. But Bose protested and launched his own antiwar Forward party. The British threw him into jail. With the help of the Indian underground, Bose fled abroad in January 1941.

Mystery now veiled his movements. Some said he was in Moscow beseeching Stalin for aid to liberate India; Russia then had a pact with the Nazis, and the Communists were antiwar. Others presumed to know that he was in Berlin. Details of his interview with Hitler were reported. Soon, from an unidentified foreign radio station, he began broadcasting regularly. India listened. When I visited India in the summer of 1942, his whereabouts were the subject of much discussion. Was he in Germany? Or Japan? By 1943, it was definitely established that he had joined the Japanese in Singapore. There he set up his Indian Nationalist Government and began recruiting Indian war prisoners for his army which is now making thrusts at the British in India.

During my week as Gandhi's house guest, I asked the Mahatma about Bose. Both the Indian and foreign press had reported that Bose had been killed in an airplane accident over Japanese-held territory. On hearing the news, Gandhi sent a telegram of condolence to Bose's mother.

Sitting on the earthern floor in Gandhi's tiny mud-walled, bamboo-roofed hut, I said to my host, "I was rather shocked when I heard that you had telephoned to Bose's mother."

"Do you mean because I had reacted to news which later proved false?" Grandhi asked.

"No," I replied, "rather because you had praised a man who went to Fascist countries and identified himself with their ause."

"I did it," Gandhi affirmed, "because I regard Bose as a patriot of patriots. He may be misguided. I think he is misguided. I have often opposed Bose. Twice I kept him from becoming president of Congress. Finally he did become president though my views frequently differed from his. But suppose," Gandhi continued, "he had gone to Russia or America to win help for India. Would that have made it better?"

"Yes, of course," I said, "it does make a difference to whom you go for assistance."

"I do not want help from anybody to make India free," Gandhi asserted. "I want India to save herself." Later he said, "The Germans and Japanese proclaim every day that they do not want to lay hands on India, they merely want to help us get our freedom. I do not want their sympathy or help, for the simple reason that I know they are not philanthropists. All I want is a respite for India from all foreign domination."

I made it my business while in India to interrogate every Indian leader on the question of Bose. In Wardha, a town in central India near Gandhi's village, I interviewed Maulana Abul Kalam Azad, the Moslem who succeeded Bose as president of the Indian Congress Party. Although he understood a good deal of English, he did not trust his knowledge of the language and so Jawaharlal Nehru was acting as interpreter. When I asked Azad about Bose, Nehru laughed and exclaimed, "The Test Question," for he knew that I was judging Indians by whether they rejected Bose or justified his conduct in going to Axis lands.

"Bose has taken the crooked path," Azad said.

On my second day in India, I talked at great length with Nehru in New Delhi. Among other things, I inquired about Bose. Nehru is a passionate anti-Fascist and has proved his antagonism to Hitler and Japan by activity on behalf of Abyssinia, Loyalist Spain and China. In conversation with me, Nehru denounced Bose. He said, 'People here think Bose politically wrong and morally wrong. But no Indian regards him as a traitor. He has been in touch with the Axis because he wishes to serve India. That's a misguided deed but it is not treason to India."

It is this attitude which makes Subhas Chandra Bose a factor to be reckoned with in the present Indian situation.

The big puzzle now is whether Bose's propaganda will impress Indian civilians and Indian soldiers. Two years ago, the Indian people heard many anti-Japanese statements from their recognized political leaders. The threat of a Japanese invasion of India first arose in the spring of 1942, after Burma fell. On April 26, 1942, the following appeared in Gandhi's weekly English-language magazine, Harijan:

"Question: If the Japanese really mean what they say and are willing to help to free India from the British yoke, why should we not willingly accept their help? Gandhi's answer: It is folly to suppose that aggressors can ever be benefactors. The Japanese may free India from the British yoke but only to put in their own instead. I have always maintained that we should not seek any other powers' help to free India from the British yoke. That would not be a nonviolent approach. We should have to pay a heavy price, if we ever consented to take foreign aid as against the British."

In the same magazine, on June 14, 1942, Gandhi wrote: "I do not want the help of the Japanese—not even to free India."

But Gandhi's correspondents pressed: "What to do if the Japanese come?"

"These questions," Gandhi replied, "come from Andhradesh where the people rightly or wrongly feel that the attack is imminent. My answer has already been given in these columns. Neither food nor shelter is to be given nor any dealings to be established with them. They should be made to feel that they are not wanted. But, of course, things are not going to happen quite so smoothly as the question implies. It is a superstition to think that they will come as friendlies. No attacking party has ever done so. It spreads fire and brimstone among the populace. It forces things from people. If the people cannot resist fierce attack and are afraid of death, they should evacuate the infested place in order to deny compulsory service to the enemy. If unfortunately some people are captured or fall into the enemy's hands, they are likely to be shot if they do not obey orders, e. g., render forced labor. If the captives face death cheerfully, their task is done. They have saved their own and their country's honor."

A week later, in Harijan, Gandhi replied to a question about Subhas Bose's policy. "I have never attached the slightest importance or weight to the friendly professions of the Axis Powers," Gandhi declared. "If they come to India they will come not as deliverers but as sharers in the spoil. There can therefore be no question of my approval of Subhas Babu's policy. The old difference of opinion between us persists."

This was not only Gandhi's personal position. It was the fixed point of view of the Congress Party, which carries considerable weight in India. An April 1942 resolution of the All-India Congress Committee affirmed that "the committee repudiates the idea that freedom can come through interference or invasion by any foreign nation, whatever the professions of that nation may be. In case an invasion takes place, it must be resisted. * * * We may not bend the knee to the aggressor nor obey any of his orders. We may not look to him for favors nor fall to his bribes. If he wishes to take possession of our houses and fields, we must refuse to give them up, even if we have to die in the effort to resist them."

Since August 9, 1942, however, Gandhi, Nehru, Azad, and thousands of other prominent Indian nationalists have been in jail and are silenced. They can no longer caution Indians against listening when Bose summons them to rebel against the British. One leader is still free. She is Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, Indian poetess and a former president of the Congress Party. She was dangerously ill when the wholesale arrests of nationalists took place in 1942 and therefore remained at liberty. On January 27, 1944, the Hindustani Times, of New Delhi, published a statement by Mrs. Naidu in which she said, "We have been consistently against any form of foreign invasion, no matter what label it may bear, because we have had quite enough of foreign invasions. There are no two opinions among us on this." Speaking for the central committee of Congress, she added, "We of the working committee have always been anti-Japanese. We would be anti-anybody who tried to invade us. We are against all forms of aggression as we are against all forms of exploitation. That is the position of the working committee."

Since making this anti-Japanese statement, Mrs. Naidu's public utterances have been put under a ban. In any case, she has less influence than Gandhi or Nehru or Azad. Besides, in the last 2 years India has lived through much turmoil and a famine to boot, and these may have caused much bitterness which would be grist to Bose's mill. According to an official report given by Sir Reginald Maxwell, home member of the British Government of India to the legislative assembly, the political disturbances between August and December 1942 resulted in considerable bloodshed. On 538 occasions, Maxwell stated, the military and the police fired on crowds, killing 940 demonstrators and injuring 1,630. In 5 places airplanes were used to disperse crowds.

These events, coupled with the continued imprisonment of the nationalist leaders, would naturally sow resentment against the British. Undoubtedly, Bose's underground followers in India have exploited the mood.

I find this item in my Indian diary: "Bombay, June 17, 1942, stand-up buffet dinner at Mrs. Krishna Huthesingh's, Nehru's sister. Mrs. Reed, an Indian woman married to a Scotsman who edits an English paper in Calcutta, told me that recently a street demonstration took place in Calcutta in favor of the war. Most of the people in the parade, she said, were Communists. In a central thoroughfare a Bose supporter rushed up to the marching column and stabbed a marcher to death. * * *"

Bose is from Calcutta, the home of Indian terrorists. Now he is broadcasting to them as head of an Indian nationalist government and announces his approach to liberate India. This cannot but stir the imagination of those who, unlike Gandhi, believe in violence, and, who, unlike Gandhi, Nehru, and the Congress Party, would join with the Japanese or the devil to achieve independence.

The next few months will see a sharp, monumental struggle between the philosophy of 75-year-old Mahatma Gandhi, ill in a British jail, and the opposing philosophy of young Subhas Chandra Bose, Japanese puppet in India. The stake in the struggle is the part which 400,000,000 Indians are to play in the war and in the post-war. Indians constitute one-fifth of the human race. The tendency in India today is toward extremism and away from Gandhi's nonviolence and Nehru's reasonableness. Bose, the prophet of violence, will affect India's political thinking even if he never gets much further than the Burma border. There is no doubt that Gandhi's influence has waned since he went to jail on August 9, 1942. In the storm that is raging in Indian minds and hearts, Indians find Gandhi's ideas too temperate and his methods too slow. Ever since Gandhi became the dominant figure in Indian affairs—"The biggest thing in India," as the Viceroy said to me—he threw his weight into the scale of moderation, gradualness, and peaceful means. Perhaps his star is sinking. There is a new star in the Indian heaven—Subhas Chandra Bose. This incalculable comet today moves within the orbit of the "Rising Sun," and the bulk of politically-minded Indians therefore turn away from it. But Indians are losing hope; they despair of getting national freedom from the British after the war. Their discouragement may be Bose's opportunity.

Churchill's November 10, 1942, statement: "I have not become the King's first minister in order to liquidate the British Empire" made numerous Indians doubt the sincerity of the Cripps offer of March 1942, which was designed to create the impression that India could leave the empire. Nevertheless, liberals and moderates in India tried to make themselves believe that the end of the war would see a change of heart in London and New Delhi. Such illusions die hard because they are born of a last hope. But on April 20, 1944, Emanuel Shinwell, cosistent labor critic of the Churchill government, stridently backed Churchill on empire, and Arthur Greenwood, labor leader and often opposed to the government's policy, "approved everything Shinwell said and stressed the resolve of the British people to keep the Empire together after the war." That made it easy for Churchill to close the discussion with a reiteration of his "no liquidation" statement.

So it is obvious that India will not be given freedom. The Indian nation can expect no help from inside England or from the United Nations. China would like to oust the British from India in order to reinsure her own freedom from imperialist pressure. But China lacks the power.

Thus, far from advancing the cause of Indian freedom, this war has set it back. The resultant bitterness will dominate the political minds of Asia in the post-war period and conduce to the flowering of extremists like Bose.

The pattern of the peace settlement—and India's place in it—are already pretty clear. Field Marshal Smuts and Lord Halifax, among others, have revealed the official British views. Smuts foresees a trinity—Russia, America, and Britain—dominating world politics and making the peace. But Russia and America are strong; Russia, Smuts says, will be the "mistress of Europe." Britain is weak. How then can England establish a balance of power within the trinity? To match Russia's sphere of influence in eastern and central Europe, Smuts urges England to carve a sphere of influence for herself in western Europe and gather her empire more closely around her.

Thus, Russia's expansionism confirms British imperialism. Or is it the other way round? Does Britain's insistence on preserving the past impel Russia to restore her past? In any case Churchill's "hold our own" and Stalin's announced intention to get back what the Czar owned make up the quickly emerging pattern of the peace to come. America's response may be a new American imperialism on the islands of the Pacific and along the course of a pipe line in Arabia.

With each of the three major powers seeking to acquire new sources and symbols of strength, how can anyone expect England to surrender India? If the peace is written in terms of nationalism and spheres of influence, there is no hope for a free India. What this will mean to half the human race that inhabits Asia we will know in years to come.

Free Speech in Newark, N. J.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ARTHUR WALSH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 29 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. WALSH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I as unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial entitled "See Here, Mr. Farley," published in the Newark, N. J., Evening News of May 15, 1944.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEE HERE, MR. FARLEY

No stranger to Jersey City, its mayor, and its ways, James A. Farley returned to Journal Square last week. He returned not in his old capacity as Democratic national chairman bearing gifts, but as a guest speaker before the local Kiwanis Club. Introduced by Harry Moore, an old friend, who knows Mr. Hague, too, the former Postmaster General spoke, in part, as follows:

"My name is added to the rather cosmopolitan list of those who have spoken, started to speak, or attempted to speak here despite the rigorous restrictions against speeches delivered and undelivered. This has served to make Journal Square known throughout the Nation. From the conflicts that have occurred, history is bound to note this spot as one of the battlegrounds where free speech was firmly established, together with the American way of life."

Ah, but "those conflicts," Mr. Farley, were in the long, long ago. In the intervening years Mr. Hague has seen the light, also a Federal court order and the fourth term. The old ban on Communists no longer exists. The C. I. O. comes and goes without hindrance and more often it stays. His honor is a last-ditch defender of the Constitution—New Jersey's old one, that is. The Communists, New York branch, have adopted Mr. Hague as one of their own heroes, only slightly to the right of Brother Browder and Pravda. C. I. O. organizers and speakers are no longer driven into the outer darkness and the Erie ferries.

So you see, Mr. Farley, times have changed and Mr. Hague with them. And no more cracks, please, about free speech in Journal Square. It's practically as free as air, if sometimes not so clear.

Allotments of Appropriations for Federal Agencies and Corporations

REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN J. COCHRAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, at times such as we are now experiencing there should be full cooperation between the President and the Congress. Such an attitude is most beneficial to the war effort.

I regret to say I see a quarrel in the making, and only a determined stand on the part of the Members of this House can prevent it.

As you are aware the President has by Executive order set up many agencies and instrumentalities to assist in prosecuting the war. In many instances he has provided the necessary expenditures from funds voted by the Congress in a lump sum without restrictions. So far as I am aware only one agency has been openly criticized, that being the Committee on Fair Employment Practice. There is a strong minority at the moment seeking to abolish that agency. Evidence of that effort was apparent last week when an amendment was offered to strike an appropriation from the war agencies bill. As you know the amendment prevailed in the committee but on a teller vote in the House the item was restored by a vote of 123 to 119. It now goes to the Senate.

When the independent offices appropriation bill was considered in the Senate an amendment was added. The bill was sent to conference and a conference report is about to be filed. In that report is the Senate amendment I refer to. It is legislation on an appropriation bill and must be brought back for a separate vote. This amendment is very far reaching. While it is directly aimed at the Fair Employment Practice Committee it also includes dozens of other agencies. The Senate amendment provided that after July 1, 1944, no part of any appropriation shall be allotted or made available to any agency or instrumentality, including those established by Executive order, unless the Congress has appropriated money specifically for such agency or instrumentality, or authorized the expenditure of funds by it.

The Comptroller General says 26 agencies will be affected by this amendment and aside from that it has not been definitely determined as to whether or not certain corporations would be affected. It is my understanding that the chief counsel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is of the opinion that subsidiaries of that corporation are affected. The Comptroller General also names 19 corporations which might be affected in some way by this provision. The list of agencies named by the Comptroller General are:

Liaison Office for Personnel Management.
Committee for Congested Production Areas.
Board of War Communications.
Committee on Fair Employment Practice.
American Commission for the Protection and Salvage of Artistic and Historic Monuments in Europe.
Committee to Investigate Racial Discriminations in Certain Fields of Railroad Employment.
Federal Interdepartmental Safety Council.
Federal Real Estate Board.
Interdepartmental Committee to Consider Cases of Subversive Activities on the Part of Federal Employees.
Interdepartmental War Savings Board Committee.
President's Committee for Education of Men Demobilized From the Armed Forces.
President's War Relief Control Board.
War Refugee Board.
Federal Fire Council.
Patent Planning Commission.
Coal Mines Administration.
Puerto Rico Legislative Committee.
Wage Adjustment Board.
Foreign Economic Administration—some functions.

The list of corporations named by the Comptroller General are:

American President Lines, Ltd.
Cargoes, Inc.
Colonial Mica Corporation.
Copper Recovery Corporation.
Defense Homes Corporation.
Federal National Mortgage Association.
Federal Subsistence Homesteads Corporation.
Panama Railroad Company.
Puerto Rico Cement Corporation.
Steel Recovery Corporation.
Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc.
United States Spruce Production Corporation.
War Emergency Pipelines, Inc.
War Hemp Industries, Inc.
War Materials, Inc.
Warrior River Terminal Company.
Defense Supplies Corporation.
Metals Reserve Company.
Petroleum Reserves Corporation.
Rubber Development Corporation.
Rubber Reserve Company.
United States Commercial Company.
Institute of Inter-American Affairs.
Institute of Inter-American Transportation.
Inter-American Educational Foundation, Inc.
Inter-American Navigation Corporation.
Prencinradio.

Most of these agencies and corporations are engaged solely in connection with the war effort and were set up by the President under Executive order. It is my understanding that the House conferees have agreed to accept the Senate amendment with an amendment. A motion will be made to recede and concur with an amendment. This House amendment strikes out the date in the Senate provision which was July 1, 1944, and makes the effective date January 1, 1945. In other words, it simply delays the death sentence 6 months. This amendment is of such importance that I think all Members of the House should familiarize themselves with the situation that will confront the Executive branch of the Government if it is approved.

If the House does not vote down the amendment it will be in the bill when it goes to the White House. I cannot conceive the President will be willing to sign the bill if it contains such a provision as it directly affects so many war agencies set up by him. I feel he will hold it will impede the war effort. The amendment would, so far as affected agencies are concerned, prevent the President from allocating any money under his control for expenses.

I insist the passage of this amendment by the House will invoke a quarrel with the President. In my humble opinion the public will overwhelmingly side with the President. Congress will be labeled as having gone on a strike and deserting those behind the guns.

Members should not permit their views on the Fair Employment Practice Committee to be used as an instrumentality to interfere with the efficient operation of other necessary war agencies. Let each project be judged separately, not collectively.

Should this amendment become a law, Congress would either be required to authorize appropriations for each or make a direct appropriation for each before they could legally continue after January 1, 1945. As I said at the outset, this is no time for a quarrel between the President and the Congress.

I appeal to the Members of the House to study this amendment carefully so you can vote intelligently when the motion is offered. I am sure if you will do this the motion will be defeated.

A Word to the Wise

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, all people with good sense know that labor unions have their proper place in the American way of life; that they are necessary and desirable; that they are here to stay.

It is equally true that the overwhelming majority of our people know and admit that they are subject to the same manipulation by ambitious politicians and racketeers as are many other organizations. Many of those who do not believe in our form of government and in particular the Communists have infiltrated themselves into labor unions and exercise a power out of all proportion to their number or their real worth.

Nothing is gained by condemning all unions; nor is anything gained by insisting that all unions are perfect.

Action, vigorous and positive, but tolerant and understanding, will correct the intolerable situation which has all too long prevailed and which at the moment is causing many good citizens and many overseas men to be resentful of the C. I. O. Political Action Committee's program.

Reform should come from within the union ranks.

It may go too far if it comes from without. It may destroy as well as reform.

An editorial from the Knoxville (Tenn.) Journal of May 24 states one phase of the problem clearly. That editorial reads as follows:

Today, as set out in a story on page 1 of today's Journal, a young women's organization is to be addressed here by a Rev. Charles C. Webber. The meeting is to be held in the Y. W. C. A. building. The Reverend Mr. Webber is billed to speak as a representative of the C. I. O.'s Political Action Committee.

The speaker's background is of interest. Formerly he was one of the originators of the National Religion and Labor Foundation, of which Sidney Hillman was the first president.

A committeeman for the foundation, writing in its official organ, made this significant observation:

"It is no longer a question of the need for revolution; the question is as to the method of bringing the revolution to pass * * * the work of revolution would have to be carried through a Lenin leadership. * * * Consequently, our concern is to build the understanding leadership from those who are ready to digest the strong meat of direct revolutionary preparation."

This quotation gives, it appears to us, a pretty clear indication of the religious character of the foundation which Webber represents.

But that is not all.

What Webber himself stands for seems to fit in perfectly with the official viewpoint of the foundation. To a conference of Middle Atlantic Seminary students he is quoted as saying:

"The missionary of tomorrow will show the workers how they can bring about the abolition of capitalism. * * * He will sustain the workers in their efforts by picketing with strikers. * * * He will assist in establishing labor colleges where * * * the contribution of Soviet Russia in her attempt to establish a new social order will be discussed."

The appearance here of Rev. Mr. Webber, and the appearance in other parts of the country of large numbers of individuals of his viewpoint, raise a question that has for long disturbed us and, no doubt, others.

That question, which is addressed not only to the leadership of the C. I. O., but even more particularly to the rank and file members of C. I. O. unions, is this:

Why does a great and powerful union organization, composed of probably 98 percent loyal and patriotic Americans, permit their movement to be spearheaded and led by men and women who are as hostile to the traditions and institutions of freedom in this country as Hitler himself?

That this is so, that such leadership is tolerated and even encouraged, is one of the great puzzles of our time.

Millions of C. I. O. members are working faithfully and loyally in the country's war industries. They have contributed of their thought, strength, and industry to making this Nation an allied arsenal. They have had their part in the greatest saga of mass production history has ever unrolled.

Not only that, but these same patriotic citizens, C. I. O. members, have contributed to the limit of their ability to the financing of the war. They have bought bonds; they have taken part in the Red Cross drives; they have responded to every appeal for community support of the war effort on the home front.

Most important of all, these C. I. O. members have sent their sons by the hundreds of thousands into the armed forces of their country to fight and die, if need be, on any one of a dozen different battle fronts of the world.

These things bespeak more loudly than words the same love of country among C. I. O. members that burns in the hearts of any other group of United States citizens. These acts constitute a pattern of patriotism that is as easily identifiable and as unmistakable as a sunrise.

Yet it is this same great body of highly organized workers, who even now are continuing to answer the call of their country in its hour of peril, who sponsor and set the imprimatur of their approval upon individuals such as this same Rev. Mr. Webber, whose obvious objective is not the welfare of the worker but the effectuation of the Moscow party line.

Under such leadership political action becomes nothing less than the avowed destruction of the American system of life under which, of all the nations on the globe, including Russia, for more than a century and a half our people have enjoyed freedom and the highest level of economic prosperity the world has ever known.

In following such a course, the C. I. O. leadership arouses in the minds of millions of otherwise friendly United States citizens growing fear of its purposes. It alienates, from the C. I. O. and all other branches of trade-unionism, that support which most of us feel should be properly given unionism of the American brand, but feel just as strongly should be withheld from the Russian variety.

If there is an answer which can be given to this baffling misdirection of the purposes of the millions of loyal American citizens in the C. I. O. membership, we should like to have it. Mind you, we said an answer, not the usual denial that the broad Red streak in either the C. I. O. leadership or its political action committee exists.

Mr. Paul Christopher is head of the C. I. O. in Tennessee. An explanation from him of this situation would be of interest, not only to us but, we are confident, to thousands of C. I. O. readers who are doubtless as mystified by the course their union is taking as we are.

Mr. Speaker, the unions should do their own house cleaning.

Cooperation on the Missouri

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MIKE MANSFIELD
OF MONTANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why the flood-control and irrigation interests of the people of the Missouri-Mississippi system cannot be integrated. We should not be fighting one another because our interests are mutually interdependent. The people of the arid and semiarid States want to keep their water and the people in the flood-control areas want them to keep it and not send it down to flood their lands or, for that matter, to improve navigation.

Flood control and irrigation are of prime importance to the life and welfare of all our people. If we can store our waters upstream we can help to control the floods downstream and, at the same time, bring more and more land into cultivation.

Water can also be used for the creation of power which in turn can be used to develop our resources for the benefit of all. Units of power derived from coal and oil cannot be replaced but units of energy obtained from water are replaceable. To conserve water and to use it wisely is to conserve, as well, our coal and oil reserves.

If we will forget our differences of the moment and plan for the future we can coordinate our efforts so that the upper and lower States' needs and interests will be considered and an equitable plan worked out for the benefit of the whole. Surely we are big enough and smart enough to plan for the comprehensive development of the whole basin so that all sections will benefit and the Nation, as a whole, will be the gainer.

Mr. Speaker, I am inserting in the RECORD a statement by O. S. Warden, president of the National Reclamation Association, as it appeared in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch recently, and an editorial from the Great Falls, Mont., Tribune, of May 23, 1944:

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch]

STATEMENT BY O. S. WARDEN, PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL RECLAMATION ASSOCIATION, BEFORE COMMERCE COMMITTEE, UNITED STATES SENATE

The National Reclamation Association, which has an affiliated membership representing the water interests in 17 Western States to the west of the ninety-seventh meridian, was organized 13 years ago to cooperate with the Federal Bureau of Reclamation and thereby promote the irrigation of western lands.

In thi great western area, there has always been a short water supply. We need every gallon we can get. We can use all that we have to advantage in the economy and the careful development of land and water resources, which are the abiding foundation of our progress—State and regional.

Quite naturally, we treasure every flowing stream and every storage for future use. Quite naturally, again, the whole West is up in arms if there is a proposal to take any of our water hundreds of miles away to be used in another place for a purpose other than the protection of property or the creation of production values.

BIG INCREASE IN CROPS

Under the Reclamation Act of 1902, plus private enterprise, about 22,000,000 acres of land have been made productive. Crop production has been increased annually $625,000,000. Property values have been created in the amount of $16,000,000,000.

Ninety percent of our agricultural production is used at home. These 17 so-called reclamation States purchase a billion a year in goods and services from outside their boundaries. If they can have first use of the water that flows out of their mountains, they will double these purchases of goods and services.

Fifteen million people live in these western States. We can make homes for 15,000,000 more if we are able to build projects, for the most part multiple in character, all of which can meet the test of benefit to the region where they are located, as well as add to the general welfare of the Nation.

This great work in the West is just about half done. We can 'rrigate 22,000,000 more acres if we have first use of the water. We can repay the cost over a period of years.

DIFFERENCES IN RAINFALL

Do not forget the limited water supply. There is a rainfall west of the ninety-seventh meridian of from 5 to 30 inches a year. East of this meridian there is a fall of from 30 to 60 inches.

These differentials in rainfall cannot be controlled by man. What we can do is to plan wisely and direct the use of the water. We can avoid conflicting plans. We owe this much to ourselves. I am sure there is an existent responsibility the Congress will wish to share.

There have come into the picture apparent differences, as plans have been prepared by the Army engineers and the engineers of the Bureau of Reclamation for development of the land and water resources of the great interstate Missouri River watershed, with its 2,500-mile river system reaching all the way from Three Forks, Mont., to St. Louis.

Nine States are involved—Montana, Wyoming, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, and Colorado. These States have a regional association organized to settle differences peacefully. Nine Governors and 16 committee representatives, in conference a few weeks ago, voted unanimously to wait until the over-all plan of the engineers of the Bureau of Reclamation was ready, and to urge a coordination of all plans into a harmony of policy in advance of action by the Congress.

LACK OF HARMONY

Now, what has happened? The engineers of the Bureau of Reclamation have finished a 5-year study and a plan for an over-all development of the entire Missouri watershed. The desired and requested coordination has not taken place. Meanwhile, there are the river and harbor bill (H. R. 3961), and the flood-control bill (H. R. 4485), that distinctly have to do with the use of the waters of the Missouri River, pressing for legislation advantage.

This is not the way to get along. These are the reasons we are here supporting an amendment to H. R. 3961, hoping to clear the atmosphere and to establish policies that look to mutually satisfactory conclusions.

I am sure the people of the West are for irrigation, for flood control and for improving navigation. They firmly believe there need be no conflict between irrigation and flood control, if these purposes are properly put together—that is, with a mutual assistance one to the other.

NATIONAL IRRIGATION POLICY

Furthermore, if there is a shortage of water for all desired irrigation and navigation, there ought to be a reckoning of resulting values—regional and otherwise. A blunt question intrudes: Do we need additional facilities for transportation more than we need self-supporting homes?

My confidence for the future finds strength in the record of Congress as it has prepared land and water legislation all the way through the 140 years following the Louisiana Purchase.

Under the Homestead Act of 1860 and the Reclamation Act of 1902, which was really an amendment to the Homestead Act, first 160 acres was made available to the settlers, then 320 acres, and then 640 acres. But without irrigation, settlers could not make a living on any size tract.

In these later years, there has been a narrowing of acreage with diversity of production as irrigation and reclamation have become a national policy. With such a record, Congress and the Government cannot—indeed, will not—wish to back away from the responsibility of today.

The time has arrived to clear away the cobwebs of uncertainty, to define policies and to write legislative definitions of what each Government agency having a part in the development of our land and water resources shall plan to do. Conflicts and striving for advantage are undesirable and unnecessary.

[From the Great Falls (Mont.) Tribune of May 23, 1944]

PUT THEM TOGETHER

Some of the upper Missouri River newspapers have declared uncompromising war on the lower river States over the issue of the allocation of the stream flow. Insofar as it is necessary to fight for our rights in the use of the water against efforts in Congress to deprive us of them, we will all unite up here to do battle. But that war between the upper and lower States is not the right approach to the beneficial development of the basin or of that of any other western river systems.

In the first of a series of editorials on the subject the St. Louis Post-Dispatch recently made the point, with which the Tribune agrees, that the upper and lower States should agree on a river plan that will benefit all of them or both regions will suffer in the fight for sectional advantage.

Competent Army engineers have fully studied the flood-control and navigation problems of the Missouri. The Reclamation Bureau engineers with equal competence have thoroughly studied the irrigation problems of the same basin. What is needed first of all is to put those studies and plans together into one over-all program. That certainly can and should be done quickly to the benefit of both sections. The Post-Dispatch is right that a drawn-out interstate battle for sectional advantage will damage the interests of all parts of the basin.

Resolution To Investigate Physically Handicapped

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN J. COCHRAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, no one could be more interested in the rehabilitation of the physically handicapped than I am, nor is anyone willing to do more than I am to rehabilitate these unfortunate citizens.

With a view to learning just what the Government and the States were doing in connection with this subject, I wrote the Honorable Paul McNutt, Administrator of the Federal Security Agency; also Chairman of the War Manpower Commission. He sends me a very interesting letter, going into detail in reference to the activities of the Government and States. He specifically points out what is being accomplished under Public Law 113 approved July 6, 1943.

Mr. Speaker, about a week ago I placed in the RECORD an article written by Mr. James E. Miller of the Mines Equipment Co. of St. Louis telling of the experience he has had in the rehabilitation in the factory of his company of the blind. He also has men who suffered from amputations that he is rehabilitating, including a veteran of the present war. What Mr. Miller has accomplished in this respect can be accomplished by other corporations if they can be induced to take an interest in such a program.

The Rules Committee last week reported a resolution providing for an investigation of this entire subject by the Committee on Labor.

Whether or not we should set up another investigating committee is, of course, for the House to decide.

Under the leave granted me, I include Mr. McNutt's letter as a part of my remarks:

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY,
Washington, May 25, 1944.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN COCHRAN: Reference is made to your letter of April 20, in which you request advice concerning the information available in the War Manpower Commission and the Federal Security Agency with respect to the subject of House Resolution 230. That resolution authorizes the appointment of a congressional committee (1) to conduct thorough studies and investigation of the extent and character of aid now given by the Federal, State, and local governments and private agencies to the physically handicapped; (2) to study and investigate the diffusion within the United States of such aid to the physically handicapped; and (2) to study and investigate the employment opportunities for the physically handicapped, and all other questions in relation thereto which would aid the Congress in any necessary remedial legislation. I am happy to inform you that both the Federal Security Agency and the War Manpower Commission have been very actively and continuously engaged in programs which deal with the problems of the physically handicapped and have available extensive data on the subject.

The War Manpower Commission was charged by the President with responsibility for assuring the most effective mobilization and maximum utilization of the Nation's manpower in the prosecution of the war. From the point of view of our civilian manpower resources, a handicapped person is one having a physical or mental deficiency, peculiarity, or impairment which requires that he be selectively placed. The United States Employment Service has been continuously engaged in studying the occupational significance of such handicaps in determining the type of work which a person having a particular kind of handicap could and could not do. Obviously, some handicaps prevent a worker from continuing in his usual occupation. In such cases selective placement or training for other kinds of work is required. Some handicaps require special consideration in order to protect a worker from being placed in employment which would aggravate his condition, or employment in which he would jeopardize the health or safety of others. The files of the United States Employment Service will reveal thousands of instances in which physically handicapped persons who had been either unemployed or engaged in insubstantial work have been trained for and placed in highly useful war jobs.

In the War Manpower Commission we have been concerned, since the creation of the Commission, with the training, utilization, and placement of the physically handicapped. On the basis of a national health survey conducted in 1935-36, the United States Public Health Service has estimated that there are at present approximately 23,600,000 persons in our population, exclusive of those in institutions, who have some physical defect or chronic disease. Of these, 16,300,000 are between the ages of 15 and 64, exclusive of 1,000,000 who are virtually invalids; these 16,300,000 persons consist of about equal numbers of men and women.

Not all the physically handicapped in the labor force are vocationally handicapped; our experience has indicated, however, that practically all persons included within the above figures as physically handicapped have a disability which constitutes an employment handicap at one time or another, either because of employer's specifications or prejudices or because of necessary readjustments or physical difficulties which are involved in shifting to a new job or a new occupation. Our experience indicates that all physically handicapped persons need special care at some time in making their employment adjustment; some require more attention than others. Of the 8,100,000 physically handicapped men between the ages of 15 and 64, the United States Public Health study revealed that approximately 6,700,000 need only selective placement, 1,000,000 require rehabilitation before they can be employed in industry, and nearly 350,000 require extensive rehabilitation and can be employed only in sheltered work.

Physically handicapped persons who were unemployed constituted potential entrants into the labor market for our war effort; they were used by the War Manpower Commission as a valuable reserve of manpower. A vigorous placement and training program, together with a widespread program to promote employer acceptance of the physically handicapped employee, was initiated by the War Manpower Commission and has produced outstanding results. In 1940 the total number of placements of physically handicapped persons was only 27,703; in 1941 this figure was almost doubled, the total placements reaching approximately 53,000. In 1942, 91,000 placements of physically handicapped persons were made; but in 1943, 194,129 physically handicapped persons were placed in employment. You will note that the 1943 figure represents an increase of 112 percent over the 1942 figure and an increase of over 700 percent during the 4-year period. We hope that this trend will continue in the post-war period.

The United States Employment Service has made special studies to determine the effectiveness of our program for the training and placement of handicapped persons in Connecticut, Ohio, and New York. The results of these studies will be made available to you upon request.

The War Manpower Commission is cooperating with the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, in making studies of the experience records of a representative group of employers in their employment of the handicapped. Included in the information which will be collected in these studies are data concerning the accident, productivity, absenteeism, and turn-over experience of the handicapped in comparison with the nonhandicapped. The studies will be made in a sufficiently large number of plants to present an authoritative picture of the experience of the handicapped in competitive employment. An advisory committee, including representatives from the War Manpower Commission and the Federal Security Agency, will advise the Bureau of Labor Statistics in the conduct of this program. We believe that the information so collected will present an authoritative answer to the objections very frequently voiced against the employment of the handicapped—that the handicapped are accident prone or are substandard in performance.

You may also be interested in a pamphlet published by the National Association of Manufacturers, entitled "Rehabilitation and Training for Post-War Employment." It contains a panel discussion, participated in by representatives of the Selective Service System, the War Manpower Commission, the Veterans' Administration, and of private industry, of the rehabilitation and training of disabled and medically discharged veterans.

Subsequent to the introduction of House Resolution 230 on May 6, 1943, Congress enacted legislation (Public Law 113 approved July 6, 1943) which provides a complete program of rehabilitation services for all types of handicapped persons including the physically and mentally handicapped.

These services are administered by the State boards of vocational education. Rehabilitation of the blind is administered by the State agencies for the blind, where such agency is legally authorized to administer rehabilitation services for this group. The Federal Security Agency is charged with the responsibility of certifying Federal funds, establishing standards, and providing consultant services to the States. Within this agency an Office of Vocational Rehabilitation has been created to discharge these Federal responsibilities.

The fiscal provisions have also been liberalized by Public Law 113, the old limitation of three and one-half million dollars appropriated annually by the Federal Government for matching purposes having been removed. Funds are now certified in accordance with the States' needs. The scope of services available now has been broadened to include any services necessary to render disabled persons capable of engaging in remunerative employment. These include:

1. Early location of persons in need of rehabilitation to prevent the disintegrating effects of idleness and hopelessness.

2. Medical diagnosis and prognosis coupled with a vocational diagnosis as the basis for determining an appropriate plan for the individual.

3. Vocational counseling to select suitable fields of work by relating occpational capacities to job requirements and community occupational opportunities.

4. Medical and surgical treatment to afford physical restoration and medical advice in the type of training to be given and in the work tolerance of the individual.

5. Physical and occupational therapy and psychiatric treatment as a part of medical treatment where needed.

6. Vocational training to furnish new skills where physical impairments incapacitate for normal occupations, or where skills become obsolete due to changing industrial needs.

7. Financial assistance to provide maintenance and transportation during training.

8. Placement in employment to afford the best use of abilities and skills in accordance with the individual physical condition and temperament, with due regard to safeguarding against further injuries.

9. Follow-up on performance in employment to afford adjustments that may be necessary, to provide further medical care if needed, to supplement training if desired.

Other changes made by Public Law 113 concern the groups of disabled individuals to be served. Mentally as well as physically handicapped individuals are now eligible for rehabilitation. Specific provision has been made for the rehabilitation of the blind and war-disabled civilians, the latter of whom are defined to include members of the citizens' defense corps, aircraft warning service, civil air patrol, and the merchant marine. Disabled veterans who are not eligible for rehabilitation services under the program administered by the Veterans Administration, as well as disabled members of their families, can avail themselves of the services under the civilian rehabilitation program.

Reflecting the increased services which the handicapped have been receiving is the record of the State vocational rehabilitation agencies in the rehabilitation and subsequent placement of handicapped persons. These figures represent the number of persons actually rehabilitated and subsequently placed in employment. They should not be confused with the figures of placements by the War Manpower Commission given earlier in this letter, as those figures include placements made without specific rehabilitation work during the placement year.

The annual average number of disabled persons reported as rehabilitated by the States for the period 1920 to 1942 was 9,100 per year. During the fiscal year 1943 the number increased to 42,124 disabled persons rehabilitated and placed in employment. This is an increase of 192 percent over the year 1941. Evidence from the States indicates 53,000 disabled persons will be rehabilitated in 1944, and approximately 80,000 persons will be rehabilitated and placed in employment in 1945.

Of the 42,124 disabled persons rehabilitated, 31 percent, or 13,058, had never worked or been employed. Furthermore, 85 percent, or 35,806, were unemployed at the time they applied for rehabilitation services. The average weekly wage of the 15 percent who had employment, including those on work-relief programs, was $18. The total annual earnings of the 42,124 disabled persons after rehabilitation was therefore increased from $5,913,648 at the time of application for rehabilitation services to $65,165,828 after rehabilitation. This record was accomplished with the expenditure of a total Federal-State appropriation of a little more than $5,000,000. Through rehabilitation these persons were transferred from tax consumers to tax producers.

Cooperative working relationships have been established with other Federal agencies for the full utilization of their facilities in accomplishing the total task of rehabilitation and increased employment opportunities for the disabled. Among the Federal agencies with which cooperative agreements have already been established are the United States Public Health Service, the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor, the Bureau of Public Assistance, and the Bureau of Old Age and Survivors Insurance of the Social Security Board, the War Shipping Administration, the War Manpower Commission, the United States Civil Service Commission, and the United States Employees Compensation Commission. For the guidance of the program there has been established a National Rehabilitation Advisory Committee and a Professional Advisory Committee. The Office of Vocational Rehabilitation is represented on the committees of the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the United States Civil Service Commission, which are studying the employment of handicapped persons.

Cooperation between the State vocational rehabilitation agencies and the local offices of the United States Employment Service is also being emphasized, and a joint statement concurred in by the Federal Office of Vocational Rehabilitation and the United States Employment Service implementing this policy is now being issued to the field offices of the War Manpower Commission and the State agencies cooperating with the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation. Recent reports from the field indicate that this cooperative relationship is producing substantial benefits to the handicapped in their search for productive employment.

Although much is still to be done for the remaining reservoir of handicapped persons, the above record reveals the rapid increase in the number of disabled persons being served throughout the Nation. Every service necessary to rehabilitate disabled persons is now available in every State and the Territories of Hawaii and Puerto Rico under the State-Federal rehabilitation program.

Sincerely yours,

PAUL V. MCNUTT,
Administrator, Federal Security Agency;
Chairman, War Manpower Commission.

A Great Record

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WARREN G. MAGNUSON

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following keynote speech delivered by me at the invitation of the State central committee of the State convention, Yakima, Wash., May 13, 1944:

I am again honored to accept the invitation of the State central committee to keynote the convention. The size of the convention and the overflowing hall attest the enthusiasm of those here. You have met in response to your duty to the Democratic party. The party has—for over 150 years—similarly met in response to its duty to the American people. Specifically, for 12 years it has borne the brunt of that duty to the American people effectively and proudly. Today we enter upon a new era of responsibility, unsurpassed in all our political history.

The opposition early in the year received some encouragement in isolated congressional elections. Recently we can point to encouraging signs in further elections. Neither are convincing nor conclusive, but do point to the alertness of the American people to their problems and the necessity of the Democratic party to well carry out their responsibility to meet continued public approval.

Many have been misled by partisan analysis of these results. True analysis will show the progressive spirit of the people more alive than ever. The failure of this liberal attitude to express itself at the polls by actually voting is alone responsible for the opposition totals. If voters turn out in force, the reactionaries lose. Republican party leaders know this to be a cold, political fact. They, therefore, seek to slant deductions from the results their own way.

Proof of this is their continued reluctance to give more than lip service to registration and voting drives. Concrete proof in this State was the veto by the Republican State administration of the amendment allowing the polls to stay open an extra 2 hours. This would have given better opportunity for war workers and farmers to cast their ballot. It would also save for war production thousands of work hours.

The veto was one of the most undemocratic actions ever thrust on the people of this State. It should be considered a personal affront to those who toil all day in war plants and on the farm and who have little or no opportunity to leave that work to go to the polls. It should so anger them that despite this denial of opportunities they make extra effort to vote their protest.

It is obviously one vital duty of this party to bend extra effort toward registration drives.

Inasmuch as we must stand or fall on our record, it is well to recall here today some party history. The Democrats were called to duty in 1932 with the country on the verge of national bankruptcy. Necessity required drastic action. The opposition, on being called to account in the eyes of the people, sought to belittle that action. Over the years they have heaped abuse upon you in the Democratic ranks. The party and its members, because of the necessity for this drastic action, have been subjected to more unfair political attacks than at any time in its history. Paradoxically, those who complained the loudest were the ones to reap the most benefits as the country was again placed upon a sound basis. Our American system was saved for them, in spite of themselves.

Many of these attacks were personal. They were often so consistent and continuing that you became individually discouraged. It was made hard to fight back. It is therefore only in retrospect that we can truly evaluate whether or not it was a job well done.

I think as good proof as any is the conclusive fact we have succeeded in converting the vast majority of the American people of both parties toward approval of our actions.

This should be some satisfaction to those of you who were called radical, communistic, unpatriotic, and other names during the years you worked to effect these gains for the plain people of the country. It should be some satisfaction to know that today—leaving out professional Republican politicians—the country admits what was done was good.

Along with that satisfaction, I know it must be some source of amusement for many of you to now listen to those who opposed bitterly necessary progressive moves in this State now maintaining not only that they were fine things but using them as political capital to attract votes to themselves. Take, for instance, the old-age assistance program. Fourteen years ago, as a member of the State legislature, I remember vividly our initial fight to abolish the poorhouse. Republican leadership in that body not only opposed it but called myself and other sponsors red and radical. They have slyly attempted to sabotage over the years every improvement of this program. But now, finding the people of this State in unanimous approval of it, they not only seek to take it over but would lead the people to believe that they have always been alert to the necessity of old-age pensions. This, of course, is typical of Republican Party leadership. They fight an issue as long as it seems desirable, but when it becomes politically profitable to join in they change like a chameleon.

The most amazing example are the private power companies of this State. During the same fight over these years to establish public power they sought by every sinister means to block every action. The names they called Senator Bone, Senator Wallgren, Warren Magnuson, Henry Jackson, Charles Leavy, Judge Schwellenbach, John Coffee, Grange members, and others, are unmentionable on a public platform. Now they say that Grand Coulee, Bonneville, and other public power projects are marvelous achievements. They feel so kindly about them now, their instincts have become maternal. I understand that they would like to adopt them for their own.

Let us go back again in review so that you might feel even a further sense of satisfaction. During the past 12 years it was politically fashionable, from the reactionary viewpoint, to castigate, attack, and sneer at the term "New Deal." Many of you got that in great big doses.

What is the truth about the New Deal?

1. Its first step was the Deposit Insurance Act. Banks were in a panic. Business had given up. It restored the confidence of the people in the banking system and literally saved the financial structure of the country. Anything wrong with that?

2. It created next the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, preventing mortgage companies from grabbing millions of workers' homes. Was that bad? Incidentally, it is paying off dollar for dollar.

3. The next move was the Farm Credit Administration, paralleling the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to forestall the foreclosure of thousands of farm mortgages. Was that a mistake? Incidentally, it is showing returns to the Government.

4. Then the A. A. A. and Soil Conservation Acts followed. They gave the farmer voluntary participation in necessary regulation to save his economy from 1932, with wheat at 32 cents a bushel as compared with his present sound financial position. Anything wrong with that?

5. The passage of the Securities Exchange Act was next achieved. It stopped the floating of worthless stocks by institutions that had been running rampant under the Republican administrations. The public was saved untold millions. Wall Street didn't like this. It is now quite difficult for them to catch suckers. Was that bad?

6. The Congress, with administration leadership, next delved into the basic problem of social security. Old Age Assistance, Unemployment Insurance, Federal aid to the crippled and the blind, was the result. Will these critics tell the people that this was unnecessary?

7. Instead of providing food for starving animals, as did Hoover, we decided to provide food and sustenance first for humans. The W. P. A. and Public Works acts were the most humanitarian in all history. The opposition let the people starve for 2 years. Were those acts bad?

8. Minimum wage and hour laws were then enacted to protect humans from the exploitation of their employers. Was that a mistake?

9. The C. C. C. and National Youth Administration were next. They put a stopgap in the deteriorating processes that had set in among our young people cast adrift by the depression and forgotten by the Hoover administration. The C. C. C. did a dual job. It also rehabilitated many of our natural resources. Its work in this State in the forests saved ten times its cost alone in prevention of forest fires. What was wrong with that?

10. Private home building was encouraged by the establishment of the Federal Housing Administration. It not only gave jobs to many, but aided in establishing real home life. Was that bad?

11. The Rural Electrification Act has now made us the leader of the entire world in electrified farm homes. Prior to 1932 there were more electrified pig pens in Sweden than electrified farm homes in this State. Private power rates and the cost of lines had made the benefits of electricity prohibitive to the farmer. The power companies did nothing to rectify this as they collected their profits. This act made electrified farm homes cheap and possible. We need not point out to the farmer, nor the farmer's wife, what this means. We do ask our critics, however, if this was a mistake?

12. Next followed the National Labor Relations Act, cementing and guaranteeing certain rights the working man had been fighting for, for many years.

13. Foreign policy took shape. And, last but not least, a program of national defense was instituted over the protests of Republican isolationists and the America First crowd, which were so inexorably tied in with Republican leadership at that time, no one could separate them.

That is the so-called New Deal. I could go on thusly for an hour. Some of its purposes have been served. Others still continue.

I review this with a definite purpose. The unfair attacks, the abuse, and the bitter partisan criticism of this so-called New Deal has placed too many Democrats—and too many Americans who believe in it and know it was a job well done—on the defensive. Too many of us explain and apologize. It is high time that those who played a part in building this great monument should take the offensive and shout to the high heavens that you are proud of the part you had in this great record. It is the greatest record of political action for the common people ever made by any administration in all history. It certainly defies those who would belittle, attack, or sneer at its accomplishments. Such action is again a personal affront upon the millions of Americans who know that it helped them and saved the American system.

The country, under Democratic Party leadership, met that crisis during the past 12 years. We have been recently asked by the American people to meet another crisis. The war has become the most tremendous task of all times. Our party has the political responsibility thereof. To date we have soberly and effectively carried on. We resent any attempt to make this solemn duty a political issue.

Already, though, one hears whisperings from the anti-Roosevelt politicians attempting to make as much political capital as they can of this sober responsibility of leadership.

The war should not be a campaign issue. We are winning the war. I warn you, however, that there will be those who delve into cheap and unfair political attacks directed at its conduct. Not that we should not constructively criticize and have our definite ideas regarding this great struggle but my warning is to those who deliberately cause disunity for political purposes.

For instance, you will be met with political propaganda built upon a premise that Roosevelt got us into the war. What trash.

The administration, time and time again, before Pearl Harbor, attempted to warn the people of the emergency and what might be coming. During my service in Congress, the President sent message after message urging national defense. Need I tell you who opposed the suggestion? The main opposition came from the Republican side of the aisle.

We are actually at war because a slimy group of Japanese imperialists, aided and abetted by the Fascists of Europe, attacked us in one of the most infamous, below-the-belt actions since the dawn of time.

And because of the Japanese attack we were called upon to immediately gear a great democracy for war to protect our freedom. The true facts are, because of the constant failure of the opposition to give us aid in preparing ourselves, it became a more stupendous task than it should have been. Intelligent people know gearing a democracy swiftly and effectively for actual warfare requires the stepping upon of many civilian toes. So stupendous was the job and so filled with complexities and details was the task, that both the military and the administration has made mistakes. These mistakes can be played up by the opposition press to look like mountains. Again, the fact is that we believe in admitting them and criticizing and correcting ourselves. The party, in political responsibility during time of war, should so do, because this is everybodys' war.

The country should therefore commend the excellent work along these lines of the Truman committee of the Senate, and the House Naval Affairs Committee in seeking out these things and correcting them. Our own Senator WALLGREN is a member of the Truman committee, and your speaker, the House Naval Affairs Committee. These two groups have been constructively looking into the war effort. They are both controlled by members of our party. They both have the blessing of the administration in their work, because we feel we owe a duty to tell the people the truth about the war effort when possible within the bounds of national security.

But let us look at the actions of Republican leadership on this matter. They have attempted—and will during the campaign—to stir up the people for political purposes over what they know are the necessary privations of war. Haven't they slyly and consistently intimated that rationing, priorities, the draft, and other necessary privations—that none of us like—would be removed if you would but place these pseudo-great administrators in power.

Either they know better and are deliberately deceiving the people for political purposes, or their understanding of this tremendous task is so lacking they are not fit to assume leadership.

At their political party conventions they rise to great puffed-up heights, with solemn pronouncements, "We will take the politics out of the war." The people know, and I assure you they will realize it even more forcefully by next November, as between the two parties who is playing politics with the war. The people know that since Pearl Harbor, Roosevelt has stuck to his post of duty with the heaviest burden of any man in all history despite all this picayunish sniping. Thank God he is too big a man to let it divert him from the war effort.

Another good example is the very well-devised whispering campaign during the last few weeks that he was in a state of collapse. I can say that he is as fit as any man of his age—and I can suggest that most of the people feel that he could better lead us to victory—sick—than could anything the Republicans have trotted out—well. They even went so far last month as to begrudge him a vacation, if one would read some eastern Republican editorials.

So honest have we been in our attempt to take the war out of politics and keep it nonpartisan that the appointed heads of the Army and the Navy are those associated with the Republican Party.

The great job of production has been turned over to business itself. The War Production Board from top to bottom is manned by businessmen and production experts, regardless of party. The wisdom of this has been proven. We have literally become the arsenal of democracy. The personnel of other war agencies are picked on the same basis. Military personnel have achieved rank through ability, and in a few short months we have not only out-produced the world, but have established the greatest Army and Navy the world has ever known. Recent events prove it is a fighting Army and Navy.

It therefore seems with our critics not a question of "Who is playing politics with the war?" but rather, "Whose politics you are playing?" Theirs, all right. Ours, no.

I had intended to discuss the Republican platform concocted at Tacoma last week. I frankly hoped they would meet issues head-on. Not only because that makes it easier for us, but mainly because the public could more intelligently analyze the aims of the two parties. I was disappointed. I read the full accounts of their convention. It can be dismissed with one sentence. A prominent Republican attending the convention remarked to me the day following, "We could just as well have held that convention in 1903, no one would have suspected any difference."

I was mainly disappointed over their failure to approach the most vital problem of the day—foreign affairs. Their declaration on this was the muttering of a lot of nothing. It sounded like a similar declaration by the national leaders at Mackinac Island last summer. It was a cellophane bandage on a running sore. And this, despite the fact that for months they have been attacking the foreign policy of Roosevelt and Hull.

They offer no constructive criticism, but again pick on the matters that they know are subject to many interpretations and many difficulties. They never offer constructive criticism.

That old-guard leadership is a fine crew to be criticizing. Any contrast between their foreign policy of the twenties—from the vicious defeat of Wilson's League of Nations by a group of willful Republicans in the Senate to the disarmament conferences resulting in the scrapping of our proud Navy—makes Hull's achievements stand like a beacon light. Must we remind them further of their isolationist history through all these years? Need we remind them of the segment of party leadership even today flirting with the idea of negotiated peace?

After all, there need be no conflict between the jealous maintenance of our domestic matters and our duty in international affairs. It is only the failure of a major political party to analyze the matter that causes the conflict. I accuse Republican leadership of this failure.

But what the American people do know is that a humanitarian approach will prevent a World War No. 3. And unless we follow the precepts laid down by Hull in his recent report to the people another war cannot be prevented. We can sum up our Allied conferences with one word—security. We add to that the knowledge that unless we have security here at home there can be no peace in the world.

And, thusly, Hull steadfastly maintains it is important there be strong, progressive, popular governments in Europe and Asia, dedicated like our own—toward improving the social welfare of their peoples.

This includes the common efforts of the Allied nations for the expansion of production, employment, and the exchange and consumption of goods, which are the material foundations of the liberty and welfare of all people.

Such is the clear basis of our policy. Only those who are concerned with pettyfogging detail can assume we have failed to chart a course. Future generations need this kind of policy. It is hardly to be supposed all of the boundary questions in Europe can be settled while fighting is in progress. But many questions can and have been settled by friendly conference, under our leadership.

We can give further support to the agreements of Moscow, Teheran, and Cairo. We can resolve the war will be carried forward to unconditional surrender and complete destruction of fascism. We can declare for free Yugoslavian government and the fight of Tito. We can pledge support to the heroic struggle of China and aid to her freedom after the war. And lastly, we can advocate leadership in a society of nations designed to prevent by force, if necessary, any and all aggression. We can make firm our intention to join a permanent court of international justice. That is our clear foreign policy. This is the course we have pursued.

It is the most important of all and leaders of both parties and those who have been attacking Hull and Roosevelt, including Dewey and Bricker, ought to take the opportunity to second these efforts.

For if another world war comes because this generation fails in its duty in establishing an international means of keeping peace, the blood of American boys, who are the sons of both present-day Republicans and Democrats, will be shed a third time to defend the freedom of America.

To that end the plain people of America have the definite feeling they want one who has been tried and true to those principals sitting in the fourth chair at the peace conference. Not a Dewey—not a Bricker—but one they trust—Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Let us look at some of the other issues. We will be condemned as coddling labor. What is that record? It can only be seen in the light of the fact that prior to 1932 labor had little consideration. During the depression the laboring people of America suffered all out of proportion. Proof that our labor laws are intelligent is the fact that Republicans admit they will not be repealed, but that they are permanent documents.

The antiadministration crowd have made much of strikes. Strikes are dramatic and receive attention in headlines. Soldiers and sailors properly resent them. The public properly resents them. Labor has a policy against them. There are members who violate that war pledge. However—and we condemn those who violate that pledge—in 1943 less than one-fourth of 1 percent used was lost by strikes, whereas labor contributed more than 76 percent man-hours over 1939. In the meantime management and labor have accomplished the greatest production record in all history.

To condemn the whole labor movement in view of these facts would be like condemning the Army because some soldiers go A. W. O. L.

The farmer plays a vital and important part in the issues that will arise between now and November. It has been said by the opposition that the farmers of this country are antiadministration. In view of the close liaison between the farmer and his Government after the depression years, and in view of his present stable financial position under the Democratic administration, it is difficult to believe this to be true. After all, the farmer and the working man have the same problems, and those are the problems that have met the undivided attention of our party for the past 12 years.

The future of the western farmer is bright if we continue the consumer markets and maintain industrial stabilization in this area. We should commend the farmer for his marvelous production record, made under the severe handicap of manpower shortages. The Democratic Party of this State and the Democrats of the West should encourage the Grange and give them every aid in the development of processing plants, so as to eliminate the vicious two-way freight price control on finished products. It is difficult to see why the farmer should be inclined to the Republican banner, in view of the fact that it is the power of the eastern Republicans that has always stifled western development, and in particular kept intact vicious freight differentials and other eastern domination always a stone around the neck of the western producer. His continued hope is in the liberal and progressive viewpoint of the Democratic Party.

The most important thing about 1944 will be the progress we make toward the defeat of our enemy. A united America under present leadership has made that defeat a certainty. But it must be remembered we first had to meet a challenge behind our own lines. We had to literally arm the Nation over the protests of men of little faith. Had we not strengthened Britain, sent munitions to Russia, and aid to China, I shudder to think of where we might have been today. In addition, our lend-lease policy has been a sound approach toward keeping the war from our shores and saving many American boys. But despite all attacks on this program, victory for our fighting men can no longer be a true political issue.

The real issues of 1944 are peace and jobs. A nonnegotiable peace and negotiable jobs. They are not certainties, because there arises again the same challenge of isolationism and a promise to return to the same policies that brought us both unemployment and war.

The American people must again decide whether to sacrifice new ties for old tariffs. Whether or not to follow a leadership that internationally returns a handclasp with an itching palm. Whether or not to entrust our Government into the hands of the same old Ohio gang and eastern groups that gave us three succeeding administrations—in the first, political corruption. In the second, unbridled inflation. In the third, the depression. These are the real issues.

A powerful minority wants to go back to that national condition. I contend it would again be a regime that would wreck the peace and reestablish reckless finance that would repeat the lack of jobs.

However, I don't think the people nor the fighting men will be deceived because when you tear off the false front of those who are today sitting on the mourners' bench and bewailing the death of free enterprise—a death that has not taken place and never will in this country—you will find die-hard reaction at its old stand.

Our promise for peace is in keeping with a tradition a quarter of a century old in the gallant struggle of Woodrow Wilson.

And so, too, runs the contrast on the issue of jobs—the Republican Party offers the same old record of closed banks, foreclosed farms, and disclosed scandals.

If that again succeeds it will take the future out of the hopes of those at the fighting front. Their post-war security would be again blasted. We owe a duty to every soldier, sailor, marine, and war worker to prevent that. Let us so dedicate our party action.

On the issue of jobs—toward that end let us reexamine what has been done in the Pacific Northwest on one development alone by our political action. I speak of public power.

Again, prior to 1932, it was the dream of every resident of the Inland Empire that the Columbia River be harnessed by a series of dams so that potential hydroelectric power would be available to the people at the cheapest rate. Frankly, no Republican President evidenced any interest in this project, although time and time again the local groups urged it. Roosevelt saw that what wheat and corn are to the Middle West, cotton to the South, automobiles to Detroit, hydroelectricity is to the Pacific Northwest. Grand Coulee and Bonneville were the result. Prior to 1932 fewer than 10 percent of the farm homes of America had electricity. Today the figure is 45 percent, and the State of Washington leads them all with 81 percent. The result of public power has enticed great new enterprises to our area. For instance, on the banks of the Spokane River we have more manufacture of aluminum than was in the whole of the United States a few years ago. More magnesium is made in Spokane than was made in the entire country 10 years ago. If we become the light-metal producing center of the world the political credit must revert to your State Democratic Party. Public power is going to bring many jobs to many a veteran. The people of this State can further be assured this party is pledged to the full completion of the Columbia Basin development. That will mean homes for veterans.

As a matter of fact, we in the West are playing for a new empire, and we of this party are laying the political foundations for the Pacific Northwest industrial freedom.

The apathy of the opposition party of this great challenge is indictable. We know we have to break away from the domination of the East to build these new interests. We know shot through the entire fabric of the West's blue print for its future is a pattern of help needed from Government. The tremendous war growth has occurred under a Democratic administration and, if the Republican Party comes to power, we wonder how it will treat the aids required for the West to fight a victorious battle for self-determination. The people know that the most influential supporters of the Republican Party are tied to the industrial and financial pattern of the East. Rationally, then, it would seem that the western farmer and industrialist could not, with all the attendant danger of breakage, put his eggs in the Republican basket. If western industrialists and farmers should happen to support a Republican candidate, there will have to be some novel and interesting planks heretofore unknown to their platform.

The Democratic Party has the responsibility to continue the potentialities for this State. It has been the party of action on these matters for 12 years.

Closely following that responsibility, because power will play the greatest part in this development, comes another duty.

I need not review our fights on public power. We, as a party with the State grange, have always taken that leadership. Progress has been made step by step. Another step should be made. I refer to Referendum No. 25, which presents an effective means whereby local control of the tremendous electrical potentialities of the region can be realized. By means of this referendum the people of the State can, in the most efficient manner, acquire and/or operate the properties of the private electric systems in the State, where the electors have indicated that this is their desire.

Private electric companies are masking their attempt to make the most gigantic steal in history under charges of bureaucracy and Federal control. The real objective behind these charges of socializing the power industry is to gain control of the tremendous Federal dams on the Columbia River, to seize the power generated at the dams, and turn its benefits over to eastern stockholders. You perhaps have seen advertisements showing how, under the reorganization of the Puget Sound Power & Light Co. in December of 1943, when $21,000,000 was lost by investors in the company stock, how in these advertisements the Puget Sound Co. is now home owned.

The real truth is that only 700,000 shares of the common stock are owned in the State as against 1,200,000 shares of stock owned by outsiders.

The Democratic Party of the State of Washington believes in furthering private enterprise, which will benefit the region and the people there. Referendum No. 25 will further private enterprise legitimately by offering tremendous blocks of low-cost power to assist in initiating new industries—a definite and vital move in our fight for economic self-determination.

We, as a party, have sponsored much humanitarian legislation. Republican leadership has always been reactionary on this great need of the people.

It has been pointed out, "Unless we have security here at home, there can be no peace in the world." Truly, jobs for all who can work, plus social security for those who cannot work or who are unavoidably unemployed during the period of conversion of industry from wartime to peacetime production, are the keystones not merely of a sound national policy but of a sound international policy of peaceful collaboration with England, Russia, China, and the other nations of the world.

President Roosevelt's brilliant program, known as the second bill of rights, is already embodied, at least in part, in bills pending before our National Congress. Of these, the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill is the most comprehensive, and I urge upon the delegates here today your strongest support of this measure. S. 1161, the number of the bill, provides, among other things, for greatly liberalized old-age insurance, for coverage of approximately 15,000,000 now excluded from the social-security program—farmers, self-employed, domestics, maritime workers, professional, and governmental employees. It extends unemployment compensation, raises the rates at which it is paid, provides for temporary disability and sickness compensation, and creates a badly needed system of prepaid medical and dental care for the covered groups.

Here in our own State an initiative, No. 157, known as the Little Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill, is now being circulated and will undoubtedly be on the ballot in the November elections. I wish strongly to commend this initiative, and the sponsors, the Washington State Social Security Council, which includes A. F. or L., C. I. O., Railroad Brotherhood locals, pension groups, and many other organizations, for the opportunity presented to raise our social-security standards here in Washington State, so that now as in the past our State can be in the forefront of all States in this fight.

Initiative No. 157 raises the miserably inadequate $40 pensions which are now the maximum grant paid to Washington's elderly citizens—who have contributed so much to building our State. Under No. 157, $50 is set as the minimum grant to be paid, to be raised to $60 when the Federal matching funds are increased. Unemployment compensation rates are also increased—from $15 a week for 16 weeks maximum to $25 a week for 20 weeks. No. 157 also provides badly needed maternity grants for working mothers, and provides for a survey of the medical needs of the people of our State. One other major proposal included in No. 157 is free tuition for returning Washington service men and women, plus increased unemployment compensation, and up to 40 weeks of State aid in helping them in securing additional training and education to prepare them for their return to civilian life. No. 157 is in line with our program of securing "freedom from fear and freedom from want" to our people, and I cannot too emphatically urge the convention to endorse this measure and the Democrats in our State to give it the same support we have always given to such needed social gains for the common man.

Finally, every Democrat has a responsibility to do his job. In line with the above program we have assumed the task. Regardless of what your neighbors may be doing, it is not your right to even make comparisons. You have said to the people that these are the things we are going to do and it is your personal job to dig in and fight for them. Let the others, if they wish, stumble around—let the professional Republicans mumble their nothings—but don't let it divert you from the task at hand, because if we do that job the people will reward us with their respect.

In doing this great work do not be discouraged by those who hate Roosevelt. It must always be remembered that these people do not hate him for himself—but they hate him for what he represents—a decent future for the common man of America.

And when all is said and done, you can be sure of one thing—if our job is well done—that the people of this country, come November, are going to prefer a "fourth termer" to a "fourth rater."

Every mother and father, wife, brother and sister, or relative of those in the services know that the defeat of Roosevelt would give more aid and comfort to the enemy than guns and ammunition. It would prolong the war and add to the casualty lists, and surely have a psychological effect that would be world-shaking.

It is not difficult to reverse the procedure and realize what the defeat of Hitler or Tojo would do to the fighting morale of this country. Leaving out one of the greatest administration records of all times, this fact alone, known by every man in the services and his loved ones, is sufficient not to allow it to happen.

When the men and women of this country, therefore, go into their polling booths alone with themselves and their God, they will make their decision, not upon their personal feeling regarding picayunish and necessary personal irritation of civilian life within a Democracy at war, but will base their decision upon what they think is best for the country—the whole country—in 1944. To that there is only one answer—Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

In Tunisia and Here

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 16, 1944

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, note the contrast as set forth in the Milwaukee Journal of May 7, 1943. The article reads:

IN TUNISIA—AND HERE

In Tunisia: "These bloody and bitter Tunisian battles. * * * A thin line of men. Four days and nights they have fought hard, eaten little, washed none, and slept hardly at all. Their nights have been violent with attack, fright, butchery, and their days sleepless and miserable with the crash of artillery."

In Milwaukee: Because of a jurisdictional dispute between members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union (C. I. O.) and members of the United Leather Workers' Union (A. F. of L.), 198 workers of the 250 employees on the first shift at the J. Laskin & Sons Corporation walked off the job Thursday, with more workers going out later. The company, an innocent third party, has appealed to the Government for guidance. The company, incidentally, has long been 100 percent in war production.

In Tunisia: "The men are walking. They are 50 feet apart, for dispersal. Their walk is slow, for they are dead weary. * * * Every line and sag of their bodies speaks their inhuman exhaustion."

In Jacksonville, Fla.: Several thousand shipyard workers were delayed in getting to their jobs; production in the yards and elsewhere was thrown out of gear, other war work in the city of 295,000 was disrupted. Why? Because the busses of the transit company—there are no streetcars—were stopped due to a strike, a strike growing out of a jurisdictional dispute between two A. F. of L. affiliates, the International Association of Machinists and the Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric and Motor Coach Employees.

In Tunisia: "The men dig in on the back slope of the hill before any rest begins. Everybody digs in. This is an inviolate rule of the commanding officers and nobody wants to disobey it. Every time you pause, even if you think you are dying of weariness, you dig yourself a hole before you sit down."

The labor racketeers are riding high, but, as the news of the death on the fighting front of the sons and brothers of the factory workers comes filtering home, there will be a day of reckoning and those who are responsible for these unjustifiable strikes will answer to the men of their unions.

A Timely Message in Regard to Food

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. REID F. MURRAY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the importance of food for war needs and domestic use has been keenly appreciated. Our former colleague, the Honorable Marvin Jones, War Food Administrator, is charged with the responsibility of food production. Anyone familiar with the broad field of food production and processing together with the complicated factors involved realizes the magnitude of the task.

The following splendid radio address by Mr. Jones most assuredly gives a very acceptable picture of the food situation as of today:

At no time in history has so much of the world, and even civilization itself, placed so much dependence upon American food. It requires hard work to produce food. There is no other way. Our present favorable food supply is in itself a great tribute to the American farmer and livestock producer.

To these farmers and their families who have worked longer hours than any other group, to the women, to the older men, to the boys and girls, to the city people who have helped in the harvest time, the Nation owes a debt of gratitude which no language can adequately express.

There are 166 farm commodities, more than 40 of which are of great importance to our food supply. There are many grades and types of each commodity, and these are processed into an infinite variety of food products.

The fact that of all these farm commodities it has been necessary for the War Food Administration to ask that only a very few be rationed, in spite of the increasing demands for our armed forces, our civilians and our fighting allies, is added proof of the war contribution of the American farmer and livestock producer.

By their tremendous production the farmers have made rationing much easier by assuring a reasonable supply of food not only for our armed forces and our allies, but for civilians as well. Our country has been peculiarly fortunate in this regard. It has also made it possible to hold the price line. Without the all-out effort of the farmer, price stabilization would have been vastly more difficult.

Under the Executive order of the President the War Food Administration has charge of the production of food. It also has charge of the allocation of food; that is, it determines how much of our supply of food shall be allotted to our armed forces, how much through lend-lease to our allies, and what percentage shall go into the civilian supply.

It is also our responsibility to determine when the supply of any commodity is so limited as to make rationing necessary. In the event it is determined that rationing is necessary, we authorize the Office of Price Administration to institute it. When such determination is made, the Office of Price Administration takes charge of the actual mechanics of rationing.

Recently it was found possible to remove temporarily point rationing on pork products, veal and lamb, and the cheaper cuts of beef. These changes were made after consultation between officials of W. F. A. and O. P. A. Some people apparently gained the impression that the food problem was largely solved. This is not true. Food is and will remain a problem throughout the war. It is an essential weapon.

As to how long pork and other meats can remain free from rationing, no one can intelligently forecast. We have a tremendous supply of livestock, so much so that livestock and our feed supply are somewhat out of balance.

There are approximately 82,000,000 head of livestock, including 27,000,000 dairy cows. There are more than 120,000,000 hogs. If the livestock continues to come to the market in sufficient numbers to keep the processing facilities of the country fully occupied, there should be a reasonably adequate meat supply for some months to come. The flow of livestock to the processing facilities and other packing centers and slaughtering places is also determined by many factors. The supplies are in the hands of individual farmers, and they determine for themselves when it is wise for them to market the particular animals and when they are best suited to go to market. We feel that livestock producers will be acting wisely and in their own as well as the public interest if a considerably larger number than usual of beef cattle as well as a continuing supply of hogs flows to the market within the next few months.

We have endeavored to present the facts as to the livestock situation to the producers throughout the country. The livestock organizations of all types have cooperated in getting this information into the hands of the producers, and the prospect for considerable marketings of meat animals of all types during the next few months appears favorable at this time.

Food is a temporary thing. Much of it is perishable. A large supply is frequently followed by a shortage. The need for food in the coming months will be greater than ever. The armed forces will need more, our allies will need more as the war expands, and later on as each area is liberated, these areas will require food in order to protect the supply lines for our armed forces.

Some confusion in the public mind has resulted from the numerous statements that have been made, predicting shortages and even famine in connection with our food supply. These critics were no doubt sincere. They believed in their predictions. The trouble is that they did not know the mettle and stamina of the American farmer. They did not know his determination and industry. If they had read history, they would have known that since the ax first rang in the wilderness of the new country, the farmer has done his part in every national crisis, and he will do his part in this, the greatest of all crises. If they had read history, they would have known that it never pays to sell the American farmer short.

It is impossible to forecast accurately what food supplies will be available. There are too many uncertainties in its production. The questions of labor, of machinery, repair parts, fertilizer, soil conditions, and many other elements of uncertainty affect production. Then, too, after all these have been met, the farmer must face the uncertainty of weather conditions which can nullify almost his entire efforts. Droughts, floods, insects, and pests of various kinds can eat into the production of crops and make it impossible to forecast with accuracy just what the production will be.

The War Food Administration, utilizing facilities of the Department of Agriculture as well as its own, will probably be in position to make the best estimates as to what the food supplies will probably be.

Through thousands of community, county, and State committeemen, farmers were contacted all over the country prior to the planting season. The farmers set their own goals after hearing of the amount and nature of production that was needed. This information was assembled by the War Food Administration and announced. Fortunately, the farmers had determined that in spite of the hardships they would plant even more in 1944 than they planted during the record year of 1943.

Each month the Department issues a statement as to crop conditions and as to crop prospects as they exist at that time. Then every 3 months a complete review is made of the planting and crop conditions. These are all carefully compiled on the basis of factual reports from the field. From time to time in between we make announcements of weather conditions, floods, droughts, and other natural uncertainties that affect favorably or adversely the food production and its prospects. This is the most reliable and definite information that can be given. When anyone goes beyond this and undertakes to predict with certainty, it but adds to the confusion and detracts from public understanding.

According to available information, the current prospect as to vegetables is as follows. This is, of course, subject to change as conditions change.

Fresh market supplies: Current supplies of fresh vegetables and fresh market truck crops continue adequate at the present time. A slight increase in vegetables for processing is indicated by current reports.

The only way for the War Food Administration to determine whether or not rationing is necessary as to any commodity is to wait until it is produced and the actual supply of that commodity has become visible.

In making allocations preference must be given to the Army and Navy and all branches of our armed forces. Civilians must have adequate supplies for good nutrition, and we must help supply our fighting allies with food. I think all true Americans will agree that the armed forces must have preference. No thinking person wants to deprive an American soldier, sailor, or marine of the foods that are essential to fighting strength.

After these allocations are made, if the War Food Administration finds that the demand for food is materially greater than the supply, there is no choice for us but to make the determination and ask the Office of Price Administration to institute rationing as to that particular commodity.

The War Food Administration will watch the situation closely. We will not ask that any commodity be rationed unless it is necessary, and we will recommend that such rationing be ended as soon as the supply of the commodity will justify such action. We hope that it will be kept as simple as possible. On the other hand, we will not hesitate to certify to the Office of Price Administration the necessity for rationing a commodity whenever the war needs require it. I am sure the public will cheerfully respond to that necessity.

The only way to keep food even reasonably plentiful is for farmers to be able to continue their all-out efforts. This can be done only if he can get essential machinery, labor, supplies, and fertilizer materials. Then, too, it is all-important that victory gardeners continue their fine work and that the public generally cooperate in preventing waste. As in war, it will require the cooperation of everyone. We cannot afford to take chances.

In his all-out war effort, the farmer is building for the future of the Nation. In that future he expects to conserve and rebuild the soil. He looks forward to an expanded program of good roads, rural electrification, water use, decentralized industry, and home ownership. But before these things he thinks first of winning the war and of the young men from every neighborhood in America who are fighting its battles. Upon these young men and their gallant allies rest the security and the hope of the free peoples of the earth.

Appeal by President of United Automobile Workers, C. I. O., to the Members of His Union

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 29 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD a very remarkable statement issued by Mr. R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers, C. I. O., to the members of his union, printed in the Philadelphia Record of May 28, 1944, and entitled "Any Person Who Sets Up Picket Lines Acts Like an Anarchist." I hope every Member of the Senate will read it.

There being no objection, the appeal was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A UNION LEADER TELLS HIS MEN: "ANY PERSON WHO SETS UP PICKET LINES ACTS LIKE AN ANARCHIST"

DETROIT, May 28.—Following is the text of the appeal made by R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers, C. I. O., to the members of his union:

"The U. A. W.-C. I. O. today faces one of the greatest crises in its history. On the outcome of this crisis will depend the possibilities of our survival in the post-war period. The test is this: Are the membership of our union and its leaders willing to abide by the democratic decisions and mandates of our constitution and our conventions?

"To most of our more than a million members this statement will come as a surprise. Most of you, virtually all of you, are engaged at work in your plants.

"But a union is only as strong as its weakest link. A minority, even a handful, can do a union irreparable harm, even destroy it.

"The workers who insist on taking part in unauthorized strikes may be such a minority. Within recent weeks there have been too many wildcat strikes. Public opinion has become inflamed against our union. Word of these strikes is going to our millions of men in uniform.

"Our union cannot survive if the Nation and our soldiers believe that we are obstructing the war effort. Our loyal membership must face that fact.

"They must see to it that the good name of our union is maintained, that the acts of isolated handfuls are not permitted to continue to the detriment of all of us.

"Today our armed forces are poised for an attack on the Nazi war machine. Already more than 35,000 of our American brothers have been killed in action. Many more have been maimed, many of them for life. These figures will increase manyfold in the months to come.

"Does any reasonable and responsible person believe that, in the face of these terrible facts, our union can tolerate wildcat strikes in war plants and still survive? It can't be done.

"Either we set our own house in order at once, cease all wildcat strikes, or we will face an attack such as no union can withstand.

"Let us all resolve today to obey our constitution and the no-strike pledges made by our conventions.

"There can be no such thing today as legitimate picket lines. Any person who sets up picket lines is acting like an anarchist, not like a disciplined union man. Such picket lines should be ignored.

"I need not be reminded that the maintenance of production requires the cooperation of management and governmental agencies, as well as of our union and its members. I know that Government agencies are too slow, and that managements in many cases are trying to provide strikes, or at least to take advantage of the no-strike pledge to weaken our union.

"These things are true, but to me they are only additional reasons why we must exert every bit of self-control we have to prevent the provocation from achieving its intended results—strikes and the blackening of our union.

"This war must be won. If management will not sincerely work toward that end, then labor must do so.

"We may have to take it on the chin here and there for a time, but if we can present the Nation and the returning soldiers with a clean labor record, we will gain after the war for the sacrifices we are making today.

"We will keep the record. The truth will be told. But there will be no gain in keeping and publishing our wartime record if that record is marred by wildcat strikes in war plants.

"I appeal to our membership. If you value your union, if you want it to live and serve us after the war—we must restrain ourselves and our hot-headed brothers today. If we do not, there will be no union after the war.

"In fact, restrictive legislation, worse than anything now on the books, will be enacted before the war ends and we will be behind the eight-ball before we even have a chance to do the post-war job that will be required."

Conscientious Objectors

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KARL M. LeCOMPTE

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, the American Legion post of Bloomfield, Iowa, adopted a resolution recently which I desire to call to the attention of the Congress with reference to conscientious objectors. Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include therein the resolution of the Verne O. Reed American Legion Post No. 78, Department of Iowa:

BLOOMFIELD, IOWA, May 26, 1944.

K. M. LECOMPTE,
Congressman from Iowa,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LECOMPTE: The following resolution was unanimously adopted at a recent meeting of Verne O. Reed American Legion Post, No. 78 of Bloomfield, Iowa:

"Be it resolved, That this post deplores the fact that conscientious objectors who refuse to serve with the armed forces are permitted to be sent and are sent to college for education at Government expense in training in the field of education that they desire, while other boys are fighting and giving their lives to preserve this Nation and to protect the property and interests of the citizens residing in this Nation; and be it further

"Resolved, That this post urges the enactment of a statute that prohibits any conscientious objector who refuses to serve with the armed forces and claims exemption from noncombative military service be denied the right to own and acquire title to real estate in the United States of America; and be it further

"Resolved, That such statute provide that such person be denied the privilege of voting in national, State, and municipal elections. Further that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Senators and Representatives in Congress representing the State of Iowa."

According to the direction therein I am sending a copy to you. We feel that there are matters contained therein that should be given serious consideration.

Yours very truly,

E. R. WHITE, Adjutant.

Cunningham Drug Stores, Inc.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a letter and an unusually interesting advertisement of the Cunningham Drug Stores, of Detroit, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post of May 20.

The advertisement deals with a broadgage and progressive plan under which honorably discharged servicemen can avail themselves of free pharmacy scholarships.

I am impressed with the brief outline at hand because I foresee in this bold and progressive stroke by a great business enterprise a lead which will be followed by other generous and farsighted industries.

This is another example of generosity and service which doubtlessly has been inspired by Nate S. Shapero, the president of the Cunningham Stores, and is in line with his well-established record in the community.

I trust this plan, covering 4 years, which will provide employment, vacations with pay, group life insurance, health and accident insurance, and other important features during the terms of scholarship, will serve as a guide and inspiration for others to follow. I intend to circulate the idea among industrialists in the hope it might prompt similar action.

YOU'VE DONE YOUR PART—NOW LET US DO OURS

Cunningham drug stores wants to be the first to say "welcome home" to returning servicemen, in the only way that counts.

We are happy to offer free scholarships for future pharmacists.

These scholarships are offered in recognition of the vital importance of the post-war employment problem, and in the hope and belief that this precedent will encourage the American people to give serious thought to a duty which is vital to the future of our Nation. It is also to help meet the needs of present-day planning that Cunningham drug stores makes available now an opportunity to qualify for free pharmacy scholarships to returning servicemen.

Cunningham drug stores is seeking youth with vision—sound young thinkers and inspired young dreamers of today, who, having honorably discharged their duties to their country, are now ready and able to become the interpreters and leaders of America tomorrow. Young men who can look ahead to the great future in pharmacy—who can do for it tomorrow what others have done for it in the past.

CUNNINGHAM DRUG STORES, INC.,
Detroit, Mich.

(Operating 150 retail drug stores: Marshall's, Shapero's, Cunningham's in Michigan, Ohio, and Pennsylvania.)

HERE'S HOW YOU CAN GET YOUR SCHOLARSHIP

The free 4-year scholarship competition is open to all honorably discharged servicemen, who are high school graduates, throughout the United States and its territories, and the Panama Canal Zone. An opportunity to earn while attending college will be provided successful candidates. For application blanks and further information, write to Cunningham Drugs Stores, Inc., Detroit 16, Mich.

The Lambert Pharmacal Co., recognizing the significance of this announcement, has gladly transferred to the Cunningham Drug Stores, Inc., its priority on this advertising space.

DETROIT, MICH., May 17, 1944.

GENTLEMEN: That an organization without national distribution should have a story to tell all America through the pages of a magazine like the Saturday Evening Post is unparalleled. But so is the message, in the opinion of this company. The widespread comment which followed the appearance of the advertisement reproduced in this booklet are, we feel, justification for this departure from precedent.

Cunningham plan pharmacy scholarships are not, in a strict sense, new with us. For years we have maintained 32 scholarships at Wayne University and the Detroit Institute of Technology for our own employees.

This announcement, and the program before us, are a natural and, we believe, timely extension of our policy. In offering the benefits to others beyond our present employees, and in increasing the number who may profit by specialized training, our purpose is twofold:

True, as druggists, we are primarily interested in the development of future pharmacists. But even more important is the opportunity we here at Cunningham's have to frame a pattern for industry to say, practically and constructively, "Welcome home!" to the returning serviceman.

What we are doing can, and should, and will—we are sure—be done by all branches of business.

Industry in the past has relied on the business administration schools for its junior executives. Today these schools are closed. The men are no longer available; they are in the armed forces.

The Cunningham scholarship plan, and those others which we know will duplicate its broad objective in other fields, are a debt we owe to the young men and women whose careers have been interrupted by war. It is to them we must look for the ambition, the knowledge, the performance that make for achievement, and for the responsibilities that will come with leadership in a world at peace again. Helping them equip themselves for the task is the least we can do.

Yours cordially,

NATE S. SHAPERO,
President, Cunningham Drug Stores.

THE PURPOSE OF THE SCHOLARSHIP

To help you who have so valiantly played your part in the fight for the freedom that is America; that you may prepare yourself to enjoy to the fullest our way of life, we make available now this scholarship plan for you as a returning serviceman.

It is also to help the needs of present-day planning that Cunningham Drug Stores makes available this opportunity for you to qualify for a free pharmacy scholarship.

EMPLOYMENT DURING TERM OF SCHOLARSHIP

Successful applicants will be assured employment sufficient to defray the cost of room, board, clothing, and incidental expenses by the Cunningham Drug Stores during the term of scholarship.

Hours of employment will be regulated in cooperation with the colleges of pharmacy.

Scholarship students will enjoy the same benefits as the regular employees of the company, including vacations with pay, group life insurance, health and accident insurance, employee purchase discount.

QUALIFICATIONS OF APPLICANTS

The following are the qualifications necessary in order to apply for a Cunningham Drug Stores scholarship:

1. Free scholarship competition is open to all honorably discharged servicemen throughout the United States and its territories, and the Panama Canal Zone.

2. The applicant must be a citizen of the United States.

3. The applicant must be a graduate of an accredited high school with credits acceptable to the College of Pharmacy.

BENEFITS OF THE CUNNINGHAM DRUG STORES SCHOLARSHIP

The scholarship plan provides for a 4-year course in pharmacy at either the Detroit Institute of Technology, or Wayne University. These colleges are located in the city of Detroit, Mich.

Matriculation, tuition, laboratory, library, special courses, text and reference books, student activities, health clinic, diploma and graduation fees.

All of the above college expenses will be paid by Cunningham Drug Stores, for the duration of the scholarship.

HOW TO APPLY

1. Answer all questions on enclosed application blank.

2. Attach letter from a former employer or from some other responsible person who is not a member of your immediate family.

3. Attach letter of recommendation from your high school principal or high school counsellor.

4. Attach to application or have your high school principal forward transcript directly to Cunningham Drug Stores. Transcript of high school record is important.

The application must be filed with the personnel director of Cunningham Drug Stores, on or before June 30, 1944, for admission to the September 1944 class.

HOW SCHOLARSHIPS WILL BE AWARDED

Successful applicants will be interviewed by a committee of judges to pass upon their qualifications for a pharmacy scholarship, at the offices of Cunningham Drug Stores, Detroit, Mich., between August 1 and 15, for admission to the September 1944 class.

It will be necessary for the applicant to present himself at Detroit, Mich., at his own traveling expense. All expenses of the applicant will be paid by the company during his stay in Detroit.

The scholarship benefit will continue only while the applicant is employed by Cunningham Drug Stores, and while he maintains satisfactory grades in his pharmacy course.

NUMBER OF SCHOLARSHIP AWARDS

This plan provides for a minimum of 100 scholarships. The company may award additional scholarships in proportion to the number of applicants that qualify.

MEMBERS OF THE JUDGING COMMITTEE

C. J. Schoeninger, commander in chief, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

R. T. Lakey, dean of College of Pharmacy, Wayne University.

E. P. Stout, dean of College of Pharmacy and Chemistry, Detroit Institute of Technology.

F. W. Baxter, general manager, Cunningham Drug Stores.

J. L. Allen, personnel director, Cunningham Drug Stores.

This scholarship committee will be the sole judge in determining the scholarship awards and may make such regulations as they consider advisable for this purpose, requiring the applicants to pass written or oral examinations if the committee deems them necessary.

The Montgomery Ward Case and the Constitution

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD H. MOORE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 29 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a radio address entitled "The Montgomery Ward Case and the Constitution," delivered by me over the Columbia network on Saturday, May 27, 1944.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The incident of the forcible seizure of the Montgomery Ward store by the Army is of the foremost importance currently. It has become a landmark in American history. It was based upon no constitutional, statutory, or inherent power of either the President or the Commander in Chief. It was an unparalleled act of tyranny. The Constitution applies equally in war and in peace. Any wartime power of the President is derived from congressional action. The President's constitutional power as Commander in Chief is confined exclusively to the military. In the language of the Supreme Court:

"The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people equally in war and in peace; and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men at all times and under all circumstances. No doctrine, involving more pernicious consequences was ever invented * * * than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government. Such a doctrine would lead directly to anarchy or despotism."

The Montgomery Ward case grew out of a labor dispute for which procedures for adjustment and settlement are provided under the laws of our land, enacted by the Congress. Such constitutional procedures have been ignored, and instead Mr. Roosevelt, acting under the advice of the labor racketeers that now control our labor unions, has chosen to travel the road of tyranny and despotism. Such is the Roosevelt doctrine.

Well do we remember the message to Congress of January 3, 1936, when Mr. Roosevelt said: "In 34 months we have built up new instruments of public power. In the hands of a people's government this power is wholesome and proper. But in the hands of political puppets of an economic autocracy such power would provide shackles for the liberties of the people."

Well do we remember Mr. Roosevelt's characterization of the business enterprise of our country as forces of selfishness and expressed the hope that it might be said "of my first administration that in it (they) met their match."

Of his second administration he declared: "I should like to have it said * * * that in it these forces met their master."

We have in fact now witnessed the master of tyranny take shape in his third administration.

Mr. Roosevelt's order, under which this business establishment was seized by the armed forces, was issued pursuant to the thin and sleazy opinion of Attorney General Biddle, who has properly been called "the American Himmler." In Mr. Biddle's opinion to the President he said:

"I believe that by the * * * aggregate of your powers of Chief Executive and commander in chief, you could lawfully take possession of and operate Montgomery Ward & Co., if you found it necessary to do so to prevent injury to the country's war effort."

Mr. Biddle, as a lawyer, knew that no such constitutional powers were vested in the Chief Executive unless reposed there by congressional action.

In Mr. Biddle's argument to the court in Chicago, in which he sought confirmation of that which had already been done, he says that no business or property is immune to a presidential order.

In his brief to the court Mr. Biddle said: "In time of war, the courts will not substitute their judgment for that of the President, or review his determination as to the gravity of the emergency or the necessity of the taking of the particular property."

The Hitlerian philosophy of government as expressed by Mr. Biddle contravenes every intent and purpose of the Constitution. It is in direct conflict with every precedent of the Supreme Court of the United States on the subject.

Within the last year the Supreme Court has said:

"It does not follow * * * that the broad guarantees of the Bill of Rights and other provisions of the Constitution protecting essential liberties are suspended by the mere existence of a state of war. It has been frequently stated and recognized by this Court that the war power * * * is subject to the limitations of the Constitution * * * that there are constitutional boundaries which it is our duty to uphold."

Chief Justice Taft said:

"There is no undefined residuum of power which he (the President) can exercise because it seems to him to be in the public interest."

The Montgomery Ward incident is the epitome of one-man government, instead of one of laws; a government by bureaucracy, instead of constitutional form. It is an example of the destructive forces of an administration that has constantly attacked our business enterprise and our American traditions; destroyed our legitimate labor unions and delivered us into slavery under union racketeers. It is the reflection of a philosophy that had led us into the holocaust of war by an administration that is now unable to tell us for what we fight.

An unconstitutional and despotic invasion of the liberty of a single citizen of this country is a threat of the despot against all the liberties of all the people.

The trampling feet of armed soldiers under orders to carry out the dictates of a despot are no more acceptable to America because they march at the instance of a despot who has risen among us instead of a despot who threatens us from without.

But in solemn frankness to ourselves, it must be said that in all these weary years from the Chicago of 1932 to the Ward case of 1944, the signposts have proclaimed whither we were traveling—not so plain in the beginning, but as we descended the rocky way, it became crystal clear that despotism was our destination.

As to any power Mr. Biddle may claim for the President or for the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy under the War Labor Disputes Act, commonly known as the Smith-Connally Act, I call attention to the discussion on the floor of the Senate when that legislation was being considered. Senator CONNALLY, in charge of the bill, assured the Senate that:

"The plant has to be one which is equipped and suitable for the production of national defense articles. The fear about making a wholesale attack on property, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio, has no foundation in fact. * * *

"The bill now pending simply gives to the President the added authority, wherever production is delayed or suspended by reason of labor disputes."

It was suggested by a Senator that provision be made in the Smith-Connally Act for the seizure of any business establishment by the President. To this proposal Senator CONNALLY said:

"I will say to the Senator that I would not favor the idea which he has advanced with reference to giving the proposed legislation application to all plants. * * * I do not think the Senator's amendments would ever pass the Congress."

Congress did not adopt the words "any business establishment."

The argument that a retail merchant is a producer is of the same farfetched character as the claim that an elevator operator in an office building is in interstate commerce. This interpretation is part of the war against the integrity of words which has been in process for some years. Civilization is based upon the integrity of words. If constitutions, statutes, and contracts can be twisted to mean whatever is desired by the twisters, we have substituted government by men and bayonets for government by laws. Faith and confidence in the predictability of government action, so necessary to the planning of business, is thereby irreparably impaired. The post-war jobs of millions of men hinge upon a steady and justified confidence in the meaning of words.

It seems clear that the Chief Executive, either as President or as Commander in Chief, has acted without authority of law and beyond the bounds of his constitutional limitations. The President, Mr. Biddle, Mr. Jones, and all others who participated in the affair must stand charged with failure to preserve and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States of America. The Congress itself, however, must share in the responsibility for the deflection of our ship of state from its constitutional course. It is difficult for Congress to condemn the President for unlawfully twisting the Constitution to fit despotic desires, when Congress itself has on so many occasions acquiesced in the demand for unconstitutional legislation.

In this connection, I am remembering those days of the N. R. A., the A. A. A., the Bituminous Coal Act, and other legislation which the Court had the courage and integrity to strike down. I am remembering the message of the President of the United States to the Ways and Means Committee of the House in 1936, when he said in connection with the Guffey coal bill:

"I hope your committee will not permit doubts as to constitutionality, however reasonable, to block the suggested legislation."

And I am remembering that the Congress, at the behest of the President, ignored its grave doubts and enacted the legislation, and it was later declared unconstitutional by the courts.

More recently, I remember the debates in Congress when the so-called soldiers' vote bill was under consideration, and the position of some of its Members that the Congress should usurp the rights of the States in providing for the balloting of our armed forces. I am remembering the statement of one Senator that he did not wish to discuss the constitutionality of the bill. I am remembering the statement of another that he approved such action without passing upon the question of the constitutionality of the legislation, because in time of war a higher law than the Constitution commands us.

And still more recently I am remembering the proposal of some Members of the Congress that the constitutional right of the States to impose a poll tax upon their own electors as a qualification to vote should be denied by Federal legislation. I am remembering that there were some Members of the Congress who resisted the soldiers' vote bill but who favored the poll-tax repeal, although both proposals involved the identical principle.

As aptly said by the Supreme Court:

"If the provisions of the Constitution be not upheld when they pinch as well as when they comfort, they may as well be abandoned."

Certainly the time is upon us when we must take a firm and immovable position upon the Constitution. It is our mooring and our only anchorage of the Republic. If we shall fail to do that now, I say, with all the conviction of which I am capable, that the time is short when we shall have the opportunity to do so.

We should never cease to repeat the words of Washington, when he said:

"If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modifications of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed."

We should ever be impressed with the warnings of the Supreme Court in the Milligan case that:

"Wicked men, ambitious of power, with hatred of liberty and contempt of law, may fill the place once occupied by Washington and Lincoln; and if this right is conceded, and the calamities of war again befall us, the dangers to human liberty are frightful to contemplate."

The platform of the American people must be a return to constitutional government. The Constitution was created and adopted by the people as a blueprint for government and as a protection against those entrusted with the power of public office. No other guaranty of the preservation of the liberties of freemen exists in America. Its desecration and its impairment, either by the assumption of power by the Executive, or the unconstitutional delegation of its powers by Congress, or failure to uphold the observance of its provisions by the courts, is a betrayal of trust, for which all men who may be guilty should be publicly condemned.

We talk of political platforms, of panaceas, of proposed legislation and of programs that will appeal to the voters. In these perilous times, such talk is base demagoguery. The platform for which the American people are crying is a return to the principles of constitutional government, and when that shall have been accomplished, we will build upon that foundation a stable and enduring government.

The President has belittled our alarm over the seizure of Montgomery Ward by commenting that we were "looking under the bed." Perhaps it is the shadow of piled bayonets in secret places that has struck terror in our hearts and opened our eyes to the tyranny that threatens us. The Montgomery Ward incident is a challenge to every thinking American; a warning to all who can read the signs of the times: "It did happen here—it is later than we think."

Remarks of Hon. James F. Byrnes on Presentation of Churchman's Award to Bernard M. Baruch

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES E. MURRAY

OF MONTANA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 29 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the remarks made by Hon. James F. Byrnes, Director of War Mobilization, on the occasion of the one hundred and fortieth anniversary dinner of The Churchman in New York, May 23, 1944. The remarks were made in connection with The Churchman's award to Bernard M. Baruch, adviser to the Office of War Mobilization, "For the promotion of good will and better understanding among all people."

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I esteem it a very happy privilege to join you this evening in the presentation of the Churchman award "for the promotion of good will and better understanding among all peoples" to my good friend, Mr. Bernard M. Baruch.

I was going to say to Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, of South Carolina. But if I should so describe him I am afraid that the many New Yorkers here, who also claim him as their own, might break up this good-will gathering. So I shall generously refer to this native South Carolinian, in whom the whole Nation takes pride, as Mr. Baruch, of the United States.

For many years Mr. Baruch has been my friend. Like all men who have worked with him, I know that he has always been devoted to the promotion of good will and better understanding among all peoples. With him it is no newly acquired asset. It has been, is now, and always will be a part of his very life and being.

The theme of this evening's meeting, America in the Post-war World, is a theme very dear to the heart of Mr. Baruch. Through no fault of his, America did not take her proper place in the world after the last war. No one labored more unremittingly than he did to help President Wilson awaken America to accept her new responsibilities.

In 1918, a few days before the armistice, I talked with General Bliss, our representative upon the Supreme Council at Versailles. He said that each passing day he heard less of world peace and more of lust for power and spoils. He believed the only chance to save the situation was for President Wilson to attend the Peace Conference. Upon my return I so advised the President. He stated that General Bliss had already conveyed that opinion to him. He deplored his inability to speak French, and realized the difficulties he faced in appealing through interpreters to the peoples of other countries. He did not want to go to France. But he had determined that no matter what set-backs he personally might suffer, he would spare no effort to redeem the pledge he had given to the mothers of the world to end all wars. The peace he brought back was not perfect. But history will record that the peace failed not because of the shortcomings of the treaty, but because of our failure to support the League of Nations, which in time might have remedied those shortcomings.

Then we blamed Wilson. We blamed England. We blamed France. But the truth is, that a quarter of a century ago we lost the peace, not on the battlefield, not at the Peace Conference, but at home—in the forum of public opinion and in the Senate of the United States.

This time all of us, Republicans and Democrats, Catholics, Protestants, and Jews, must be on our guard to see that America takes her proper place in the community of nations.

Our material power and moral influence today is not exceeded or even matched by any other nation. If we now fail to take our proper place in the post-war world it will be because we have not the wisdom to know what we want or the internal unity necessary to achieve it.

It is not enough that we say, as most of us do, that we want to see America assume her rightful position in a world order. We must agree among ourselves as to what the rightful position of America is and what kind of world order we want. We must face the fact that if we cannot agree among ourselves we will lose the next peace as we lost the last peace.

Of course, there are conflicts in interest among nations as there are conflicts in interest among individuals. But the common interests which should unite nations in an interdependent world are far more important than the conflicts in interest which tend to divide them. By her example, America must show how nations can live together, not how they can live apart.

Resolution by Pennsylvania Democratic State Committee in Support of President Roosevelt

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, May 29 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD a resolution which was adopted at the Democratic State committee meeting at Harrisburg on Wednesday, May 24.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ROOSEVELT RESOLUTION

We salute our leader, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, in this, the twelfth year, of his administration—12 years of useful accomplishments unparalleled in the history of any nation.

The campaign, as framed against him, is officered and financed by organized greed and fueled by malignant personal hatred. The same interests that seized the machinery of the Republican Party in 1912 and that then accomplished the political assassination of Theodore Roosevelt are running the Republican show in this campaign. It is the same crowd that was responsible for the fake "return to normalcy" in the administrations of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover; 12 years of depression, disorder, and disaster.

The real issue in this campaign is spread for all to see in the record of the 12 years of Republican maladministration during the period 1920 to 1932 as opposed to the record of the Roosevelt administration, 1932–44.

In the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover era, we find looted and broken banks, bread lines, broken homes, widespread poverty, suicides, and broken promises.

In the 12 years of the Roosevelt administration we find a restored and stable banking system with guaranteed deposits, restoration of homes, schools, and farms, social security and old-age provisions, restored national confidence, and a new spirit of international statesmanship. We find real regulation of piratical utilities and the recognition of human rights. We find respect for the dignity of labor, the welfare of the farmers, and the creation of an era of good will.

President Roosevelt foresaw the inevitable and personally directed the preparation for the new World War. Through his leadership, Russia, China, and England were provisioned and armed. An Army of 11,000,000 men and women were summoned from American civilian life and this enormous armed force, under the President's direction, was provided with such skilled and dauntless leaders as the world has ever known. Marshall, Eisenhower, Arnold, Wainwright, Bradley, Doolittle, Spaatz, MacArthur, Halsey, King, Nimitz are some of the names that will live forever.

The leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt stopped Hitler, Mussolini, and Tojo dead in their tracks. Through the dynamic leadership of Roosevelt, we are on the eve of the greatest victory over the forces of evil this world has ever known.

Through the genius of President Roosevelt, a victory on the home front has been won over the forces of isolation. He has assembled beside him patriotic men from the Republican Party who are loyally aiding in this struggle.

We appeal to our fellow citizens of every political faith, of every race and creed to join with us on the home front in sustaining the hands and the ideals of our President.

To repudiate him now would be unthinkable. It would be a betrayal of American ideals and our common heritage. The millions in our armed forces are chancing their lives and enduring countless privations in battles to preserve the American way of life so nobly championed by their Commander in Chief. We rally again to the Commander in Chief at the most critical moment in this war.

These things being true: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the State Committee of the Democratic Party of Pennsylvania, record our unanimous determination to draft Franklin Delano Roosevelt as the nominee of the party to the end that Pennsylvania will again be enrolled in the Roosevelt column next November.

Sane Union Management

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE A. DONDERO

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include therein an editorial appearing in the Pontiac Daily Press of Pontiac, Mich., of May 27, 1944, showing a heartening and encouraging attitude on the part of a prominent labor leader in the Detroit area, one of the great centers for the production of war material:

SANE UNION MANAGEMENT

Two recent happenings in the administration of the United Automobile Workers' C. I. O. union provide encouraging evidence of the growing sense of responsibility and duty to the public and Nation felt by that organization's leadership.

The first was the disciplinary action taken by the U. A. W. executive board against those responsible for the "soda pop" strike which idled nearly 12,000 Chrysler employees and closed 7 of that corporation's Detroit plants.

President William Jenkins and 13 other officers of Chrysler local union No. 490 were removed from office for calling and refusing to halt the walkout which arose from a jurisdictional dispute as to whether an A. F. L. or a C. I. O. teamster should be permitted to deliver soda pop to one of the company's plants.

The second was the unequivocal warning of U. A. W. President R. J. Thomas that if delegates failed to renew their "no strike" pledge to the Government at the convention in September he would refuse to be a candidate for reelection.

These events reveal the right kind of thinking by the U. A. W. leadership.

Members of the executive board and President Thomas have shown that they haven't forgotten the United States is fighting the most crucial war in our history.

They have demonstrated by their actions that they oppose misuse of the strike weapon.

Publicly they have reiterated their intention to keep the faith with the American people and our millions of fighting men who are risking and losing their lives in battles fought to preserve with other liberties the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively.

Their actions should encourage and win the approval of both friends and critics of labor.

They herald the dawn of an era of a saner and an economically and socially sounder administration of unions.

Price Control of Barber and Beauty Service Industries

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD F. HARLESS

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter:

JOURNEYMEN BARBERS', HAIR DRESSERS' & COSMETOLOGISTS' INTERNATIONAL UNION OF AMERICA, LOCAL NO. 709, Tucson, Ariz., May 23, 1944.

Hon. RICHARD F. HARLESS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The officers and members of this organization have been informed that Representative CRAWFORD, of Michigan, has proposed to the House Banking Committee that barber and beauty service be placed under wartime price control.

We are unalterably opposed to this proposal; we do not sell, manufacture, or process any commodity; both are personal-service trades, and, in our opinion, should not be placed under O. P. A. any more than the medical or legal professions. Therefore, we are protesting the placing of barber and beauty service under O. P. A., and asking that you use your influence and vote against this proposal.

Trusting we may have your support on this measure, we are,

Very respectfully,

L. E. MOYE, Secretary.

Our Only Course, Our Sole Objective

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by me before the Polish-American Congress, May 28, 1944, at Memorial Hall, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Mr. President, right reverend bishop, reverend fathers, and fellow Americans, I am proud indeed to be able to respond to your invitation to address this assembly of representative Americans of Polish antecedents and to express as forcefully and as briefly as I am able what I believe to be the sole and the only course which we as Americans in justice and in good faith can follow. It is not only a privilege but a patriotic duty to do so.

Our course is as clearly defined as is our goal and that is to win the war at the earliest possible moment with the least possible expenditure of American lives and to secure a just and a lasting peace. Toward that end we must concentrate all of our efforts and we must not be persuaded even for a moment to swerve from the course. There must be no distraction or foreign attraction, however slight, which might mean even a temporary reverse and the loss of precious American lives. We must concentrate and unite all of our vast resources, employing to the limit not only our arms, our finances, and our mechanical and productive genius, but we must also unite intellectually and morally to bring about the complete destruction of the common enemy.

For my part, there is no need today for an extended discourse. I believe that the printed Aims and Objectives of the Polish American Congress contains every essential of a genuinely American expression and is so eloquent and forceful that it is a sheer waste of time to try to add to or detract from this very able and patriotic exposition of objectives. I sought to study and analyze the declaration in order that I might find and concentrate upon the most important paragraph but I find that they are all important, so important in fact that we must recognize and endorse in its entirety this historic declaration.

We must, however, inform the people of America, our fellow American citizens, of every creed, of every color, and of every nationalistic origin what we Americans of Polish ancestry stand for. The reaffirmation and acceptance of the principles of the Atlantic Charter and of the "four freedoms," together with the right of self-determination on the part of all of the smaller nations is genuinely and traditionally in accord with American fair play. We can and we must pledge ourselves to the carrying out of this historic declaration.

We must unfalteringly give endorsement to American foreign policy under the peerless leadership of the President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and of Cordell Hull, the very able and distinguished Secretary of State. The problem of the Americans of Polish antecedents is chiefly one of making known to the great bulk of our American people the legitimate and historic claims of the land of our forefathers.

In recent months with increasing interest and intensity the question of Poland's eastern boundary and the legitimacy of the Government in exile has been debated by friend and foe alike. Unfortunately, elements both in this country and abroad have initiated a campaign of misrepresentation with regard to Poland's legitimate territorial claims and have attacked the Government in exile. The 1939 eastern boundary without a question of a doubt is fortified, not only by the Treaty of Riga and subsequent Polish-Russian agreements but has also been reinforced by treaties between the two countries since the German attack upon her former Russian ally.

The Polish Government in exile has the support of these latter treaties by virtue of the negotiations which were carried on with the Polish authorities at London. But aside from this signed admission there is a constitutional continuity which sustains the existing Polish Government, and no outside influence can properly be recognized as having any authority to interpret the constitutionality or the legitimacy of the present Raczkiewicz government in exile. What we Americans are chiefly concerned with at this time is that our own Government has recognized the inviolability of the eastern boundary as of 1939 and has consistently recognized and dealt with Sikorski and the successor regime.

Of course, we Americans of Polish ancestry and we who know Polish history, who understand her problems, and are familiar with her sufferings, not only in this but in past wars, need not make any apologies to anyone for our sympathies and predisposition toward Poland's territorial and other legitimate claims. We can and properly should discuss them among ourselves and publicly. We have the constitutional right to even disseminate this information to the people of these United States, for the millions of friends of Poland in this country seek the truth, and only truth will overcome erroneous anti-Polish and pro-Russian propaganda.

Americans, as I stated before, are as fair as they are fearless and they will not sell Poland short. But there are certain difficulties which cannot be discounted at this moment, and we must all recognize that some of these difficulties are well-nigh insurmountable, particularly if interposed at this particular juncture. No segment of our American population has a right to project highly controversial problems which may cause estrangement between the allies and thus impair or delay the winning of the war. It is obvious to me as it is to many who are concerned over the turn in events that our problem is one of fully informing the American public and insofar as is possible the people of the world that Poland's territorial claims are sustained by historic and ethnographical considerations. For instance, how many people in America, even among Americans of Polish lineage, know that the 1939 Polish boundaries constituted approximately 40 percent of Poland's terrain at the peak of her greatest expansion. How many know, for example, that after the last war there were between one and a half and two million Poles who inhabited traditionally Polish terrain and who were abandoned for the large part, to the tender mercies of Germany. Sundry and sound arguments that are absolutely unimpeachable can be made out in behalf of the rightful claims advanced by the Polish Government, and millions of friends in America and countless others can be won over on the side of truth, and that is the responsibility, and I say the duty, of those of us who know something about the matter, to disseminate this information. The truth will sustain the position of the administration at Washington. It will lend support to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of State, and it will have a positive and helpful effect in pulverizing propaganda emanating from unfair sources.

No one in America will challenge the right of free discussion and the assumption of definite cleavage on one side or the other. But it must ever be borne in mind that however important might be the problem affecting the future of any other nation, even the closest ally, it must never interfere with the prime objective—the winning of the war at the earliest possible date with the least possible expenditure of American lives, and the establishment of a just and lasting peace. All other considerations are secondary.

The consequences of imposing upon Poland a boundary that will expose her to her enemies and the reduction of her domain to a point where it will impair her growth and virility, or the gerrymandering of her frontiers so as to deprive her of essential raw materials, such as timber, oil, peat, and certain valuable minerals, which will reduce her to dependency and weakness instead of making her independent and strong, will prove disastrous and a threat to future peace. Poland, as the key to peace in Europe, must at this late date be so recognized.

I feel that I know the attitude of the administration and of the Secretary of State, and that I can with propriety presume to say that the injustice of the last war and the shortcomings of the Treaty of Versailles insofar as they applied to Poland will not be repeated at the conference table following World War No. 2.

Our greatest asset and our ability to render the greatest amount of good are centered in our ability to unite in support of America's foreign policy as enunciated by the President and the Secretary of State in sustaining the Atlantic Charter and our insistance upon the "four freedoms." The administration has never forsaken these expressions. The President of the United States went so far as to offer the aid of his good offices in the ironing out of the differences between the Polish and Russian governments. It is unfortunate that the changed attitude of the Russian government after Stalingrad was such as to refuse this friendly proffer on the part of our Government. This friendly American gesture is one which commends itself to our continued respect and to our undivided support.

I think at the proper time it will yield dividends toward the welfare of Poland and toward the establishment of a lasting and just peace.

The average American is not only fair but he is friendly to the cause of Poland but altogether too frequently he is either uninformed, misinformed, or because of the great amount of base and erroneous propaganda, he is confused and it is, therefore, the problem of Polonia in these United States to make known the just claims of the government in exile on behalf of the people of Poland. This can be done without losing sight of the objective or without deviating from the well-defined and prescribed patriotic course. It will be of great service not only to the people of Poland but also to our fellow Americans who seek the truth.

We must look ahead to the day when the war is over to the peace conference, to a time when Poland will have to rely upon her friends at the conference table to sustain her legitimate claims. We must, therefore, not permit petty personal differences or the excursions of individuals into comic spheres to cause consternation and disunity. We must always remember first and above everything else that we are Americans and we have a war to win and a permanent and just peace to secure. I am confident that the President of the United States and the Secretary of State have never departed one iota from their previous declarations. In fact we have the declarations of Cordell Hull delivered in the form of a personal report to the Congress of the United States as authority for this, my statement. Subsequently, he has made another and a forceful public declaration over the radio and I was unable to detect in either instance any digression from the original purpose and declaration or any faltering weakness.

Now let us have confidence in our friends. Let us not permit selfish interests to arouse suspicions among our people here in America or among our brethren in other parts of the world, for we might only weaken our case by creating animosities. Let us stand united with confidence that the administration, definitely on record, will fulfill its every pledge in spirit and in detail. Millions of Americans of Polish extraction with hundreds of thousands of sons fighting for the perpetuation of American ideals and the liberation of the subjugated peoples, victimized by this war look to this Congress, to this assembly of representative American citizens to redefine the course, to rededicate themselves to the objectives of winning the war, supporting the War bond and Red Cross drives and all other worth-while wartime activities and, above all else, to sustain the Commander in Chief toward the end that we may win the war and secure a lasting and just peace with the least possible expenditure in the lives of our American fighting men who are waging an armed crusade for religion, democracy, and the preservation of our beloved country.

What is the meaning of this repeated emphasis upon the early and successful ending of the war? Translated into simple, understandable language it means:

Driving the unspeakable German Hun back to his foul lair and the crushing of this hydra-headed monster.

It means abrupt stoppage of the flow of heroic blood, of suffering, and of the sacrifice of our own brave warriors and those of our gallant allies.

It means that the foul paws of the German rapist, plunderer, and murderer, clutching at the throat of millions of unfortunate victims, will be shaken loose and paralyzed in death. The yoke of German enslavement and the forged shackles of the supermen will be broken, and the liberated hands of the peoples who bore them will be the very ones to break and stretch the neck of the aggressors. The day of retribution will be at hand.

Desecration and destruction of the churches of God will come simultaneously with the end of the Hun. Then a Te Deum will be sung in harmony with the peal of the bells, if any remain, in Warsaw; the bells of Paris, Prague, Brussels, and the capitals of all the liberated and Allied countries will join in one grand paeon of a rejoicing world.

On that day of liberation, when the millions of brave Americans fighting side by side with their Allied comrades in arms force the unconditional surrender of the marauding German horde, every mile of subjugated terrain in all Europe will be freed and every foot of blood-drenched Polish soil made sacred by the sacrifice of its millions of martyred dead will be cleared of the invader. The cloven-hoof marks of the biped swine will be erased and the earth once more consecreated to the wholesome purpose of giving sustenance to its rightful owners. That day marking the end of the war will reestablish the broken family ties, severed by the fiendish Germans. It will bring together, from all points of the compass, such remaining husbands and wives as might survive the separation and the enslavement within the hell on earth known to them as Germany. God grant that on that day abducted children of Poland and of other countries, and the countless Polish orphans shipped into Deutschland for corruption and Germanization, will be found, freed, and returned to their native country.

In a word it means the promised deliverance of millions who for nearly 5 long years have suffered the pains and anguish of hell. It means that the word of our President on that day will become the flesh of reality and of liberation for all who suffer beneath the heel of German fiendishness.

Finally and most important, it will be the historic day our boys suffered, died, and went through hell in order to break the grip of the Hun, and on that day millions of American mothers and fathers, yes, millions more throughout the world, will heave a sigh of relief as they prayerfully look to the return of their sons and daughters who freed the world from the greatest curse ever brought down upon humanity.

And on that very day, even before our victorious soldiers begin their westward trek for home, I warn you people of America, beware, for the cunning, whining, scheming Hun, ever on the alert, will plead for mercy and understanding as he treacherously prepares another blood bath for a gullible and sloppily sentimental world.

If you do not make him impotent, or at least put a ring in his provocative nose to restrict him from terrain reserved for others, you will have but yourselves to blame for your indifference, and you will have another war to fight in 25 years.

We have but one objective, but one job to do, and to do it promptly it must be done thoroughly and unitedly. That objective is the winning of the war.

Strikes in War Production

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, from California comes a letter this morning containing a newspaper clipping which reads as follows:

Lumber: Two thousand lumbermen and woods products workers walk off jobs in nine sawmills in Seattle and Tacoma, Wash., in protest against N. L. R. B. refusal to grant wage increases to 130,000 sawmill and logging employees in Pacific Northwest. Spread of strike feared.

Copper: Two hundred miners at Anaconda copper mines in Butte, Mont., strike in protest against shift boss, affecting vital production of ore.

Motors: Despite settlement of teamster dispute in Detroit, 3,000 Chrysler workers remain on strike over trucking privileges at plant.

Transportation: Cleveland Transit System workers threaten strike that would halt operation of streetcars and busses effective Saturday night as plans for emergency transit for war workers being formulated. Transit men seek wage increase.

Strike of 56 drivers tied up busses of Schuylkill Valley Lines, Inc., main transportation company serving 100,000 persons in Norristown and about 20 smaller communities in southeastern Pennsylvania. Thousands of workbound war workers stranded. Strikers out in disagreement over bonus wage plan.

Building supply: Building-supply workers in Toledo, Ohio, strike on heels of walk-out of 600 municipal workers, seeking higher wages.

Tugboats: Strike of tugmen in Cleveland area prevents movements of large vessels moving up Cuyahoga River to war plants. Dispute certified to W. L. B.

Appliances: Dispute over discharge of union stewards causes 940 workers to walk out at Murray-Ohio Manufacturing Co., in Cleveland.

Steel: Two strikes in Birmingham, Ala., area coal mines halt operations at the Bessemer plant of Pullman Standard Car Company. Nearly 2,000 men affected. Failure to settle minor wage disputes cause of strike. Eighteen hundred diggers reported idle.

Asbestos: Strike at Johns-Manville plant at Alexandria, Ind., left 499 workers idle. Company produces rock wool for Navy. Workers demand better working conditions.

Machinists: War Labor Board directed union leaders to call off strike of 125 members of A. F. of L. International Association of Machinists at Granite City, Ill., steel company. Controversy resulted in idleness of 1,800 workers.

STRIKES CLOSE LUMBER MILLS—13 NORTHWEST YARDS HIT; LABOR UNREST GRIPS 6 OTHER STATES

(By Gerald B. Healey)

Strikes closed 13 lumber mills in the Pacific Northwest Friday night while other labor disturbances, mostly in war plants, spread through 6 States.

Latest reported walk-outs came at Seattle and Tacoma, Wash., where nearly 2,000 men left their sawmill and logging jobs over refusal of the N. L. R. B. to grant wage increases.

Seven of Tacoma's major lumber mills were shut down and 11 other mills in Tacoma and surrounding area, which are under union jurisdiction, may close tomororw.

NINE YARDS PERILED

Nine other retail lumber yards in that city also may be affected by the walk-out.

In Seattle 1,000 men were out in 6 mills.

Union headquarters in Tacoma reported that about 4,000 workers in sawmills and plywood plants would not report for work Saturday.

A. F. L. officials said they tried to "hold the men in line" but were unsuccessful. They termed the walk-outs an "unofficial vacation."

MINERS STRIKE

Two hundred miners struck in protest against a shift boss at the St. Lawrence mine of the vital Anaconda Copper Mining Co. at Butte, Mont. The mine has been producing more than a million pounds of copper per month under Government war contracts.

Despite settlement of a jurisdictional dispute between A. F. of L. and C. I. O. teamsters unions in Detroit, 9,000 Chrysler Corporation war workers remained on strike. It was the Chrysler dispute over trucking privileges that started the teamsters' factional trouble.

Cleveland and Toledo were hit hard by a series of labor difficulties that struck with startling rapidity.

Most serious threat was the impending walkout of 4,100 employees of the Cleveland Transit System.

Nazis Playing Last Cards as Allies Prepare to Strike

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JESSIE SUMNER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I draw your attention to the following previously mentioned article by Constantine Brown from yesterday's Sunday Star. I have always followed a rule of not inserting any extraneous writings in the RECORD. I make this exception because the article contains facts which should be known by every American citizen. The invasion is premature and should be postponed.

NAZIS PLAYING LAST CARDS AS ALLIES PREPARE TO STRIKE—INVASION TO BRING BITTEREST BATTLES OF WAR, WITH END OF FIGHTING SEEN SOON IF SUCCESS COMES WITH ATTACKS

(By Constantine Brown)

There will be no unfurled flags or military bands and beating drums when the Allied forces begin the invasion of western Europe. It will be a series of grim battles of men armed with the latest destructive devices. Escorted by thousands of planes and warships of all types, invasion barges will land hundreds of thousands of men who will strike out front on the beaches to meet the enemy.

The German divisions will be concealed behind the latest and most improved fortifications which will have to be pounded out of existence by the cross-fire of the Allied artillery.

Both sides realize this will be the most momentous battle of the war. Neither the Allies nor the Germans have much margin for error. The invasion must click with chronometer-like precision; the defense forces must gather at the threatened points—the only thing constituting surprise in the impending offensive—with equal split-second precision. Even a short delay or confusion of orders at a vital point might have dire consequences.

The Germans are playing their last card in Europe. Their veteran military leaders, Marshals Gerd Von Rundstedt and Erwin Rommel, are fully aware of this. So are the younger and enthusiastic Allied generals who are leading the invasion forces.

LAST MAJOR BATTLE

The Germans, officers and soldiers, are fully aware that this is the last major battle of the war.

A defeat in western Europe at the moment the Russians are poised to strike at the Reich from the east would mean the complete collapse of the Germans and probably the end of the Reich for a good many years. All the shrewd work of Germany's generals and statesmen from Frederick the Great to Prince Otto von Bismarck, the Iron Chancelor, who completed the unification of the German kingdoms and principalities into a German Empire, would disappear. Germany will be reduced to a number of weak states as she was in the days before Frederick. It will be many years before she can lift her head again and it is doubtful that another German empire will be created for many generations.

Students of Germany's military history believe the German generals in charge of the present operations will follow the old tradition which consists of regarding war only as a campaign. If it is lost, peace must be made at once to save manpower and permit the generals to prepare, on the basis of the learned lessons, for another war. This has occurred again and again. Marshal Paul von Hindenburg and his chief of staff, Gen. Erich Ludendorff, advised the civilian powers, after the Kaiser's flight to Holland, to make peace with the Allies in 1918 at any price. They realized as early as the summer of 1918 that the war could not be won, and thus, they reasoned, Germany must get a breathing spell to prepare for a better war in a generation or so.

MUST BE DIVIDED

This time the Germans will not be given this chance. Great Britain, Russia, and the United States, with the full concurrence of their smaller associates have decided to eliminate Germany as a military power in Europe. This, they believe, cannot be done by imposing terms—regardless of how harsh they may be—on a united Reich. They agreed at Teheran that Germany must be divided into her component parts and the former kingdoms, principalities, and dukedoms must be prevented from uniting again. Individually, they may be allowed to prosper economically in confederations which are not of their own making. The Allied leaders believe a forced estrangement, with parts of Germany joining the western confederation under the leadership of Britain and other posts joining an eastern confederation headed by Russia, is about the only way to crush Germany's militarism and military power in Europe.

This general outline of Germany's future has not been hidden from the Germans. Official announcements from London, Washington, and Moscow leave no doubt as to the intentions of the Allies. The German generals and the men under their command are fully aware of the consequences of a defeat. The morale of the German defense force cannot be determined with any degree of finality. From available reports and judging by the men we have captured in Italy the morale is unbroken. But the Germans are not supermen and how they will be able to withstand the most murderous fire they have ever seen from ground and naval forces is a matter which no man can foresee.

The German military preparations are said to be as perfect as modern human genius can produce. Underground hangars for the Luftwaffe, underground communications permitting German forces to move from one point to another without interference from Allied gunnery, and many other devices are believed to have been established over an extensive area of the invasion front. British military authorities still speak about surprise weapons such as a rocket gun capable of hurling between 6 and 10 tons of explosives at a distance of 100 miles. Whether such a gun actually exists is difficult to ascertain at this time, but within the next few weeks—or days—we will find out. If the allies succeed in establishing a wide and deep beachhead where they will be able to pour their invasion troops and all the necessary material and organize airfields, it is doubtful if the German resistance will extend much longer than this fall. Faced with 2 powerful armies, 1 in the west and the other in the east, the walls of the European fortress are bound to crumble in a shorter time than the average observer believes.

On the other hand, it would be rendering a disservice to the peoples of the Allied countries if the risks of the first few weeks of the battle against the Germans were not sufficiently emphasized. There is a possibility that the German defenses, manned by determined and experienced troops provided with ample quantities of material, will keep the Allies from establishing a firm and continuous beachhead. The consequences of such a failure would be grave, particularly for Britain.

GIGANTIC PLANS MADE

The Allies will not make a demonstration such as the Dieppe affair in 1942. They will attack in all earnestness with everything at their disposal. For 2 years we have been preparing for the most gigantic amphibious operation ever known in history. A large number of troops who have been concentrated in the United Kingdom over this period will be involved. The losses will be considerable if we crack the German wall, but they will be even larger if we fail. The morale of the British and American troops is at least as good as that of the Germans, although the purpose of the war is so different.

The Americans will give their utmost because they want the war to end and they want to return to their homes.

The British have an even greater scope. The British leaders, as well as the Tommy in the ranks, realize that the fate of the empire depends on the results of the great battles which will develop. If, by misfortune, these battles should end without our forces having established themselves permanently in the designated areas, there is no saying what political conditions will develop in Europe this year.

Russia is determined to synchronize her actions with the actions of the other United Nations. But failure to break through the German wall in the west would place the Russians in a difficult position. Their aim is said to be a march through Prussia to Berlin and the Elbe River. The Germans have a large army on the eastern front—about 190 divisions, out of which about 35 or 40 are said to be satellite troops.

Should the Allies in the west fail in their objective the power of Nazi resistance in the east would be greatly increased and the Germans would so strengthen their defenses against the Russians that any hope of breaking through would be frustrated.

Under such circumstances it is difficult to gage what might happen in Europe politically. In view of the long period of time which would be required for the western Allies to prepare another large-scale offensive, many observers are inclined to believe that Russia might be willing to come to terms with Germany on the basis of a Soviet expansion in Europe to the boundaries of June 1941.

Much of the rivalry between Britain and Russia in Asia has now been eased by the common purpose of the Allies to defeat the Germans. This defeat would offer Russia one or more exits to the Mediterranean, that is to say, to warm seaports. Should the Nazis not be defeated as a result of our invasion, Russia might be led to consider the possibility of obtaining access to a warm seaport in another area such as the Persian Gulf.

That threat to British supremacy in the Middle East and eventually to India has been recognized by British statesmen for a long time. The agreements reached at Moscow and later at Teheran are said to have fully safeguarded Britain's interests in those areas. Russia does not particularly care where she obtains the outlet without which the Soviet remains stifled.

The agreements signed at Teheran provide for certain military action on the part of Britain and the United States. Otherwise the political understandings regarding the future map of Europe lose their value. Stalin is willing to live up to his part of the bargain, which, however, is predicated on an Allied victory in the west. If this is not forthcoming the Teheran accord will be a dead letter and the Soviet government will be fully entitled to adopt the best policy in the interest of Russia. Premier Stalin has proved himself a strictly realistic political man. There is no emotional streak in him regarding foreign affairs. In international matters he has no more feeling than a surgeon who operates on a patient he has never seen before.

There is no question that the Russian leader fervently hopes the Allies will be successful in their impending offensive. But should they fail, the interests of Russia will be the predominant factor in Stalin's mind and if they have to conflict with those of Britain, it will be unpleasant, but it can't be helped.

These facts are known to the British leaders and are probably being realized subconsciously by the British fighting men.

The battle in western Europe will exceed in bitterness and determination anything we have ever seen in the world before. According to some observers a decision can be expected within a few weeks after the first Anglo-American waves have landed; others say it will take a few months. But the bulk of the American and British authorities believe the final verdict will come this summer.

Increase in Fluid Milk and Cream Sales

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM H. STEVENSON

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I include the following letter:

MILK INDUSTRY FOUNDATION,
Washington, D. C., May 24, 1944.

Hon. WILLIAM H. STEVENSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. STEVENSON: Recently we had some conversation regarding the increase in fluid milk and cream sales. I believe I told you that I felt the increase had been very much less than the percentage mentioned by you in your talk reproduced in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Yesterday we received the official figures issued by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture. This shows an apparent civilian consumption of fluid milk and cream on a per capita basis as follows:

	Pounds
Average 1935-39	340.1
1941	350.6
1942	371.8
1943	403.4
1944 (estimate)	396.2

(1944 expressed as a percentage of 1935-39 average is 116 percent and as a percentage of 1943—98 percent. You will see from the foregoing figures that the increase from 1941 to 1943 was 12 percent.)

It may interest you to know that according to Foundation tabulations comparing class 1 milk sales in 15 city markets for April with March 1944, the total sales show a decline of 2.23 percent. It is pretty evident that the War Food Administration conservation program is working well.

Very truly yours,

BENJAMIN F. CASTLE,
President.

Citizenship in Time of War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD F. HARLESS

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Mr. Charles S. Stough, past commander of the American Legion in my State and a veteran of World Wars No. 1 and No. 2, at an I Am an American Day function in Douglas, Ariz., on May 21, 1944:

It is with a great deal of pleasure that I accepted the invitation of Chairman Foster to address you briefly today upon the subject of citizenship in time of war.

Citizenship in a democracy entails certain responsibilities, as well as certain privileges. The freedom we as citizens of the United States enjoy is only maintained by the assumption on our part of the obligations this citizenship imposes.

There are nations where the people who inhabit the land are not permitted the political rights and the privileges we, as Americans, enjoy. Because they have no political rights they are unable to bring about political reforms or economic reforms by the use of the ballot in free elections, so the only recourse left to those people if they desire reform is revolution. In a democracy we bring about reforms by other methods.

Democracy is a relatively new thing. It was just 168 years ago that this Nation by its Declaration of Independence established this the now oldest democracy upon the face of the earth. On that July 4 in 1776, when those patriots signed their Declaration they said to all the world, I am an American. Prior to this time they were subjects of Great Britain and the Crown of England, but upon that day they became citizens of the United States of America, and they assumed the responsibilities of citizenship. The rugged road which this patriotic band of self-sacrificing citizens were forced to travel was not yet visible to them, but there were no weak hearts; they faced the future with determination, and after many serious military losses, they turned what looked like disaster into a glorious victory and the firm establishment of the present democracy, the United States of America.

Since those early days there have been other crises, and other pioneer Americans have never failed their duties. As citizens, they have manned the armies and the navies when it became necessary to fight a foe to defend themselves against the encroachments of forces which would destroy their freedom. In the War of 1812, and the French and Indian Wars, and the War with Spain, and later in the First World War, it was the citizens who made up the fighting forces and won the victory. Likewise it was the citizens who fought and won the battles against economic ills which followed the war and which took from free men their freedom and their right to live and to enjoy their lives as Americans should.

Today we find our Nation engaged in another war. We call it World War No. 2 because it is a continuation of a war which is being fought by the same belligerents, and over the same territory as the great war of 1914 to 1918. Many of us participated in that great struggle. Many of us crossed submarine infested seas, and slept and fought in the same French mud which soon will mire down our own modern armies, as they carry the fight forward toward Germany and the evil philosophies of Prussianism. We who embarked to foreign soil in the early days of 1917 and 1918 remember well the heartbreak days when our efforts to advance seemed in vain. We can recall quite vividly the great enemy advance, when our armies were forced backward, and backward, when the French inhabitants left the territory with their belongings in hand carts, and by every other means of transportation. Those were the days when the future looked dark and victory looked very far away. Those were the same kind of days of which Tom Paine wrote, in Revolutionary times, when he said: "Those were the times that try men's souls," but this was the time when there awakened in these great citizen armies the indomitable will to stop the onslaught of the advancing German armies. It was the same American will that saved the day at Valley Forge, and it was the same American will that saved the day for Andrew Jackson at New Orleans, and it is the same American will which will overcome Hitler, and the Nazis in Europe, and the Japanese in the Pacific.

Some of us have witnessed first hand, the spirit of the American armies in this war. It was my extreme privilege to have been a part of the Fifth Air Force which is now carrying the fight to the Japanese in the Southwest Pacific. In the early days, before the Battles of Buna and Gona, I can assure you the chips were down in Australia. In those days of 1942 and early 1943, no one knew what might happen. The continent of Australia was in danger of invasion. Darwin had been bombed off the map, and our Army was holding precariously to one little spot on New Guinea, and the Japs were advancing across the Kokoda trail toward Port Moresby. It was a magnificent citizen army, the National Guard of Michigan and Wisconsin if you please, who made that wonderful trek across the 1,300-foot high Owen Stanley Mountains, and met and defeated the Japanese at Buna and Gona. This remarkable victory was accomplished in spite of greater trials than any infantry has ever been called upon to negotiate before, or since, and they whipped the enemy in spite of lack of supplies, and equipment. After this great victory, the Air Corps carried the fight to the enemy across the waters of the Bismarck Sea, and New Guinea was saved, and Australia was not invaded. It was a distinct honor to have served with those fine Americans who turned the tide in the Pacific. In all of my life, I never was more proud to say "I am an American."

It seems to me that perhaps the first objective of all citizenship in time of war is the orderly procedure which is being followed at the present time. I find the citizens who are best fit physically doing their jobs well in the armed forces, and I find the citizens who have found their work in the factories and plants carrying on in marvelous fashion. Never before in the history of the world has a nation harnessed its manpower to the necessities of production to carry on a successful war, as we are witnessing at the present time. Our people are working hard to win the victory. There have been a few instances when people who work have placed their own personal troubles ahead of the cause of victory, but it is a great tribute to the workers of the Nation to know that just a fraction of 1 percent of labor in the war effort has been lost because of work stoppages and strikes. Labor has maintained this fine record in spite of many objectionable working conditions which should not exist. It is likewise a great tribute to management that this low percentage has been maintained. On a few occasions management has chosen to forget its obligation to the cause of victory, but methods have been devised to take care of these situations, and it is a tribute to management that they have seen fit to place the cause of the Nation ahead of their personal gains. This exemplification of harmony in the production of the needs of the Nation in time of war is another example of the greatness of democracy at work. It conclusively demonstrated the fact that freemen can remain free and work together to defeat a common enemy, even though that enemy commands its subjects like slaves and destroys their individuality. In America today industry is still free, and labor is still free, and it is one of the duties of all citizens to insist that it ever remains that way.

To those of you who feel that we have failed to keep production up to its maximum, to those of you who complain of strikes and work stoppages in America, let me refer you to any of the men in the armed services who have spent any time abroad. I assure you they have seen real strikes and disastrous work stoppages. They have seen the war effort hindered by the selfishness of workers and employers in other countries and if these soldiers complain about conditions they feel exist at home, it is because they have been misinformed about the conditions here, and when they get home and look the situation over they are loud in their praise of the job both industry and labor has done in the war effort, in America.

As long as we the people, the citizens of the United States, insist that the men and women of America shall remain free, just so long will we remain great. So long as the people recognize and exercise their political rights, this Nation shall remain free and unconquerable by any Nazi or Fascist idealogy. Democracy however, recognizes the right of everyone to freely express his opinions. There are those who would take away this freedom of thought, but the great men of the past have warned us against it. Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson founded their whole philosophy of thought upon the freedom of the individual to think as he pleased, and to ask for reform in an orderly fashion, by the will of all the people, expressed in ballots at the election booth. We in America have never experienced any trouble as long as we have followed these precepts. There have been times when attempts have been made to overthrow our Government by seditious methods, but they have always failed and they will continue to fail because Americans have always accepted their responsibility of citizenship when a crisis comes. These times in which we live are important in the history of our Nation. The emergencies which face us now demand that a few of our liberties be given up for the benefit of the common welfare. These are not ordinary times.

We have been forced to draft men for service in the armed services. We have been forced to tax the people to maintain the battle against the enemy, and the emergencies of the times have forced us to accept rationing of food and gasoline and other materials so vitally necessary to the war effort. These things have happened with our wholehearted acceptance, as necessary to win the victory. We do not like it, and we ofttimes complain, but all this sacrifice is made, because we agree it is necessary. It is this free acceptance of the restrictions war brings which make us a great Nation. We will continue to deprive ourselves of these things until the victory is won, because we know this is the way to end the war quickly and successfully and bring home our men and women who are facing the enemy on 75 war fronts today.

We are facing facts today. America is demonstrating an austerity which a few years ago seemed impossible of reality, and she is doing it with a determination which is unbelievable. Citizenship in time of war demands clear thinking and concerted action. It demands even in time of war the selection of officials who shall guide the Nation in this great time of trial. There are those who honestly believe elections in time of war are hazardous, but being free people we have faith in the will of the people freely expressed even in time of war. We in America will tolerate no dictatorship, even in time of war, for we have confidence in the will of the American people, so we are not afraid of elections. Much has been said about our first President saying that no person should serve longer than two terms, or by his actions indicating that a President should not serve longer than two terms. I would like to refer to a letter Washington wrote to Lafayette on April 28, 1788, in which he expressed his own opinion in the following thoughtful words: "As, for instance, on the ineligibility of the same person for President, after he should have served a certain course of years, I confess I differ widely myself with Mr. Jefferson and you as to the necessity or expediency of rotation in that appointment. There cannot, in my opinion, be the least danger that the President will, by any intrigue, ever be able to continue himself one minute in office, much less perpetuate himself in it. Under an extended view of part of this subject, I can see no propriety in precluding ourselves from the service of any man, who in some great emergency, shall be deemed universally most capable of serving the public."

This, I take it, was the fixed opinion of the Father of our Country and others who were guiding the Nation at that time. You will note that the question of perpetuity or dictatorship was in the minds of those great men who established our Republic, yet they placed no constitutional restrictions upon reelection. They had confidence as we now have in the will of the people.

It seems to me the greatest responsibility of citizenship today is the selection of proper men to steer the ship of state through these troublesome times. We owe a responsibility to the men and the women who are now fighting our battles at the front. We should see to it that the men most able are selected to represent us in Washington and in our state and community governments. We should look well into the qualifications of the candidates who present themselves for our choice, and we should look well into their records before we cast a vote in their favor. Find out who they are, who ask to be sent to the State legislature and to the Nation's Capital. Look well into the cause which motivates their desires to represent us, and be sure they do represent us and not some special interest or private ambition.

And so, as I view the thing, citizenship in time of war entails the doing of our job as near perfection as possible. Whether it be in the armed forces or on the farm or in the factory or plant. Citizenship in time of war demands a freedom of thought by the individual. Be careful that you do not found your thinking on false doctrines and half truths. Citizenship in time of war demands that we gear ourselves to the emergencies of these times. Let us accept rationing and taxes as part of the cost of war and tolerate it gracefully. And, finally, citizenship in time of war demands careful selection of those men who will represent us in our many branches of government. If we approach these manifold war problems along these lines, I am sure we will be fulfilling our obligation to our Nation as a citizen in time of war, and the future of America will be safe and secure.

Dr. Samuel Clyde Fittz

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. A. LEONARD ALLEN

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, one of the closest friendships I ever formed was with Dr. Samuel Clyde Fittz of my home town, Winnfield, La. In his death which occurred May 14, 1944, I have sustained the greatest loss of personal friendship. Dr. Fittz for more than a quarter of a century was my family physician. For a great many years we had adjoining offices. His sudden death has removed one of the most influential and useful citizens which my section of Louisiana has ever produced. Always sympathetic, always courteous, always ready to serve his fellow man, Dr. Fittz really gave his life for others. He worked in the heat, in the cold, in the night, and in the day, without sleep, without rest to minister to the needs of others.

His death marks the end of a great career, but the good which he has done will not die. The memory of this patient, careful and sympathetic physician in the homes of our people will last longer than the memory of those living. As his neighbor and friend, I loved him in life and I am proud to honor his memory in death. Mr. Speaker, in connection with my remarks I wish to include an editorial from the Winnfield News-American under date of May 19, 1944:

LOSS TO WINN PARISH

The loss to Winnfield, Winn Parish and this entire area in the death of Dr. Samuel Clyde Fittz is irreparable. His sudden death on Sunday morning stunned the whole community and mourning was widespread. No highly electrically charged line could have brought more consternation and dismay than the words, "Dr. Fittz is dead." His passing is accounted a serious loss.

His sudden death is attributable mainly to the excessive strain he had been under for the past few months caused by overwork necessitated by the increased demands on his time and energies. And truly it was one of his outstanding characteristics to give of himself unstintingly in all his services to humanity and his friends.

Dr. Fittz built and made of himself an institution in our midst. He was an upright and fearless citizen, a Christian gentleman, and a public benefactor. A native of Winn Parish reared on a farm near Montgomery he attended the public schools of his home community and later studied medicine at Tulane University, New Orleans, from which school he graduated and later served his internship at Charity Hospital in Shreveport. In 1908 he began the practice of medicine in Winnfield. During his 36 years of service to the people of Winn Parish comparatively few families have not had the privilege of his visits for relief of suffering in mind and body. His presence was comforting and old and young accepted his decisions with assurance.

Not only was he a man of understanding, but a man of great vision. He was frank with his friends and was free from malice or ill feeling. He was a friend and a neighbor to his large clientele, and because of such admirable traits he became one of the best known and most beloved men by adults and children, both white and colored. His service to the people of this area cannot be measured. It is something that is priceless, not only in today's fleeting hours, but in the tomorrows and the years ahead. Winn Parish and the whole world has need of more men such as he—men of his understanding, patience, tolerance, and real ability, men of his broad view of service, and, most of all, men of his honor and strength of character. We mourn as kinsmen for one beloved for his many acts that bespoke his interest in humanity. We love him for his admirable personal traits—his geniality and kindliness which endeared him to everyone. His death is regretted by thousands, and Winn Parish has lost one of her best friends and most useful citizens.

The Cabaret Tax

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN Z. ANDERSON
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to again call attention to the discriminatory nature of the 30-percent cabaret tax as it was included in the recent revenue bill.

All information which I have received would indicate that the Government is losing revenue because of a reduction in attendance at most places where the 30-percent tax has been imposed. Furthermore it is extremely unjust to our men and women in the service who deeply resent having to pay the increased tax at the few places of amusement which they can still attend. I sincerely trust that the Congress will act speedily to reduce the tax to not more than 10 percent.

Indicative of the type of communications which all Members of Congress are receiving, I wish to include in my remarks a letter from the manager of the St. Francis Hotel in San Francisco, which reads in part as follows:

Actually, in the tax brackets in which most hotels find themselves these days it is unimportant, but it does seem a shame that the brunt of the tax is borne by men in the military service. This is particularly true of San Francisco as it is the main port of embarkation and debarkation on the Pacific coast. Nightly we receive bitter complaints in our supper room from the officers and men who have just returned from service in the Pacific area and who have looked forward for a considerable time to an evening of dining and dancing in this or other San Francisco hotels which have supper rooms.

The tax has caused a reduction in attendance in most places from 30 to 50 percent. I believe the public as well as men in service would not resent a 10 percent tax, but most certainly 30 percent is entirely out of reason in the minds of most of our patrons.

Also of interest is the following wire from the manager of the Hotel Californian at Fresno:

We are appealing to you to use your influence for the reduction to 10 percent in cabaret tax. Anything above 10 percent will still hurt that business. People will not pay more. As we have had surveys made Government will make more out of it at 10 percent or less. It not only puts people out of work who pay income taxes but it is seriously resented by all personnel in the armed forces.

Address of Very Rev. Msgr. James H. Griffiths in the Amphitheater at Arlington National Cemetery

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS S. GORDON
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent, I insert in the RECORD a sermon broadcast on the Church of the Air Program, delivered by the Very Rev. Msgr. James H. Griffiths, chancelor to Archbishop Spellman in the military ordinariate for the armed forces, on the sixth annual memorial mass offered in the Amphitheater at the Arlington National Cemetery on Sunday, May 28, 1944. The mass, sponsored by the Washington general assembly, fourth degree, Knights of Columbus, in association with the National Capital Committee of Catholic Societies, was offered for all the war dead, regardless of race, creed, or color.

At the occasion, I was honored to represent the Catholic Order of Foresters of Chicago, Ill., by placing a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

"Thus saith the Lord God: come, spirit, from the four winds, and blow upon these slain, and let them live again * * * and the spirit came into them, and they lived: and they stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army." (Ezekiel 37, 9–10.)

For nearly 5 years now the night skies of the world have been ablaze with orange, red, and yellow flames; with dancing, dazzling showers of golden sparks, rivaling in rapid, terrifying grandeur the flashing northern lights; indescribably surpassing the cosmic majesty of apocalyptic visions, as the earth has reeled and shuddered beneath the hammer blows of the Vulcans of war. For nearly 5 years, fire has been falling from the heavens; a fire which has seared and scorched and blackened the green hell of the jungle and the checkerboard of humble hamlets and mighty cities crawling with human beings. Through the ever increasing progress of material science, men have soared up to empyrean heights to snatch, as it were, the ancient fire, that zooming, they might hurl it down on their fellow men until the swarming, helpless masses have come to regard the heavens as the source of death; until they have been cowered and beaten and broken in spirit and limb and have dreaded to raise their eyes to the skies. From out the deep vault of the blue, from out the starry spangled skies there now descends a fiery fury striking into men's breasts the spirit of fear and flinging them down into the depths of despair and desolation.

Ignis desursum! Fire from heaven! What an astounding contrast between this awful vision of modern, mechanized aerial warfare and the fire from heaven which descended in a dozen tongues of flame on the first Pentecost to settle on the heads of a cowering group of artisans and fishermen locked in a gloomy supper room. Fire from heaven—not the fire which blasts the bodies and the souls of men; not the fire which reduces strong men to bleeding masses of whimpering flesh; not the fire which shrivels the human spirit and leaves a man a gibbering, skulking remnant of his former self.

No; the fire which fell from heaven on the first Pentecost is not the death-dealing fire of man's ingenuity but the life-giving fire of redeeming Divinity. The fire which we commemorate in the Holy Sacrifice on this Pentecost Sunday is the fire of God. It is the symbol of the Third Person of the Adorable Trinity, the Comforter, the Strengthener promised to the world by the Lord Jesus. It is a fire which was carried through the crooked alleys of Jerusalem on the wings of a mighty wind which shook the ancient city walls to their foundations. It is a fire which transformed a group of timid, disillusioned, ill-prepared Galileans into a fearless, irresistible phalanx of conquering apostles, vowed to no less an objective than the conquest of the world for Christ. It is a fire which once hurled upon the earth will burn brightly and unquenchably, in spite of every effort human and satanic, to extinguish it. This fire of God when once ignited in the hearts of men, drives them on relentlessly to the ends of the earth broadcasting to the end of time to those who sit "in darkness and in the shadow of death," a message of peace, of justice, of mercy, of brotherly love, of the precious dignity and the unfading immortality of the human soul. This is the fire blazing forth from the heart of God which inevitably withers and inexorably consumes in its avenging flames the evil, the cruelty, the hatred, the injustices and impurities which corrupt and pollute the souls of men. In very truth, this is the divine fire out of whose depths alone are born the true heroes of humanity—the men who reckon as naught their lives, their limbs, their fortunes, and their fame when the rights of God and the God-given rights of man are endangered by the demoniacs who have forged in the fires of hell the chains of human slavery.

It is, therefore, a coincidence, but a happy coincidence, that this Sunday on which we are gathered here to pay homage to the fallen heroes of this Republic, should likewise be the festival of Pentecost. This feast marks the official inauguration of the redemptive or liberating mission of the church. It marks the D-day of Christianity when the apostles, the commandos of Christ, set their faces toward the horizons of the world, following the four winds toward the blood red sunset of martyrdom which was journey's end for each of them and which destined each of them to a hero's niche in God's heavenly hall of fame. On this day they set forth to bring new life and an evangel of liberty to all the earth. In His parting words the Master had commended them to "teach all nations" the truths He had revealed to them. There was consequently no room in their poor baggage for fantastic blood myths and race fables. The blood of the Christ which spattered the wood of the Cross and purchased liberation, was given indiscriminately for the black man and the white, the yellow and the brown. They had been the witnesses on Calvary of that divine blood transfusion which alone could make us all brothers in the highest and finest sense—brothers in Christ and sons of His eternal Father.

From the upper room on Mount Zion to the green shores of the Potomac is a far cry. And yet as we assemble this May morning in this imposing amphitheatre inspired by the pure classicism of Athens and the sturdy charm of Roman Provence, the same flames invisible fall on our glowing souls while we raise on high the golden chalice of supplication containing the same blood which was shed on the brow of Calvary for the freedom of the human race. Under the blue baldachin of our American skies we hold up to the Eternal Father the blood of appeasement, the blood of his soldier son, to beg everlasting rest and peace and forgiveness for the silent legions of our soldier dead who are foregathered here in their last encampment. Here under the rolling greensward repose the whitened bones of our forefathers, a pentecostal grouping of men who came to these shores from every country and every clime, "the bound who would be freed, and the sowers of wild seed." Here lie the men who avidly grasped the sputtering torch of liberty as it fell from mangled hands and held it high until it flamed fiercely once more in the struggles of our history. These valiant cohorts sleeping in the fields of the dead, this austere marble block enshrining the ashes of the Unknown Soldier, are, after all, but a symbol of the myriads of other hero dead whose remains are entabernacled in the brown bosom of the earth or rocked in the sapphire cradle of the deep all the way from Concord to Cassino and the Coral Sea; from Bull Run to Bizerte and Bataan.

This polygot army of the Sons of the Western Star caught in the sanctuaries of their venturesome but peace-loving souls God's fiery rain from heaven. They heard the clarion call from above, each man in his proper tongue, and they girded themselves with the sword that those imperishable ideals on which this land was built might not vanish from the face of the earth.

In spite of the scorn and taunts about flabby, soft democracies, at this very moment their brethren in arms, faithful to the trust, are scaling hostile peaks and plunging through the jungle depths. Their life blood too is seeping into the thirsty lips of mother earth and crimsoning the restless waters of the deep.

During all these years, in all these changing scenes, foreign potentates, whose thin blood crawls down from some victor in a border brawl, have asked themselves, what has been the mysterious force which has driven forth these money mad men of America from the village forge, the assembly line, and the counting house. What strange dynamism has transformed these farmers and laborers from peaceful civilians into sturdy warriors? It has not been greedy imperialism seeking El Dorado for they live in the midst of plenty. It has not been a swaggering militarism impatiently eager to try its mechanized efficiency, for their standing army has been a toy display. It could not be an arrogant nationalism, drunken with the false mysticism of racial superiority, for every racial stock and strain under heaven make up their ranks. No, none of these factors have constituted the driving power behind the armies of these victorious dead. It is no secret that most of them uprooted themselves and ventured across the western sea, precisely that they might rid themselves forever of these festering sores of an older world.

But within them was the spirit abiding and breathing, breathing forth against insolent might in its determined efforts to annihilate justice and right. Within these humble breasts of God-fearing men was the spirit operating and driving them to defend their sacred liberties and their hearthstones against unjust aggression. Within them was not blue blood or brute force, but divine strength. Within them was the unshakable conviction that victory depends not only on firearms but even more so on the fire of God. In this faith they have feared none save the Almighty as they have marched forth and sailed away to defend with their blood the sacred altar flame of liberty burning brightly in the city of God.

It has been this life-giving spirit of God which has animated our warriors from the beginning in achieving victory. It has been the conscious, aye, the almost palpable, presence of that Spirit which has been the force guiding our illustrious leaders since that wintry night at Valley Forge when Washington fell to his knees in the snow of the wilderness and pleaded with the Almighty for his ragged, disheartened militiamen. We were poor then. We were weak. We were humble. We were conscious of our inability to triumph through our own unaided physical and material strength. We called on God and His Spirit descended on and has abided with us.

The wilderness has been conquered. The frontiers have disappeared. Soaring palaces of steel rise on the site of forest glades where two generations ago the Indian stalked the deer. Long, shining, serpentine trains race across the fertile prairies with a speed that mocks the vanished buffalo. Plow, saw, and engine, guided by brain and brawn, have worked this modern miracle which has linked the Atlantic to the Pacific in a vast expanse of empire and has built a haven of refuge for the persecuted and a golden granary for the starving.

And yet this glorious epic of God's goodness, of struggle, defeat, and success begot in some, indeed, too many, a sense of smug complacency. But to others, to wise men who invert the hour glass of history that the sands of time may trickle in reverse, this epic becomes a grim warning that the fate of other peoples may well become the destiny of our own land. The words of the poet are still too literally true—where wealth accumulates men decay. While the horn of full and plenty continues to pour forth a seemingly endless golden stream of wealth, men are impatient with prophets of gloom. But when calamity levels a commonwealth with sorrow and misery and want, a cry goes up from the startled multitudes, a cry which questions the Heaven which they have ignored and which challenges the inscrutable wisdom of God. In their anguish men too completely forget that whom the Lord loveth, He chastiseth.

America will never wipe away the memory of villainy which perpetrated that day of infamy at Pearl Harbor. Who among us can forget the shock and the humiliation, the sheer panic which possessed whole communities on that Monday morning when the billowing, black clouds of smoke were still rising from the waters of Hawaii? The invincible power of vast, rich America had been assaulted. The deadly blitzkrieg seemed to hover in our skies. Then almost instantaneously, almost too late but certainly too vividly, we realized that the ideals which we had neglected, the way of life which we had taken for granted, were actually in danger.

We had lost much of the original fire, but the glowing embers were still there on our native hearthstone. Adversity, austere mother of the brave, fanned those embers into leaping flames. We girded ourselves materially. In the most gigantic mobilization in history, carried out in the face of a two-ocean war already being waged against us, we assembled our men and munitions and materials and fashioned a mighty machine which now drives on toward victory.

Did we mobilize spiritually? Those who have their fingers on the pulses of men's souls; who can hear the heartbeat of America will tell you that a spiritual renaissance is sweeping across the plains, through the jungles, and over the mountain tops. Men and women confronted reluctantly with the stark realities of suffering and sacrifice, of life and death; perplexed with that all-consuming concern regarding immortality, personal, conscious survival after death, have turned to God and faith and prayer which too many for too long took also for granted. To be sure this is not intended as a pious oversimplification. We are fully aware of the moral break-downs, of the bitter cynicism which have shown themselves throughout the land. The dislocation of family life, the much talked of juvenile delinquency problem give national and local leaders ample food for thought. But in spite of these and various other disturbing elements, the fact remains that in fox holes and camp chapels, in village churches and lofty cathedrals, in the quiet of their rooms at the foot of their beds, increasing millions of men and women in America are going down on their knees.

Would that our bitter lesson may never again be forgotten. Would that this spirit of God might truly abide with them not only in these troubled times when we feel the pressing personal need of Him but in the days that are to come. Would that all this carnival of carnage may not be a useless expending of blood with mere military victory over others and with no lasting victory over ourselves. Would that the Holy Spirit of God may, hover over the peace table in the form of a dove, as He did before over Christ in the Jordan. Would that the spirit of God, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, may exert His influence in the world of tomorrow, in the fields of government, of business, and of education. Then indeed we might hope for a peace and not for a truce. Then indeed would we keep faith with the soldier dead of the Nation, to whom we pay homage today. We would keep faith with those who have laid down their lives with the glowing hope that their sacrifice might in some small way make possible not a bigger America, not a richer America, not a more powerful America, but a better America. If this, their dying dream, come true, these slain shall live again. But God will never forgive America if we break faith with Him, with them, again.

Babson Sidesteps

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS G. ABERNETHY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, on May 22 I inserted in the RECORD an editorial from the Memphis Commercial Appeal commenting on Mr. Roger Babson's statement to the effect that Mr. Churchill will not let Germany crack until after the November elections. I charged then, and now repeat, that such statements are the results of underground Nazi propaganda. Mr. Babson was called upon to explain or apologize. He has done neither. He has dodged the issue. On this score the following editorial taken from the same newspaper under date of May 25, 1944, is quite interesting. The editorial follows:

BABSON SIDESTEPS

Economist Roger Babson, in a column published in the Commercial Appeal and many other newspapers on Friday, May 12, made use of the following language: "Churchill will not let Germany crack until after the November elections." In editorial comment we said, in effect, that Mr. Babson should either apologize for having made a baseless indictment of Prime Minister Churchill in a matter of fearful significance or else explain in detail his reasons for preferring a charge of the sort.

A reader of the Commercial Appeal clipped the editorial and sent it to Mr. Babson with a note expressing his approval of the stand taken. Mr. Babson answered with a penned note on the bottom of the original letter to him that reads: "Dear Brother: I will answer you on November 8. In the meantime, suggest you closely read the English newspapers." It seems to us Mr. Babson is sidestepping more vigorously than gracefully. We do not get all the English newspapers, of course, but those we do see contain nothing that would even remotely bear our Mr. Babson's contention.

It looks to us as though Mr. Babson has talked without thinking, and has now chosen to remain perched precariously on the limb onto which he has clambered—if we may mix figures of speech. We still think he ought to explain thoroughly or else come through with an honest admission that he was guilty of recklessness. As newspapers know as well as anyone and better than most, it is rather painful at times to admit error, but it is at once the honest and sensible thing to do when one pulls a boner.

It occurs to me that the intelligent Mr. Babson, like so many other people, has allowed himself to be unwittingly duped into the dissemination of enemy propaganda.

Air Lines' Safety Record

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WARREN G. MAGNUSON

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I would like to include the following editorial from the New York Times of Friday, May 26, dealing with the splendid safety record established by the commercial air lines during the year 1943:

AIR LINES' SAFETY

On a day when a record fleet of 5,500 warplanes of the United Nations was dealing death and destruction over Europe the eighth annual air transport safety award was made by the National Safety Council in this city. It celebrated a notable performance. With more than half of their aircraft in military service and much of their experienced crew personnel operating in the far corners of the earth for the Air Transport Command and the Naval Air Transport Service, 16 of the domestic airlines operated on regular schedules 1,225,000,000 passenger-miles without a passenger fatality in 1943. In fact, under conditions of stress and emergency, when air transport has proved as never before its value to the Nation, the airlines set up their second best record in more than 17 years of operation.

As in previous years the top award winners were divided into 3 groups on the basis of accumulated mileage flown safely. In group A, Eastern Airlines received the award for a total of more than 635,000,000 passenger-miles without a passenger casualty. In groups B and C, Braniff Airways and National Airlines were the winners. In addition, 14 other lines received certificates for safe operation. The over-all record of the winners was equivalent to transporting the total population of Nevada, Wyoming, and Vermont, plus the total population of 12 medium-sized cities, 200 miles from their homes and back again in complete safety.

All that has been learned of the potentialities of air in war cannot be applied without restudy to the purposes of peace, but the record for safe operation of the air lines under the American flag is one that gives sound cause for satisfaction.

Hon. Robert Ramspeck

REMARKS

OF

HON. SAM HOBBS

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure to throw a bouquet at our good friend BOB RAMSPECK and the members and staff of the Civil Service Investigating Committee.

Under House Resolution 550 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, the Committee on the Civil Service was authorized to investigate the policies and practices relating to civilian employment in the departments, agencies, and Government-owned corporations.

The committee is composed of an able and diligent group of our fellow Members: ROBERT RAMSPECK, of Georgia, chairman; JENNINGS RANDOLPH, of West Virginia, JOHN L. MCMILLAN, of South Carolina, HENRY M. JACKSON, of Washington, CARTER MANASCO, of Alabama, NAT PATTON, of Texas, GRAHAM A. BARDEN, of North Carolina, THOMAS E. SCANLON, of Pennsylvania, ARTHUR G. KLEIN, of New York, THOMAS G. ABERNETHY, of Mississippi, EDWARD H. REES, of Kansas, CLARENCE E. KILBURN, of New York, RICHARD P. GALE, of Minnesota, H. H. CARSON, of Ohio, WINIFRED C. STANLEY, of New York, CHARLES M. LAFOLLETTE, of Indiana, CHRISTIAN A. HERTER, of Massachusetts, C. FREDERICK PRACHT, of Pennsylvania, and CHARLES W. VURSELL, of Illinois. The committee was exceptionally fortunate in assembling such an outstanding staff: Col. E. J. McCormack, director; George Shillito, chief investigator; Miss Buckner Blackerby, investigator; Miss Utha Gray Smith, investigator; Edward MacDonald, analyst and investigator; A. H. Stricker, management consultant, and three secretaries, Miss Peggy Palmer, Miss Mary Rosa Bartholomew, and Don Vaughan.

This committee, the staff, the House of Representatives, the Government, and the Nation are to be congratulated upon the most efficient and effective work that has been and is being done.

The distinguished editor and journalist, Merlo Pusey, has written a well-deserved appreciation of this work, which appeared in the Washington Post recently, which with your unanimous consent I quote:

PAYS DIVIDENDS IN USE OF MANPOWER

When the medals or bouquets for outstanding war service on the home front are passed around, something rather special ought to go to the Ramspeck committee. With a minimum of ballyhoo, this committee has applied itself to the difficult task of pruning the Government pay rolls of unnecessary employees. Its aim has been the elimination of waste and enhancement of efficiency. It has achieved that aim not by yelling to high heaven but by pointing out to many different agencies that their manpower was not being effectively utilized.

If you want to get an idea of what the committee has done, look into the story of A. N. E. P. A.—the Army-Navy Electronic Production Agency. Not many people have heard of A. N. E. P. A. because its work was a deep, dark military secret. The fact that its operations were highly confidential was supposed to keep congressional snouts out of its affairs. But that did not stop BOB RAMSPECK. He discovered, as chairman of the House Civil Service Committee, to which the important task of investigating Government employment policies had been assigned, that A. N. E. P. A. was wasting manpower. The confidential nature of its assignment was no protection for that sort of policy.

When the committee turned the spotlight on A. N. E. P. A.'s employment practices, it had more than 1,000 persons on its pay roll. Many of them were inexperienced and some were overpaid for the type of work they were doing. The committee reported its findings to the Army and Navy. As a result, A. N. E. P. A. was put through a reducing process. Still the committee was not satisfied. Probing deeper, it found the A. N. E. P. A. was duplicating work done by the Army and Navy expeditors and the War Production Board.

Nine months after the Ramspeck committee began this particular investigation A. N. E. P. A. was liquidated. In a series of conferences with committee members Army and Navy officials agreed that it could be abolished without damage to the war effort. The consequent saving is estimated at $5,000,000.

That is only one relatively small item to the committee's credit. Its timely work was undoubtedly reflected in the abrupt halt in the expansion of governmental pay rolls last summer. Mr. RAMSPECK and his colleagues put agency heads on notice that they would have to justify swollen personnel lists before a fair-minded but nonetheless prying and critical committee. That was a great incentive to combing over lists and trimming exorbitant demands.

In 8 months after the employment peak was reached last June the number of Government employes fell by approximately 175,000. Other factors contributed to this decline, but the Ramspeck committee can reasonably claim a substantial part of the credit. Savings on personnel in the War Department alone, resulting in large part from the work of this committee, are estimated at $290,000,000.

Yes, BOB RAMSPECK is doing a splendid piece of work in this respect. He is also doing the same high order of work in representing his district, the State of Georgia, and the Nation. In whatever capacity BOB has been called upon to serve, he has discharged his duty to the full, with rare judicial poise, and outstanding ability.

Too frequently we overlook opportunities such as we now have of paying compliments to those who have earned them. So it is with gratitude to Mr. Pusey for having called attention to the most creditable performance of this committee, its honored chairman, and its equally praiseworthy staff, that I quote from his tribute and add a posy or two.

National War Agencies Appropriation Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN J. COCHRAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, May 26, 1944

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, as the title shows this bill applies solely to war agencies. In passing this bill as reported by the committee we are making a contribution toward victory.

I cannot conceive it would be possible for a committee to have made a more thorough investigation than did the Appropriations Committee. You have two volumes of hearings touching on every phase of the activities.

These agencies are charged with grave responsibilities and there is no doubt in my mind they are contributing toward our success.

The only outstanding controversy is the appropriation for the Fair Employment Practice Committee which has delayed the final vote.

To me it is hard to believe one is justified in voting against this bill because one section does not meet with his or her approval.

I voted for the F. E. P. C. appropriation and I hope it will not be stricken from the bill in the Senate.

Who Determines a Nation's Destiny?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT F. JONES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, George W. Berry, an estimable lawyer of Piqua, Ohio, and Republican county chairman of Miami County, Ohio, has forwarded to me a sermon by Rev. Arthur K. Wilson, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Piqua, Ohio. I ask leave to extend in the RECORD the address of Rev. Wilson entitled, "Who Determines a Nation's Destiny?":

WHO DETERMINES A NATION'S DESTINY?

(By Rev. Arthur K. Wilson)

Text: Isaiah, 9:16: The leaders of this people cause them to err.

These are days in which very provoking and challenging questions are being raised. For example, What shall we do with Germany after the war? What shall we do with Japan? What shall be our attitude toward Great Britain? How shall we be able to live with Russia? While we do not speak disparagingly of any of these questions, nevertheless there is a far more important question which ought to be foremost in our minds as we face the post-war world. The question is, Who determines a nation's destiny, the leaders or the people? When a nation rises or falls, who should assume the responsibility? There are two schools of thought regarding this question. One would have us believe that the entire responsibility rests upon the shoulders of the citizens of that nation; their argument being that the people make the leaders and if the people have made a colossal blunder in their choice it is the responsibility of the people. The other school would have us believe that the leaders are wholly responsible for the rise and fall of a nation. For example, on every hand we hear those who are advocating severe punishment for the leaders who have perpetrated the great crimes of today. I recognize that this is a controversial question and that the people are not wholly blameless and must share the responsibility. However, I am inclined to believe the major part of the blame should fall upon the leaders. There are two kinds of leaders. The true and the false. In order to differentiate between these two types let us take a look into history, sacred as well as secular. The Bible is full of history and reveals more than other books the character of the leaders of the people.

I. THE TRUE LEADERS

Let us consider, first, the true leaders, those who are genuine, sincere, and honest in all their aspirations and ambitions.

Sacred history contains a long list of illustrious leaders such as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, Solomon, Elijah, Isaiah, and Moses. We consider Moses the dominant figure of Jewish history. He made a very definite contribution not only to his own generation but also to all succeeding generations. He was a man with a definite purpose. He was a product of the common people, yet acquiring wealth, luxuries, ease, becoming finally a prince in Pharaoh's household. However, Moses was not happy. His heart bled for the welfare of his people. Then came that memorable day when he could no longer endure the thought of his people being in bondage. He gave himself to the task of being not only their emancipator but their leader. Moses was not a perfect man; he became discouraged and disheartened like all other men. You will recall that in a moment of righteous indignation he broke the tablets upon which he had inscribed the Decalog of God. The secret of Moses' success was the fact that his life was God-centered and God-controlled.

Fortunately, Israel has no monopoly upon great and noble leaders. We do not think of this glorious land of ours without thinking of George Washington, "first in the hearts of his countrymen." Washington would not be considered an abnormal child. He was not spectacular or dramatic, having a limited formal education. He was fortunate through marriage to have acquired wealth, position, and prestige. However, when the great call came he was willing to sacrifice all to lead this Nation through those frightful days that characterized the Revolution. When the war was concluded, Washington desired to retire, but great men, especially leaders, are rarely permitted to retire. He, therefore, responded to the call of his country and assumed greater responsibility. The years immediately following the Revolutionary War were among the hardest that this Nation has ever known. There was disunity throughout the country. We staggered under an enormous war debt. Soldiers, as well as civilians, were expected to share in the liquidation of that debt. Even the problem of unemployment became exceedingly acute. Through it all this methodical leader carried on, because, like Moses, his faith was in God.

Another great crisis came to America in the middle of the last century. Rocked by sedition and disunion, our very pillars were crumbling. Again the need for a great leader. Abraham Lincoln heard that call and, like Washington, responded. Lincoln was not a product of the schools, but he was a great thinker. Lincoln had a great character, which was undergirded by a profound faith. He believed in God, he believed in the Holy Scriptures, and practiced private devotion. He was a temperate man, not only an abstainer himself, but always discouraged the use of intoxicating beverages. Lincoln could not tolerate profanity. The story is told that upon one occasion a visitor used profane language in his presence while in the White House. The President rose and said, "I thought Senator C had sent me a gentleman. I see I was mistaken. There is the door. I wish you good night." Lincoln was the true leader.

The world, even in its chaotic state today, is not without its good and true leaders. What keeps China, in such an hour, from complete disintegration? There is but one answer. Leaders, Gen. and Mme. Chiang Kai-shek. What is the secret of their power? Their faith in and devotion to the Man of Galilee.

True leadership must not be merely for material gain. To make material gain the main motive is to forfeit the title of a real leader. Power, money, position, prestige are to be desired, but to make these things the objective in the reach for leadership is to invite disfavor and ultimately political ruin. Some men are elevated to positions of power and honor because they have merited them. Others attain these positions because of good connections and money. Others who are entirely without money likewise reach the pinnacle, but it will be of short duration. It is this latter type of leader to which we now refer.

II. THE FALSE LEADERS

Just as good leaders can and do lead a nation upward so can bad leaders lead a nation downward. The Bible has something to say about "blind leading the blind, and both going into the ditch." False leaders can easily deceive the populace because they are spectacular and glamorous. They may possess enchanting personalities, they make rash promises which they know cannot be fulfilled. They have little sympathy for the good in life. These men are often arrogant, selfish, and dictatorial. They can be classified as the Herodian type. Who was Herod? He was the ruler of a subjugated people, the Jews. He was a lover of power. He lived in luxury, occupying at times a magnificent palace at Jerusalem. He surrounded himself with all the advantages then known to the oriental world. He was crafty and a schemer. He lacked the intellectual equipment of some of his predecessors, but determined to secure the throne nevertheless. This he did by cultivating Caesar, and lavishing upon him costly gifts. In order to make an impression upon the Jewish people he suddenly appeared to manifest a keen interest in their religion. Their temple had been built several hundred years before and through neglect needed costly repairs. Instead of repairing the temple Herod caused it to be razed and replaced with a new and more beautiful edifice. His true character, however, he could not long conceal. He was jealous of any and all who opposed him and brutally persecuted those who stood in his way. His program of purging resembles very much the work of a modern Gestapo. Many of his people were caused to be slain, and he imprisoned countless numbers of his followers, including members of his immediate family; his wife, her father and mother, her grandfather, and others of the household were numbered among that list. But the light of that dictator was soon to be dimmed. He succumbed to a long-dreaded disease.

We find another example of false leadership in the person of Absalom, son of King David. He was a handsome young man, his beauty being unrivaled in that day. His money, his position, and his power, that of prince were enviable. There developed within his soul an uncontrollable ego. He felt that he was the last word, that he had all the authority. We are all too familiar with his type. Launching a program of revolt he lead a political and social rebellion against his own father. He openly and privately criticized his father and the way he administered the kingdom. He said "dispose of my father and elect me and great changes will come to pass for the betterment of all mankind." All Israel was grossly deceived. He was crafty enough to disguise his true nature, he even feigned religion to deceive his own father; and used it to foster his atrocious designs. Temporarily he succeeded, but, he went down to an inglorious defeat.

The modern Herods are on the march today. Hitler and Tojo. But their kingdoms are even now in a state of collapse. They deceived their people and lead them to believe that they were divinely chosen to build a new order in this old world. Alas! A Waterloo awaits them all. Our sympathy goes out to the millions upon millions of deluded people. The leaders are responsible.

III. LEADERS WILL DETERMINE THE DESTINY OF AMERICA

After this great global conflict is over, American democracy will undergo a severe strain. Leaders will determine to a large extent our destiny. What kind of leaders shall we have? Those who believe only in force? Those who believe only in economics? In such an hour as this, in the midst of a great storm, it is not strange that we should measure leadership in terms of force and machinery. If we are to rebuild America, and America, in turn, is to have a part in the rebuilding of the world, we must have leaders. We must see to it that they are true leaders. Only as we select and develop true leaders, will we have an enduring Nation. Whenever we cease producing true and real leaders the doom of our Nation is sealed.

The leaders of yesterday laid the foundation for our national greatness. We have not yet attained the ideal. The real America is in the future. God give us great men. God give us great and true leaders.

It's Time Congress Woke Up

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALVIN E. O'KONSKI

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. O'KONSKI. Mr. Speaker, the War Department, the Army Air Forces in particular, are again about to ask for more money to squander. When the War Department asks for another $6,000,000 to train women flyers when we have thousands of male flyers walking the streets, it is time Congress did something about it. I ask permission to include an editorial from Aviation News on this subject to give Congress a clear picture of the proposed waste of people's money:

THE WASP PROBLEM

As Representative RAMSPECK'S House Civil Service Investigating Comittee launched an inquiry into the WASP training project, a group of 122 instructors at one civilian contract primary school last week wired the President and other officials protesting the Army's failure to plan utilization of their flying ability and experience in the war effort although the WASP training program continues, with 1,000 graduates planned by June.

Indignation is rising among experienced civilian airmen as they leave their instructor jobs at schools no longer being used by the Army and face Selective Service induction. They point out these facts:

Civilian men pilots with thousands of hours of flying are ineligible for combat because of logical reasons such as age, but they are also deemed unfit for the Air Transport Command if they do not have 200 hours' time in planes of 200 horsepower or more. Most of their work has been with power below this figure.

Yet civilian girl pilots are accepted for training with 35 hours. Upon completing a 6½ months' flight training course paid for by the Army and taught by a civilian contract flight school, the Wasps are graduated with about 210 hours' instruction, plus the original 35 hours that made them eligible. These graduates are then given assignments denied men pilots with thousands of hours flying time and years of experience.

The statement that all men pilots will be sent out of the country to fly and therefore necessitate use of women pilots to replace them is sound logic as far as it goes, airmen say. But those thousands of civilian men pilots, who are "ineligible" for the A. T. C. are also ineligible for combat. Thus, the argument of replacing all civilian pilots with women appears illogical.

One major example of inefficiency is in transitional training after the WASP has been graduated from her 6½ months' course by the civilian flight school. This transitional flying involves about 100 hours' training on heavy four-motored bomber equipment or high-speed fighter aircraft. Thus, the girls are given an additional 100 hours of flight training by regular A. A. F. pilot instructors, and each hour that the girl pilot receives this training from an Army pilot in Army planes she is taking the place of a combat pilot. Why not utilize more Army men pilots?

In addition to using the present backlog of civilian pilots, the Army might well assign 2 or 3 months of cross-country ferry flying within the United States to its young men pilot graduates. They could thus polish off their navigational cross-country techniques and at the same time deliver aircraft to domestic ferry points.

Furthermore, Army flyers returning from combat areas could ferry planes in the interval before their reassignment, keeping their flight techniques sharp without combat strain. Large numbers of these men are being made available for domestic ferry operations in the United States.

The evidence so far indicates someone has blundered. The costly and impractical WASP program deserves close scrutiny.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL T. CURTIS

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, we are living in days when people are thinking most seriously. The people of America are prayerfully debating, discussing, and questioning all known factors involving the future course of the United States. The young men and women in America are doing their part in an admirable manner.

I wish to extend my remarks by including a letter from the clerk of the fourth annual University of Nebraska intercollegiate debate and discussion conference, which was held at Lincoln, Nebr., on February 25 and 26, 1944, and the resolutions and minority report adopted at said conference. These documents are as follows:

UNIVERSITY OF NEBRASKA,
Lincoln, Nebr., May 10, 1944.

Congressman CARL T. CURTIS,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN CURTIS: One hundred and twenty-five students representing 26 colleges in 7 States participated in the fourth annual University of Nebraska intercollegiate debate and discussion conference which was held at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, Nebr., on February 25 and 26, 1944. The theme of the conference was United States post-war foreign policy.

The legislative assembly of this conference convened to consider a resolution drawn up by a committee of the participants in the conference. This resolution was written to express the views of the members of the assembly. The resolution was considered in division, amended, and adopted. The 11 dissenting voters were granted their request to formulate a minority report.

I am enclosing the majority resolution and the minority report for your consideration. We college students feel that an expression of our opinion is our contribution in the shaping of the foreign policy of the United States.

Yours truly,

ANNE WELLENSIEK,
Clerk of the Assembly.

Whereas we desire international security which presumes national security through cooperation; and

Whereas tariff barriers, excessive reparations, and problems of rehabilitation stand in the way of cooperation; and

Whereas the preservation of freedom of each nation is requisite to international security; and

Whereas the problem of excessive armaments makes international security impossible; and

Whereas an expression of organized public opinion is of influence in shaping the foreign policy of the United States: Be it

Resolved by the delegates to the fourth annual University of Nebraska intercollegiate discussion and debate conference:

First, that a spirit of internationalism be fostered by the United States;

Second, that there be an elimination of unnecessary trade barriers and that there be a gradual reduction of excessive trade barriers to the point at which foreign and domestic goods are on a competitive basis;

Third, that an international organization with a nucleus of the United Nations be established to provide a system of collective security in which each nation enjoys that amount of sovereignty which is compatible to an equal amount of sovereignty in all other nations;

Fourth, that the international organization should enjoy a monopoly of the world's heavy armaments;

Fifth, that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Congressmen and State legislators of the seven States in which the 26 colleges represented at this Fourth Annual University of Nebraska Intercollegiate Discussion and Debate Conference are located.

MINORITY REPORT

1. The minority groups proposed the deletion of the words "to the point at which foreign and domestic goods are on a competitive basis," in Resolution No. 2, as it seems inexpedient to make such a far-reaching and specific commitment without examining the problem more thoroughly.

2. The minority group opposed the adoption the fourth resolution on the grounds that we should not assign a monopoly of our heavy armaments to an organization, the extent of whose powers are not defined.

3. An amendment providing: None of these provisions should be adopted which would prove detrimental to the security of the United States, was defeated by a majority vote of the house. The reason given by the majority group for rejecting the amendment was that it might be interpreted in such a way as to nullify the intent of the other provisions of the resolution. In the opinion of the majority, nothing in the original resolution could jeopardize the security of the United States. The minority group wishes to let this proposed amendment stand on its own merit.

4. With these exceptions the minority group accepted the majority report.

Death Claims Isaac Harry, 101, Veteran of Civil War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM P. ELMER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. ELMER. Mr. Speaker, in the turmoil of the present war and with the memories of World War No. 1 fresh in our minds, let us not forget the veterans of that other war among ourselves—a war that set the record for bravery, valor, and devotion to the principles for which they fought and bore greater and deeper consequences to ourselves than all other wars.

On May 17, 1944, there passed away Mr. Isaac Harry, a veteran of the Civil War, at the age of 101 years. He lived at Licking, Texas County, Mo., within the Eighth Congressional District, which I have the honor to represent in this body. He was the last survivor of the Grand Army of the Republic in our district, and he wore that little bronze button of the order with honor and credit. I do not know of a Confederate veteran alive today within the district. Thus an era of the past history of our country has been closed, locally at least, from all human contact with its actors.

I knew Mr. Harry for many years and enjoyed his friendship, as I have done with so many hundreds of wearers of the blue and gray. I have lived through a period—from 1871 to now—and learned first hand that aftermath strife and hatred in bitter form, in a section of our country overrun by both sides. On one side of that fratricidal conflict was my father and his brothers, from New York; on the other side, my mother's relatives from Kentucky. I never could love one and hate the other. I tried to love both. I knew one side was right and the other wrong. I had to take the side of the right, but extended forgiving love to the wrong. During these years, I have tried to allay that feeling, and think I did, to some degree, within the narrow limits of my life. Thousands of these good old veteran friends knew my feeling, and extended to me their help to bind up the wounds. To do this, I have made speeches to, and fraternized with, organizations representing both sides. Now, most of that animosity is gone. Only now and then does someone give vent to that ill feeling arising from this old war strife. Only a few scars remain, and they have grown dim with passing years. They will wholly disappear as our welfare increasingly binds up in national unity for a common purpose. May all the evil outgrowths of that war, too, pass away, leaving us one Nation, one people, and one flag.

So today I, as a Member of this Congress, on the floor of this House, say to my old friend, the last one I know of that grand galaxy of heroes of America: "Goodbye."

We know their lives and deaths were not in vain, and our faith in their work gives us courage to face the troubles of our times with the never-failing confidence in the rising of a new sun and a brighter day of goodness and glory for our country.

[From the Licking (Mo.) News]

DEATH CLAIMS ISAAC HARRY, 101, VETERAN OF CIVIL WAR

Death last Wednesday evening at 6:30 o'clock claimed Texas County's oldest citizen, Mr. Isaac Harry, age 101. Mr. Harry was not only our oldest citizen, but the last Civil War veteran in this vicinity. He was also the last survivor of the One Hundred and Twenty-third Illinois Regiment in which he served 3 years during the Civil War. He fought in many engagements, including the battles of Chickamauga, Perryville, Ky., and Selma, Ala. In all he was in 111 engagements and never received a scratch.

Last year in May Mr. Harry celebrated his one hundredth birthday and a great crowd of neighbors and friends gathered to celebrate the occasion. This year he was ill on his birthday and could see only a few close friends. Through his illness his mind remained clear only when under the influence of medicine, and he enjoyed the many cards and greetings coming to him from distant friends and relatives.

In the passing of Isaac Harry Texas County has lost a grand and notable citizen.

Isaac Harry was born in Williamsburg, Ohio, May 3, 1843, and passed away at his home south of Licking, May 17, 1944, at the age of 101 years and 14 days. When a young man he went to Charleston, Ill., where during the Civil War he enlisted in Company A, One Hundred and Twenty-third Illinois Infantry, serving 6 months on foot then the remainder of the war in the Mounted Infantry. He was in the service more than 3 years.

After the close of the war he returned to Charleston, Ill., and later went to Knox County, Mo., where he was married to Miss Kate Bishop, November 30, 1870. To this union five children were born: Mrs. H. P. Mitchell, Mrs. R. P. Higgins, Mrs. O. C. McBride, W. F. Harry, and Mrs. E. W. Kofahl.

He moved to Texas County, November 14, 1884, and soon after bought the farm where he passed away. His wife preceded him in death May 21, 1915.

He leaves to mourn his going his son W. F. Harry, with whom he made his home, and Mrs. O. C. McBride of Licking; 19 grandchildren, 25 great grandchildren, and 2 great, great grandchildren.

Soon after his marriage he was converted and united with the Methodist Church where he was a member at the time of his death. On account of his age he was not permitted to attend church services for several years. He was loyal to his home, country, and to his church.

After spending 23 winters in Florida he has been confined most of the past few years in his home. Though having reached this advanced age, he has been patient, thoughtful, and kind. Among his last words were, "I am 101 years old and I want to go home."

Funeral services were conducted at Boone Creek Church Friday in the presence of one of the largest groups of people ever assembled there. He was dressed in the uniform of the Union Army—a splendid looking old soldier even in death.

Services were in charge of his pastor, Rev. A. B. Garrison, of Licking, assisted by Rev. Warren Smith, pastor of Boone Creek Church, Rev. G. M. Sherrod, of Licking, and Rev. J. R. Halbrook, of Houston. Mrs. Virginia Ruth Hutcheson sang "Death Is Only a Dream."

Burial was in Boone Creek Cemetery by the side of Mrs. Harry, who died several years ago, under direction of Smith & Ferguson, undertakers.

Active pallbearers were Coy Higgins, Leo Higgins, Leslie Kofahl, and Elmer McBride, grandsons, Earl Self, husband of a granddaughter; and Clyde Green. Honorary pallbearers were old-time friends—J. S. King, Bert Thornton, Webber Wilson, C. W. Roy, E. C. Halbert, and A. N. Hickle.

More About Proposed Waste

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALVIN E. O'KONSKI

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. O'KONSKI. Mr. Speaker, in proposing the WASP bill the Army Air Forces department is proposing to shelve trained pilots and throw into the discard thousands of boys who were promised positions and who are now walking the streets. This proposal is indefensible from all angles. To give a clearer picture I ask permission to include a resolution, very enlightening on this subject:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., March 27, 1944.

Contained herein are a list of resolutions to be presented for congressional investigation by Minnesota Chapter of the National Aviation Trades Association at an authorized meeting. These resolutions are presented by a representative group for 5,000 war training service flight instructors. Adopted March 28, 1944:

"We resolve—

"1. That this statement to be sent to the White House demanding an investigation as to why Congress is allowing the wasteful disposition of 5,000 Government trained flight instructors now engaged in teaching the primary phases of flying to the Army Air Corps cadets. These Enlisted Reserve pilot instructors face activation as privates in the Army on a nonflying status now that many of the Army elementary flight schools are closing.

"2. That this investigation demand to know why the Military Affairs Committee and Congress can subscribe to any more appropriations for training additional pilots other than cadets for the armed forces when they have available 5,000 skilled and experienced men who are ready to serve on active duty after being trained for flying at a cost to the Government of $70,000,000.

"3. To demand to know why the Navy is activating their enlisted reserve instructors, when the Navy schools close, into commissioned and noncommissioned flying duty commensurate with their experience and qualifications, while the Army is not.

"4. To demand to know why civilian instructors, draft deferred to train Army personnel, cannot make application for commission or rank commensurate with their experience and qualifications rather than face induction as a private on nonflying status.

"5. To demand to know why Congress can justify their passage of a bill which appropriated $70,000,000 of the taxpayers' money to have these flight instructors trained by War Training Service under the Civilian Pilot Training Act of 1939 when they are now willing to scuttle the training and the experience that these instructor pilots now represent, by placing these men on nonflying status simply because one phase of the Army's flight training is to be discontinued.

"6. To demand to know why the authorities in Washington allowed a Government agency, such as War Training Service, to make promises of placement and commission in the armed services as a result of enlisting and taking their flight courses or serving as an instructor in their flight programs.

"We resolve to let it be known to the public the following facts pertinent to the development of this situation:

"1. That in June 1942 there appeared in the press and on the radio, appeals for those interested and who could qualify to enlist in the reserves, and to take flight training to qualify themselves to receive commissions as service pilots in the armed forces.

"2. That thousands of young men, both with and without previous flying time, who thought they were answering a call by their Government to serve as a pilot in the armed forces, signed up to take what they were told was to be 6 months of flight training, and upon satisfactory completion of which they would be activated and serve as service pilots.

"3. That after 6 months of flight training, upon inquiry these men who had enlisted found that they were not being trained under Army auspices, but that they were being trained by War Training Service with appropriations from the Civilian Pilot Training Act of 1939, and that War Training Service did not have means, upon the trainees completion of the program, to put these men in active duty with the Air Forces.

"4. That upon learning of the true character of the training program many trainees made application for active duty in any branch of the armed forces, which was denied them by both the Army and the War Training Service.

"5. That these trainees were encouraged to continue through additional courses given by War Training Service, and were promised that upon completion of these the Army would surely use them.

"6. That at this time some of the less docile of these trainees demanded an investigation of War Training Service, and how they could be placed by them in such a situation as they found themselves. The investigation was held in the spring of 1943 in Washington by a Senate investigating committee, headed by Senator PAT MCCARRAN, the results of which are now public documents in Washington. These documents contain a history that shows management amounting almost to a farce in this matter.

"7. That as a result of this investigation it was decided to limit the number of courses which the trainees would have to complete. Those who were near the final stages of completing these courses were to be allowed to continue in their enlisted reserve capacity, and were to be paid $50 per month, whereas they were paid nothing before, and were, for the most part, in dire financial straits.

"Those in the more elementary phases of training were put on active duty as privates in the Air Forces, while they were allowed to continue their training.

"Advanced trainees completing the course were assigned either as War Training Service instructors at one of their many flight schools, or were released by War Training Service to answer a plea put out by the Army for flight instructors. This absorbed many of their trained men.

"However, those who had become activated, and were in their elementary phases of flight training were to continue on through the War Training Service flight schools, and then as per plan, were to take off active duty, to be made civilians again, to instruct at Army schools.

"It is here noted that this quirk of being in and out of the Army at convenience never came about however, as the whole War Training Service flight instructors training program blew up shortly thereafter.

"These activated men, after having had six to eight thousand dollars per man spent on them of the taxpayer's and the bond purchaser's money to the extent of $32,000,000, are now doing duty in the same capacity as if they had never received any Government flying training.

"8. That the Army and Navy now contracted with 152 former War Training Service flight schools to train the members of these branches the indoctrination flight course which the Army and Navy asked them to do, as an important part of their pilot's training. Instructors for these programs were furnished by War Training Service from their flight programs.

"After 11 months the Army and Navy announce that they would discontinue training at half of these schools, and that training in even more advanced schools, where the instructor personnel were enlisted reserve pilots, was to be curtailed also.

"9. That the public should know that if the Army does not activate the instructors on these programs on a flying status that their Congress, by the passage of the Civilian Pilot Training Act of 1939, has allowed for the training of approximately 5,000 flight instructors, whose flying hours will average 1,500 per man, and an expenditure of nearly $70,000,000. (These figures are estimates arrived at by aviation magazine editors, and those figures brought to light in the McCarran investigation in the spring of 1943.)

"10. That at the same time Congress has passed a bill making women pilots who have only 35 flying hours eligible to take training and receive commissions in the armed forces.

"Also that their Congress and Military Committees, and organizations set up by the present administration to direct the skilled abilities of this country for the furtherance of the war effort have failed to take any action after this fact has been pointed out to them to see that this fund of trained pilots, who at a cost of $70,000,000 to the taxpayer and bond purchaser be placed in the armed services in a flying capacity where they would be most useful. (We refer to such branches as glider, artillery, liaison, intelligence, reconnaissance, courier, troop carrier, ferrying, evacuation of wounded, target towing and tracking, and many others.)

"11. That we are fully prepared to substantiate the facts herein mentioned in the hope that it will arouse the sentiment of the public, whose bond purchasing and high rate of taxpaying help made this program possible, so that they may see to what use their money has been put before this group, who asks nothing more than active duty commensurate with their training and acquired skill, is put into the Army in a nonflying duty. We feel that it is our patriotic duty to let these facts be known and these demands be heard."

Federal Defense Housing in New England

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD B. WIGGLESWORTH

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 15, 1944

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Massachusetts Federation of Taxpayers Associations, Inc., I am inserting copy of a reply by the latter to the letter of Commissioner Emmerich of the Federal Public Housing Authority dated March 30, 1944, and appearing in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at pages A1653–A1654. The Federation states that inasmuch as Mr. Emmerich's letter was inserted in the RECORD, it is only fair that its statement should be inserted as well:

FEDERAL DEFENSE HOUSING IN NEW ENGLAND

On March 23 last, Herbert Emmerich, Commissioner of the Federal Public Housing Authority, addressed to Chairman LANHAM of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, a letter purporting to be a defense against charges raised by the Massachusetts Federation of Taxpayers Associations against certain policies and practices of his agency. These charges were contained in a memorandum reproduced in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 8.

Inasmuch as Commissioner Emmerich has informed Congressman LANHAM that the charges contain "serious errors and distortions of fact" it seems necessary to examine his current statements in the light of what actually was charged, and in the even more important light of conditions now apparent in the field.

It should be pointed out that while Mr. Emmerich comments at length (seven pages of typescript) he appears to make no adequate reply to these specific charges:

1. That defense housing in the New England area was constructed in an amount far in excess of possible occupancy and often over the repeated protests of local public officials who insisted that the projects were unnecessary. (Pittsfield, Mass., Holyoke, Mass., Southbridge, Mass.)

2. That site selection was made without reasonable attention to factors of cost, convenience, desirability for construction purposes or with ordinary health and safety considerations in mind. (Bath, Maine; Groton, Conn.; Weymouth, Mass.)

3. That unit costs were unconscionably high on many projects. (South Portland, Maine; Pittsfield, Mass.; Groton, Conn.)

4. That structural design and equipment were unsuited to either the climate or the needs of potentional tenants. (Pittsfield, Mass.; Chicopee, Mass.; Bath, Maine.)

5. That faulty design caused large expenditures for "contract extras" and change orders, particularly to protect against inherent fire hazards and to provide adequate heating facilities after failure of initial installation. (South Portland, Maine, and Groton, Stratford, Bridgeport, Conn.)

6. That F. P. H. A. officials ignored and rejected suggestions for corrections in specifications that were obviously needed. (Weymouth, Mass.; Bath, Maine.)

7. That no proper supervision of the construction work was maintained by F. P. H. A. representatives with the result that contractors ignored specifications. (South Portland, and Bath, Maine; Groton, Conn.)

8. That careless, inexperienced, or unintelligent borings and soil tests were made by the F. P. H. A. which resulted in the needless expenditure of many thousands of dollars. (Bath and South Portland, Maine; Weymouth, Mass.)

MR. EMMERICH'S DEFENSE RIDDLED

It is not the intention or purpose of the federation to make a categorical answer to all of the obviously inaccurate statements of the F. P. H. A. commissioner. We feel that a few instances of glaring mishandling of the facts should be sufficient to indicate that the reply must not be taken at face value.

Mr. Emmerich denies the federation charge that the cost of the Red Bank Village project in South Portland went one and one-half million dollars over the estimated cost. He says the completed job cost only $1,000,000 more than the estimated cost. He gives a mumbo-jumbo of alibies as to why the total cost jumped $1,000,000. Still, Casper Ranger, the contractor who built the project, disagrees with Mr. Emmerich. Mr. Ranger supports the federation's contention the completed price was one and one-half millions over the estimated cost. He agrees with Mr. Emmerich's figures that the change orders cost only $63,000 instead of $200,000 as claimed by the federation. Mr. Ranger says the federation's figures are nearer the actual amount spent if deviations from specifications not considered as change orders are listed. Mr. Ranger should know something about the cost of the project and the cost of the alterations, whether changes or deviations. There were actually 106 deviations and change orders on this one project.

If the federation's charges of F. P. H. A. inefficiency and waste were confined to Massachusetts alone, there might be more substance to Mr. Emmerich's excuses. But when the charges of bureaucratic blundering in Massachusetts are magnified one hundred-fold from Bath, Maine, to Long Island Sound, and for that matter throughout the entire country, then the mistakes encountered in this commonwealth are merely typical of a deplorable situation that is Nation-wide.

Mr. Emmerich says (page 2, par. 2), "only 138 accommodations for single persons in temporary dormitories have been built in Massachusetts." In the Directory of Public Housing, published by the F. P. H. A. and giving all of the public housing projects of New England as of September 30, 1943, the following data appears: Ayer, 19 dormitories; Edgartown, 40 dormitories; Falmouth project 19071, 210 dormitories; project 19072, 200 dormitories; project 19087, 144 dormitories; project 19088, 100 dormitories; project 19089, 100 dormitories; Southbridge, Harrington Hall, 98 dormitories; total 1087. It is taken for granted, of course, that Mr. Emmerich is not familiar with all of the projects and that his information comes from his subordinates, but it is to be hoped that his other statements on housing projects are more accurate and reliable than his figure on dormitories.

The federation, in its original bill of particulars, demanded a cut in personnel, declaring the pay roll was entirely too high. Mr. Emmerich, in his reply, says "current employment of the region 1 office is 200." Still, under date of March 4, 1944, about the same date as Mr. Emmerich's reply, Sumner K. Wiley, region 1 director, in thanking the F. P. H. A. employees in his district for War bond purchases declared "561 of us participated" in the drive. Is Mr. Emmerich deliberately attempting to mislead the Members of Congress or is he simply misinformed again? The first hypothesis is, of course, untenable so we must accept the second to be the true state of affairs.

In the same Public Housing directory, the project at Curtis Terrace in Chicopee, comprising 250 family units at development cost of $772,000 (does this include change orders?) is listed as "permanent family." A footnote states: "This site is to be used for temporary dwellings for the duration of the emergency." Did Mr. Emmerich include this three-quarter of a million dollar project as a permanent or temporary project in his compilations? Was the F. P. H. A. trying by subterfuge to classify these barracks type, cellarless structures as a permanent project to be dumped on the city of Chicopee?

Mr. Emmerich's figures on the Fort Hill project in Groton, Conn., are illuminating. They prove more strongly than anything could, except perhaps a view of these shanties, the federation's charge of squandering and blundering. Mr. Emmerich states that $1,687,307 was spent on site improvements on 300 acres. With an evident attempt to show that the site was put in good shape he states this amount was nearly $400,000 more than the estimated cost of $1,291,030.

There are 1,100 demountable family dwellings on these 300 acres, or slightly more than three units to an acre. Therefore nearly $6,000 of the taxpayers' money was spent to improve each acre, or approximately $2,000 per family unit.

Even if no further evidence were available this example of willful, deliberate waste would be sufficient to condemn the F. P. H. A. What excuse does Mr. Emmerich offer to the charge of blundering site selections and wasteful spending when it is shown that it cost nearly $6,000 to improve an acre of land to bear three of the cheapest shacks imaginable? Is this the economy that Mr. Emmerich speaks of when he says on page 3, paragraph 3, "economy was a major objective of the F. P. H. A.?" He must have had his tongue in his cheek when he wrote that statement.

It is to be regretted that Mr. Emmerich is not as equally frank in revealing some of the change order costs on the New England projects. For instance, what is the cost of changing heating equipment at the Fort Hill project, after 12 fires had brought orders from the State of Connecticut officials that heating changes must be made? Or the heating changes at Stratford, Conn.? Or the water drains at Bath, Maine, or Weymouth, Mass.? Or for the 106 changes on the Red Bank, South Portland, project?

It is interesting to note that while Mr. Emmerich discusses at some length elevation above sea level of the Pittsfield project, he carefully avoids any mention of the inflated cost of these dwellings. His reticence on this touchy subject is readily understood when it is considered that the 100 family units of prefabricated, cellarless buildings cost, according to the Public Housing Directory, $519,000, or more than $5,000 each.

Mr. Emmerich deplores the criticism of site selections, but in this instance the site improvements cost more than one-third of the unit cost and any builder will readily admit such a ratio is entirely too high. Much of this high site improvement cost is directly attributable to the fact the project is erected on a solid ledge. It is conservatively estimated that the total cost will run well over $6,000 per unit, or twice the average cost per unit permitted by the congressional (Lanham) act setting up the Federal Public Housing Authority.

PROJECTS MENACE LIFE AND HEALTH

F. P. H. A. projects in the New England region are definitely a menace to the life and health of the people who occupy these dwellings. Flames have snuffed out buildings in but a few minutes. Occupants have been awakened from slumber in the dead of night to find their quarters ablaze.

EVEN LITTLE CHILDREN HAVE PERISHED IN THE ALL-CONSUMING FLAMES

One building was destroyed in 7 minutes flat.

No less than 12 fires have broken out in the Groton, Conn., project.

Even Sumner K. Wiley, F. P. H. A. administrator in region 1, has admitted that heating equipment in some projects was inadequate.

Sewage conditions in several places have become so bad that local officials have condemned certain installations and threatened court action unless the foul conditions were remedied.

In Bath, Maine, on March 13, 1944, two young brothers, one 5 years and the other 18 months old, were burned to death in the F. P. H. A. project in that city. Another brother was rescued but died of burns a few days later. The heating equipment in this project has been criticized as improperly installed.

On March 3, 1944, while the housing committee of the Bridgeport Chamber of Commerce was condemning F. P. H. A. projects in that city fire broke out at night at the Burr Court dormitories and 21 men occupants barely escaped with their lives. This fire caused $25,000 damage.

The Bridgeport Post of that date quotes Harold C. Poole, executive director of the Bridgeport Housing Authority, as saying that the fire started in the hot-air exhaust duct of the heating system which became overheated. "The flames spread rapidly through the duct in the false ceiling which extends the entire length of the building," the Post article declares. It adds: "Ceilings and upper walls of the building were almost completely burned, the boiler room was destroyed, and the front waiting room was extensively damaged. When fire apparatus arrived flames filled all the doorways and firemen were forced to chop out sections of the building through which to run lines of hose."

The danger to the lives of the occupants at the Groton, Conn., project became so pronounced that the fire-prevention division of the Connecticut State police had to step in and order that changes be made. The flues were found to be made of asbestos with a thin strip of wood at the edges, with the result that the overheated flues would ignite the wood and then the walls surrounding the flues would catch fire.

Also, at the suggestion of the State police, the F. P. H. A. has built a fire station and obtained some fire-fighting equipment.

In December 1943, when winter had come in earnest to the snow-capped Berkshires, fire "of undetermined origin," as the newspapers frequently refer to it, snuffed out one of the 100 tiny F. P. H. A. "chicken coops," as they have been referred to by Pittsfield city officials. In only a few minutes the 100-unit project, which cost nearly $6,000 per unit, had been reduced to 99.

In Stratford the heating equipment was unquestionably inadequate. The furnaces were too small. The fans were too small. It was decided to remove both furnaces and fans. But where they had been installed only recently, their sudden and early removal might have provoked criticism. So it was decided by F. P. H. A. experts to let the furnaces remain but to install larger fans. Now the larger fans are pushing the heat through so fast that the larger furnaces will now have to be installed.

Experience from previous mistakes should have demonstrated to F. P. H. A. officials that this heating equipment was inadequate. But the policy of the F. P. H. A. is to ignore obvious specification deficiencies, to follow the blueprints to the minutest detail and then to make changes to correct mistakes. This sort of pass-the-buck program costs money.

Of further evidence of the bungling, waste, and inefficiency of the F. P. H. A. is needed, let us take it from the files of the region office. On March 7 last a memorandum was issued with the subject matter entitled: "Forecast of contracts to be awarded in March."

Here are only a few of the items listed:

Groton: Project 6141, fire-damage repairs, $6,300; project 6013, fire-protection alterations, $15,000; project 6012, repairs to heating equipment, community building, $2,000; projects 6011, 6014, and 6015, protective features, insulation of flues, total, $15,500; project 6015, fire-alarm boxes and street lights, $1,460.

The same memorandum has these notations on Bath, Maine, where some of the dwellings were erected by F. P. H A. on peat bogs; project 17022, fire protection, $4,200; project 17023, regrading, drainage, crawl space fill, surface roads, walks and parking stubs, $130,000. The F. P. H. A. was specifically warned against building on this site because of the drainage difficulties, but the F. P. H. A. experts knew better.

Numerous items are listed for other heating changes and installation of water drains throughout the New England area. Incidentally there is an item for the erection of a school building at South Portland to cost $59,000. And it must be remembered that these proposed expenditures, which will total thousands, are for 1 month only, the month of March 1944. Is it any wonder, then, that the taxpayers demand to know how much has been spent for other changes, alterations, and repairs of defects that could have been readily foreseen by the use of a little common sense?

Apparently the texture of Connecticut soil has the F. P. H. A. "experts" stymied. Again challenging Mr. Emmerich's figures on change orders, the federation charges that thousands upon thousands have been squandered to correct sewage disposal difficulties which were, or should have been, by the exercise of ordinary intelligence, apparent before the projects were started.

Federal officials ran into a tartar in the person of Dr. Louis M. Allyn, chairman of the Board of Health of the Town of Groton, Conn.

Dr. Allyn found the sewage situation so bad that he ordered 65 of the houses closed at various times.

In some instances, Dr. Allyn stated, cesspools and septic tanks were installed at levels above the dwellings they were supposed to service. In one case a tank was sunk 13 feet in order to get gravity flow from the dwelling it served.

The Fort Hill project consists of 1,100 two-family one-story structures. It is located on an old potato farm. This is the spot Mr. Emmerich admits cost $1,687,307 to whip 300 acres into a site for his shacks.

According to Dr. Allyn, the floors of many of these buildings warp d after construction leaving spaces along the walls big enough to sink your foot into. In some instances the studs were not cut evenly with the result that the upper sidewall would stick out about a foot beyond the base line, giving the buildings the appearance of corn cribs back on the farm.

This is the project, according to F. P. H. A. figures, which cost the taxpayers of the country $5,478,000 for construction alone. Only Heaven and the F. P. H. A. know how much more was spent here—and apparently F. P. H. A. won't tell, although the federation has asked for a statement of change order costs.

THE BRIDGEPORT FIASCO

The federation's accusations of excessive heating costs are particularly timely in view of the public charges of "willful, extravagant, and inexcusable F. P. H. A. spending and waste of taxpayers' money" made by the Bridgeport Chamber of Commerce Housing Committee. In March this committee demanded that the National Housing Agency halt immediately the installation of new heating equipment in 1,900 dormitory units in that city, including 2 projects which had been closed because of lack of tenants.

Most of the complaints made public by the Bridgeport group have a decidedly familiar ring. They reflect, almost in the same words, the charges made by the federation. These charges refute, perhaps even more strongly than words of ours might, the futile excuses of Mr. Emmerich. Let us quote a few of the chamber's accusations:

"These projects were thrust upon our community by irresponsible planners who ignored and disregarded the recommendations of those who knew conditions best and had the interests of the community and Nation at heart.

"If this work (on the heating system) is not immediately stopped and the contract canceled, it will be prima facie evidence of scandalous, willful, extravagant, and inexcusable spending and waste of the taxpayers' money as well as additional incompetent, blundering mismanagement on the part of the National Housing Agency."

Chairman Arthur Clifford, of the chamber's committee, in recalling that protests against the construction of these projects had been made by the chamber of commerce, the Bridgeport Manufacturers Association, city officials, and the Bridgeport Housing Authority, declared that "in spite of these protests, the units were all constructed at great cost—also completely and extravagantly outfitted. Two of the projects have already been abandoned, yet equipment for them continues to roll into the city.

"At this writing there is a carload of draperies on the siding. Other items just received include love seats and sofas, also ping pong tables and other expensive luxury items"

The committee demands answers from N. H. A. and F. P. H. A. to two questions, both of which have previously been asked by the federation, but to which Mr. Emmerich carefully avoids making any reference.

The questions are:

"1. How does it happen that former administrator of the United States Housing Authority, Mr. Nathan Straus, has, through his company, Nathan Straus du Parquet, Inc., furnished the high-grade cafeteria equipment—also the best equipment and the most expensive in its field?

"2. Who, specifically, is the man behind the man who insisted upon building dormitories in the Bridgeport area against the better judgment and oft-expressed protests of our local housing committees, including the mayor of Bridgeport, and the housing authority? We knew the housing needs in our community but our findings and recommendations were completely ignored. Why?"

An interesting commentary on the cafeteria equipment is that this priority-restricted material, which housewives are unable to obtain, began to arrive in Bridgeport within 2 days after the contract had been let in Washington for the construction of the dormitories and even before the foundations for the buildings had been set. The Bridgeport committee very properly asks: "Who was in such a hurry as all that to unload this cafeteria equipment?"

Recently the federation attempted to learn whether or not bids had been called for on this cafeteria equipment. No definite information has yet been obtained on the matter although an interesting sidelight is thrown on the subject in the reply of Coleman Woodbury, Assistant Administrator to Mr. Emmerich, to a direct query from State senator Murray of Connecticut. A paragraph in Mr. Woodbury's letter reads:

"The statement questions the award of contracts for cafeteria equipment to Nathan Straus du Parquet, Inc. The policy of the Federal Public Housing Authority is to purchase such equipment from the most economical and efficient source of supply. The details of this contract as well as of any other contracts, are, of course, open to scrutiny by Members of Congress at any time. I might add that Mr. Nathan Straus has had no connection with the Federal Government since January 1942, prior to the establishment of the National Housing Agency and its constituent, the Federal Public Housing Authority."

Repeated reading of the paragraph breeds some interesting conjectures but let us consider one of several. Why was the F. P. H. A. in such a hurry to dump this equipment into Bridgeport that it could not wait until the project for which the equipment was intended could even be started. Why was it necessary to buy this equipment in such a hurry only to store it at Government expense and then leave it idle and unused in the abandoned dormitory projects which it was presumably purchased to serve?

Let's have the answers to these queries Mr. Emmerich.

THOSE VACANCIES AGAIN

The Federation reiterates its charge that temporary war housing was not needed in Massachusetts. Mr. Emmerich states that on January 31, 1944, 90.4 percent of the war housing family units built by the F. P. H. A. in Massachusetts were occupied, but fails to differentiate between permanent and temporary family units, in his tenancy figures, undoubtedly because the temporary family occupancy picture is so blurred with vacancies.

There are five temporary family unit projects in Massachusetts: Victory Hill, Pittsfield; Chestnut Heights, Southbridge; Curtis Terrace, Chicopee; Liberty Park, Holyoke; and Riverview Apartments, Springfield.

On April 1, which in some cases is fully a year after the completion of the project, these occupancies were reported: Victory Hill, 40 units occupied, 59 vacant, one destroyed by fire; Chestnut Heights, 8 units occupied, 72 vacant; Curtis Terrace, 46 occupied, 204 vacant; Liberty Park, 9 occupied, 35 vacant; Riverview Apartments, 75 occupied, 117 vacant.

This means that of 666 F. P. H. A. temporary family units constructed in Massachusetts, 487 are vacant and only 178 occupied as of April 1 in spite of the fact that some time ago they were thrown open to the general public. How does this reconcile with Mr. Emmerich's occupancy figures?

WHAT PRICE BUREAUCRACY?

The cost of these temporary projects according to the F. P. H. A. Housing Directory is as follows: Victory Hill, 100 units, $519,000; Chestnut Heights, 80 units, $203,000; Curtis Terrace, 250 units, $772,000; Liberty Park, 44 units, $137,000, and Riverview Apartments, 192 units, $610,000, total, $2,241,000.

In connection with the Riverview Apartments it must be remembered that many of these 192 units are the "zero" type, so-called by the F. P. H. A. because the bedroom, living room, and kitchen are all just one room, and not big at that.

It must also be remembered that these costs are costs as of September 30, 1943, and do not include the additional expenses incurred since that date in improvements, changes, and "deviations"—the secret which the F. P. H. A. so zealously guards.

Address of Hon. John M. Carmody

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH J. O'BRIEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by John M. Carmody, United States Maritime Commission, before the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce on Maritime Day, May 22, 1944:

The occasion of this visit to St. Louis is twofold—first, to give account of our stewardship to the people who, through their representatives in the Congress, created the United States Maritime Commission, and, second, to solicit the advice and aid of the citizens of this great Mississippi Valley area in the solution of special problems that have arisen in connection with the creation and disposition of a wartime fleet of cargo ships and naval auxiliaries. Many of you are familiar with the Nation's maritime history.

The story of John Paul Jones and Commodore Barry and other early American ship masters is fresh in our minds. We have read with quickened pulse the exploits of the traders in Colonial days who brought sugar and molasses and rum and other tropical products under sail from the islands in the Caribbean to Boston and New York and Philadelphia. Here were stout ships and stout men and enterprising traders. And then there were the famous American clipper ships. I wish we had time to review their exploits—their very names command attention—Bald Eagle, launched in Boston in 1852, rounded the Horn to San Francisco in 107 days, Witchcraft, Southern Cross, High-Flyer, Golden West, Fearless, Starlight, and Grace Darling are some of the names the staid old men of the 1850's gave their ships. The Flying Cloud made 374 nautical miles on her best day on her way to Hongkong.

This is Maritime Day, so proclaimed by the President, to commemorate the sailing this day 125 years ago of the steamship Savannah from Savannah, Ga., to Liverpool, England, the first steamer to cross the Atlantic. It is well, I think, that we pause to take stock of our maritime status because our progress has been neither regular or stable nor in step with our general economy. It has been discouragingly and sometimes embarrassingly uneven. For instance, World War No. 1 caught us wholly unprepared to move men and materials in our own ships. We rushed into a hastily conceived shipbuilding program.

The result is history; a huge shipyard, cargo ships delivered after the armistice, laid up in fresh water and later either dumped on the market at a fraction of their cost or broken up for scrap. Good men and good minds applied themselves for the next 15 years or more to the problem of creating an American merchant marine consistent with the responsibilities the United States had assumed among the nations of the world and the prestige inherent in the wholesome discharge of those responsibilities. Many complex problems were involved in this search for a workable plan for an American merchant marine. Among them was the degree to which shipbuilding itself could be developed as a reasonably stable industry here at home. There was the question, too, of whether the admittedly miserable conditions under which merchant seamen lived and worked could be abolished and replaced by a living wage, sanitary and reasonably comfortable living quarters, and tolerable working conditions. Many of you are familiar with the report made by the then Senator and now Mr. Justice Black and Postmaster General Farley and the congressional hearings which followed in 1933 and 1934 and which resulted in a message from the President to the Congress, in which he said:

"In the event of a major war in which the United States is not involved, our commerce, in the absence of an adequate American merchant marine, might find itself seriously crippled because of its inability to secure bottoms for neutral peaceful foreign trade.

"In the event of a war in which the United States itself might be engaged, American flag ships are obviously needed not only for naval auxiliaries but also for the maintenance of reasonable and necessary commercial intercourse with other nations. We should remember lessons learned in the last war."

The Congress passed the Merchant Marine Act of 1936. Briefly, this act provided for the construction differential and the operating differential recommended by the President. It provided, also, for a domestic shipbuilding program of 50 ships per year for 10 years, or a total of 500 new modern ships.

There is no mystery about the need for these differentials. They are understood in every port in the world. Every shipper is aware of them. The first task of the Commission was to clear away the debris that had accumulated since World War No. 1, reorganize services on a sound basis, and get new ships designed for a revitalized American Merchant Marine.

So much for history, but what of the present and the future? Before the 10-year program had got under full head, the war in Europe broke out. This immediately increased the demand for ships. Shipbuilding capacity was pitifully inadequate. What took place by way of expansion is best told by this simple tabulation of ships built from 1938 to date:

	Ships	Dead-weight tons
1938	25	291,000
1939	28	341,000
1940	55	641,000
1941	105	1,142,000
1942	746	8,089,000
1943	1,896	19,238,000

The schedule for 1944 calls for 20,000,000 dead-weight tons. It will be exceeded if needed. The story of this tremendous increase in ship production is one of the great romances of the war. Nothing like it was ever done before. Almost the total capacity of the few established yards was taken immediately by the Navy. A few old yards, chiefly tanker yards, were expanded 3 to 6 times. New Maritime Commission yards were built in strategic locations on the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Gulf coasts and on the Great Lakes. Men and women—nearly a hundred thousand women—many of whom had never seen a shipyard or a ship were recruited. Training courses were established in the yards and sometimes in vocational schools in cooperation with local school officials. New houses were built, nearly 50,000 of them for shipyard workers alone; new schools, new fire houses, dormitories, restaurants, and even stores. Shipyards worked 24 hours a day, 7 days a week; 700,000 workmen and work women and their families brought together swiftly in a few areas made immediate heavy demands on community facilities, private and public. Transportation became a desperate problem. Ferry boats were bought or leased and new slips built. Several miles of streetcar or railroad track were built, and cars bought and rehabilitated for immediate use. Busses were bought and frequently leased to local operators to supplement services totally inadequate to the driving needs of so dynamic a production program.

Simultaneous with this development, other activities had to be greatly expanded. Men and women alone do not build ships or sail them. Millions of tons of materials of all sorts must be processed from the raw state to finished pieces. More than 7,500 manufacturers in almost every State in the Union processed and shipped parts to Maritime Commission shipyards.

St. Louis itself and the towns and cities of the Mississippi Valley have contributed heavily to this essential production. To do this they, too, built new plants or added to old ones, bought new machinery, employed new people, and had all the training, housing, and transportation problems the shipyards had. Tonnage of materials handled by the railroads has been unprecedented. Our freight bill alone is in excess of $130,000,000 per year. The Maritime Commission pays or reimburses contractors for paying $15,000,000 per year for electric power.

That none of these services has broken down under continuous severe strains seems to me to be a tribute to the initiative and energy and "sticktoitiveness" of workers and managers alike in every office, shop, transportation system, power house, and shipyard over the land. Through rain and sleet and snow, through heat of day and dark of night, they got to the job and did it.

Less has been said about the men who man these ships and the schools in which they are trained than about the production in our shipyards. This is natural. Large-scale production is spectacular; education or training, even the intensive procedure developed to meet special war needs, is just a tough grind. To man the merchant marine fleet for war purposes several fine new schools have been built in strategic places on the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Gulf.

I am sure you will be interested in this list of schools, a brief description of the function of each, their capacity, and the number of students they have prepared for service to date.

Merchant Marine Cadet Corps: United States Merchant Marine Academy, Kings Point, N. Y. Basic training schools: Pass Christian, Miss., and San Mateo, Calif.

State maritime academies (for officers): Castine, Maine; Hyannis, Mass.; Fort Schuyler, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Vallejo, Calif.

Maritime Service (officer schools): Alameda, Calif.; Fort Trumbull, New London, Conn. Apprentice seamen training stations: Avalon, Calif.; Hoffman Island, N. Y.; Sheepshead Bay, N. Y.; St. Petersburg, Fla. Radio school: Gallups Island, Mass.

There are seven training ships.

In 1943 the Merchant Marine Cadet Corps graduated a total of 1,161 young men as ships' officers. More than half came from 4 States in which maritime activities are traditional—New York, California, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts. Yet, the States of the Mississippi Basin contributed a tenth of the total of the men who graduated from the academy last year into command of our merchant vessels.

The Maritime Service, a well-integrated organization that runs the gamut of training from apprentice seamen to candidates for ships' officers had more than 42,000 in its various courses last year. Almost a fourth of them came from the Mississippi Valley area. Illinois furnished 2,100, Missouri, 1,500; Mississippi, 1,500; Minnesota, 1,400; Wisconsin, Indiana, Kansas, and Oklahoma sent hundreds, and 7 other States made up the remainder of the 10,000 Midwest boys who underwent Maritime Service training last year.

All of this, of course, is in addition to the men who normally follow the sea, men recruited by the Recruitment and Manning Organization of W. S. A. and through the special efforts of the various maritime unions who share the responsibility for recruiting and training men for the sea.

There is scarcely a community in the Middle West that is not represented somewhere on the high seas and in the war ports of the world by these men and boys, products of local schools and shops. They have a front seat in the great drama, Rebuilding a World. They have a front seat but they are paying front-seat prices—a tough training course that demands the best they possess in physical and mental equipment to undergo a vigorous life at sea under discipline new and strange to many of them, and danger—ever present danger—in almost every area into which they travel. Losses have been high among merchant seamen. Rescued men have suffered untold hardships but they go back. Many have been decorated, men and officers alike, with the Merchant Marine Distinguished Service Medal, some of them posthumously. In any consideration of the future of our American merchant marine, they must be kept in mind. They represent a trained body of skilled craftsmen—citizens who still have the feel of their hometown in their blood but now know world trade lanes and something of the customs and the tastes of far-flung peoples of the earth.

We come now to a disposition of this new fleet. The war is not over. Some of the bitterest fighting lies ahead. While we concentrate on making every ship available for immediate crucial needs, we ask those of you who have responsibility for determining the flow of commerce to give thought to the problem. This program as already executed and projected through June 30, 1945, represents an investment of approximately $18,000,000,000. When I tried, a few days ago, to get some idea of what $18,000,000,000 means in terms of something an ordinary business man like myself can understand, I discovered, for instance, that the cost of the Revolutionary War is estimated at seventy-five to one hundred million dollars. The United States Government was 60 years old before its expenditures passed the billion-dollar mark in 1848. The Treasury says that as of June 30, 1847, the figure was $999,161,758.

The gross public debt in 1918 was $12,243,628,719. The gross public debt in 1927 was $18,510,174,276. Eighteen billion dollars will clothe and feed 40,000,000 soldiers for 1 year. In less than 3 years we will have spent for ships, for facilities, and for what it takes to operate them an amount equivalent to the total gross public debt in 1927. It is for this that five men appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate to be members of the Maritime Commission are responsible as trustees. Do you wonder that we ask you to put your minds to this task with us?

What I have been saying about responsibility for this huge investment was better said a few days ago by a soldier in Charlotte, N. C., when he parked a jeep beside a parking meter. A bystander said, "Better put a nickel in the meter, soldier." With some asperity the soldier replied, "You put a nickel in, mister, it belongs to you as much as to me." Yes, jeeps, and guns, and bombers, and fighting planes, and ships all belong to you and to me. We pay for them when we pay our income taxes or when we buy a package of cigarettes or a bottle of wine or theater as baseball tickets. We pay for them when we buy a War bond or a War stamp. They serve special war purposes. Some of them will have peacetime usefulness. Some ships will; many will not. They are good ships. They will have done their job as the guns and tanks and jeeps will have done theirs.

As we look to the future, however, we have the choice, it seems to me, of attempting to force the use of these ships built for special war purposes into peace-time competition for the sake of having the largest merchant fleet afloat, or of taking our place in the new world of commerce with the best merchant fleet on the high sea on a quality basis. Is it not the part of wisdom to emphasize quality; quality of service; quality of ships—modern in design and speed? Do not misunderstand me; we have such ships and more are now on the shipways. These are the ships that we think you will want us to retain. This means a tonnage of ten to twelve million tons—approximately what we had before the war but infinitely better and more effective because it will be modern.

It is estimated that this fleet will carry what is generally considered to be our fair share of our foreign commerce, 50 percent of the total. These ships belong to the American people. They paid for them. We want to sell them. We want to sell them to American operators. We want to sell them at a price that is fair to you who paid for them, taking into account an appropriate write-off for war service, and at a price that will enable a prudent and competent operator to render adequate service and make a profit. If there be those among you who see a way to use 20,000,000 or even 10,000,000 additional tons on an economically sound basis, we will be pleased and relieved to have suggestions because the figures I have given you are tentative and subject to change, depending on the length of the war and the nature of the peace terms.

I wonder if I may close by quoting a paragraph from an address made by Mr. Joseph Kennedy, first Chairman of the Maritime Commission, on an occasion similar to this.

"The American Merchant Marine is our own flesh and blood, our own treasure, our own ships, and our own money. Get behind it with the pride, the enthusiasm, and the patronage that other nations emotionally and financially give to their own. Has the time come when we turn our back on American genius and enterprise? Congress has given an emphatic 'No!' No American can do less than give it his wholehearted support."

Gannett-Pettengill Political Action Committee

REMARKS

OF

HON. WRIGHT PATMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute at this time to the members of the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Ohio.

As was the case in Louisiana just a few days ago, so ran the pattern in Ohio during the last and ninety-fifth session of the general assembly of that State.

The Gannett-Pettengill-Rumely gang quietly sold their proposed twenty-second amendment to the United States Constitution to the upper body of that assembly. The senate, on sponsorship of Mr. Jones, of Portage, passed Senate Joint Resolution No. 19, endorsing a constitutional amendment to limit taxes on incomes, inheritances, and gifts to 25 percent.

House Joint Resolution No. 48, the companion bill, was introduced by Mr. Van Aken, but fortunately the measure died in taxation committee of the house to whose members I pay special tribute.

IT WAS A SNEAKING AFFAIR

The following letter I have just received from the Honorable William Rasey, the alert chairman and legislative representative of the Ohio State Legislative Board of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, gives this story in some detail. Note that Mr. Rasey also understands the insidious and underground methods of this dangerous gang when he says:

It was a sneaking affair until it arrived in the house and it was called to our attention in the last 2 weeks of the session.

Let no man think that efforts of this Fascist-minded group, this so-called Committee for Constitutional Government, are to be taken lightly. Let us not underestimate the persistence of this un-American organization with its wealthy backers and others whose pocketbooks have been appealed to because of the lure of more wealth for the wealthy even if such means less for the white-collar worker and the laboring man. We must be eternally vigilant or their effort will succeed and we will be hopeless to combat it when it reaches the Congress under the plan they are now following.

Attached herewith is Mr. Rasey's letter, above referred to:

OHIO STATE LEGISLATIVE BOARD,
BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN,
Sandusky, Ohio, May 24, 1944.

Hon. WRIGHT PATMAN,
Congressman, State of Texas,
Congressional Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Recently I noted in the labor paper, issue of May 20, your statement regarding the lobby seeking to cut taxes of the rich. I am wondering if you would send me the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the date you made these statements. If it is not asking too much I would like two or three copies. If, by chance, you would have copies of your speech printed I would like several copies of that also.

I am enclosing you copy of Senate Joint Resolution 19 that was introduced during the ninety-fifth session of the General Assembly of Ohio and passed in the senate with slight opposition. It was sponsored by Mr. Jones, of Portage, one of the most reactionary senators. House Joint Resolution 48, also enclosed, was sponsored in the house by Mr. Van Aken, one of the outstanding antilabor members of the house. It was a sneaking affair until it arrived in the house and it was called to our attention in the last 2 weeks of the session. It died in the house taxation committee. But they were not able to get it across during the ninety-fifth session of the general assembly, and we assure you it will not go across in the ninety-sixth session as we are now preparing ourselves to combat this type of bill.

Thanking you in advance and with best wishes, I beg to remain

Respectfully yours,

WILLIAM RASEY,
Chairman and Legislative Representative, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

I am also inserting an editorial and a letter to the Altoona Tribune which are self-explanatory:

[From the Altoona (Pa.) Tribune of May 19, 1944]

PATMAN WARNS CONGRESS

It is good to see that Congress has been warned in vigorous terms by Representative WRIGHT PATMAN against the proposed twenty-second amendment, allegedly supported by Mr. Frank Gannett's Committee for Constitutional Government * * * and which seems to be anything but that. Just what it is, even the literature issued by the committee and Mr. Gannett is very vague about.

But the alarming thing, which Mr. PATMAN called to the attention of a rather surprised Congress, is that approval of this proposed amendment has been sneaked through 16 of our State legislatures.

And under article 5 of the Constitution if 36 of our States express their approval of this program through their legislatures, as Mr. PATMAN says, the Congress has no recourse but to act on the amendment's ratification.

Says Mr. PATMAN: "The true facts of the case are that a little group of greedy men who place love of personal gain above love of their country's best interests are sponsoring this vicious program."

The proposal, called the "millionaire's amendment," would place a 25-percent limit on all Federal taxes.

The Congressman from Texas says, "As far as Mr. Gannett is concerned, he is advocating a very damaging amendment to the Constitution of the United States. That amendment, if passed, would restrict even inheritance taxes to 25 percent; all gift taxes, estate taxes, incomes, corporate as well as individual, would be limited to 25 percent. That means we would never pay off the war debt; we would never be able to pay more than the carrying charges.

"That means that small business would be destroyed, because big business could keep so much of its profits that it would run all small business out of existence.

"It would mean there would be no aid to veterans. The veterans' aid laws now on the books would have to be repealed. There would be no aid to our servicemen. There would be no social-security benefits. We would only have enough money to pay the interest on the national debt and the running expenses of the Government."

And more than that, it would be the most unfair proposition ever inflicted upon the American people. For under the 25-percent limitation, the rich man's taxes, now much more than that, would be reduced and the poor man's taxes, now less than that, would be increased. It would mean inevitably that the rich would get richer, and the poor poorer.

On what excuse and through what explanations this amendment was given approval by the Pennsylvania Legislature, we should like to know, and we think the people of this Commonwealth are entitled to know. Certainly, there was little if anything said about it when the action took place about a year ago. And certainly there are few Pennsylvanians who know anything about it.

[From the Altoona (Pa.) Tribune of May 19, 1944]

RAPS GANNETT AND TAX PLAN IN OPEN LETTER

Mr. FRANK GANNETT: I have read your book, Organized Leadership. Your reference to a pseudonymous book. The results when your bill reached the floor. Your request: "Don't blame the Congressmen and Senators for not doing a better job today." We hope no Congressman or Senator will vote for your twenty-second amendment to the Constitution. You lay claim to all the credit for the defeat of the President's court-packing bill. I know better, so do you. I never read anything so oily as your little book with "Whatsoever diminishes the authority of Congress impairs the security of your liberty" yet the supreme purpose of your committee for constitutional government is to repeal the sixteenth amendment, taking from Congress the power of taxation and putting it in the hands of we know not who, and of enacting a twenty-second amendment to the Constitution to lay a tax of 25 percent on all incomes from zero to the top and you call that equation—yes of tax, but not of income. How hard that would hit perhaps a hundred million Americans.

You deny WRIGHT PATMAN'S statements, and I suppose you will deny that 16 States have endorsed your secret plans, Pennsylvania being one of them. Where the intelligence of our legislators was when they voted that way is another mystery. Voting away 25 percent of their biennial salary of $3,000 and $500 for special sessions, if any, doesn't show good sense; unless they got or expect some very attractive substantial special concessions for doing so. Such legislators should be driven out of politics forever.

You say the "lights of liberty have gone out all over the globe." Well, that would about put ours out. You ask, "Will they shine bright and clear from windows when our soldier sons come home?" On that kind of taxation, they will not. You and Pettingill and Rev. Vincent Peale are the kind of men who create revolutions. You make the common people and the soldier hate you and all your kind, and if you persist in forcing such unholy and burdensome taxes and making them pay the debt of the war they fought, it would be no wonder if some of your lights would go out. You, with your oily, deceitful methods, are endeavoring to weave a net around a giant, who, if aroused, will destroy them that weave it.

There is no better time than now for you to pull your lobbyists out of Washington and throw your printed matter and your new bill of taxation in the fire.

Farm Machinery

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE W. GILLIE

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement by Mr. Fowler McCormick, president of the International Harvester Co.:

Everyone knows of the tough problems American industry had to meet in converting from normal production to war production. The record industry made speaks for itself.

Everyone hears much these days of the tough problems industry will have to face in reconverting from war production to normal production.

This is the record of one company, International Harvester, which has already had to do both these tough jobs since Pear Harbor; a company which was largely converted to war work, which is now partly reconverted to normal work; which is carrying both loads, meeting the difficulties of each despite obstacles, it is a record which we are proud of, and we want our friends to know about it.

Told at full length the story would be long and complicated. But a few facts are outstanding:

Since Pearl Harbor we have furnished to farmers $326,000,000 worth of farm equipment and service parts despite the fact that Government restrictions practically put us out of the farm-equipment business for months. That total includes the highest volume of service parts ever built. The figure in on the basis of prices which are frozen, most of them at the pre-war level.

Since Pearl Harbor we have built $550,000,000 worth of war products for the fighting services.

Three of our tractor plants have won the Army-Navy E and our oldest and largest implement factory, McCormick Works, has just been awarded the Army-Navy E for outstanding achievement in the delicate and extremely precise production required by the Navy's aircraft torpedo.

In the first 6 months of our 1944 fiscal year we have built approximately the same amount of farm tractors and parts as we produced in all of 1943.

In the first 6 months of 1944 we have provided for American farmers more farm equipment—tractors, implements, and parts—than we did in the same period of 1940; almost as much as we did in the same period of 1941, and more than twice as much as we did in the same period of last year.

We are not getting rich out of the war. In 1943 our total sales were $83,400,000 more than in 1941. But our 1943 profit was $4,921,000 less than our 1941 profit. Our 1944 profit will be still smaller.

The history of our war production and our farm equipment production is closely interwoven. In 1942, the first year of the war, the Government permitted farm equipment production at about 80 percent of the 1940 levels. Farmers generally did not feel that reduction much, for we had large inventories of machines manufactured in earlier years, which were sold along with current production. Our farm equipment plants remained fairly busy on farm equipment. War work was undertaken in our motor truck plants and in available areas of tractor plants. Implement plants generally were not suited to war work, either in type of buildings or equipment, but did do their part when they could.

Then in the fall of 1942 the Government issued Farm Equipment Limitation Order L–170, governing production for the year from November 1, 1942, to October 31, 1943. Under the terms of L–170, our company was cut back to about 14 percent of 1940 production. On more than half the items we normally make, we were allowed no quotas.

This took place simultaneously with the period of greatest need by the armed services for new sources of war production. Naturally, this company and other large companies of the farm equipment industry, undertook extensive war contracts in those plants which could handle the type of manufacture required. Since many implement factories could not handle a great amount of the work, they were almost shut down, except for minor war production jobs and except for production of farm equipment service parts. In our implement plants, thousands of trained employees had to be laid off. The great majority immediately sought and obtained work elsewhere.

The situation in late 1942 and early 1943, therefore, was that large manufacturers were practically out of production on farm equipment. Inventories of finished machines no longer existed. They had been sold out during 1942. The food-production program imposed greater demands on farmers and the attractions of war industry and the inroads of the draft had stripped farms of labor.

The protest of farmers against Order L–170 was immediate and vigorous, since their need for farm equipment was enormous. Farm equipment producers, who had protested against the order before its issuance, continued to present their views to the Government. In March 1943 the War Production Board issued an amendment, enlarging the quotas for some machines. Finally, in June 1943, the War Production Board issued a new order, L–257, which replaced L–170 and covered the period from July 1, 1943, to June 30, 1944.

Order L–257 contained greatly increased quotas for farm equipment, the quotas being different for different machines. The W. P. B., appreciating farmers' large needs, allotted to the industry an amount of materials estimated by the W. P. B. to be about 80 percent of the amount used in 1940. In addition, the industry was told to carry on, along with L–257 production, the remainder of L–170 production which had been planned for the period between July 1 and October 31, 1943. This had to be done with no interference with production of much-needed war materials.

In July 1943, therefore, less than a year ago, our situation was that farm equipment production was very low, the normal flow of materials and purchased parts and supplies had been broken. Plants or parts of plants had been converted to other production. Many trained employees had scattered to the four winds. Yet we had suddenly received orders to greatly increase farm equipment production and to do it right away.

The flow of materials and parts had to be reestablished. Plant rearrangement had to be carried out. Employees had to be recalled and many new employees had to be trained. In addition, it was the period of greatest scarcity in the supply of manufacturing materials and parts. Between the placing of an order on a steel mill and the actual receipt of steel at a plant, months had to intervene.

This company and the others of the industry nevertheless bent every effort to the reestablishment of farm equipment production, realizing at the same time our obligation not to take steps which would damage the flow of war production which we had promised the armed services. As always in manufacturing, progress was slow at first and we were criticized for failing to meet schedules. But materials finally began to flow, production lines were reestablished, employes were trained and production began to move upward, slowly at first, then with a rush. By early 1944 machines were moving out to hard-pressed farmers in real quantities.

A job has been done, and the figures show it. The figures below represent daily production of certain important machines, as between the low point under Order L–170 and the situation in May of 1944.

Daily production

	L–170 low	Present
Tractors	46	311
Hay loaders	23	50
Hay rakes	29	76
Mowers	122	289
Hammer mills	0	45
Peg harrows	32	377
Corn planters	31	117
Grain drills	8	55
Combines	51	59

Several facts should be noted about the figures shown. In the first place, the hammer mill is typical of the many machines which we were not allowed to produce at all under L–170 as first issued. The combine represents the other extreme. There were higher combine quotas under the low period of L–170 than was the case with other machines. Finally, practically all the figures in the column showing our present situation would be higher if it were not for the shortage of labor.

We have already noted that when we started to increase production of farm equipment materials presented the most pressing problem. That situation changed for the better as time went on, partly due to cut-backs in war production and partly due to assistance rendered our industry by the W. P. B. Unfortunately, as the materials situation grew brighter the manpower situation grew steadily worse.

The manpower problem comes in two forms; first, the difficulty of getting enough employees to man plants adequately and achieve all the production that machinery and facilities make possible; second, the problem of keeping the employees who are hired. The most acute of all our employment problems has been that of trying to find adequate foundry labor, both for gray-iron foundries and malleable-iron foundries. This particularly affects production of farm implements, which requires large supplies of both types of iron castings.

What do we mean by a manpower problem? Some figures will show:

In the 4 weeks ending April 15, 1944, our company hired a total of 3,259 new employees, but our total employment went down by 702 persons. For in that same 4 weeks 3,961 had left. Or take some specific plants. In the period ending April 15 our East Moline works, which makes combines and corn pickers, hired 123 persons and lost 143. Our most important farm-tractor plant, Farmall works, hired 301 new employees but lost 390.

Part of this manpower problem is due to the requirements of the armed forces, for there are 16,500 Harvester men in military service. (Our total employment now is about 72,000.) And a very large part of it is due to the restlessness of employees who are new to industry, who get a job, work a month or two, hear of another job they would like to try, and drift on.

We are doing everything we can think of to meet this problem and our production is still going up. Despite lack of manpower, we have completed or will complete within the period scheduled by order L–257 our full quotas of all but three of the 60 general classifications of farm machines which we build. These three classifications are grain drills, corn pickers, and combines.

By July 31, when our W. P. B. authorization to manufacture grain drills expires, we expect to have built 92 percent of our grain drill quota. By September 30, when our authorization to make corn pickers expires, we expect to have built 96 percent of our corn picker quota. The lag will affect only one model, the one-row mounted picker. By September 30, when our combine authorizations expire, we expect to have built 84 percent of our combine quota. The lag in combine production represents a shortage of self-propelled models (a new type, never in production before) and also represents our inability to make a number of combines which were not part of our original L–257 quota but were authorized later as a supplemental quota.

One thing we have done that we are pretty proud of. We have balanced our production of farm equipment. We have not been shipping out tractors with no implements to work with them. Generally speaking, we have been able to see that the implements went along with the tractor.

Recently the Government issued the quotas for farm equipment for the year beginning July 1, 1944. These are known as schedule B of order L–257. Schedule B provides quotas somewhat larger than those we have been operating under. And, unless the manpower situation gets even worse than it is now, that will mean considerably more farm equipment for farmers.

Even more important, however, is the fact that schedule B gives us a running start on production for the first time since the Government began to limit production. The W. P. B., War Food Administration, and other interested Government agencies have told us what the quotas are and have told us far enough ahead of time so that production can be planned intelligently instead of being a wild scramble for materials. This will be particularly helpful in the production of highly seasonal machines.

At present our war production is diminishing, because of cancelations of contracts, cut-backs in schedules, and completion of contracts which are not renewed. This reflects the general cutting back of most types of war production. If that trend continues, and our information at present indicates that it will, we should be able to transfer more employees and more manufacturing facilities to farm equipment production.

Meantime, we will keep on doing what we have done from the first day of the war—making both war products and farm equipment products, doing both jobs, and doing them both the best we know how.

Wild Ducks in the United States

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS ROLPH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, Ducks Unlimited is an organization of farsighted citizens interested in preserving and intelligently protecting duck life in the United States.

A few years ago, the duck population in this country fell to the alarmingly low figure of 35,000,000.

By careful study and constructive suggestions furnished to the Federal authorities, Ducks Unlimited, cooperating with similar groups of public-spirited Americans, have been largely instrumental in increasing the population to an estimated total 1944 flight of 200,000,000 birds.

Ducks Unlimited has prepared certain further data. As part of my remarks, I include special committee report, copy of which was recently handed to me in San Francisco.

Feeling sure this report will find widespread interest throughout the Nation, I quote it in full as follows:

FURTHER DUTY FOR DUCKS UNLIMITED

1. Ducks Unlimited has successfully played a leading part in recreating the breeding grounds in Canada, resulting in a greatly increased wild fowl population. Eighty percent breed north of the United States boundary.

2. These birds winter for the most part in the United States and Mexico, where they must find feed and sustenance.

3. It is possible that 200,000,000 birds will migrate south in 1944, which will be approximately 50,000,000 above the $150,000,000 estimated for 1943 by the Fish and Wildlife Service.

4. Increasing human population, reclamation of marsh areas in many States leaving a greatly depleted area, increased agriculture, much of the crop suitable for wild fowls food, with other areas formerly natural feeding places now planted to crops unsuitable for food, have caused the greatly increased wild fowl population to become a severe menace to the food crop with resultant heavy loss to the farmers.

5. Agricultural interests are aroused to a point that they are demanding relief, threatening drastic action if it is not forthcoming.

6. Some means must be found to provide food for the birds that will in a measure draw them away from lands concentrated to the raising of grains and corn.

7. It is good conservation and at the same time provides needed food to take the reasonable surplus of any game crop.

8. Survey has shown that present bag limits and regulations, together with illegal shooting and natural losses in migration and winter hazards, take about 12,000,000 birds a year.

9. It seems, therefore, that with the great number of birds, even counting the hazards of drought and disease, it is safe and wise to allow a larger take, both for food and to control in a measure the menace to crops.

10. The restrictions placed at a time when wild fowl numbers were depleted to an alarming low of about 35,000,000, according to the Wildlife Service, are no longer applicable.

11. The present restrictions against feeding, the restrictions against sensibly handling planted natural feed, and placing grit so badly needed by any fowl, are unwise, and in the light of the present situation, add to the tremendous harm to grain crops and to the farmer.

12. The economic value, from a business standpoint, of the pursuit of fish and game, besides its great recreational and health-giving value, call for every inducement to be made by governmental authorities to allow for reasonable regulations within sound practice.

13. Increase in refuge areas over those now in use will not solve the problem, nor will feeding these areas anywhere near crops do anything to draw the birds away.

14. If these premises are sound something must be done to correct the conditions, viz, the wild-fowl population having been greatly increased, action should be taken to care for them on their wintering grounds by the Fish and Wildlife Service and all other interested bodies. Recognizing that in certain parts of the country strong antipathy is expressed toward artificial feeding, nevertheless we affirm that so far as the Pacific flyway is concerned, in the light of the above fundamentals, the viewpoint is wrong, and that by proper and reasonable regulations with regard to this practice, the antipathy is ill-founded.

Ducks will migrate to their natural winter habitat. They are going to eat wherever they can find food. Nothing can be done to entirely prevent their taking human food crops, but much can be done to reduce this menace.

Therefore, what methods will reasonably decrease the menace to crops and at the same time give sustenance to the birds?

1. Feeding by governmental authorities, both State and National, and by any others who for any reason are willing to do the job.

2. Artificial feed supplied by authorities to be placed as far as practical away from concentrated crop areas to points where other conditions are favorable and attractive to wild fowl.

Shooting clubs to be allowed under permit to feed their grounds and not be subjected to the fantastic rules of 1943 as laid down under any emergency in California.

3. Authorities, land holders, and shooting clubs have been encouraged to plant natural feed but under such drastic restrictions that are in many cases unpractical, fowl need grit for digestive purposes, yet even in localities where there is no natural supply, the regulations forbid placing it where the birds may get it.

4. Bag limits should be increased to take a greater toll of the surplus.

5. Longer seasons so set as to help the farmer as near as possible to keep the birds herded from crop areas. The present zoning plan is unwise and cannot be properly applied to a country as large as ours. Even if feasible, the picture of Oregon and Washington being in the middle zone seems out of reason, as is the east side of the Colorado River adjacent to California being in the southern zone and the west side in the middle zone.

CALIFORNIA'S CASE

It is impossible to include in this report total conditions affecting every section of the country, but the Pacific Flyway and particularly California has a condition that merits attention.

1. It is one of the great wintering grounds in the country.

2. It has 900 miles of coast line extending to the Mexican border.

3. The season should be divided, placing the area north of Tehachapi in a middle zone with earlier opening and closing dates, and south of the mountains in the southern zone with later dates.

4. Claim will be made that hunters will seize the opportunity to travel from one zone to the other. The number finding it possible to do so will be negligible.

5. California is a great rice-growing State, with crops ripening and harvested in the midst of great migrations. Most of the rice is grown in a highly concentrated area in the northern Sacramento Valley, a fair acreage in northerly San Joaquin, and also in the Imperial Valley. Other grains are harvested in July and early August before the great migrations appear. The present practice is for farmers to use ammunition to herd ducks off their properties, killing many thousands which they are not allowed to use in any way. An October 1 or 15 to January 1 or 15 season will greatly help Sacramento and San Joaquin farmers. In the Imperial Valley and generally south a later season, from November 1 or 15 to February 1 to 15, will again help the farmer and make it unnecessary to allow unlimited shooting, as was permitted this year in January on account of the supposedly heavy damage to early planted vegetable crops.

6. California, through reclamation, has a very small natural marsh area, so that, aside from the bays, the ducks are dependent on artificially flooded areas. These are supplied by several hundred duck clubs. They are willing to do their part to give wild fowl harbor and food. These areas, including the coastal waters, are amply sufficient to harbor all the ducks coming to California without more refuges. These grounds are never shot more than three times a week for a few hours so that for the balance of the time they form the best-watched refuges to be found anywhere. Feeding should be permitted under reasonable rules and not as in 1943, when, through a 500-yard limit, only 5 percent of the clubs could feed at all. They should be encouraged to plant feed in such a way that it will be of practical attraction to the fowl.

There is little or no rain until December, so that natural feed is scarce and what there is is quickly eaten in August, September, and early October. Few feeds will grow on our salt marshes, also mosquito abatement laws prohibiting any flooding up to 2 weeks before the opening of the duck season leaves these grounds dry with little food growth. Elsewhere ordinary duck foods are smothered out by rank tule growth which quickly obliterates all shooting water and is a constant source of trouble. Therefore, artificial feeding should be encouraged.

It is admitted that hunters are selfish. Had it not been for their enlightened selfishness in applying money to increase them, wild fowl would have been gone practically beyond recovery now. They have a right to take a reasonable percentage of the increased bird crop they have created without apologies to anyone.

It is time that they, through their representatives in Congress, demand a change in governmental attitude.

It is therefore requested that the California delegation take the leadership in this objective and we hereby ask their approval of and participation in action that will accomplish the results herein set forth.

Pay of Combat Soldiers

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES W. TOBEY
OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, May 31 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD an address delivered by me over a national hook-up on the so-called pay bill for combat soldiers, together with a letter from Ernie Pyle, written from Europe, and a copy of Senate bill 1787.

There being no objection, the address, letter, and bill were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. CHARLES W. TOBEY, OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

Tonight I speak to you on behalf of the nurses and fighting ground troops of our armed forces, and to explain the features of a bill which I introduced in the United States Senate on March 16 to provide for a 50-percent increase in the monthly pay of our men in the fox holes and mud of the combat areas and our nurses serving in these combat areas. The suggestion came to me a few weeks ago direct from the Anzio beach head in an article written by Ernie Pyle, Scripps-Howard writer, who has been on an extended tour of the fighting fronts and more recently has been with our boys on the Anzio beach head. He writes as follows—I quote:

"In my usual role of running other people's business, I've been threshing around with an idea. It's to give the combat soldier some little form of recognition more than he is getting now.

"Everybody who serves overseas, no matter where or what he's doing, gets extra pay. Enlisted men get 20 percent additional and officers 10 percent.

"Airmen get an extra 50 percent above this for flight pay. As a result, officer flyers get 60 percent above their normal base pay, and enlisted flyers, such as gunners and radio operators, get 70 percent.

"All that is fine and as it should be, but the idea I was toying with is why not give your genuine combat ground soldier something corresponding to flight pay? Maybe a good phrase for it would be 'fight pay.'

"Of any 1,000,000 men overseas, probably no more than 100,000 are in actual combat with the enemy. But as it is now, there is no official distinction between the dog-face lying for days and nights under constant mortar fire on an Italian hill and the headquarters clerk living comfortably in a hotel in Rio de Janeiro.

"Their two worlds are so far apart the human mind can barely grasp the magnitude of the difference. One lives like a beast and dies in great numbers. The other is merely working away from home. Both are doing necessary jobs, but it seems to me the actual warrior deserves something to set him apart. And medals are not enough.

"When I was at the front the last time, several infantry officers brought up this same suggestion. They say combat pay would mean a lot to the fighting man. It would put him into a proud category and make him feel that somebody appreciates what he endures.

"Obviously, no soldier would ever go into combat just to get extra fight pay. That isn't the point. There is not enough money in the world to pay any single individual his due for battle suffering.

"But it would put a mark of distinction on him, a recognition that his miserable job was a royal one, and that the rest of us were aware of it."

No one of us here in America can have an adequate conception of what goes through a man's mind and the extension of his hardship and suffering as he faces the full and continued blast of enemy fire, day after day and night after night under the most trying of conditions. He feels alone and apart from the rest of the world. For him life may be a matter of minutes, hours, or days. All that he has cherished he has left behind him here in America. The least we can do is to give him some small but material recognition—the same recognition in fact that we have been giving for years to men and officers engaged in flight duty, submarine duty, and parachute duty where such activity is held to be hazardous.

Before introducing my bill for additional pay to our men in actual combat, I carefully reviewed the committee report and laws passed by both branches of the Congress from as far back as 1913. Few have known how long standing is this principle of giving additional compensation to men serving in what the lawmakers have termed "hazardous occupations." In that year of 1913 the Congress provided an additional pay of 35 percent for officers serving on aviation duty. In 1914 this service was extended from officers to aviation students who were given 25 percent additional pay and to military aviators who were given 75 percent additional pay, when engaged in flight duty.

There is no sound reason why our ground troops who are actually participating in battle should not be placed in the same position as our parachute troops, our men in the submarine service, and our flying men. No man can say that they are not all in equally hazardous duty.

In 1941 the Congress enacted a law providing a minimum additional pay for parachute troops of $50. Let me read from a letter which Secretary of War Stimson wrote on March 7, 1941, to the chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, recommending this additional pay for parachute troops and, as I read it, see if you do not agree with me that the same reasons advanced by the Secretary of War on behalf of the parachute troops do not apply with equal force to our ground troops lying in the foxholes and mud in actual combat. I quote:

"DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: There is enclosed the draft of a bill to provide for increased pay for certain military personnel while engaged on parachute duty which the War Department presents for consideration of the Congress with a view to its enactment into law. * * * The purpose of this proposed legislation is to authorize increased pay for the officers and warrant officers who participate in this hazardous type of duty. * * * It is obvious that this personnel incur greater risks than those who fly as passengers or pilots of military aircraft for, in addition to the hazard of injury or death due to a crash of the airplane, there is the constant and continuous risk of the parachute jump which must be made as a routine operation not required by other flying personnel."

As a result of this request of the War Department, the Congress on June 3, 1941, passed a law, granting its officers in the parachute division, additional pay at the rate of $100 per month and providing $50 per month additional pay to enlisted men in the parachute division. This increase was granted solely with a view to the risks involved in that type of service.

It is not questioned that the risks and hardships being experienced by our ground troops in actual combat are just as great, and I hold that they are entitled to the same consideration.

On April 6, 1942, Secretary of the Navy Knox wrote to Speaker Rayburn of the House of Representatives, recommending enactment of proposed legislation to extend the increase in pay provision for officers and men serving on submarine duty. In favorably reporting the bill, the House Committee on Naval Affairs wrote in part as follows. I quote:

"Since the pay authorized for diving operations is designed as compensation for hazardous duty, the committee is of the opinion that it should accrue to a person whether such duty is performed in depth greater or less than 90 feet, so long at it is in fact of a hazardous nature."

On June 27, 1942, the Congress enacted this bill into law and the bill had been introduced at the request of the Navy Department. Again I saw the same reasons for passage of that bill for men in the submarine service apply with equal, if not greater force, to my bill to provide for similar recognition to our men of the ground forces in the actual combat areas.

The question presented by my bill is, "Shall the members of our armed forces who are engaged in the hazards of actual combat service be given the same recognition that we give to our men in submarine and flight service?" The men in submarine and flight service receive additional pay on the ground that they are engaged in hazardous duties.

Let us not forget that our ground forces engaged in actual combat are face to face with the enemy in an all-out death struggle. They know what it is to wait in the night for the second and the third and the fourth and the endless counterattacks that are inevitable. They are the ones who become prisoners of war. They are the ones who lie in the yellow mud and face the hazards of disease and wounds. They are the ones for us to think of tonight and in the months to come.

If you feel that the man serving in the equally hazardous duty of actual combat is entitled to this same recognition that is being given to the man on submarine duty and in flight service, then you have the right and the opportunity to write to your Senator in Washington, asking him to support the Tobey bill—S. 1787. Your Senator will be glad to send you a copy of this bill if you make the request for it.

Now is the time for action. Tonight thousands of the men in our combat troops are in the thick of indescribable hardship and fighting on the Anzio beachhead, in other parts of Italy and on the isles of the Pacific. Though we are bombing the cities of Europe, day and night, most Americans feel that in the great invasion to come, it will be the ground troops—the men who crawl through the barbed wire and face the machine guns and the enemy mortar fire—who will meet the test of actual invasion and bring final victory to the United Nations. It is to them that we owe a debt which we can never pay. It is of them that we are thinking tonight as we consider this bill to give them the recognition which they more than deserve.

Modern warfare is waged through many activities. Each compliments and supports the others.

There is the onslaught of broadsides from our naval ships, preparing the way for invasion and advance of ground troops.

There is the work of demolition and destruction, so terrible in its results, as hundreds of tons of bombs are dropped from our great bombing planes.

There is the effective work of our artillery, as it sets up barage after barage of shellfire, to destroy enemy positions and supply stations.

But, in the last great effort to take enemy positions, and to clean out its forces, it has long been recognized that our final reliance must be on the infantry, the foot soldier, the combat troops.

So they carry on, bravely meeting the savage onrush of the enemy, digging in to hold their advance, facing the most trying experiences of warfare, often coming to grips with the enemy in fierce hand-to-hand fighting.

I hold a brief for these combat troops, and I maintain that justice and gratitude should stimulate us to give them the recognition of their heroism, in our behalf.

As we live our lives here at home, enjoying the daily contacts with family and friend, remote from the actual conflict, and the hell our boys are going through, that we may be victorious, let us put ourselves in their place, as far as we can visualize it, and by enacting this legislation, give them tangible evidence of the love and gratitude we hold for them.

LETTER FROM ERNIE PYLE

ENGLAND, May 21, 1944.

DEAR SENATOR TOBEY: Thanks for your nice letter of March 30, which was a long time in reaching me. I do appreciate your interest in the "fight pay" suggestion, and thanks for that, too.

There's a very fine point of distinction about who should be eligible for "fight pay," and I'm afraid that's where you may run up against a nub.

I have a feeling that Congress may be not quite getting the point of what the proposal was made for, will want to give it to anyone who is ever in danger from enemy action. If it is made that way, it will be so broad as to destroy the value in doing it at all. Our original motive was to give recognition to that poor old ——— who lies up there in the mud and cold and rain for weeks at a time, never dry, never warm, eating cold food out of cans, dirty and unshaven and sleepless, and constantly under mortar, artillery or rifle fire. Usually he is an infantryman, although others do sometimes come into such sustained combat, such as Rangers, paratroopers, and S. S. troops.

Lots of other people die, too, in war—but differently. The sailor lives well until he dies. So does the nurse, comparatively. And so do the wide fringe of other combat troops who do have casualties but know nothing of the prolonged mental and physical misery of the old front-line rifle trooper who lives like an animal.

For instance, I suspect that the average person discussing this proposal, would want to give fight pay to everyone who served on the Anzio beachhead, for they were all certainly in danger. Yet the bulk of our troops up there, the supply troops and reserves, and what not, were living either in houses or dugouts, and were living comfortably.

I think a captain on the beachhead proposed the finest qualification for fight pay that would limit it to the people we mean. He suggested it be given only to those who served at least 4 days a month within small arms range of the enemy. That would automatically rule out all those except the poor old duffer up there in the mud.

I'm just throwing these things out to you as a suggestion to do anything with that you wish. I do feel that the whole point will be destroyed if too broad a definition is given and too many people taken in. Some of our medals have become almost valueless because we give them too freely.

Many thanks for your time, and best of good wishes to you.

Sincerely,

ERNIE PYLE.

A bill to provide additional pay for members of the armed forces engaged in combat service

Be it enacted, etc., That section 18 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end of such section a new paragraph as follows:

"Officers, warrant officers, nurses, and enlisted men of any of the services mentioned in the title of this act and members of the Reserve forces of such services, and the National Guard, who are not receiving additional pay under the foregoing provisions of this section, the provisions of the act of April 9, 1928 (45 Stat. 412), as amended, or the provisions of the act of April 10, 1943 (Public Law 23, 78th Cong.), shall receive an increase of 50 percent of their pay when by orders of competent authority they are required to participate regularly and frequently in actual combat against the enemy or to serve regularly and frequently in immediate combat areas with troops engaged in actual combat against the enemy. Regulations in execution of the provisions of this paragraph shall be made by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and shall, whenever practicable in their judgment, be uniform for all of the services concerned."

Does War Suspend the Constitution?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter from the People's Forum in the Hartford (Conn.) Daily Courant of Monday, May 22, 1944:

DOES WAR SUSPEND THE CONSTITUTION?—IMMEDIATE EXECUTIVE ACTION IS ALSO POSSIBLE BY THE DEMOCRATIC PROCESS OF CONGRESSIONAL DECISIONS

To the EDITOR OF THE COURANT:

Attorney General Biddle's assumption in the Montgomery Ward case that Mr. Roosevelt, as Chief Executive, possesses extraordinary constitutional war powers is, I think, without any substantial legal basis. Such powers are vested in the Congress and in it alone.

One of the main purposes for which our National Government was established is to provide for the common defense. Under the Constitution that task, with all its attendant problems, is entrusted to the Congress. It alone is authorized to raise and support armies, provide and maintain a navy, and see to it that the militia is organized, armed, and disciplined. It alone may make the rules for the Government and regulation of these armed forces. Obviously, countless unnamed legislative powers must necessarily be implied in order to perform these essential yet complex duties. By legislative powers I mean power of the Congress to decide what shall be done, how it shall be done, and who shall do it.

Justification for such implication is found in the closing paragraph of article I, section 8, of the Constitution. The Congress is there authorized "to make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof."

Here then, in the Congress, is a vast reservoir of express and implied war powers—with emphasis on those implied—for no one could foretell all the things that might be required to preserve and defend the Nation.

THE PRESIDENT'S WAR POWERS

By contrast the President's constitutional powers in respect of war are very limited indeed. "The President," says the Constitution, "shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States, when called into the actual service of the United States. * * *" This is all there is to it, except that with the advice and consent of the Senate he appoints the commissioned officers of the armed forces.

As head of our Military and Naval Establishments, the President is as completely subject to the rules prescribed by the Congress as is any one of his subordinates. But, as Chief Executive, he has an additional obligation, namely, "he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed" (art. II, sec. 3).

The eminent jurist, Benjamin R. Curtis, said: "The military power of the President is derived solely from the Constitution. He is the general in chief; and as such, in prosecuting a war, may do what generals in the field are allowed to do within the sphere of their actual operations, in subordination to the laws of their country, from which alone they derive their authority." But he added this warning: When a general in chief disregards those laws, "he superadds to his rights as commander the powers of a usurper; and this is military despotism."

Of course, in time of war, the Congress may very properly vest in the President such unusual powers, consistent with the Constitution, as the efficient prosecution of the war may seem to demand. Where these powers affect civilian life, they must be given to the President as the civil magistrate, not as the military commander. In no other way can the military be kept subordinate to the civil power.

CHECK PERSONAL GOVERNMENT

The duty of the legislative and judicial branches of Government to support and defend the Constitution, should make them especially vigilant to check any tendency on the part of the President to exercise powers not traceable directly to clear and explicit legislation. This is particularly true these days, when personal government is in the air everywhere and its consequences are visible in the charred and blackened ruins of Europe and Asia.

There are those among us, of whom Attorney General Biddle seems to be one, who act as though they believe that war suspends the Constitution for its duration. If written constitutions mean anything, such a view is untenable. The Constitution of West Virginia makes this quite clear.

The provisions of the Constitution of the United States and of this State, it says, are operative alike in a period of war or in time of peace, and any departure therefrom, or violation thereof, under plea of necessity, or any other plea, is subversive of good government and tends to anarchy and despotism. (art. 1, sec. 3).

This declaration is of especial significance, because West Virginia was born during the Civil War. Its constitution was drafted by a citizenry loyal to the Union and approved at the time by the Congress, whose members presumably knew and understood the principles for which that war was being fought.

POLITICIANS TO BLAME

But, say the molders of our "new social order," the war will not wait for the decisions of the Congress. It requires immediate Executive action. Those who take this view have no faith in the American people. They must doubt both our patriotism and our ability to govern ourselves. They underestimate the capacity of a President to get quick action, provided he has shown that he knows his proper place and that he intends to stay in it.

In the midst of a war for our survival as a nation, any forthright Chief Executive could count upon the wholehearted cooperation of every Member of the Congress. Our representatives would never refuse him any legitimate request. But debate will be prolonged, and action delayed, when Executive proposals are just too clever, when they suggest the presence of ulterior purposes, or when experience has shown a disposition in the executive department to give meanings to statutes quite opposite to the legislative intent.

These are the things that make the democratic process seem inefficient. The system is not to blame. The blame should fall upon those unprincipled politicians who use the war or any emergency for their own selfish ends—men who believe it is easier to manage a single individual, though he be a President, than to control a Congress; who, for that reason, ignore the Constitution and claim for the Chief Executive unlimited war powers.

As an American, I abhor personal power in the hands of any man. As an American, I believe the Constitution of the United States is our only effective shield against dictatorship. And as a Republican, I hope the candidates and workers of my party will, in the coming campaign, keep that Constitution constantly before the voters as the living symbol of their liberty, and convince them that it, and it alone, is the supreme law of our land.

ARCHIBALD E. STEVENSON.

Each Candidate for Congress or for State Legislative Office in 1944 Should Be Interrogated on His Stand Concerning the "Proposed Millionaires' Amendment to the Constitution"—There Is Real Danger—The People Must Wake Up and Defeat This Wicked Proposal

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WRIGHT PATMAN
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 29, 1944

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, every candidate seeking a legislative office in the United States in the year 1944, be he a candidate for a post of State legislator or for Congress, should be interrogated on his personal stand in respect to the proposal of the sinister, sordid lobby that is now, through undercover tactics, trying to exempt the wealthy few from adequate taxation and to make impossible the payment of benefits for veterans, their dependents, farmers, the aged and other recipients of social-security assistance, and, in addition, to almost immediately crush small business.

LEGISLATIVE BOOBY TRAPS BEING SET

On Monday, the 29th, I paid tribute to the alertness of the legislative board of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen in the State of Ohio in discovering a last-minute attempt on the part of the Gannett gang to slip one of these resolutions through the Ohio General Assembly in the closing days of the 1943-44 session of that body. Principally through the vigorous work of Mr. Rasey and his associates and with the able assistance of a few more far-sighted public officials, then employed by the State of Ohio, consideration of the measure was blocked for the balance of that session. Another session of that assembly is in the offing, however, and let no man think that the gang is not now once again digging its underground fortifications and preparing once more to set off its legislative booby traps when the next, the ninety-sixth, session of that body convenes.

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN DISTURBED

I am highly gratified to have received a letter on this subject from one of our national leaders, a real labor statesman, the Honorable A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and to find that the efforts being made by these un-American and ruthless trespassers against free enterprise and liberty have been noted and are a subject of real concern to the entire national organization of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

UNDERCOVER MANNER

Accompanying this letter, which is dated May 26, is an advance copy of an article on this subject which Mr. Whitney has written for publication in the June 1944 issue of the Railroad Trainman. Both Mr. Whitney's letter and his article indicate clearly the full awareness which he and his organization have of the devastating intent of the program being so insidiously and continuously propagandized by this group of native American Fascists—Gannett, Rumely, Pettengill, and McClure.

Mr. Whitney, in his article, says:

It should be noted that in every State this resolution is handled in a most undercover manner. In Kentucky, it was even omitted from the daily legislative digest and many reports have come to me stating that members of State legislatures vote for this vicious piece of legislation without knowing it.

He says also:

The technique generally used is to slip it through in the closing days, along with hundreds of other resolutions. I have never heard of public hearings being held in State legislatures on this resolution.

Mr. Whitney also lists the States which he understands have officially adopted one of these nefarious resolutions. He makes note of the fact that the Legislatures of Pennsylvania and Indiana also adopted the resolution, but that the Governors of these two States vetoed them.

I regret to correct an impression that Mr. Whitney may have in respect to the status of this resolution in Indiana. The resolution is in effect in Indiana today. I base this upon a letter I have just received from the Honorable Rue J. Alexander, secretary of state for the State of Indiana. Mr. Alexander, in supplying me with a copy of chapter 322 of the acts of the Indiana General Assembly for the year 1943, which chapter is based upon House Concurrent Resolution No. 10, says:

As may be seen by the context of the resolution itself, you will notice that it was adopted in the House of Representatives. It was adopted by a voice vote and later concurred in by the Senate by a similar type of vote. It is not necessary for the Governor in this State to sign a resolution of this type to make it valid and Governor Schricker did not sign it.

Consequently, I am afraid that Mr. Whitney will have to add one more State to the already too-long list of those States which have succumbed to the tactics of this quiet, but very effective machine.

Mr. Whitney concludes his article with statements which I heartily endorse. He says:

The fate of Democracy and the fate of America hangs in the balance on the 1944 elections. Ask all candidates for public office, State or National, how they stand on this ominous issue. Smoke out the reactionaries that are trying to put over this stupid proposal. In this war against world fascism, battles must be won on the home front as well as on the battle fronts.

The full text of Mr. Whitney's letter and article is appended herewith:

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN,
Cleveland, Ohio, May 26, 1944.

Hon. WRIGHT PATMAN,
Member of Congress,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have read with genuine interest your address in the House of Representatives as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 11, 1944, pages 4328–4330, regarding the vicious proposal to place a 25-percent ceiling on all income, estate, and gift taxes.

Enclosed herewith is an advance copy of an article that will appear in the Railroad Trainman, our official monthly publication, which will be of interest to you.

It is noted you state that 16 States have adopted this resolution. I have been in constant communication with the representatives of this brotherhood in the several States, and according to the best information I can obtain, the following States have officially adopted this resolution: Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Michigan, Mississippi, New Jersey, Rhode Island, and Wisconsin The Legislatures of Pennsylvania and Indiana also adopted the resolution, which was vetoed by the Governors of those States.

The Governor of Pennsylvania indicated in his veto message that the reason he vetoed this resolution was only because of the war situation. The State of Massachusetts adopted a somewhat similar resolution, but it is not the same. It proposes that additional revenues not be raised by increases in income-tax rates and by reduction of exemptions and increase of rates of estate and gift taxes. Accordingly, it would appear that only 11 States have officially adopted the 25-percent tax ceiling resolution, but even that number is most threatening.

I genuinely appreciate your service to the country in exposing this vicious Fascist-minded piece of legislation, and let me add that if you think it would be helpful, I should be glad to have you insert my article, enclosed herewith, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

With best wishes, I am
Sincerely yours,
A. F. WHITNEY, President.

[From the Railroad Trainman of June 1944]

THREAT TO DESTROY OUR GOVERNMENT

On May 11, 1944, on the floor of the United States House of Representatives, Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN, of Texas, exposed the threat of native American Fascists to amend the Federal Constitution in such a manner as to destroy our Government. (Read CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 11, 1944, pp. 4328–4330.) Notwithstanding this sensational charge, the "free" American newspapers did not print a word of it, so far as I have been able to determine. Why? This is an undercover movement that has already succeeded in 11 States of the Union, passed the legislatures of 2 additional States, but was vetoed by the governors and was adopted by another State in a modified form.

Congressman PATMAN referred to the proposal to amend the Federal Constitution so as to place a 25 percent ceiling on all income, estate and gift tax rates. PATMAN charges that Frank Gannett, of New York, owner of the reactionary Gannett newspapers, and former Indiana Congressman Samuel Pettengill, a renegade Democrat, who became chairman of the finance committee of the Republican National Committee in 1940, head up this movement. For a time Pettengill was also connected with the Transportation Association of America, an organization dedicated to the purpose of putting over a vicious railroad monopoly in the United States. PATMAN denounces Gannett and Pettengill as leaders of native American fascism and declares:

"Whenever you permit the Gannett-Pettengill amendment to become the twenty-second amendment, you destroy this Government."

The Gannett propaganda machine boasts that it has sent out:

Eighty-two million pieces of literature, 760,000 books, more than 10,000 radio transcriptions, 350,000 telegrams, full-page ads in 536 newspapers, and thousands of weekly releases to newspapers.

This from a man who tried to suppress the sale of the book Under Cover.

Barrels of money are being raised for the campaign for the 25 percent ceiling on income, estate, and gift taxes under the selfish appeal to the rich that for every $1,000 they contribute to this campaign they will save 10 or a hundred times that much in income taxes. Where a millionaire pays about $800,000 taxes on a million-dollar annual income, he would pay but $250,000 and have $750,000 free of income taxes, under such a constitutional amendment. Joe Doaks who now pays about $175 income taxes on a $2,000 income could, and no doubt would, have his taxes boosted to $500. If the rich are so relieved of taxes, naturally the poor will make up the deficiency, unless, as suggested by Congressman PATMAN, our Government is destroyed.

PATMAN'S remarks came up in connection with the debate on the veteran's aid bill. He stated that if this limitation of taxes on the rich were to come to pass, "We are just rendering lip service to the veterans and their dependents." He declared:

"We will not be able to take care of the men who have sacrificed; we will not be able to pay a penny to those who have lost eyes, legs, and arms, and are permanently disabled; we will not be able to pay anything to the widows and to the dependents of those who have given their lives upon the field of battle to save our country in time of war if this sinister organization succeeds in what is known to be its primary objective. Furthermore, there will be no old-age assistance; there will be no social security."

PATMAN quotes Vivian Kellems as saying:

"There is on foot, and well under way, a move to repeal the sixteenth amendment (the income-tax amendment)."

Miss Kellems is the woman who refused to pay her income taxes and advised others to do likewise. She is the woman whom Congressman JOHN M. COFFEE, of Washington, revealed on the floor of the House of Representatives, March 31, 1944, as having correspondence with a Nazi agent. She is actively supporting the Gannett-Pettengill constitutional amendment. PATMAN declared:

"Well, now, the gentlemen on the Republican side, of course, can laugh about it, as they indicate they would like to, but when you sit idly by and let this United States Constitution be amended that way, and then you can say to the veterans, 'Yes; we tried to help you. We wanted to give you thousands of dollars apiece, but we had no way of paying it,' why, it will become a very serious matter."

DEWEY TAKES NO STAND

Under date of March 13, 1944, I wrote Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, and called his attention to the fact that the resolution favoring this constitutional amendment was then before the legislature of his State. I emphasized the threat to the welfare of this Nation, of the inevitability of a feudalism of inordinately rich and poverty-stricken peasants, if this taxation ceiling ever became a part of our Federal Constitution. I asked Governor Dewey what his position was on this vicious legislative proposal and urged him to make it public in the interests of our national welfare if he agreed with me that this legislation constituted a real threat to our national welfare. Under date of March 17, 1944, I received a reply to my letter from Lawrence E. Walsh, assistant counsel to the Governor, reading:

"I know the Governor will appreciate your interest in writing to him and will give the views you express his careful consideration.

"I should like to point out that none of these resolutions has been adopted by the legislature."

The New York Governor appears to be keeping intact his policy of never evading an issue he can avoid. By very diligent action on the part of our brotherhood, this vicious resolution was defeated in the New York Assembly, although it had previously passed the New York Senate. It should be noted that in every State this resolution is handled in a most undercover manner. In Kentucky it was even omitted from the daily legislative digest and many reports have come to me stating that members of State legislatures vote for this vicious piece of legislation without knowing it. The technique generally used is to slip it through in the closing days, along with hundreds of other resolutions. I have never heard of public hearings being held in State legislatures on this resolution.

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen was the first organization to bring this to the Nation's attention and to start the fight against it. As long ago as September 1943 I addressed communications to all of our State legislative representatives, advising them of this resolution and urging them to watch for it and do everything possible to bring it out into the open and kill it. The thing that amazes me is why so many good organizations and good people in America can be so apathetic about so ominous a proposal. If 32 States adopt this resolution, the Congress must call a constitutional convention for this purpose, and then if 36 States adopt the proposed amendment, it becomes a part of our Federal Constitution and no Congress could thereafter tax at a higher rate than 25 percent the incomes of corporations or individuals or the gifts and inheritances of the wealthy.

The fate of democracy and the fate of America hangs in the balance on the 1944 elections. Ask all candidates for public office, State or National, how they stand on this ominous issue. Smoke out the reactionaries that are trying to put over this stupid proposal. In this war against world fascism, battles must be won on the home front as well as on the battle fronts.

TEXAS INVADED BY GANNETT-PETTENGILL-MCCLURE-RUMELY SO-CALLED COMMITTEE FOR CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

It is interesting to discover that no publicity has been given the effort to repeal the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution and insert in lieu thereof the twenty-second amendment.

Although millions of pieces of literature have been mailed advocating this proposal, legislatures have been persuaded to adopt it, it will absolutely change our form of government, all this is being done practically without mention in the public press.

The legislature in our own State of Texas on May 10, 1943 considered this question. Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 64, which was practically the same as the resolution in other States, contained a "whereas" as follows:

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States proposed legislation to repeal the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and to amend the Constitution of the United States relative to taxes on incomes, gifts and inheritances, and providing a limit on taxes thereon, and

Whereas the people of the State of Texas are greatly interested in the passage of such legislation—

This statement in the resolution was absolutely incorrect. There was not pending in the Congress of the United States, either House or Senate, at that time, or since, a proposal to so amend the Constitution of the United States

ADOPTED BY TEXAS SENATE

To that extent, at least, the premise upon which the resolution was based was incorrect. The resolution was read and adopted by the Senate of Texas on May 10, 1943. No record vote was recorded.

On May 11, 1943, the next day, the house of representatives in the Legislature of Texas, a motion was made to take up Senate Concurrent Resolution 64. A motion was made to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up the resolution. Yeas and nays were demanded, and the motion to suspend the rules was lost by a vote of 52 yeas to 58 nays.

The ones who were pushing this resolution were evidently a persistent group. On March 29, 1943, almost 2 months before Senate Concurrent Resolution 64 was adopted in the senate and before it was defeated in the house, an effort was made to pass a similar resolution—House Concurrent Resolution 37—in the house of representatives to memorialize Congress in regard to limitation of taxes on incomes. The record for March 29, 1943, of the proceedings of the house discloses the resolution had been read a second time and referred to the committee on revenue and taxation. The committee on revenue and taxation having recommended the adoption of the resolution, the speaker of the house laid it before the house for consideration. A motion was made to table the resolution and the motion prevailed by a vote of 63 yeas to 58 nays.

Evidently since there was so much interest in the passage of this resolution in 1943 there will be another attempt made to pass it next year. It is my hope that every candidate for the legislature in Texas will promise, if elected, that he will not vote for the passage of such a resolution but will do everything within his power to prevent it.

THE NAME, "COMMITTEE FOR CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT," A FAKE

The Committee for Constitutional Government is a misnomer. It is a committee to destroy the Constitution by amending it in a way that a Fascist state will be set up in the United States.

This group is sponsored and controlled by Frank Gannett—Republican candidate for the Presidency, a large chain newspaper publisher, Samuel B. Pettengill, a money raiser for the Republican Party; Edward A. Rumely, an ex-convict who was convicted during the last war and may be considered the Nazi representative on this committee; and S. S. McClure, a Fascist instructor who boasts about having spent 2 years in Italy being educated on fascism.

LOBBYING ORGANIZATION WITH UNITS IN TEXAS

This is strictly a lobbying organization of the most sinister and sordid type. In their handbook published only a few months ago, on page 43, it is stated as one of their immediate objectives "To mobilize 1,000,000 constitutionalists, 1 to 4,000 in each congressional district, organized to support our constitutional system."

ANOTHER EYE-OFENER PROMISED

This group has perfected organizations in several cities in Texas, including Dallas, San Antonio, Houston, and at least one city in the First Congressional District of Texas, which I shall be pleased to fully discuss later. I promise this will be an eye-opener.

Since this has been the policy of the organization for several years, evidently all the congressional districts are now organized or most of them at least. One can imagine the power such an organization would have by getting these so-called constitutionalists in their district to wire their Member of Congress about something this Republican, Nazi, Fascist group oppose. The ones doing the wiring would probably know nothing about it, but their wire would have great effect just the same.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THOSE WHO ARE NOT ENTIRELY FAMILIAR WITH THE TAX LIMITATION PROPOSAL

The proposal of the Gannett-Pettengill-Rumely-McClure political action committee, alias the committee for Constitutional government, its terms would:

First. Repeal the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution which permits Congress to levy income taxes.

Second. Provide that Congress may levy taxes on incomes—individual and corporate—gifts and estates, but not to exceed 25 percent. Some rates now in excess profits caused by war, monopoly and patents are as high as 95 percent.

Third. That a constitutional convention be called for the purpose of submitting the proposal to the States to be effective when ratified by three-fourths of the States.

An effort is quietly being made to get 32 States to ask Congress for this convention on the theory, undoubtedly correct, that when 32 States request the Congress for the convention, the Congress is compelled under article 5 of the Constitution, to call the convention. If Congress does not call the convention this group will declare Congress is violating the Constitution and proceed to call one themselves, submit the amendment to the States and when ratified by three-fourths they will proclaim its adoption and insist upon constitutional government. In this way it will be possible to bypass Congress. When the convention is called, anything can be submitted. This proposed amendment may repeal any part of the Constitution or the submission of a whole Constitution may be submitted by the convention.

If this sinister and sordid lobby that is backed by the chain newspaper's Republican candidate for President, Gannett, and money-raiser for the Republican Party, Pettengill, and the Nazi ex-convict Rumely, who was convicted for illegally dealing with Germany in the First World War, and McClure, the Fascist instructor, succeeds in slipping through the proposal, the results will be:

RESULTS

First. A few families in a generation will own and control 98 percent of the wealth of the United States. Heretofore arguments have been made in favor of reduction of income taxes while the taxpayer is living with the understanding that a large part of a big estate so acquired would be taken at death—but never before has anyone been so brazen as to advocate a 25-percent limitation upon both income and estate taxes.

Second. It will be impossible to support the necessary expenditures of the Federal Government when the war is over. The carrying charges for the national debt—that is, interest charges—will be more than all the cost of the Federal Government per annum before the war. In addition, a large standing army of from three to five million men will be very expensive for several years to come.

Third. With the other necessary operating expenses of the Government and with this tax limitation, nothing else can be provided by the Federal Government.

Fourth. Therefore, there will be no aid for the dependents of those who have given their lives on the field of battle during this war and prior wars. All present benefits will stop.

Fifth. There will be no aid for the crippled, maimed, shell-shocked, and otherwise disabled men who suffered upon the field of battle in any war.

Sixth. There will be no aid for the dependents of disabled men.

Seventh. There will be no educational opportunities, business opportunities, mustering-out pay, or other benefits to be given by a generous and grateful Government to our protectors in time of war because our generous Government, with its big heart, will have its taxing ability restrained by this constitutional amendment to the extent that no financial aid can be given, although provided for by Congress, since Congress will be unable to raise the money to pay for it.

Eighth. Aid for the aged, the retired workers, the unemployed, and other benefits through Social Security will have to be stopped, as there will be no money available to pay them.

Ninth. All Federal farm benefits will stop.

Tenth. Small business will fold up since big business will be able to keep so much of the excess profits that they make that little business unable to compete will be quickly and easily crushed and destroyed.

ABILITY TO PAY PRINCIPLE REPEALED

These are just some of the things that will result. In addition, the main thing is that the sound principle of taxation "ability to pay" will be destroyed for the adoption of this amendment will cause people to pay on what they owe to support a large part of the cost of our Government in order to exempt from taxation the greedy rich who are sponsoring this proposal.

Fair Employment Practice Committee

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT F. WAGNER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, May 31 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a very fine editorial on the question of the Fair Employment Practice Committee, which appeared in the Washington Post of last Saturday.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

F. E. P. C.

The House Appropriations Committee showed a wise tolerance, we think, in recommending the allotment of half a million dollars for continuation of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee. If the recommendation is approved by both Houses of Congress, as we very much hope it will be, the F. E. P. C. will cease to be merely a Presidential agency and will have independent status under congressional authorization. This is as it should be. The Post has expressed endorsement, in principle, of Senator RUSSELL'S proposal requiring all Federal agencies set up by Executive order to secure an appropriation from Congress after they have been in existence for a year. We should regret very much indeed, however, to see this sound general requirement employed, as some intended, to end the F. E. P. C.'s useful career.

There is particular need of the F. E. P. C. at the present time. To Negroes, the minority most urgently in need of its protection, the agency symbolizes the Government's recognition of their plight. Through the activities of the F. E. P. C., war employment otherwise barred to them because of racial prejudice has been opened up to Negroes. The war effort of the Nation has been accelerated by the utilization of their skills and energies. By gradual, patient, constructive effort the areas of discrimination are being reduced. The effort must not be abandoned now if we are to keep faith with the democratic principles we profess.

Campaign Expenditure in Oregon Primaries

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RUFUS C. HOLMAN

OF OREGON

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, May 31 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, yesterday I gave a statement to the Associated Press of which I have the text. I request unanimous consent to have it printed in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I am just advised by receipt in today's mail that the Special Committee to Investigate Presidential, Vice Presidential, and Senatorial Campaign Expenditures in 1944, in compliance with Senate Resolution 263 adopted March 3 last, is inquiring into the amount, source, and use of campaign funds by all candidates for the Senate in the recent Oregon primaries.

I believe a thorough investigation of this subject is necessary if our elections are not to become a farce. It may be that there was more money spent to accomplish my defeat and the nomination of Professor Morse (Wayne L. Morse), a new dealer, than was spent in the combined campaigns of all candidates for all offices in both the Republican and Democratic Parties in Oregon. It seems to me the cause of good government in our country will be well served by letting light into the dark places of the amount, source, and use of campaign expenditures in this particular primary election.

In this connection I observe that today is Memorial Day and we are reminded that all over the world little white crosses mark the thousands upon thousands of graves of fine young Americans already sacrificed in this war, and in previous wars, while our hospitals are inadequate to care for the great number of greviously wounded patriots who seek succor in them.

It is estimated that the peak of the demand for hospitalization will not be reached until 1965. The peak of the demand for hospitalization for the last war is only now, 25 years after it.

When our combat veterans return I can look them all in the face with a clear conscience. I did not curry political favor from Mr. Sidney Hillman and the political action committee of the C. I. O., and the racketeers of American labor who foment strikes in war industries in the time of war and thereby withhold from production, transportation, and use the weapons, food, and supplies needed by our combat forces, not only for battle purposes but actually to defend themselves.

At Dutch Harbor, Alaska, in August 1942, I saw the newly made graves of some fifty fine young Americans who were slaughtered there because they had no adequate means with which to defend themselves when the Japanese bombed that place. The reason they lacked the facilities with which to defend themselves was because strikes in war industries had retarded the production and delivery of the needed weapons, material, and supplies with tragically fatal results.

The President's Responsibility and Power in Time of War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, May 31 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD a letter that appeared in the New York Times of a recent date, written by Arthur Dunn, chairman of Parents and Wives of Fighting Americans, Inc.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 8, 1944.

EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: Last Sunday's Times contains two Gallup polls. The question asked in one was: "Do you think the Government did the right thing in taking over the Montgomery Ward plants, or was it a mistake?" Sixty-one percent thought it was a mistake.

In the second poll 66 percent believed that "the public is not taking the war seriously enough." The second poll proves the truth of the first; for if the home front took the war seriously enough, 100 percent would condemn the action of Montgomery Ward in defying the Commander in Chief of the armed forces. Instead, the anti-Roosevelt newspapers and publications are trying to use a really unimportant incident to help the presidential election. Many seem to be much more interested in winning the election than in winning the war.

We listen to speeches and read editorials as to whether the President exceeded the war powers granted by Congress—whether Montgomery Ward is a war industry—whether the President might treat the corner grocery the same way that he has treated Montgomery Ward—whether he acted unconstitutionally.

Of course he can take over the corner grocery, and will take over any corner grocer who insists on defying the O. P. A.

Very few seem to have a real understanding of the responsibility and power of the President in time of war. Responsibility without power has no meaning. It is inherent that power must be as great as responsibility. The President's responsibility and power do no depend upon Congress or on the courts. Both his responsibility and power proceed right out of the Constitution itself.

Article II, section I, paragraph 7 provides: "Before he enter on the execution of his office, he shall take the following oath or affirmation: 'I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.'"

Immediately following the above, section II, paragraph 1 states: "The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual service of the United States."

Unless the Commander in Chief is victorious over Hitler and Hirohito, there will be no Constitution to preserve, protect, and defend. To preserve, protect, and defend is his solemn responsibility, and responsibility without limit. Therefore, his power as Commander in Chief must be without limit. And he must make his own decisions. If he decides a certain course of action is vital for victory, neither Congress nor the people can decide otherwise.

If they think they can find a better man to be both President and Commander in Chief Congress can remove him by impeachment or the people can remove him at the polls. There is no other remedy. Once having put him in command, we must back him to the limit till we decide we want someone else. That is both good constitutional law and sound common sense.

At least Abraham Lincoln thought so, for he carried on the Civil War for several months without authorization from Congress and without bothering to summon that body even for the purpose of declaring war. His Emancipation Proclamation freeing the slaves was not authorized by the Constitution nor by the Congress. He considered it vital for victory. His action was denounced by many in the North.

Perhaps F. D. R. thinks likewise. At any rate, on September 7, 1942, he demanded of Congress that it pass the so-called anti-inflation bill, and threatened Congress that if it failed to do so by October 1, he would put on the price ceilings himself. On October 2 Congress passed the bill.

The test of every act of every citizen, of every corporation, on the home front is not whether any business is a war industry; whether a particular act is constitutional; whether we like it or don't like it. The single test is, does it promote or retard the defeat of our enemies?

During the very last hour of the war thousands of our youth will be killed, many more thousands will be made legless, armless, sightless, and be otherwise disabled. When any civilian does anything to unnecessarily prolong the war a single hour, he will be actually killing and maiming thousands of soldiers at the front. To have to pass on such petty matters as the Montgomery Ward case and to have to prepare a statement explaining the same takes up the time of our Commander in Chief, which he would otherwise use in the prosecution of the war.

As stated in the 66-percent Gallup poll: "A criticism voiced by many soldiers returning from the battle fronts is that the civilian population in the United States does not take the war seriously enough." The time has come when those with loved ones in the services demand that we cease bothering with trifles and get on with the war.

Eggs and Egg Prices

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JOHN A. DANAHER

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, May 31 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article from the Washington Post dated April 6, 1944, entitled "W. F. A. Will Buy Eggs to Bolster Market," and an article appearing in the Washington Post of May 30, 1944, entitled "Eggs Going Into Animal Feed."

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of April 6, 1944]

W. F. A. WILL BUY EGGS TO BOLSTER MARKET

(By Christine Sadler)

War Food Administrator Marvin Jones yesterday assured midwestern Congressmen—flooded with protests against low egg prices—that buying agents would be designated by W. F. A. this week to purchase eggs throughout the South and Middle West at not less than 26 cents a dozen.

The new procedure is designed to reach the farm level in all heaviest producing areas and thus support a market glutted with more eggs than the country has ever had to handle at one time before.

Buyers will be granted a bounty of 90 cents a case to furnish a good shipping case and cover expenses of getting the eggs to market centers. In addition, the W. F. A. will begin buying eggs on the New York and Chicago mercantile exchanges, Jones said.

JONES OUTLINES OTHER STEPS

Other W. F. A. steps for protecting the farmer against losses and assuring full utilization of the egg crop were outlined by Jones as follows:

1. Drying plants have been instructed to buy eggs at not less than 30 cents a dozen and to certify each week the amount paid. The Government buys dried eggs for lend-lease and military purchases, and recently drying plants have been cleaning up, it is claimed, by buying for next to nothing while continuing to collect the higher set prices.

2. Grocers and other dealers have been urged to sell eggs at retail prices in keeping with their costs, without regard for O. P. A. ceilings fixed before the market was glutted. In some parts of the country, O. P. A. officials said, stores have been selling below the ceiling but the practice has not been general.

3. More cold-storage space for shell eggs is being found, Jones told the Congressmen, and more egg cases are being made available to handle the bumper output.

4. The W. F. A. is pushing civilian consumption, urging at least one more egg per week for each consumer. Jones said more than 60,000,000 dozen additional eggs could be disposed of during the next 6 weeks, if everyone cooperated.

After listening to the Jones presentation, Senator HUGH BUTLER (Republican, Nebraska) declared, "I give W. F. A. credit for their attempt, but more work will be necessary. A 26-cent floor won't permit the necessary continued production."

Senator ALEXANDER WILEY (Republican, Wisconsin) said, "The complete answer must be in increased consumption by encouraging higher prices for the producers and cutting the spread between the producers' return and the price the consumer pays."

The W. F. A. program "makes pretty good sense," declared Senator JOSEPH H. BALL (Republican, Minnesota), but he added the hope W. F. A. would give poultrymen some "reasonable assurance" of what they can expect next year.

[From the Washington Post of May 30, 1944]

EGGS GOING INTO ANIMAL FEED—STORAGE FACILITIES LACKING—W. F. A. ACTS TO SUPPORT PRICES

(By Jean Craighead)

Marvin Jones, War Food Administrator, is converting surplus eggs into animal feed in order to support egg prices, the Department of Agriculture announced yesterday.

At the same time the War Food Administration reported that an exceptionally heavy milk output, expected during the next 2 months, has changed previous reports of a stable ice cream production ceiling, and boosted quotas 85 percent for June and 75 percent for July.

Due to inadequate storage facilities for the tremendous egg surplus, a limited number are being turned into feed, which is short in supply, the administrator said.

"Purchases of eggs by the War Food Administration to support producer price levels have reached such volume that suitable cold-storage space is inadequate. These conversions will be made in such volume and for such time as necessary to carry out price support commitments," Jones stated.

Ice cream also will be richer during June and July W. F. A. officials said. W. F. A. raised the milk solids content from 22 to 24 percent. During August, both production and richness will drop back to previous wartime levels.

Despite surplus of eggs and milk, the manpower shortage on the Nation's farms still looms as a danger to 1944 production. The War Food Administration has made arrangements to bring approximately 900 workers to the United States from Barbados, British West Indies, for agriculture employment during the summer and fall months.

The recruits are expected to arrive about the middle of June and work on the farms of the Middle West.

Besides the West Indies colonies, Mexico and Newfoundland also are supplying farm workers to the United States, the War Food Administration said.

Report by Hon. Elbert D. Thomas of Utah on International Labor Organization Conference

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ABE MURDOCK

OF UTAH

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, May 31 (legislative day of Tuesday, May 9), 1944

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, because of its interest and historical significance, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD a report on the recent conference of the International Labor Organization submitted by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], who served as a governmental delegate by appointment of the President of the United States. The Public Printer has submitted an estimate showing that the cost of printing the matter will be $442.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

About 2 weeks ago I returned from Philadelphia, where I had been attending the conference of the International Labor Organization as a governmental delegate appointed by the President of the United States. Members of the Senate have, no doubt, read of this conference in the newspapers. The journalists reported it fully and accurately, yet I feel a responsibility to give to this body some of my own impressions of the proceedings.

I should point out first that the I. L. O. is a unique type of world organization, or association of governments. There are more than 40 member governments, and 41 sent delegations to the conference. It is in the composition of the delegations—4-man delegations—that we find the unique quality of the organization, since 2 delegates from each country represent governments; 1 of the remaining delegates represents the labor organizations of his country, and the fourth represents employers. Miss Frances Perkins and I represented the Government of the United States, Mr. Robert Watt was the workers' representative, and Mr. Henry I. Harriman was the employers' delegate. Great Britain sent Mr. Tomlinson, a Member of Parliament, as a governmental delegate; New Zealand sent Mr. Walter Nash, its Deputy Prime Minister, who was elected president of the conference, and who speeded our labors with rare insight and great parliamentary skill. Half a dozen other countries sent delegates of ministerial rank.

Each delegation had advisers. Mrs. MARGARET CHASE SMITH, Congresswoman from Maine, was one of the advisers, and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 5 has made an interim report to the House on the activities of the conference. Many of the advisers, from our own country and abroad, were distinguished students of public affairs. I name only a few: Sir Walter Citrine; Mr. Bertil Ohlin, of Sweden; Mr. Mulherkar, of India; Mr. Lubin, of the United States.

One of our important allies was absent, namely, the Soviet Union. Though the Conference and particularly the representatives of the other United Nations regretted the absence of so important a friend, it is doubtful whether the absence of her delegates reduces the value of the work done.

I should next, by way of general explanation, note that this Conference may be looked upon as one of a series of general international technical conferences whose aim it is to put together the fragments of a broken world—two of its predecessors being the Food Conference of May 1943 and the U. N. R. R. A. Conference at Atlantic City. Events seem to suggest that the forthcoming peace settlement will be built on a broad, firm base, with dozens of minor, technical matters talked out and thought out before the great political issues are settled and agreed upon. It is my firm belief that such a peace will be more enduring than one which—so to speak—is worked out in one prolonged session, where both technical and political matters are threshed out together, at the same time. Perhaps it is not always possible to separate the technical from the political, but it can be said of the recent International Labor Conference that it approached questions primarily from the technical point of view.

The Conference worked hard. It had a heavy agenda. The newspapers reported charges of stalling, I believe, during the first few days. It did take a little while for new delegates to understand international procedures, and for nations to discover what position other nations were going to take on various issues. But once these necessary preliminaries were over, things moved fast and—toward the end—even breathlessly. At one time, I am told, 17 committees and subcommittees met on the same day. Miss Perkins was chairman of one of the largest and most important committees, which met at night to complete its labors. In the last days, when delegates were straining to go home after more than 3 weeks' work, a few votes were held up until the necessary documents could be rushed from the printers.

Perhaps the most important resolution of the conference was the so-called Declaration of Philadelphia. This resolution, which may prove to be not the least of several great historical documents produced in Philadelphia, affirms the right of all human beings to material well-being and spiritual development under conditions of freedom and dignity and under conditions of economic security and opportunity. It holds that the attainment of those conditions must constitute a central aim of national and international policy. The resolution states that the worthiness and success of international policies will be measured in the future by the extent to which they promote the achievement of this end.

Another document created at the Conference may have even greater historical interest than the Declaration of Philadelphia. A resolution was adopted suggesting to the United Nations the kind of social clauses that might appropriately be included in a general or special treaty of peace. This remarkable resolution, drafted in a form suitable for incorporation in a treaty, binds the signatory nations to accept the principles of the Declaration of Philadelphia, which I have just summarized. It goes on to state that signatory nations recognize their duty to expand production, to liberate economic activity from unreasonable restraints, to maintain high levels of employment, to exchange social statistics and other similar information, and, through the I. L. O., to call a special emergency conference when levels of employment fall dangerously. It is doubtful whether responsible delegates, acting on instructions from their governments, have ever before drafted proposals such as these with a view to incorporating them in a peace treaty. Our Australian friends were particularly concerned about the maintenance of high levels of employment after the war and considered that our own proposals were rather unprogressive.

A complementary resolution was voted outlining the economic policies required to attain the social objectives referred to. This document, after acknowledging the importance of the work of U. N. R. R. A. and the Food Conference, endorses the establishment of a sound international monetary system, of trade on a multilateral basis, and of orderly migration. Liberated countries, it declares, should receive priorities in materials required for reconstruction. It urges that monopoly be discouraged and technological progress fostered.

The Conference adopted a recommendation setting forth the general employment principles to be adopted in the transition from war to peace, and suggesting specific methods of applying these principles. It is recommended that all necessary information be gathered to provide an accurate picture, nationally and locally, of the skills in supply and those in demand; that policies governing demobilization, based in fairness, should be clearly stated and adhered to; that additional productive facilities called into being during the war should not be kept out of use if they can supply human wants. The labor supply should be trained or retrained to meet demand, and educational doors be unlocked to those whose schooling was interrupted by the war. School-leaving ages should be raised, and the redistribution of women workers in the economy be done on basis of complete equality of men and women.

There was considerable discussion of the role that the I. L. O. should play among the international organizations in existence or to be created. Much of this has been left to a committee of its governing body to work out. Perhaps the best summary to give here is to say that the I. L. O. is consolidating the strong position it already has among international organizations, and that the next few years will make great demands on the organization's service functions.

I have only told you a few of the most important things achieved in Philadelphia. A host of lesser resolutions and decisions were made. Certain quite technical recommendations were adopted concerning the problem of tropical poverty and social security. I omit entirely the interim procedural machinery that is to convert the resolutions of this conference—ultimately—into drafts of treaties—treaties that will be laid before member states for their action. I must not, however, omit the conference decisions to hold regional conferences: One to serve the Near East and one to be held immediately after the end of the Pacific war, to serve the Far East. I have sometimes felt that the I. L. O., in its long and useful history, has perhaps neglected the shores of the Pacific Ocean, but the decisions of the recent conference have reassured me.

The Conference, to sum up, threw out a few handfuls of extremely difficult problems at an embattled world and raised some of the most important issues of a stable peace. It has, I am glad to say, found no panacea, for panaceas do not exist; it has not solved the problems or met the issues, of course, but it has offered hope that the problems are not insoluble, the issues not unsurmountable. It has created follow-up machinery in the form of governing body committees to advance the work begun in Philadelphia, while its secretariat has the mandate to undertake studies and organize further meetings—all of which tend toward the goal of peace through social justice.

All delegates were shocked and grieved at the death during the period of the Conference of two of its members, Mr. Oscar Hieremans Brockmann, of Chile, and Mr. Abdelmagid Ramzy, of Egypt.

I wish to close my account of the Conference on a personal note. Miss Frances Perkins, as head of the United States delegation, and chairman of its most important committee, performed a difficult task in a way which won admiration from all. Her vigor and skill in negotiation commanded respect; her personal charm and humor brought her the affection of all delegates. The International Labor Organization owes much to her vitality and forcefulness.

In order to expand this bare sketch of the Philadelphia Conference, I beg the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce the following documents into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

1. Text of the Declaration of Philadelphia (contained in Provisional Record No. 16, pp. 2, 3, 4).

2. Text of the resolution concerning social provisions in the peace settlement (contained in Provisional Record No. 34, pp. 7, 8, 9, 10).

3. Text of the resolution concerning economic policies for the attainment of social objectives (contained in Provisional Record No. 28, pp. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12).

4. Text of the recommendation concerning employment organization in the transition from war to peace (contained in Provisional Record No. 33, pp. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14).

5. Text of resolution concerning constitutional practice of the I. L. O. and its relationship with other bodies (contained in the Provisional Record No. 21, pp. 2, 3).

TEXT OF THE PROPOSED DECLARATION CONCERNING THE AIMS AND PURPOSES OF THE INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANISATION SUBMITTED BY THE SPECIAL DRAFTING COMMITTEE

The General Conference of the International Labour Organisation, meeting in its Twenty-sixth Session in Philadelphia, hereby adopts, this day of May in the year nineteen hundred and forty-four, the present Declaration of the aims and purposes of the International Labour Organisation and of the principles which should inspire the policy of its Members.

I

The Conference reaffirms the fundamental principles on which the Organisation is based and, in particular, that:

(a) labour is not a commodity;

(b) freedom of expression and of association are essential to sustained progress;

(c) poverty anywhere constitutes a danger to prosperity everywhere;

(d) the war against want requires to be carried on with unrelenting vigour within each nation, and by continuous and concerted international effort in which the representatives of workers and employers, enjoying equal status with those of Governments, join with them in free discussion and democratic decision with a view to the promotion of the common welfare.

II

Believing that experience has fully demonstrated the truth of the statement in the Preamble to the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation that lasting peace can be established only if it is based on social justice, the Conference affirms that:

(a) all human beings, irrespective of race, creed, or sex, have the right to pursue both their material well-being and their spiritual development in conditions of freedom and dignity, of economic security and equal opportunity;

(b) the attainment of the conditions in which this shall be possible must constitute the central aim of national and international policy;

(c) all national and international policies and measures, in particular those of an economic and financial character, should be judged in this light and accepted only insofar as they may be held to promote and not to hinder the achievement of this fundamental objective;

(d) it is a responsibility of the International Labour Organisation to examine and consider all international economic and financial policies and measures in the light of this fundamental objective;

(e) in discharging the tasks entrusted to it the International Labour Organisation, having considered all relevant economic and financial factors, may include in its decisions and recommendations any provisions which it considers appropriate.

III

The Conference recognises the solemn obligation of the International Labour Organisation to further among the nations of the world programmes which will achieve:

(a) full employment and the raising of standards of living;

(b) the employment of workers in the occupations in which they can have the satisfaction of giving the fullest measure of their skill and attainments and make their greatest contribution to the common well-being;

(c) the provision, as a means to the attainment of this end and under adequate guarantees for all concerned, of facilities for training and the transfer of labour, including migration for employment and settlement;

(d) policies in regard to wages and earnings, hours, and other conditions of work calculated to ensure a just share of the fruits of progress to all, and a minimum living wage to all employed and in need of such protection;

(e) the effective recognition of the right of collective bargaining, the cooperation of management and labour in the continuous improvement of productive efficiency, and the collaboration of workers and employers in the preparation and application of social and economic measures;

(f) the extension of social security measures to provide a basic income to all in need of such protection and comprehensive medical care;

(g) adequate protection for the life and health of workers in all occupations;

(h) provision for child welfare and maternity protection;

(i) the provision of adequate nutrition, housing, and facilities for recreation and culture;

(j) the assurance of equality of educational and vocational opportunity.

IV

Confident that the fuller and broader utilisation of the world's productive resources necessary for the achievement of the objectives set forth in this declaration can be secured by effective international and national action, including measures to expand production and consumption, to avoid severe economic fluctuations, to promote the economic and social advancement of the less developed regions of the world, to assure greater stability in world prices of primary products, and to promote a high and steady volume of international trade, the Conference pledges the full co-operation of the International Labour Organisation with such international bodies as may be entrusted with a share of the responsibility for this great task and for the promotion of the health, education and well-being of all peoples.

V

The Conference affirms that the principles set forth in this declaration are fully applicable to all peoples everywhere and that, while the manner of their application must be determined with due regard to the stage of social and economic development reached by each people, their progressive application to peoples who are still dependent, as well as to those who have already achieved self-government, is a matter of concern to the whole civilised world.

[From the International Labour Conference Provisional Record, No. 21]

RESOLUTION CONCERNING THE CONSTITUTION AND CONSTITUTIONAL PRACTICE OF THE INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANISATION AND ITS RELATIONSHIP WITH OTHER INTERNATIONAL BODIES

The General Conference resolves that:

1. During periods of emergency when, in the judgment of the Governing Body, the efficient operation of the Organisation or of the Office will be advanced thereby, and the Governing Body so notifies the Members of the Organisation, it shall provide that, supplementary to the normal procedure, the following communications should be transmitted through the Director:

(a) the communication to members of certified copies of Recommendations and Conventions in accordance with paragraph 4 of Article 19 of the Constitution of the Organisation;

(b) the communication by members of the information concerning the action taken in regard to Recommendations required by paragraph 6 of Article 19 of the Constitution;

(c) the communication by Members of the formal ratifications of International Labour Conventions in accordance with paragraph 7 of Article 19 of the Constitution and the relevant provisions of the individual Conventions;

(d) the communication to members of all notifications required by the terms of International Labour Conventions.

2. The Conference requests the Governing Body:

(a) to take effective steps as promptly as possible to deal with problems common to a region or to a particular industry, with due regard to the Constitution and principles of the Organisation, and its competence, and

(b) to report to the next general session of the Conference the steps taken and plans for the further regionalisation of the Office and of the Organisation and for special consideration of the problems of particular industries.

3. The Conference requests the Governing Body during the period of the deliberations of the committee to be established under the terms of this resolution and of the development of an overall pattern of international institutions, to take appropriate steps to assure close collaboration with and a full exchange of information between the I.L.O. and any other public international organisations which now exist or may be established for the promotion of economic and social well-being, and in the furtherance of this objective it may instruct the director to arrange with such organisations, on conditions mutually agreeable, for

(a) the exchange of information, views, reports, studies and other documents regarding policies and measures of mutual interest and concern at appropriate stages in their formulation and execution, and:

(b) the exchange of representatives without vote, at meetings convened by this Organisation and such other organisations, and:

(c) the creation and maintenance of such joint committees as may facilitate their effective co-operation.

4. The Conference requests the Governing Body.

(a) to appoint a committee as soon as possible to consider the future constitutional development of the Organisation. The committee shall particularly consider the following matters in active collaboration with the office, and in the light of the Report on Item I submitted by the office the resolutions and amendments submitted to the Conference, the views expressed in the Conference and any suggestions which may be communicated to the office by governments:

(1) the relationship of the Organisation to other international bodies;

(2) the constitutional practice of the Organisation and its clarification and codification;

(3) the status, immunities and other facilities to be accorded to the Organisation by Governments as necessary to the efficient discharge of the responsibilities of the Organisation;

(4) the methods of financing the Organisation;

(b) after receiving and considering the Report of the Committee to bring to the attention of the Conference at its next general session such matters as in its judgment require action by the Conference.

5. The Conference requests the Governing Body to appoint representatives with power to negotiate, if necessary prior to the next general session of the Conference, with international authorities on behalf of the Organisation concerning any constitutional questions which at any time require immediate action, including the matters referred to in paragraph 4.

6. The Conference authorises the Governing Body to decide the place at which the Twenty-seventh Session of the Conference shall be held. In the event of a maritime session being convened in the near future, this authorisation shall apply to the Twenty-seventh and Twenty-eighth Sessions.

A. PROPOSED RESOLUTION CONCERNING ECONOMIC POLICIES FOR THE ATTAINMENT OF SOCIAL OBJECTIVES

Whereas the prospect of a complete victory of the United Nations makes it possible to prepare a better world order directed towards the achievement of the social objectives which these nations proclaimed in the Atlantic Charter in expressing their desire to bring about the fullest collaboration between all nations in the economic field with the object of securing for all improved labour standards, economic advancement and social security; and

Where as these objectives of the United Nations coincide with the basic principles of the International Labour Organisation, and the International Labour Conference, meeting in New York in 1941, pledged the full collaboration of the International Labour Organisation in their implementation; and

Whereas the International Labour Conference is called upon by Item II on the Agenda of the present Session to make recommendations to the United Nations for present and post-war social policy concerning more especially the measures required to be taken internationally and nationally to ensure full employment, social security and rising standards of living; and

Whereas the initiative with regard to international policy lies with the United Nations at the present time, and it is desirable in order to attain the objectives referred to that all nations should pursue an appropriate national policy; and

Whereas the attainment of full employment and high productivity by the various nations after the war is essential to the achievement of freedom from want, the attainment of increasing living standards, the realisation of genuine economic security, and the continuation of peaceful economic progress; and

Whereas full employment can be achieved and maintained only through the adoption, by governments, industry and labour, of policies and measures which effectively encourage the continuing expansion of production and improvement of distribution; and

Whereas the speedy achievement of full employment requires the prompt and orderly reconversion, reconstruction and expansion of industry, trade, commerce and agriculture after the war, and the subsequent maintenance of employment and production at high levels requires the creation of an economic and social environment conducive to a progressive and expanding economy;

The Conference adopts the following resolution:

I. INTERNATIONAL POLICY

1. Believing that the relief of war-stricken peoples, repatriation of prisoners and exiles and resumption of agricultural and industrial production are matters which will be of the utmost urgency immediately on the liberation of occupied countries and that on the successful handling of these problems the possibility of achieving the long-range objectives of social and economic well-being will largely depend,

The Conference welcomes the creation of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, urges all States concerned to co-operate actively in the achievement of the tasks entrusted to it and assures the Administration of the readiness of the International Labour Organisation to assist it in every appropriate way.

2. In view of the fact that for varying periods after the end of hostilities many essential commodities and transport facilities will be in short supply, and that international arrangements will be needed to ensure a fair allocation of available supplies and prevent excessive price movements,

The Conference considers that the Governments of the United Nations concerned should arrange to continue in operation, for such periods as any serious shortages may persist, the existing machinery of international co-ordination and control subject to such modification, and in particular to such enlargement of the membership of the authorities concerned, as may contribute to the equitable and efficient operation of such machinery in the transition from war to peace.

3. The Conference endorses the declaration of the United Nations Conference on Food and Agriculture held in May 1943, that while the primary responsibility lies with each nation for seeing that its own people have the food needed for life and health, each nation can fully achieve this goal only if all co-operate in appropriate international action, and urges the setting up of a permanent international organisation, as recommended by the Conference on Food and Agriculture, to raise the level of nutrition and improve the efficiency of agricultural production and distribution.

4. Recognising that a satisfactory international monetary system is essential to the full development of mutually advantageous economic relations between nations, and consequently to the raising of standards of living.

The Conference attaches great importance to the establishment at the earliest possible moment of effective international machinery for settling balances arising out of international trade and other transactions and for maintaining stability in rates of exchange, notes with satisfaction that the Governments of the United Nations are giving careful attention to this matter and urges that they include in any agreement establishing such machinery a provision requiring the authorities responsible for its application to have regard in framing and applying their policies to the effect of their decisions on employment and living standards.

5. Noting that imports of capital will be needed for reconstruction, development and the raising of living standards in many countries, and believing that the provision of such capital will contribute to the maintenance of full employment in the lending countries,

The Conference:

(a) considers that the existing machinery of the international capital market should be supplemented by the establishment of appropriate international machinery for the purpose of promoting the international movement of capital;

(b) considers that the promotion of full employment and higher living standards should be regarded as a primary objective of any such international machinery;

(c) considers that the authorities responsible for the operation of such international machinery should consult the International Labour Organisation as to the appropriateness of including in the terms under which development works financed in whole or in part through such machinery are to be carried out, provisions regarding the welfare and working conditions of the labour employed; and that such provisions should be framed in consultation with the International Labour Organisation;

(d) affirms the readiness of the International Labour Organisation to render every assistance in its power in determining the appropriateness of the inclusion of such provisions and in their framing and application and in the promotion through the operations of such international machinery of the general objectives of full employment and higher living standards.

6. Recognising the great contribution which the international exchange of goods and services can make to higher living standards and to high levels of employment,

The Conference:

(a) believes that the measures proposed in the foregoing paragraphs for the promotion of exchange stabilisation and international lending will contribute to the expansion of international trade, but considers that the United Nations should also examine wartime changes in industrial capacity, and arrange for exchange of information on post-war industrial programmes and should take vigorous action to promote the expansion of international trade by appropriate commercial policies; and considers that all countries, creditor as well as debtor, should adapt their commercial policy in such a way as to enable them to settle all obligations arising out of international transactions;

(b) considers that the United Nations should initiate measures to facilitate the co-ordination through appropriate international machinery of the commercial policies of all countries for the purpose of promoting a steady expansion in world trade on a multilateral basis;

(c) considers that in such co-ordination special consideration should be given to the need of countries which are highly dependent on returns from exports to take measures to ensure a high degree of stability in the level of their economic activity and observes that the need for these measures will decrease to the extent that international collaboration proves successful; and

(d) considers that in such co-ordination special account should be taken of the dislocation and the accumulated needs resulting from the devastation caused by war operations and from the prolonged diversion from peacetime production in countries which have been engaged for a long period in a sustained and total war effort.

7. In order to lay the foundation for rising levels of consumption throughout the world and at the same time to ensure more stable and adequate incomes to those primary producers whose services are needed for the production of essential raw materials and foodstuffs.

The Conference considers that the United Nations should initiate concerted action designed to ensure the constant availability to all purchasers of adequate supplies of such commodities at prices which gave a reasonable return to the efficient producer and are held sufficiently stable to afford protection against major short-term fluctuations in supply or demand; and that such international arrangements (a) should provide for adequate representation of consumers as well as producers, representing both importing and exporting countries, in all authorities responsible for the determination and application of policy, and (b) should aim to assure to all workers, including the self-employed, engaged in the production of the commodities concerned, fair remuneration, satisfactory working conditions and adequate social security protection, having regard to the general standards in the countries concerned.

8. Believing that migratory movements may play an important part in the development of a dynamic economy, and that disorderly international migration may create economic and social dislocation in the countries concerned and involve serious individual hardship for the migrants themselves, while desirable migratory movements are often hampered by technichal and financial difficulties which can be overcome only through international cooperation,

The Conference considers that:

(a) The United Nations should encourage by appropriate measures, with adequate safeguards for all concerned, the orderly migration of labour and settled in accordance with the economic needs and social conditions prevailing in the various countries, and in this connection should note the Conclusions adopted by the Conference of Experts on Technical and Financial Co-operation with regard to Migration for Settlement held at the International Labour Office in 1938;

(b) Arrangements should be made for close co-operation between the International Labour Organisation and any public international agency established to deal with migration;

(c) The Governing Body should take steps to bring before an early session of the Conference a report of a representative commission, with such technical assistance as it may require, on the means necessary to protect the interests of labour, on the one hand, against barriers which prevent migration from areas of limited resources, and on the other hand, against the lowering of the labour standards that might result from immigration at a rate exceeding the capacity of the receiving countries to absorb immigrants.

9. In order that re-employment may be expedited and healthy living standards established within a period of minimum duration in areas liberated from Axis occupation,

The Conference recommends that arrangements be made by those nations whose productive capacities have been maintained during the war, by all other nations which are in a position to make materials available and by the appropriate international organisations, to give the highest priority consistent with the exigencies of war to immediately supplying the territories liberated from Axis occupation with materials and equipment required for industrial installations, agriculture, transport, public works and utilities of an essential character.

10. Believing that the best possible conditions for a rise in the standard of living and the maintenance of full employment in the world can only be obtained by mutually consistent national economic, financial and social policies and by co-ordination of the activities of the different international institutions in this field.

The Conference considers that appropriate international measures should be taken which guarantee sufficient contact and consultation with regard to such policies between governments as well as between the different international institutions.

II. NATIONAL POLICY

11. In order that full employment at productive peacetime pursuits, freedom from want, rising standards of living and genuine economic security may be achieved with a minimum of delay after the war,

The Conference urges that governments and employers' and workers' organisations formulate comprehensive and co-ordinated programmes, suited to the particular needs of their countries, for prompt and orderly reconversion, reconstruction and economic expansion, and that such programmes be prepared and applied simultaneously with the consideration of the international measures referred to in the preceding paragraphs.

12. Recognising that the economic situation will differ markedly among the various countries at the war's end, varying particularly with the degree and type of industrial development, the extent to which the peacetime economy has been disrupted by the war, and whether the country's territory has been occupied by the enemy; and recognizing that national post-war economic programmes must vary accordingly, in order to meet most effectively the needs of the country in which they are to be applied.

The Conference urges that, with due allowance for difference in national economic situations, programmes for economic reconversion, reconstruction and expansion include the development of sound policies and procedures to provide:

(a) Effective arrangements for the orderly and expeditious demobilisation and repatriation, and for the early absorption in productive peacetime employment of members of the armed forces, civilian workers, prisoners, persons who have resisted deportation, deported persons and refugees, for the prompt termination of contracts and settlement of claims, the prompt determination of policy on the peacetime use of Government-owned war production capacity and equipment and the disposition of surplus materials, with a view to the use of these items to satisfy human needs, and liberal provision for the maintenance, educational training and retraining of persons unavoidably out of employment as recommended by the 26th Session of the International Labour Conference in its Recommendation concerning employment organisation in the transition from war to peace;

(b) Retention, as long as shortages exist, of such war-created economic controls—for example, price and exchange controls and rationing—as are necessary to prevent inflation, and the relaxation of such controls as rapidly thereafter as is consistent with the public welfare;

(c) Adjustment of tax systems to encourage rapid reconversion, reconstruction and economic expansion, while maintaining an equitable distribution of tax burdens and avoiding financial measures which tend to increase the dangers of inflation or deflation;

(d) Development of effective mechanisms for adequate financing of the reconversion, reconstruction and expansion of industry, trade, commerce and agriculture, and particularly to assist the establishment of new and efficient enterprises.

13. The Conference urges that all practicable measures be taken to maintain a high and steady level of employment, to minimise fluctuations in business activity, and to assure a steadily expanding volume of production, more particularly by means of:

(a) Fiscal, monetary and other measures, including useful public works, to sustain the volume of demand for goods and services at a high level while avoiding the dangers of an inflationary spiral of prices and wages—in this connection attention should be paid, among other measures, to such methods as an adequate income security system, and to properly timed public works financed by borrowing in periods of depression, in accordance with the Public Works (National Planning) Recommendation, 1937;

(b) Measures to discourage monopolistic practices and to encourage technological progress, to maintain a reasonably flexible system of prices and wages, to encourage the transfer of workers and productive resources from declining to expanding industries, and to attain a high degree of mobility of resources and freedom of access to alternative employments;

(c) Measures to provide adequate incentives to engage in and expand constructive economic activity, to encourage private investment and to maintain the rate of investment—among the measures which warrant careful consideration in this connection are the adjustment of tax systems, removal of artificial barriers limiting access to resources and markets, the relaxation of unreasonable restrictions imposed by governmental agencies or by business or by labour organisations, and the maintenance of a high and stable demand for goods;

(d) Measures to provide adequate opportunity for workers to engage in productive activity and to obtain advancement—among the measures which warrant careful consideration in this connection are the provision of improved and more generally accessible educational and training facilities, provision of higher nutritional and health standards, improvement of public employment services, increased provision against economic insecurity, the maintenance of wages at a high level, and the protection, extension and improvement of collective bargaining procedures.

TEXT OF THE RECOMMENDATION (No. —) CONCERNING EMPLOYMENT ORGANISATION IN THE TRANSITION FROM WAR TO PEACE, SUBMITTED BY THE DRAFTING COMMITTEE

The General Conference of the International Labour Organisation,

Having been convened at Philadelphia by the Governing Body of the International Labour Office, and having met in its Twenty-sixth Session on 20 April 1944, and

Having decided upon the adoption of certain proposals with regard to the organisation of employment in the transition from war to peace which is the third Item on the Agenda of the Session, and

Having determined that these proposals shall take the form of a Recommendation, adopts, this ——— day of May, of the year one thousand nine hundred and forty-four, the following Recommendation which may be cited as the Employment (Transition from War to Peace) Recommendation, 1944:

Whereas the promotion of full employment with a view to satisfying the vital needs of the population and raising the standard of living throughout the world is a primary objective of the International Labour Organisation;

Whereas in order to achieve full employment economic measures providing employment opportunities must be supplemented by effective organisation to help employers to secure the most suitable workers, to help workers to find the most suitable employment, and generally to ensure that, at any given moment, the necessary skills are available and are distributed satisfactorily among the various branches of production and the various areas; and

Whereas the character and magnitude of the employment adjustments required during the transition from war to peace will necessitate special action, more particularly for the purpose of facilitating the reemployment of demobilised members of the armed forces, discharged war workers, and all persons whose usua' employment has been interrupted as a result of the war, enemy action, or resistance to the enemy or enemy-dominated authorities, by assisting the persons concerned to find without delay the most suitable employment;

The Conference recommends the members of the Organisation to apply the following general principles, and in so doing to take into account, according to national conditions, the suggested methods of application, and to communicate information to the International Labour Office, as requested by the Governing Body, concerning the measures taken to give effect to these principles.

GENERAL PRINCIPLES

I. Each Government should collect whatever information is necessary regarding workers seeking or likely to be seeking employment and regarding prospective employment opportunities, with a view to ensuring the most rapid reabsorption or redistribution in suitable employment of all persons who desire to work.

II. The demobilisation of the armed forces and of assimilated services and the repatriation of prisoners of war, persons who have been deported, and others, should be planned with the objective of maximum fairness to individuals and maximum opportunities for satisfactory re-establishment in civil life.

III. National programmes for industrial demobilisation and reconversion should be planned, in co-operation with employers' and workers' organisations, and other adequate measures taken, in such manner as to facilitate the most rapid attainment of full employment for the production of needed goods and services.

IV. In the organisation of full employment in the transition period and thereafter, the widest possible use of employment service facilities by employers seeking workers and by workers seeking employment should be encouraged by the competent authorities and by employers' and workers' organisations.

V. Each Government should, to the maximum extent possible, provide public vocational guidance facilities, available to persons seeking work, with a view to assisting them to find the most suitable employment.

VI. Training and retraining programmes should be developed to the fullest possible extent in order to meet the needs of the workers who will have to be re-established in employment or provided with new employment.

VII. With a view to avoiding the need for excessive movements of workers from one area to another and preventing localised unemployment in particular areas, each Government should, in co-operation with employers' and workers' organisations, formulate a positive policy in regard to the location of industry and the diversification of economic activity. Governments should also take steps to facilitate any necessary mobility of labour, both occupational and geographical.

VIII. Efforts should be made during the transition period to provide the widest possible opportunities for acquiring skill for juveniles and young workers who were unable, because of the war, to undertake or to complete their training and efforts should also be made to improve the education and health supervision of young persons.

IX. The redistribution of women workers in each national economy should be carried out on the principle of complete equality of opportunity for men and women in respect of admission to employment on the basis of their individual merit, skill and experience, and steps should be taken to encourage the establishment of wage rates on the basis of job content, without regard to sex.

X. Disabled workers, whatever the origin of their disability, should be provided with full opportunities for rehabilitation, specialised vocational guidance, training and retraining, and employment on useful work.

XI. Measures should be taken to regularise employment within the industries and occupations in which work is irregular, in order to achieve full use of the capacities of the workers.

METHODS OF APPLICATION

I. Advanced collection of information

1. Each Government should arrange for the coordinated collection and utilisation of as complete and up-to-date information as possible on:

(a) the number, educational, and occupational backgrounds, past and present skills, and occupational wishes of members of the armed forces and of assimilated services, and as far as possible of all persons whose usual employment has been interrupted as the result of enemy action or resistance to the enemy or enemy-dominated authorities;

(b) the number, location, industrial distribution, sex distribution, skills and occupational wishes of workers who will have to change their employment during the transition from war to peace; and

(c) the number and distribution of older workers, women and juveniles who are likely to withdraw from gainful employment after the war emergency and the number of juveniles who are likely to be seeking employment on leaving school.

2. (1) Comprehensive material on prospective labour requirements, showing the probable extent and timing of the demand for workers from each major industry, both in total and by major skills, should be collected and analysed before the end of the war.

(2) Where such information is in the possession of any administrative authority, it should be made available to the authorities primarily responsible for the collection or utilisation of advance information on labour supply and requirements.

(3) The material on labour requirements should cover more particularly:

(a) the probable contraction of labour requirements resulting from the closing of certain munitions undertakings;

(b) the probable rate of contraction of the armed forces and of assimilated services upon the termination of hostilities;

(c) probable fluctuations and changes by areas in the labour force of industries or undertakings which will, with or without a period of conversion, continue in operation to meet peacetime needs;

(d) probable labour requirements in industries which will be expanding to meet peacetime needs, in particular in industries the output of which is most urgently needed to improve the standard of living of the workers, and in public works, including works of a normal character and works held in reserve for the provision of supplementary employment in periods of declining economic activity; and

(e) the probable demand for workers in the main industries and occupations under conditions of full employment.

3. Prospective labour supply and demand in the various areas should be kept under constant review by the appropriate authorities, in order to show the effect of the war and the probable effect of the termination of hostilities on the employment situation in each of these areas.

4. Members should co-operate in collecting the information referred to in subparagraphs (a), (b), and (c) of paragraph 1 in respect of persons transferred out of their own countries as a result of Axis aggression. Each Government should supply such information in respect of nationals of other Members living in its territory, in Axis territories, or in territory occupied by the Axis who are awaiting repatriation, even where the information available is merely of a general character.

II. Demobilization of the armed forces

5. Close contact should be organised and maintained between the employment service and the authorities responsible for the demobilisation of the armed forces and assimilated services and for the repatriation of prisoners of war and persons who have been deported, in order to ensure the speediest re-employment of the men and women concerned.

6. (1) The rate and order of demobilisation should be controlled according to clearly expressed and clearly understood principles which should be given wide publicity in order that they may be clearly understood.

(2) In the process of demobilisation, which should in general be as rapid as military necessity and transportation facilities permit, consideration should be given to:

(a) the desirability of regulating the rate and distributing the flow of demobilisation so as to avoid local concentrations of ex-service men and women disproportionate to the capacity of their community to provide opportunity for employment or training;

(b) the desirability of arranging, where necessary, for an early release of workers whose qualifications make them indispensable for urgent reconstruction work.

7. (1) Schemes for reinstating in their former employment persons whose usual employment has been interrupted by military mobilisation, enemy action, or resistance to the enemy or enemy-dominated authorities, should be adopted and carried out so far as changed post-war circumstances allow.

(2) The fullest possible employment and advancement opportunities for these men and women, on the basis of their qualifications, should be assured through Government action and collective agreements.

(3) Immediate alternative employment should be secured for the workers displaced by the operation of these schemes.

8. In addition to schemes for re-employment, immediate consideration should be given to the provision, wherever justified by prospective opportunities to make a living, of adequate financial and other assistance to enable qualified demobilised persons to settle or resettle on the land, to enter or re-enter a profession, or to take up other independent work.

III. Industrial demobilisation and conversion

9. (1) Each Government should, in cooperation with employers' and workers' organisations, formulate a national industrial demobilisation and reconversion programme to facilitate the rapid and orderly conversion of the economy from wartime to peacetime requirements during the period of reconstruction, account being taken of the urgent need of countries devastated by the war, with a view to attaining full employment with the least possible delay. All information in regard to the demobilisation and reconversion programme should be made available to the authorities responsible for collecting advance information on labour supply and requirements.

(2) The co-operation of employers' and workers' organisations should be invited with a view to working out comprehensive industry and area demobilisation and reconversion programmes to facilitate the change-over from war to peace production in a manner that will minimise transitional unemployment.

10. (1) Each Government should, so far as possible before the end of the war, determine its policy in regard to the peacetime use of Government-owned war production capacity and equipment and in regard to the disposition of surplus materials.

(2) Special consideration should be given to the early release of factories and equipment urgently needed for peacetime production or training.

(3) In general, factories, equipment or materials should not be destroyed or kept out of use where human needs are unsatisfied or where no excess production would exist at reasonable prices under conditions of demand associated with full employment.

11. Each Government should, in formulating its policy and procedure for the termination or adjustment of war contracts, given special consideration to the possibilities of continued employment or rapid re-employment of the workers affected or of favourable opportunities for employment in other areas. Governments should also arrange for the prompt settlement of claims under terminated contracts, so that employment will not be held back by needless financial difficulties of contractors. Contractors in countries at present occupied who have worked voluntarily in the interest of the enemy should not be granted the benefit of such arrangements.

12. (1) Arrangements should be made to ensure that administrative authorities give information at the earliest possible moment to the employment service and contractors regarding any circumstances likely to cause dismissals or lay-offs.

(2) Procurement agencies should give contractors both at home and abroad and the employment service as long advance notice as possible of cut-backs in war orders. In no case should the notice given be less than two weeks.

(3) Employers should give the employment service at least two weeks' advance notice of proposed dismissals affecting more than a specified number of workers, in order to enable the employment service to make plans for alternative employment for the workers concerned.

(4) Employers should give the employment service at least two weeks' advance notice of proposed temporary lay-offs affecting more than a specified number of workers, together with information to show the probable duration of such lay-offs, in order to enable the employment service to find temporary public or private employment or training for the laid-off workers. Employers should so far as possible inform the laid-off workers of the expected duration of such lay-offs.

IV. Applications for work and for workers

13. (1) Vacancies on public works and in undertakings working on public orders to the extent of 75 per cent. or more of their operations should be filled through the employment service.

(2) Consideration should be given to the advisability of requiring employers in specified industries or areas to engage their workers through the employment service in order to facilitate the readjustment of employment.

(3) Employers should be encouraged to give advance notice of their labour requirements to the employment service.

14. Persons applying for employment on Government-sponsored projects, as well as persons applying for publicly supported training programmes or transfer assistance, or claiming unemployment benefit or allowance, should be required to register with the employment service.

15. Special efforts should be made to assist demobilised members of the forces and war workers to find the most suitable work of which they are capable, making use wherever possible of the skills acquired by them during the war.

16. Every effort should be made, by the authorities, and in particularly by the employment service, in co-operation with employers' and workers' organisations, to encourage as wide a use as possible of the employment service by employers and workers.

V. Vocational guidance

17. Special and immediate attention should be given to the development of suitable methods and techniques of vocational guidance for adult workers.

18. In cases of prolonged unemployment, the use of vocational guidance facilities should be made a condition for the continued receipt of unemployment benefit or allowance.

19. The competent authorities should, in co-operation with the private bodies concerned, develop and maintain adequate training facilities for vocational guidance officers.

VI. Training and retraining programmes

20. On the basis of information concerning labour supply and demand in the post-war period, each Government should, in close co-operation with employers' and workers' organisations, formulate a national training and retraining programme, geared to the post-war needs of the economy and taking into account changes in the different skill requirements of each industry.

21. Every possible step should be taken to facilitate the occupational mobility necessary to adjust the supply of workers to present and prospective labour requirements.

22. Training and retraining programmes should be extended and adapted to meet the needs of demobilised persons, discharged war workers, and all persons whose usual employment has been interrupted as the result of enemy action or resistance to the enemy or enemy-dominated authorities. Special emphasis should be placed on courses of training designed to fit the persons concerned for employment which offers a permanent career.

23. In addition to apprenticeship schemes, systematic methods of training, retraining and upgrading workers should be developed to meet post-war needs for the reconstitution and expansion of the skilled labour force.

24. Persons undertaking training should be paid, where necessary, remuneration or allowances which provide an inducement to undergo and continue training and are sufficient to maintain a reasonable standard of life.

25. Men and women whose higher training and education has been prevented or interrupted by war service, whether in a military or civilian capacity, or by enemy action, or by resistance to the enemy or enemy dominated authorities, should be enabled to enter upon or resume and complete their training and education, subject to continued proof of merit and promise, and should be paid allowances during their training and education.

26. (1) Qualified vocational teachers and instructors who have been engaged in other work during the war should be encouraged to resume their previous occupation at the earliest possible moment.

(2) Refresher courses should be organised in case of need:

(a) for vocational instructors returning to their work after a lengthy absence; and

(b) for teaching new methods and techniques.

(3) Additional vocational teachers and instructors should be trained in the numbers required to meet the needs of the training and retraining programme.

(4) Members should co-operate, where necessary, in reconstituting and expanding vocational training and retraining, by such methods as:

(a) the provision in one country of training as instructors for persons from another country to enable them to acquire broader skill or training not available in their own country;

(b) the loan of experienced vocational instructors and teachers' from one country to help meet shortages of vocational training staff or new industrial needs in another country:

(c) facilitating the return to the territories of member countries of subjects thereof living in the territory of another member country who are qualified for teaching and instructing in their home country; and

(d) the provisions of training handbooks and other equipment to assist instructors and persons in training.

27. Training and retraining services should be co-ordinated on a national, regional and local basis, and should be closely associated at all levels of operation with guidance work, with the placement work of the employment service, and with the training activities of employers' and workers' organisations.

VII. Geographical mobility

28. With a view to facilitating the necessary mobility of labour, the employment service should take action to overcome the obstacles to transfers from one area to another and to assist the movement of workers to areas needing labour, thereby helping to bring together available skills and available employment opportunities and thus preventing unemployment.

29. (1) Where a worker is transferred from one area to another on the initiative or with the consent of the employment service, arrangements should be made to grant travelling expenses and to assist the worker to meet initial expenses in the new place of work by granting or advancing him a specified amount, fixed according to the circumstances.

(2) Where a temporary transfer made through the employment service involves the separation of the head of the household from his family, arrangements should be made to grant an appropriate separation allowance to cover the added costs of maintaining double living quarters.

VIII. Employment of young workers

30. (1) The policy of revising upward the school-leaving age and the age for admission to employment should be considered by all countries as a primary factor in planning employment policy for the transition period.

(2) Maintenance allowances should be granted to parents by the competent authorities during the additional period of compulsory education referred to above.

31. Student-aid programmes should be developed to enable young persons above the school-leaving age to continue their education in secondary schools or high schools, and for those beyond the secondary school level, subject to continued proof of merit, in technical or higher education schools or courses on a full-time basis.

32. (1) Vocational guidance services adapted to their needs should be available for all young persons, both prior to and at the time of leaving school, through the school or the employment service.

(2) Free pre-employment medical examination should be provided for all young persons. The results of this examination should be incorporated in a certificate to serve as a basis for periodical re-examinations during a period to be prescribed by national laws or regulations.

(3) In countries in which war conditions and enemy occupation have undermined the health of young persons, particular attention should be given to the health supervision of such persons from the time of their admission to employment through the period of adjustment to working life, and, where necessary, measures of physical rehabilitation should be adopted.

(4) Members should co-operate, when requested, in providing for the training of medical and nursing staff, and the loan of experienced doctors, surgeons, nursing personnel and appropriate equipment, in order to facilitate the physical rehabilitation of the young persons referred to in sub-paragraph (3) above.

33. (1) Young persons whose contracts of apprenticeship have been interrupted owing to the war should be entitled to resume apprenticeship on the termination of their war service.

(2) State aid should be made available to enable a person whose apprenticeship has been resumed in accordance with sub-paragraph (1) above to be assured of an income which is reasonable, having regard to his age and to the remuneration he would have been receiving had his apprenticeship not been interrupted.

(3) In all cases in which military service, raw material shortages, enemy action, or other war circumstances, have prevented young persons from entering or continuing apprenticeship, arrangements should be made to encourage them, as soon as circumstances permit, to resume their apprenticeship or to learn a skilled trade.

(4) With a view to encouraging the resumption of interrupted apprenticeships, arrangements should be made to review the provisions of apprenticeship contracts and to vary them where this seems equitable to take account of training, skill or experience acquired during war service.

(5) Existing apprenticeship programmes should be re-examined, in co-operation with employers' and workers' organisations, with a view to giving wider opportunities to learn a skilled trade to the younger workers who have not been able, owing to the war, to enter apprenticeship. More particularly, consideration should be given to making arrangements for varying existing restrictions on admission to apprenticeship and for taking into account any training, skill or experience acquired during the war.

34. Employers should be encouraged to introduce programmes of systematic in-plant training to enable all the young workers employed in the undertaking to acquire training or to improve their skill and broaden their knowledge of the operations of the undertaking as a whole. Such programmes should be developed in co-operation with workers' organisations and should be adequately supervised.

35. In countries which have been invaded during the war, and in which there are young persons who have been compelled to abstain from work, or, without regard to their aptitudes or desires, to work for the enemy, special attention should be devoted to the readjustment of such young persons to work habits and to supplementing their vocational training.

IX. Employment of women

36. The redistribution of women workers in the economy should be organised on the principle of complete equality of opportunity for men and women on the basis of their individual merit, skill and experience, without prejudice to the provisions of the International Labour Conventions and Recommendations concerning the employment of women.

37. (1) In order to place women on a basis of equality with men in the employment market, and thus to prevent competition among the available workers prejudicial to the interests of both men and women workers, steps should be taken to encourage the establishment of wage rates based on job content, without regard to sex.

(2) Investigations should be conducted, in co-operation with employers' and workers' organisations, for the purpose of establishing precise and objective standards for determining job content, irrespective of the sex of the worker, as a basis for determining wage rates.

38. The employment of women in industries and occupations in which large numbers of women have traditionally been employed should be facilitated by action to raise the relative status of these industries and occupations and to improve conditions of work and methods of placement therein.

X. Employment of disabled workers

39. The criterion for the training and employment of disabled workers should be the employability of the worker, whatever the origin of the disability.

40. There should be the closest collaboration between medical services for the disabled and vocational rehabilitation and placement services.

41. Specialised vocational guidance for the disabled should be developed in order to make it possible to assess each disabled worker's capacity and to select the most appropriate form of employment for him.

42. (1) Wherever possible, disabled workers should receive training in company with able-bodied workers, under the same conditions and with the same pay.

(2) Training should be continued to the point where the disabled person is able to enter employment as an efficient worker in the trade or occupation for which he has been trained.

(3) Wherever practicable, efforts should be made to retrain disabled workers in their former occupations or in related occupations where their previous qualifications would be useful.

(4) Employers with suitable training facilities should be induced to train a reasonable proportion of disabled workers.

(5) Specialised training centres, with appropriate medical supervision, should be provided for those disabled persons who require such special training.

43. (1) Special measures should be taken to ensure equality of employment opportunity for disabled workers on the basis of their working capacity. Employers should be induced by wide publicity and other means, and where necessary compelled, to employ a reasonable quota of disabled workers.

(2) In certain occupations particularly suitable for the employment of seriously-disabled workers, such workers should be given preference over all other workers.

(3) Efforts should be made, in close co-operation with employers' and workers' organisations, to overcome employment discriminations against disabled workers which are not related to their ability and job performance, and to overcome the obstacles to their employment including the possibility of increased liability in respect of workmen's compensation.

(4) Employment on useful work in special centres under non-competitive conditions should be made available for all disabled workers who cannot be made fit for normal employment.

44. Information should be assembled by the employment service in regard to the occupations particularly suited to different disabilities and the size, location and employability of the disabled population.

XI. Regularisation of employment in particular industries

45. In industries in which operations are irregular, such as construction and port transport, the schemes for the regularisation of employment adopted or extended during the war by Member States should be maintained and adapted to peacetime conditions in consultation with the employers' and workers' organisations concerned.

RESOLUTION CONCERNING SOCIAL PROVISIONS IN THE PEACE SETTLEMENT

Whereas the Conference is called upon to make recommendations to the United Nations for present and post-war social policy, and more particularly concerning the social provisions to be inscribed in the various general or special treaties or agreements to which the United Nations will jointly or severally become parties;

Whereas the prospect of a complete victory of the United Nations makes it possible to prepare a better world order directed towards the achievement of the social objectives which these nations proclaimed in the Atlantic Charter in expressing their desire to bring about the fullest collaboration between all nations in the economic field with the object of securing for all improved labour standards, economic advancement and social security;

I

The Conference considers that the principles stated in the following draft are appropriate for inclusion in a general or special treaty or agreement between nations desirous of giving early effect to the principles of the Atlantic Charter and Article VII of the Mutual Aid agreement:

The signatory governments

Having pledged themselves to provide conditions which will ensure an increasing measure of freedom from want to their own peoples and to all peoples;

Recognizing, therefore, their common obligation to foster expanding production and employment on a sound basis, free from disruptive fluctuations, and to ensure that workers and productive resources shall not be allowed to be idle while the needs of large parts of the world remain unsatisfied;

Realizing that the economic life and conditions in each nation are increasingly dependent upon the economic life and conditions of other nations, and that hence the attainment of the above-stated objectives requires increasing collaboration among nations;

Have agreed that:

Article I

The Declaration of the Aims and Purposes of the International Labour Organisation adopted by the International Labour Conference at Philadelphia, 1944, the text of which is annexed, is hereby reaffirmed.

Article II

Each government recognizes its duty to maintain a high level of employment. Accordingly, all arrangements by and among the signatory and other like-minded governments for international economic cooperation should be framed and administered to serve the objectives set forth in Article I. They should be directed to the expansion of production, employment, and the exchange and consumption of goods and to the liberation of economic activity from unreasonable restrictions. Particular consideration should be given to measures for promoting the reconstruction of economic life in countries whose economic and social life has been disrupted as the result of Axis aggression.

Article III

The following matters are of international concern and should be among the social objectives of international as well as national policy:

(1) Opportunity for useful and regular employment to all persons who want work, at fair wages or returns and under reasonable conditions, with provision for protection of health and against injury in all occupations;

(2) Raising standards of living to provide adequate nutrition, housing, medical care and education;

(3) Establishment of minimum standards of employment to prevent exploitation of workers, whether employed or self-employed, whose opportunities for high-wage employment are limited;

(4) Provision for child welfare;

(5) Provision for a regular flow of income to all those whose employment is interrupted by sickness or injury, by old age or by lack of employment opportunity;

(6) The effective recognition of the right of freedom of association and of collective bargaining;

(7) Provision of facilities for training and transfer of labour.

Article IV

The International Labour Office may, under standards constitutionally determined by the International Labour Conference, as occasion requires, collect from, and interchange with, the signatory governments, uniform statistical and other economic information on the following matters which are among those of direct interest to the International Labour Organisation and are of international concern:

(1) Employment, wages and conditions of work;

(2) Standards of living and the distribution of income, with particular reference to wage and salaried workers;

(3) Technical education and training for employment;

(4) Industrial health, safety and welfare;

(5) Industrial relations;

(6) Social security; and

(7) Administration of labour and social security legislation.

Article V

With respect to the matters set forth in Article III

(1) The governments, through appropriate international agencies, shall develop standards and statistical measures, and shall maintain uniform statistics and other information.

(2) The governments shall interchange among themselves and make available to the International Labour Organisation such information and reports as may be required to assist them and the Organisation to develop recommendations with respect to such matters.

(3) The government shall take appropriate steps to assure close collaboration and full exchange of information between the International Labour Organisation and any other international bodies which now exist or may be established for the promotion of economic advancement and social well-being.

(4) The governments shall take appropriate steps to have placed on the agenda of the International Labour Conference annually the subject of the extent to which the social objective set forth in Article I have been attained and on the measures taken during the year toward the attainment of the objectives.

Article VI

With respect to draft international conventions and recommendations adopted by the Conference in accordance with Article 19 of the constitution of the International Labour Organisation, the signatory governments undertake to report to the International Labour Office as requested by the Governing Body on the status of legislation and administration and, in so far as practicable, of practices under collective agreements between employers and workers.

II

The Conference recommends that the Governing Body of the International Labour Organisation:

(1) call a special conference of the Organisation when in its opinion there is a danger of a substantial fall in general employment levels for the purpose of recommending appropriate national or international measures to prevent the development or spread of unemployment and to establish conditions under which high levels of employment may be maintained or restored;

(2) correlate the activities of the I. L. O. toward the end of maintaining full employment with those of any other international agency or agencies which may be designated by the United Nations to have primary responsibility in related economic fields.

III

The Conference Recommends that:

(1) The United Nations should undertake—

(a) to apply to any dependent territories in respect of which they have accepted or may accept a measure of international accountability through any international or regional commission or other body the principle that all policies designed to apply to dependent territories shall be primarily directed to the well-being and development of the peoples of such territories, and to the promotion of the desire on their part for social progress;

(b) to apply to such territories the provisions of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930; the Recruiting of Indigenous Workers Convention, 1936; the Contracts of Employment (Indigenous Workers) Convention, 1939, and the Penal Sanctions (Indigenous Workers) Convention, 1939;

(c) to make a periodical report to the International Labour Office in respect of each such territory indicating the extent to which effect has been given to the provisions of the Social Policy (Dependent Territories) Recommendation, 1944;

(d) to ask the International Labour Office to appoint, in continuation of the collaboration established in the case of the Permanent Mandates Commission, a representative on any Committee which may be entrusted with the task of watching over the application of the principle of international accountability, and further to ensure that any facilities which may be afforded, in the form of inspection or otherwise, for the better implementation of this principle, shall include appropriate measures for examining the application of the above-mentioned Conventions and Recommendation.

(2) When determining the future status of dependent territories which on 1 September 1939 were controlled by Axis Powers, the United Nations should specifically require the application thereto of the arrangements provided for in the preceding paragraph.

(3) In making international arrangements concerning transport by air, land, and inland waterway, the United Nations should have due regard to the repercussions of such arrangements on the working and living conditions of persons employed in transport, and should consult the International Labour Organisation in regard to such repercussions and more particularly in regard to the working and living conditions of persons who, in operating such transport systems, work in or under the jurisdiction of more than one country.

(4) The International Labour Organisation should make available to the United Nations any information or assistance calculated to facilitate the implementation of the proposals contained in the resolution concerning economic policies for the attainment of soial objectives and the present resolution and should be prepared to participate in any international conference which may be considering such proposals.

IV

Believing that the exceptional opportunity of the negotiations of the peace settlement should be taken to secure a concerted advance in the acceptance of binding obligations concerning conditions of labor;

The Conference reaffirming the principle of the association of management and labour in the framing of such standards,

Recommends

(a) That throughout the peace settlement the United Nations should wherever appropriate include provisions for labor standards. In a number of cases such provisions might properly be taken from conventions or recommendations that have been or may be adopted by the International Labour Conference.

(b) That the Governing Body should appoint a consultative committee on labour provisions in the peace settlement. This committee should hold itself in readiness, together with the Director of the International Labour Office, to give advice with reference to such provisions on the request of the United Nations or of particular groups of the United Nations. This committee should have the right to coopt additional members of special competence with respect to the particular sets of provisions under consideration.

(c) That the United Nations should make full use of this committee in any way in which they consider it appropriate to include labour provisions in the peace settlement.

V

The Conference recommends to Governments that a Conference of representatives of the Governments of the United, associated, and other Nations, willing to attend, be called at an early date, in association with the Governing Body of the International Labour Office, to consider an international agreement on domestic policies of employment and unemployment; and this Conference pledges the full co-operation and the assistance of the I. L. O. in calling such a conference on employment, and in helping to carry into effect appropriate decisions it might make.

Henry Bascom Steagall

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. LUTHER A. JOHNSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. HENRY BASCOM STEAGALL, late a Representative from the State of Alabama

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I cannot let this occasion pass without paying a brief tribute to my beloved colleague and friend the late HENRY B. STEAGALL, of Alabama.

When I first came to the House he was then a Member and had been for a number of years, and during his continuous service until he passed away last November, I knew him intimately and well. He was one of the outstanding Members of the House and was always one of the leaders, and his high position as Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency gave him the privilege of shaping and molding much legislation during his service here.

I heard the last speech which he made in the House only a day or so before he passed away, and it was one of the ablest and most forceful speeches that he made in the House during his entire career. He was a sick man at the time and was violating his physician's orders in participating in debate, but call to duty was so strong with him that he ignored his own health and safety, and in spite of his illness made one of the greatest speeches of his career. Little did those of us think at the time that he was speaking that this would be his last, but the quality and effectiveness of his speech made it most appropriate that he should end his career in such a manner.

We speak of casualties of the war, and HENRY STEAGALL was one of these casualties, for he gave his life in service to his country. I prize very highly my friendship with him and shall miss him, as will his district and the Nation.

Francis Dugan Culkin

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. CLARENCE E. HANCOCK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. FRANCIS DUGAN CULKIN, late a Representative from the State of New York

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the sorrowful news of the death of our colleague Hon. FRANCIS D. CULKIN on August 4, 1943, made many hearts heavy. He was personally known, respected, and loved by tens of thousands of people in all walks of life. There was a hush of sadness in his native city of Oswego when the last rites were held and the whole community mourned.

FRANK CULKIN had served his city, his district, his State, and his Nation long, faithfully, and brilliantly. He was a soldier in the Spanish-American War, captain in the National Guard for 7 years, district attorney for 10 years, county judge for 7 years and Member of Congress representing the Thirty-second District of New York from 1928 until his death. Nine times he was elected to Congress by huge majorities, so great was his popularity and the confidence of his constituents in his ability and in his fidelity to his truth.

In Congress he was an active and valued member of the committees on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and on Rivers and Harbors. He was vigilant and alert in the work of those committees, in the committee room and on the floor of the House.

It was natural that he should seek membership on those committees because of his great interest in nautical matters. He was born and brought up on the shores of Lake Ontario and found his greatest joy in sailing on its waters.

Quite fittingly all that was mortal of our late colleague rests on a high knoll overlooking the beautiful lake he loved so well.

May it assuage the grief of his bereaved family to know that he was held high in the esteem and friendship of his coworkers in this House, that they honor his memory and deeply feel his loss.

Ulysses Samuel Guyer

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. CLIFFORD R. HOPE

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER, late a Representative from the State of Kansas

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, in the death of ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER this House lost one of its ablest and most beloved Members. All of us who worked and served with him during his years in this body lost a great and dear friend.

Mr. GUYER was a statesman, a great orator, an able legislator, and an accomplished scholar. He was gifted in many ways but perhaps his greatest gift was his gift for friendship. He loved people. That is one reason for his outstanding success as an educator in his early life. It accounted for much of his political success. Everywhere he went he made friends. He not only made them, but kept them.

Mr. GUYER's father was a minister of the Gospel. This meant, as is frequently the case, that the family lived in a number of different communities while Mr. GUYER was a youth. To his dying day, he retained friendships with people whom he had known and met in those communities where his father had preached. In his young manhood Mr. GUYER was for 5 years principal of the high school at St. John, Kans., in my congressional district. Those years meant a great deal to him. The associations which he formed then with his pupils and their parents were lifelong. Notwithstanding the fact that he left St. John more than 40 years ago and never returned there to live, he always seemed to regard that spot as home, and it was his expressed wish that he be buried in the cemetery there by the side of his parents.

I doubt if any teacher ever took more genuine interest in his pupils not only while they were in school but throughout their lives than did Mr. GUYER. Until his last illness he kept in close and constant touch with all of his former pupils, some of whom were scattered to the far ends of the earth. With many of them he carried on a regular correspondence and he shared their sorrows and joys as only a friend could do.

Mr. GUYER's sincere affection for the beautiful little city of St. John and its people reflected the simplicity, friendliness, and goodness of his nature. These qualities were readily apparent to all of those with whom he was associated.

Mr. GUYER and I came to the Seventieth Congress together. Previously he had served during a part of the Sixty-eighth Congress as the successor to his friend and fellow townsman, Col. E. C. Little. Before coming to Congress my acquaintance with Mr. GUYER had been slight. I soon learned to know him and love him, and as the years went on our friendship became stronger and dearer. I often sought his advice and counsel, which was always freely and unselfishly given.

Mr. GUYER was an authority on the history of Kansas and the United States. He was exceedingly well versed in world history. He revered his country and its institutions. He was an authority on the Constitution. During the last years of his service here he took a great interest in the painting by Howard Chandler Christy entitled "The Signing of the Constitution of the United States." That picture was painted in Washington and while the work was in progress there was hardly a day in which Mr. GUYER did not visit the studio. When the painting was unveiled he was one of the speakers and delivered a masterly address.

Mr. GUYER was a great orator in every sense of the word. He was a moral crusader. Yet, he was never a fanatic nor a crank. He sincerely believed in national prohibition and devoted many of the best years of his life to fighting for it. He was a strong advocate of woman's suffrage when the issue was not popular. Yet, no matter how controversial the issue, Judge GUYER retained the friendship and respect of his opponents. His kindly, friendly nature made it impossible that it could be otherwise.

Above all, Mr. GUYER was a Christian gentleman. His early environment of plain living, and high thinking, as the son of a minister of the gospel influenced his entire life. After his father's death his devotion to his mother was outstanding and characteristic.

In 1919 Mr. GUYER was married to Della Alforetta Daugherty. His home life was happy and congenial. Mrs. Guyer was an ideal helpmeet, taking an interest in all of his political and legislative activities. To her goes our deepest sympathy in her loss and bereavement.

Frederick Van Nuys

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. LOUIS LUDLOW

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. FREDERICK VAN NUYS late a Senator from the State of Indiana

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, the State of Indiana has produced its share of public men who have measured up to the true heights of statesmanship. Outstanding among these was FREDERICK VAN NUYS, to whom we today pay our tribute of respect and affection.

FRED VAN NUYS was an anomaly in our public life. The dictionary defines anomaly as "Deviation from rule, type, or form." His talent and energies before he entered the public service were largely devoted to political organization. He served in many organizational capacities. He was chairman of our Indiana Democratic State Committee in the lean years and was an inspirational force of great influence in inculcating party discipline. Judging from his earlier background one would naturally have assumed that when he became United States Senator he would have been prone to resolve politically controverted questions by the yardstick of partisan advantage.

Yet, as the history of recent times shows, no man ever served in the Senate of the United States who was less moved by political considerations than he was. He always stood inflexibly for what he believed to be right. He was a fundamental Jeffersonian Democrat and was passionately devoted to the democracy of our fathers. He was willing to fight and die, if necessary, to protect those fundamental institutions. But when theories of government were proposed which seemed to him to be alien to our democratic philosophy and to impinge upon those fundamental concepts, he stood firm in his tracks and defied the waves of criticism which would have overcome a less determined character.

It was inevitable that Senator VAN NUYS, because of his inherent and unshakable belief in the fundamental democratic tenet that ours is a tripartite system of government in which the three branches are independent of each other, would immediately object to any proposed legislation which he believed would infringe upon this basic theory of democracy. When the proposal to reorganize the Supreme Court so as to influence the tenor of its decisions made its appearance he immediately became the leader of the opposition. By unanimous choice of the Senators opposing this measure he was selected as chairman of the steering committee in the fight and was consulted assiduously as to strategy and procedure. Thus he helped in a great way to win a victory on what fundamentalists regarded as a most vital issue.

Senator VAN NUYS was a direct descendant of Johannes Van Nuys, who immigrated from Holland and settled on Long Island almost 300 years ago. There was something about him, perhaps it was the Dutch blood he inherited from his ancestors, that made him stubborn to the last degree in standing for what he believed to be right. As the political kaleidoscope changed and new measures were brought forward and proposed in place of old principles he found himself the target of fierce criticism which seemed to reflect the overwhelming public opinion, but he never swerved an inch. According to his way of thinking, God and the right comprise a majority and that was the majority with which he always sought to align himself. There may be a difference of opinion as to Senator VAN NUYS' attitude on some of the highly controverted questions. I am not attempting to say here and now whether in any particular instance of this character his judgment was right or wrong. This is not the time for a discussion of any such question, but I will say that there never was a critic of him who would not admit that he never failed to take a position, openly and courageously, and that that position, whatever it was, reflected the honest judgment of an honest man.

So much for the Senators's political uprightness and consistency. As a human character he was one of the finest I have ever known. He was born in a dreamy little hamlet named Falmouth on the Rush-Fayette County line in Indiana a few months after I had been born in a log cabin 3 miles away. His father, Dr. David H. Van Nuys, was our family physician, and once when my left arm was dislocated by too much exuberance in play the elder Van Nuys set it back in place. I cite these facts merely by way of explanation that my acquaintanceship with the man we are eulogizing was not casual, but was intimate and of ancient vintage. I knew the well springs of his nature.

The Senator's rise from a poor country boy to a place of high distinction in the world's greatest law-making body shows what can be accomplished by individual initiative in this free country of ours. With such assistance as his father could give him, he worked his way through Earlham College and then through the Indiana Law School of Indianapolis where he received his LL. B. degree in 1900.

Forty-one years ago he went to Anderson, Ind., and opened a one-room law office in the old Union Building, with three law books and two chairs, one for himself and one for his creditors, as he used to tell the story. His industry, his determination, his faithfulness to his clients, made a favorable impression from the start, and he succeeded because the community soon came to recognize his worth. In later years he often referred to those days of hopes and aspirations and struggles, when he was "so happy and so poor." As he grew in popularity he was elected prosecuting attorney and was then sent to the State Senate of Indiana, where his ability was recognized by his election as Democratic leader. In 1920 President Wilson appointed him as United States attorney for Indiana, and 2 years later he resigned to join the Indianapolis law firm of which the late Senator Samuel M. Ralston was the senior member.

When the rank and file of the Democratic Party in Indiana in 1932 sought a candidate who could wrest the Senate seat from the veteran and formidable Senator James E. Watson, it turned to Mr. VAN NUYS as its practically unanimous choice, and he was elected by a large majority. In the Senate he soon arose to high position as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee and as chairman of the powerful Committee on the Judiciary.

In his everyday relations with people FRED VAN NUYS was true and genuine, a delightful companion, whose devotion to his friends never faltered or failed. In his home, happiness reigned supreme. To his wife, the former Marie Krug, and their son Billy, he was an ideal husband and father, and today as we reverently pay our tribute to him who was the idol of their affections our hearts turn to them with sympathy and love.

To make a happy fireside clime to weans and wife,
That's the true pathos and sublime of human life.

I am sure that was the most important thing in the life of the man we mourn today. He had very fundamental convictions on theological matters, but was not ostentatious in his religion. Rather it should be said that he lived his religion in his daily life. He had a fascination for politics, but he played the game for what he could accomplish by it for the public and not for what he could get out of it for himself. While I doubt if anyone ever loved his party more, he unquestioningly chose the path where his conscience told him to walk, and he proceeded to walk in it, however thorny and stony it might be. For this all men who knew him admired him and respected him.

Less than a month before his sudden death, Senator VAN NUYS sent to Dr. William C. Dennis, president of Earlham College, a letter that succinctly expressed the philosophy that had guided him in his public career, He and Dr. Dennis were boys together at Earlham, almost half a century ago. The Senator wrote:

I have no doubt made mistakes, but they have been mistakes of the head and not of the heart. My chief objective has been to guard and preserve our constitutional democracy and ways of life, and I am much encouraged over future prospects. My attitude has not made my 11 years of public service a bed of roses, but that is immaterial.

I was present in the Flanner & Buchanan mortuary at Indianapolis when Dr. Dennis preached the funeral sermon over our dead friend lying in the casket by his side, and I thought how this poem read by the preacher, described the nobility and strength of character of the deceased:

God give us men! A time like this demands Strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking.

Such a man was FREDERICK VAN NUYS. As Shakespeare said of one of similar mold:

The elements were so mixed in him that Nature might stand up and say to all the world, This was a man!

James Aloysius O'Leary

MEMORIAL ADDRESS
OF

HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. JAMES ALOYSIUS O'LEARY, late a Representative from the State of New York

"Another bark has put to sea,
Another boat has left the shore,
As fair a soul on board has she
As ever left the land before.
And as her outward port she tends—
Sit closer, friends!"

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have served here with many affable and able Members, especially from the great State of New York, but I do not know one who ingratiated himself and acquired the good will of the membership of the House more readily than did our friend Mr. O'LEARY.

Our late friend was, in addition to being a sound legislator, a very successful businessman. We often hear the question, when assessing the worth of a man, "Has he ever had to meet pay rolls?"

Mr. O'LEARY successfully and many, many times met pay rolls. On that account, then, many, from the materialistic viewpoint, designate him a successful man; but I prefer at this time to remember him because in every phase of human activity in which he engaged he was true and loyal; he possessed a spotless record for high character and integrity; he was honest, generous, and sincere. Ever precise in promise keeping, he built an enviable reputation for superior citizenship.

Statesman, yet friend to truth; of soul sincere,
In action faithful and in honor clear;
Who broke no promise, served no private end,
Who gained no title, and who lost no friend.

It affords me extreme gratification to pay this simple, though inadequate tribute to the memory of our departed friend, whose passing is a real loss to us, who are his friends, his State, and the Nation.

And so, with sorrowing hearts and warmest personal recollections, we bid him today an official and affectionate farewell.

Lawrence Lewis

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. WILLIAM S. HILL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. LAWRENCE LEWIS, late a Representative from the State of Colorado

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, Congressman LAWRENCE LEWIS, of the First District—Denver—of Colorado, was elected in November 1932 and served in this body until his death in December 1943. Coming into the House as a new Member January 1941, I found in Congressman LEWIS a real friend and helper, always ready and happy to assist in any way possible to supply the information and answer the questions every new Member of the House must have as he accepts the responsibilities and assumes the duties of a representative of his people in this republican form of government.

Congressman LEWIS as a member of the Rules Committee was a busy man, but never too busy to lend a helping hand on problems troubling me. He made you feel he wished to assist and help you. I appreciated greatly the personal assistance and the advice given me by this great citizen and Representative of Colorado in the first year of my service in the House of Representatives.

On May 15, 1944, Congressman E. E. COX, of Georgia, included in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a tribute paid to Congressman LEWIS by Gilbert H. Montague, of the New York bar, and I wish to quote from that very fine tribute:

LAWRENCE LEWIS, Member of Congress from March 1933 until his death in December 1943, was one of those Members of the House of Representatives who are seldom mentioned in the newspapers, but who devote themselves to arduous and self-effacing service in committees and in the routine of the House, with no expectation of personal fame or any other reward except the approval of their own consciences and the respect of their fellow Members in the House.

I doubt if there is a Member of this House who worked harder on the legislation considered by this body than did LAWRENCE LEWIS—there were few bills that were considered on the floor of this House that did not receive the closest scrutiny and study from this son of legislative toil. He regarded his duties here as a representative of his people in this great legislative body as a high sense of trust. No legislation was treated lightly by him.

Also upon the death of Congressman LEWIS I received a letter from the Honorable John O'Connor, a former Member of the House and chairman of the Rules Committee of which Mr. LEWIS was a member. I enclose the letter, which is a tribute of the highest character:

DECEMBER 16, 1943.

MY DEAR REPRESENTATIVE HILL: The death of Representative LAWRENCE LEWIS, of the First District of Colorado, constituted a personal loss to me. Very few Members of Congress knew him as long as I. Our friendship started when we were fellow students at Harvard Law School and lived on the same street, walked to class together, and were militant members of the Harvard Democratic Club. LAWRENCE LEWIS was a real Democrat then, but a great American first, a conservative—to honor his memory—as contrasted to what is known as a liberal today. In no sense was he a foreigner.

When he was elected to the House in 1932, our friendship, abated for 23 years, was renewed and closely. In 1935 he became a member of the Rules Committee, of which I was chairman, and for 4 years our friendship was the more cemented. He was more than ordinarily intelligent and at all times indefatigably industrious. His evenness of temperament, his loyalty to American ideals, and his "straight shooting" endeared him to every member of our committee, especially. It was my pleasure to speak with him at gatherings in New York City, where he was highly respected as a legislator.

One of the best measures to apply to a Member of Congress, or any other legislative body, is the esteem in which he is held by "the help," the clerks to his committee, the page boys in the House, etc. If they are attracted to him, he is not misplaced. He fits. LAWRENCE LEWIS won the affection of everybody with whom he came in contact, from page boy up. His passing is a real loss to Colorado and the House of Representatives.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN O'CONNOR.

The Daily Sentinel of Grand Junction, Colo., carried as an editorial the following tribute to the fine service Congressman LEWIS had rendered to Colorado:

LAWRENCE LEWIS was never given to grandstand plays, but he was constantly given to steady, conscientious service to his constituency—the fruits of which are evident in many developments that have characterized Denver's advancement during the last decade.

With a fine educational and legal background, LAWRENCE LEWIS had a true conception of public service, carrying with it responsibility to render the greatest good to the greatest number; so that as a national legislator he was as earnest in advocacy of progressive measures for the whole society as he was energetic in securing benefits for his immediate community. Without spectacular performances but through tireless and effective devotion to duty, LAWRENCE LEWIS commanded the respect of all Coloradoans and of his fellow legislators and has left a record of achievement few western Congressmen have attained. His death is a genuine and deep loss to Colorado and to the Nation.

This Nation of ours, this House of Representatives, has suffered a tragic loss in the untimely and early death of our beloved Congressman, LAWRENCE LEWIS. His application to the task at hand, his quiet, unassuming manner of discharging his every obligation to his country and to his people should be an inspiration to all of us. This country and its free institutions profited by his having served them. We humbly bow before the Divine Spirit and offer our thoughts of prayer and appreciation for the soul of this great man who has so patriotically served his country.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. CLIFFORD R. HOPE

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. EDWARD WESTER CREAL, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, the people of Kentucky and this Nation lost a devoted public servant in the passing of EDWARD W. CREAL.

It was a pleasure and privilege to know Mr. CREAL during the entire period of his service in the House and especially during the latter part of that service when he was a member of the Committee on Agriculture. Mr. CREAL was an able legislator, thorough and careful in everything that he did, a giften orator, and a master logician and debater. In his work in the Committee on Agriculture he displayed a wide knowledge of agricultural problems and a profound interest in the welfare of the agricultural producers of this country. His advice and counsel were always sought and considered whenever important matters of legislation were before that committee.

The later years of Mr. CREAL's service in the House were marked by ill health. In spite of this, he carried on with a rare devotion to duty which won the respect and admiration of all his colleagues.

Henry Bascom Steagall

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. HENRY BASCOM STEAGALL, late a Representative from the State of Alabama

"Like as the waves make toward the pebbled shore,
So do our minutes hasten to their end."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, our deceased friend, Mr. STEAGALL, had a rugged honesty of motive and effect which none could dispute. His loyalty to his party was keenly appreciated, not only in his own State but throughout the Nation. He fought for his party and at times with excessive zeal; but high over all he had foremost in mind and purpose the highest welfare of the whole United States. And, happily, his political opponents could not criticize or find fault with his attitude toward them or toward the party they represented, because he was a diplomat.

Mr. STEAGALL was a born leader, and in his busy day filled the part admirably. He not only had the intelligence and breadth of view of a leader, but a personal charm of the highest type which attracted men to him. In his capacity as leader of the great Committee on Banking and Currency he continued to grow in the minds of this membership. No doubt it is accurate to say that no other committee in the history of our country has dealt with so many important questions in 10 years as has the Committee on Banking and Currency during the last decade. He, more than any other man, should be credited with evolving the important Federal Deposit Insurance Act. Many other laws dealing with our financial structure were initiated or perfected by the genius of this useful legislator; and these beneficial laws will ever be his outstanding memorial. I especially appreciated the valuable assistance he gave me in evolving the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act.

Incessant and arduous work of the last dozen years left its imprint upon our friend, but, despite advice of physicians and counsel of myriad friends, he could not slow his legislative activities. As a result, we have lost a dear friend, his district has lost an able representative, and the Nation has lost his wise counsel and the benefit of his exceptional attainments which preeminently qualified him to participate in consideration of all the great questions before the country in many years that exacted great strength of mind and body.

By the memory of our deceased colleague let us resolve to cultivate and preserve the qualities that made him great and useful; and let us determine to meet the call of patriotic duty in every hour of our country's danger or need.

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. LAWRENCE LEWIS, late a Representative from the State of Colorado.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, the death of LAWRENCE LEWIS, of the First Congressional District of Colorado was a distinct loss to the public service.

During his years as a Member of the House, Mr. LEWIS was recognized as an able and conscientious Member. He was a hard worker and in these strenuous times there is no doubt but what his devotion to duty contributed to his untimely death.

I became acquainted with Mr. LEWIS early in his service. I learned to admire and respect him and to appreciate his friendship. He was intensely devoted to his country, patriotic and loyal to an unusual degree. His wise counsel and friendly spirit will be greatly missed in this body.

John William Ditter

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. SAMUEL K. McCONNELL, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. JOHN WILLIAM DITTER, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a time when words seem so inadequate to express the extent of the loss which Montgomery County, Pa., has sustained in the death of my predecessor, the Honorable J. WILLIAM DITTER. He was loved and respected by all who knew him, and his reputation for integrity and ability traveled far beyond the limits of his district.

He was a teacher, a successful lawyer, and a conscientious Member of the House of Representatives. It was my privilege to meet him and be taught by him while at high school. His classes admired him for his thoroughness, his fairness, and his honesty. He was elected to Congress from the Seventeenth District of Pennsylvania in 1933 and regularly thereafter until his tragic death during the night of November 21, 1943.

BILL DITTER, as his many firends knew him, rose to a position of eminence in this Nation. He believed in hard work. His life demonstrated his deep abiding faith in the opportunity of an individual to rise in this country, by reason of his ability, his devotion to duty, and his intense application to the task set before him. His life was an outstanding example of the possibilities open to all who will strive diligently and intelligently.

He was a Christian gentleman. He taught Sunday school classes for years, and the value of his efforts can be proven in the lives of many people today.

As a debater on the floor of the House he had no equal. He was always fair and considerate to the opposition. Not by trickery, but by the logic of his statements did he win his arguments. Recognition of his ability to assemble facts, and use them persuasively, came when he was selected to be chairman of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee.

J. WILLIAM DITTER loved his country intensely. Well versed in the ideas and ideals which made this Republic great, he sought at all times, and with unselfish devotion, to cherish and hold fast to the traditions which he believed should endure. His death occurred while engaged in activities for his beloved country.

Blessed with a faithful wife and loving children, he was a devoted husband and father. No sacrifice was too great for him in order that they might be happy. His family life was beautiful and wholesome, and he left behind him a train of lovely memories.

J. WILLIAM DITTER was taken from this earth while at the height of his distinguished career. The acts of God are sometimes difficult for our finite minds to understand. That He had other purposes for him seems likely. Whatever those plans may be, his many friends wish him well in the Great Beyond from which no traveler has ever returned.

Nearer my Father's house,
Where the many mansions be;
Nearer the great white throne,
Nearer the crystal sea.

Nearer the bound of life,
Where we lay our burdens down;
Nearer leaving the cross!
Nearer gaining the crown!

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. CLIFFORD R. HOPE

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. FRANCIS DUGAN CULKIN, late a Representative from the State of New York

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, FRANCIS D. CULKIN and I began our service in the House of Representatives together as Members of the Seventieth Congress. During all the intervening years and until his death, we were fast friends. In his passing this Congress has lost an able Member, a hard-working legislator, and a man of the highest qualities of heart and mind.

FRANCIS CULKIN had a long experience in public life before coming to Congress. The confidence and respect in which he was held by the people of his community and district are shown by the number of times they elected and reelected him to positions of the highest honor and responsibility.

FRANCIS CULKIN was a hard fighter, an able orator, and a conscientious public servant. He was an authority on waterway transportation and one of its ablest advocates in the House of Representatives. He was likewise exceptionally well versed and informed on the questions affecting agriculture. He represented a district in which dairying was a most important industry and the dairy farmer had no more ardent and outspoken advocate in the Halls of Congress than he. Mr. CULKIN's death is a great loss to this Congress and the Nation. His place will be hard to fill.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. RAYMOND S. SPRINGER

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. JOHN WILLIAM DITTER, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, as we meet today to pay our respect to the memory of our colleagues who have departed, we solemnly realize the deep personal loss that we have sustained in the tragic death of our beloved and esteemed friend, J. WILLIAM DITTER, of Pennsylvania. Throughout the years he has ever been at his post of duty, and it is my privilege to express the very high esteem and the warm affection in which he was held by all Members of Congress. He was my personal friend, and it is with that treasured memory of him that I speak these few words in eulogy of his attainments. He was an outstanding American, a good citizen, a great statesman, and a loyal and sincere friend.

WILL DITTER, as we affectionately called him, was a great American. He was born and reared in the great State of Pennsylvania, and he loved that Commonwealth and her people with the ardor and affection of an illustrious son. In that environment and among the people he loved he came to the bar, and he became one of the great lawyers in his State. His practice was extensive and in his chosen profession he was unusually successful. His people finally called upon him to render a greater service, and he was sent by them as their Representative in the Congress of the United States. During his service in the Congress, as the years passed by he grew in stature and in his attainments. He became one of the outstanding legislators in Congress and his service on the Naval Affairs Committee in the House was outstanding. He was sound in thought and deliberate in action. He was kindly and he was brave.

When I became acquainted with my friend—and that was at the beginning of my service as a Member of the House of Representatives in the Seventy-sixth Congress—I then recognized in him those rare and outstanding qualities which appeal to all of us. He was a man of the highest character and his sincerity of purpose and his honesty was never doubted. I knew him when he faced the stress of turmoil and anguish respecting our own country, and its future. I knew him when his constant concern was for the welfare and progress of all the people in our land. I knew him when he was pleading for our form of government and for the Constitution. He loved our form of government and he revered the American way of life. He was a true patriot. He was a constant American.

When great men pass across the stage of life and disappear, their acts and deeds will continue after them—the precedent has been established which others will follow. So with our friend. He has fixed the standard. He has touched into activity forces which, influencing still others, will move onward forever. I will long cherish the memory of my friend because of his unswerving Americanism, for his constant struggle for the people he loved, and for his sterling character and honesty. With these ideals he lived; with these same ideals before him, he died. Thus this brilliant man passed from the stage of life, leaving the rest of us to take up his labors where he left them.

WILL DITTER needs no eulogy today. His life and his living of it stand before us in beauty and in splendor—a beacon light for others. In bidding my fond—my last—farewell to him, I speak those words which were uttered at the passing of a great hero in the years gone by—"This was a man!"

HON. WINIFRED C. STANLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. FRANCIS DUGAN CULKIN, late a Representative from the State of New York

Miss STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in paying tribute to the memory of Representative FRANCIS CULKIN. With his death, the New York delegation lost an able and distinguished Member, and the House of Representatives has been deprived of the services of a statesman of high intelligence and idealism.

Mr. CULKIN'S earnestness of manner, his profound knowledge of legislation, and his diligence in working for the welfare of his constituents impressed me very much. His personal kindness in welcoming me as a new Member of our State delegation and in offering his assistance will always be remembered. His countless good deeds will live long in our memories. His intense interest in the development of New York State, and his fine work on the important Rivers and Harbors Committee were unusual.

This is not loss, life is a promise;
At the end of the lane and fulfillment, we rise again.

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. JAMES ALOYSIUS O'LEARY, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Miss STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, it was with sorrow that I heard of the death of our colleague, Representative JAMES A. O'LEARY. Although I did not enjoy the privilege of knowing him well, my association with him was of the most pleasant kind. He worked hard in the interests of his constituents and yet was never too busy to help his colleagues with assistance or advice.

Our New York delegation will suffer through his loss. To his family I send my most sincere sympathy.

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. JOHN WILLIAM DITTER, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, the tragic death of Hon. J. WILLIAM DITTER, on November 21, 1943, was a great shock to his colleagues in the House of Representatives. To me, it meant the passing of a dear friend and a man for whom I entertained a very high admiration and much affection.

As an able, hard-working member of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. DITTER came to exercise great influence on both sides of the aisle. His eloquence, his forcefulness in debate, and his skill in presenting legislative matters, made him a formidable antagonist on the floor. Yet, so kindly and generous was his nature that no matter how heated the debate became, Mr. DITTER'S opponents remained his friends. He kept their respect and confidence.

Mr. DITTER'S place will be difficult to fill. He will be missed by all of us. He was an able legislator, a great leader, and a sincere friend.

William Howard Wheat

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. WILLIAM W. BLACKNEY

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. WILLIAM HOWARD WHEAT, late a Representative from the State of Illinois

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, the 30th of May, by custom and by legislation, has been designated as Memorial Day, at which time we pay tribute to our departed dead, whose services to their country have endeared their memories to State and Nation. It is a fine tribute for a nation to pause in the midst of a great global war to pay tribute to these departed heroes because it shows that the heart of the Nation is fundamentally sound and appreciative.

Likewise, Congress, by long custom, has established a memorial day, on which occasion tribute is paid to those departed Members, who have endeared themselves not only to the Members of the House and Senate, but to their constituents at home.

Since the last memorial roll call, 3 Senators and 10 Representatives have departed this life, leaving their memories embedded in the hearts of their surviving colleagues.

On this memorial-service day, I wish to pay tribute to the memory of my former colleague and friend, WILLIAM HOWARD WHEAT, who for 5 years represented the Nineteenth District of the State of Illinois faithfully and well. Since the first day that I met my departed colleague, I felt the impress of his splendid character and outstanding virtues.

WILLIAM HOWARD WHEAT became a member of the great Naval Affairs Committee, and it was there in our committee that I learned to appreciate fully his great integrity as a public servant, his fine views of public affairs, and his zeal toward the successful termination of the great war in which we are now engaged.

Our Nation needs more men of the character of WILLIAM HOWARD WHEAT, and I think the poet had men of his type in mind when he said:

Men whom the lust of office does not kill,
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy,
Men who possess a conscience and a will,
Men who have honor, men who will not lie—
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog.

In the hectic days of Congress, WILLIAM HOWARD WHEAT remained calm and thoughtful. When others were excited, he was well poised and deliberative. He was modest in demeanor, earnest in action, faithful to his trust; and when the shades of eternal night descended upon him, it could be said of him, as of the Apostle Paul, "He has fought a good fight, he has finished his course, he has kep the faith."

Francis Thompson, in one of his beautiful poems, said:

For there is nothing lives but something dies,
And there is nothing dies but something lives.
Till skies be fugitives,
Till time, the hidden root of change, updrives,
Are birth and death inseparable on earth,
For they are twain yet one, and death is birth.

WILLIAM HOWARD WHEAT was an outstanding Congressman during his period of service, a great believer in constitutional government, a preserver of those fine institutions which have made America great, and a faithful, conscientious, and efficient public servant.

Tennyson, in that beautiful poem of his, says:

And the stately ships sail on
To the haven under the hill,
But, oh! for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still.

And while we no longer hear the voice of our departed colleague, no longer grasp his friendly hand, yet his memory will linger with us through the years to come, like the aroma of beautiful flowers.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS
OF
HON. J. EDGAR CHENOWETH
OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. LAWRENCE LEWIS, late a Representative from the State of Colorado

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my colleagues today in paying tribute to the memory of LAWRENCE LEWIS, who at the time of his death last December was dean of the Colorado delegation in this House.

Soon after my election to Congress in the fall of 1940 I received a letter from LAWRENCE LEWIS which made a deep impression upon me. He gave me important information on the organization of the House and offered his services, as well as those of his staff, in helping me get settled. The day I arrived in Washington he called at my office to extend a personal welcome and to give me valuable suggestions and advice.

In attempting to find words with which to appraise our deceased colleague, there are two that stand out conspicuously. LAWRENCE LEWIS was kind and gentle. I never heard of him having any enemies. I cannot conceive that he ever offended anyone. He was always so gracious and courteous to all.

He was faithful to his task. During the 11 years that he served in this body LAWRENCE LEWIS had but one purpose—that was to represent the First Congressional District of Colorado to the very best of his ability. He considered public office a sacred trust. Because of his devotion to his official duties he worked long hours and sacrificed his health.

By his passing Colorado lost a most efficient public servant. His large majorities in Denver testified to the public esteem in which he was held. The Nation suffered a heavy loss and all who knew him lost a true friend. I think the following lines accurately portray the life of LAWRENCE LEWIS:

Statesman, yet friend to truth; of soul sincere,
In action faithful, and in honor clear;
Who broke no promise, served no private end,
Who gained no title, and who lost no friend.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS
OF
HON. LUTHER A. JOHNSON
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. JOHN WILLIAM DITTER, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, soon after he became a Member of the House, I became acquainted with J. WILLIAM DITTER, of the Seventeenth Pennsylvania District, and as the years passed and we came to know each other better, we became good friends.

We belonged to different political parties, and in debate and in the votes in the House, he was what might be termed a partisan, but he was conscientious in his views and his votes.

He was one of the best debaters in the House, and at times seemed stern and severe in what he said, but he had a warm heart, he loved his fellow man, and his personality was such as to draw men unto him. He was a man of sympathy. I recall that when I lost my daughter, about 6 weeks before his death, he wrote me a beautiful letter of condolence, and followed it with a personal conversation, and I shall never forget the tears in his eyes as he told me, from the depths of his heart, how much he sympathized with me.

When news of his sudden and tragic death reached the House, there was genuine grief and mourning of the entire Membership on both sides of the aisle.

He was a real American, a loyal friend, and an able legislator, and his death removed one of the most outstanding and ablest Members of the House.

Francis Dugan Culkin

MEMORIAL ADDRESS
OF
HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. FRANCIS DUGAN CULKIN, late a Representative from the State of New York.

"All human things are subject to decay
And, when fate summons, monarchs must obey."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, when the names of the members of the Select Committee to Investigate Real Estate Bondholders' Reorganizations were announced, I, as chairman of that committee, and the remainder of the members of the committee were very much pleased that Mr. CULKIN had been named a member.

I had very much admired this modest, many-sided gentleman ever since he came to the House November 6, 1928.

Mr. CULKIN was very conservative, of a judicial temperament, and never allowed partisanship to affect the deliberations of our select committee. He could with singular success separate a subject from the cross winds of personalities and the down-drifts of partisanship.

The qualities of this good man are shown by his simple autobiography in the Congressional Directory, which says:

FRANCIS E. CULKIN, Oswego, N. Y.; Republican; lawyer; married.

He very much shunned publicity, knowing that the great use of life is to spend it for something that outlasts it.

A selfish, unilateral aspiration never entered his thought.

The life and service of our honorable and departed friend will ever mark him as a useful, good, sefless man. He was active in many walks of life. He had many and varied interests. He honored all activity and endeavor in which he engaged with the highest character and ability.

As a leader of men he was commanding and strong; as a lawyer he was profound in the knowledge and practice of his profession; as a statesman his talents and genius were of the highest order. In his friendships and associations he was always courageous, magnanimous, and tender. His accomplishments in all lines will always stand cut as an inspiring example for the ambitious who follow.

It is fortunate that our country has and has had men of such sterling qualities these uncertain days.

Verily this honorable deceased was a great rock in a weary world.

Ulysses Samuel Guyer

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. FRANK CARLSON

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER, late a Representative from the State of Kansas

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of the passing away of Hon. U. S. GUYER on June 5, 1943, I expressed here in the House of Representatives the loss and bereavement of all of us who were associated with him in any way.

Today, in memoriam, we again pay tribute to the departed one. In the passing of ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER the House of Representatives lost one of its outstanding Members. For 20 years he represented the Second Congressional District of Kansas, and he represented it well.

My service in the House began in the Seventy-fourth Congress, and during the years of our legislative association I learned to love him and to hold his opinions in highest regard. As his office was only a few doors from mine, often did we counsel and visit together.

He was a man of wide information and of unquestioned integrity He was a faithful attendant of the sessions of the House, and only upon rare occasions was he absent from his accustomed place. He was strong in the belief that the principles of government advocated by the political party with which he was identified were most likely to advance the prosperity and happiness of the people, and he sturdily advocated his beliefs. His views were not altered by shifting majorities or changes of political sentiment. He stood as firm and as unyielding as the oak, and I am one of those who believe that the country is better served by one who is fearless and honest in his convictions.

As a young man Mr. GUYER followed the profession of teaching and was principal of the St. John High School and superintendent of the city schools of St. Johns for several years. These were among his most enjoyable years, and his love for the community was so great that he selected St. Johns as his final resting place. When he gave up teaching he took up the practice of law in Kansas City, Kans., where he enjoyed a lucrative practice for many years. In recognition of his ability and sterling character the citizens of Kansas City elected him mayor, and he also served as judge of the first division city court of Kansas City.

Judge GUYER, as his friends were wont to call him, was a modest and lovable man. I knew him before I came to Congress, but during the years I worked with him in the House, I came to know him intimately and to cherish his friendship. His services to the country were most valuable. He commanded the respect of all men, the good will of opponents, the deep affection of his friends. He will linger long in the memory of many men who respected, admired, and loved him.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. THOMAS D. WINTER

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life. character, and public service of Hon ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER, late a Representative from the State of Kansas

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Speaker, we meet today to pay tribute to our colleagues who, during the past year, have passed on to greater reward. Among this group is the name of the Honorable U. S. GUYER, Representative from the Second Congressional District of Kansas.

Judge GUYER was the dean of the Kansas delegation in the House of Representatives. In his passing Kansas and the Nation lost a valuable servant. His life has been one of devotion and service, not only to the people of his Congressional District and the State of Kansas, but to the entire Nation as well. He was a scholar, a jurist, a statesman and, above all, a Christian gentleman, and he exemplified in his daily life those Christian virtues. The lovable character that he possessed endeared him to the hearts of his many friends.

It was my privilege and good fortune to have known him intimately and today I pay my tribute of love and respect to this fine character who guided me with a fatherly hand and gave me the benefit of his broad experience in my first term as a Member of the House of Representatives.

Lawrence Lewis

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. LAWRENCE LEWIS, late a Representative from the State of Colorado

"He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it was my good fortune to meet Mr. LEWIS the day he entered the House, because some of my friends in Denver whom I had not seen in many years chose Mr. LEWIS as an obliging medium to convey their felicitations to me.

Before our honorable dead came here I had read of his inordinate success in the legal field, and, after conversing with him a few times, I readily understood why he stood so well in his profession and the esteem of his constituents. As I remember, the late Mr. Edward T. Taylor had mentioned to me Mr. LEWIS' good work for the great State of Colorado before Mr. LEWIS joined us.

While Mr. LEWIS possessed a very good educational background, he could not have risen to a big place in public life and ascended to the heights of legal fame he attained without his sterling personal virtues.

His constituents loved him, as is evinced by their five times electing him a Member of this honorable body. Their allegiance to him was reciprocal. In their esteem no man had greater rectitude or virtue.

His leadership was undoubted and supreme. When he left his district to come here, the well wishes of every constituent came with him. They gloried in his success. He maintained the same attitude toward them. Never did he waver in loyalty.

Mr. LEWIS well understood and scrupulously followed the highest and most exacting principles of Americanism; he was well grounded in the science of good government, whose tenets he so luminously expounded. He rose to high place on the strength of moral greatness and manifold genius. He was a modest and conservative man, a complete stranger to megalomania, adventurism and quixotism. His high talents were never soiled by ignoble use.

When there was a vacancy on the Committee on Rules and it seemed that the far West had a just claim to the position, some leaders of the House discussed filling the vacancy with me and I unhesitatingly agreed with them that Mr. LEWIS would make a worthy member of our committee. And when he became a Member of that committee he did not disappoint the high expectation of everybody, but labored zealously and intelligently for the general weal of the country.

It will be remembered that our late friend was, due to illness, much absent from his duties here for about a year next preceding his passing. He regretted this very much. He attended one or two meetings of the Committee on Rules about 2 months before he passed, and it was my good fortune to talk to him somewhat at length after one of our meetings. I soon saw that the same will to achieve was with him, but the ailing body would not support that will. He disliked the thought of retiring to quietude, but he had an approving conscience. While he did not say so in actual words, yet he implied that he knew that "Death plucks my ear and says, Live—I am coming."

And then the day of grief came. The sunshine of rest had settled on his brow. "And light as broad noon's light was cast on the settled face of death." The race and the duty and the honor in the life of our late friend were finished.

LAWRENCE LEWIS is gone from this earth, but he is not gone from my heart. And I can still be comforted by the primary tenet of his faith. I can still believe, as he did, that deep within humankind there is an ancient nobility which in the end must emerge—tarnished, perhaps, but triumphant—from the darkness and anxiety of the years we now live.

Leonard William Schuetz

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. LUTHER A. JOHNSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. LEONARD WILLIAM SCHUETZ, late a Representative from the State of Illinois.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I was deeply grieved when I learned that my colleague, Hon. LEONARD W. SCHUETZ of Chicago, had passed away.

During the 11 years that he served as a Member of the House from the Seventh Congressional District of Illinois, I learned to know him and to have a very high regard for him, and he was my good friend.

No member of the House was more regular in his attendance upon its sessions, and he paid close attention to all legislation considered, and kept himself well informed, and his votes always reflected his mature judgment, for what he believed to be right and best for his country.

During the dark days just before the present war began, when many members were failing to follow the foreign policy of our Government, he always voted for those measures designed to protect our country and to prepare it for the inevitable conflict, and his record of loyalty to his country was one hundred percent right.

He was quiet and unostentatious, seldom spoke, but he contributed much in shaping and moulding legislation which was enacted during his service here.

I shall miss him as a friend, his District and the Nation will miss him as an able, wise and safe legislator and one who rendered his country a great service in one of the most critical periods of our history.

John William Ditter

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. WINIFRED C. STANLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life and character, and public service of Hon. JOHN WILLIAM DITTER, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania

Miss STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, when events of a happy nature transpire, words flow smoothly and easily from the lips of one who would refer to them. But when one is faced with great sorrow, words become almost obstacles, halting that person who would express the sadness brought about by death.

It is thus impossible to express adequately the keen sorrow with which I heard the news of Representative WILLIAM DITTER's death. As a new Member of the Seventy-eighth Congress, I was privileged to know him only for a comparatively short time. During these few months, however, my admiration and respect for Mr. DITTER's great intelligence, his unusual ability as a speaker, and his skill as a lawyer increased daily.

Even more important than his intellectual brilliance was his infinite capacity for kindness, tolerance, and understanding. Representative DITTER was always just as willing to talk over legislative matters with a new, unimportant Member as he was to discuss legislation with one of the congressional leaders.

Three or four days before his tragic passing, I introduced to him a young man from Buffalo, N. Y., who was about to begin service in the United States Navy. In wishing him good fortune, Mr. DITTER expressed his own love for our country so eloquently that I will never forget his words, nor will the boy to whom he give such timely inspiration.

There will never be elected to Congress a better Representative or a greater American than WILLIAM DITTER. Everyone will miss his splendid service as a legislator and his many kindnesses as a friend.

It has been well said that no one is entirely gone who is remembered by his friends. The memory of kind, lovable, superbly talented Representative WILLIAM DITTER will live long in the hearts of all of us.

Leonard William Schuetz

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. A. WILLIS ROBERTSON

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. LEONARD WILLIAM SCHUETZ, late a Representative from the State of Illinois

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, on February 13, 1944, I was shocked and distressed to learn of the sudden and wholly unexpected death of my friend LEONARD W. SCHUETZ, of Chicago. I met him for the first time when the Seventy-third Congress convened. The acquaintanceship then commenced soon ripened into a warm friendship; and when a vacancy occurred last year on our Select Committee on Conservation of Wildlife Resources, knowing of the interest of Mr. SCHUETZ in the out of doors and in hunting and fishing, I requested Speaker RAYBURN to assign him to my Conservation Committee, which was done. He became an interested and valuable member of our committee, and his fellow committee members and I mourn his passing.

LEONARD SCHUETZ was a businessman in politics, quiet, thoughtful, efficient, valuable in committee work, but on the floor preferring for others to do the speaking and to seek the limelight. Much of his life was spent as an executive for Swift & Co. In 1923, he left Swift & Co. to form a corporation called the Schuetz Construction Co., of which he was president up to the time of his death. As an employee of Swift & Co., and later in the construction business, he accumulated a substantial personal fortune, most of which was invested in bank stocks. When the banks in which he had invested his life savings failed, and he not only lost his investment but was required to make future payments under the Stockholders' Liability Act, he never complained nor did he permit his financial reverses to embitter him. He was scrupulously honest himself and the last to suspect dishonesty in others. He was true and loyal to his friends and received friendship in return. The best evidence of that is to be found in the fact that while on a vacation in Florida in 1930, with no thought of politics in his mind, his friends circulated in his behalf a petition for him to become the Democratic candidate from his congressional district. He was elected a Member of the Seventy-second Congress and each succeeding Congress, including the Seventy-eighth, his major committee assignment being that of naval affairs, in the work of which he took a great interest. But his greatest interest was in a small summer home on a beautiful lake in Wisconsin in a village called Nippersink located about 70 miles from Chicago. Every available week end he would spend at this retreat, fishing in the nearby lake, and in the spring and summer months raising flowers and garden vegetables. Here he could find the peace and quiet he so loved; here he could play on his piano his favorite music; here he could commune with nature and refresh his spirit. Some day I hope to have the privilege of visiting his last resting place in St. Adalberts Cemetery at Niles, Ill., which adjoins Chicago. It was a pleasure to have served for nearly 12 years with a man like LEONARD SCHUETZ. I valued his friendship; I mourn his loss.

Ulysses Samuel Guyer

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. RAYMOND S. SPRINGER

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER, late a Representative from the State of Kansas

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, with a deep sense of the great personal loss that we have sustained, I rise to add my humble tribute to the life, character, and achievements of my warm and devoted friend, the late ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER, of Kansas. I express my deep gratitude for this high privilege of expressing by testimony the very high esteem and the deep and abiding affection with which our colleague of former days was held by the Members of the House of Representatives, and with that treasured memory I speak these few chosen words of my colleague. May I say that Judge GUYER, as we affectionately called him, was a good citizen, an outstanding American patriot, an outstanding statesman, and a fine and loyal friend.

Representative GUYER was born in Indiana. Later, with his parents, he went to Kansas where he grew into manhood; there he attended the public schools, and there he met and knew the people; he loved the people of his great State, and there he became a teacher, a lawyer, the mayor of his great city and later the people sent him as their representative in the National Halls of Congress.

I first met him, when I came to Congress, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, in the House. In our work on that committee we became fast friends. Quite soon I recognized in him those rare qualities which especially appeal to us; he was a man of high character, whose honesty and sincerity of purpose was never doubted. I knew him in those intimacies of a favored friend, in which those closer contacts are forever reserved for but a few, and I knew him in the stress of turmoil and anguish when the constant concern was that our country survive, and that our people go forward as a free and enlightened race. His constant endeavor was to aid all of the people in this Nation; he loved our form of government; he was a true patriot.

Great men live after they make their exit from the stage of life. Their acts and deeds establish a precedent which others follow. I will long cherish the memory of Judge GUYER—my friend—for his unswerving Americanism, for his unabated struggle for the people he loved, and for his sterling character. With these ideals he lived—and with them he died. Thus the brilliant career of a brilliant man was terminated.

He needs no encomium. His life and his living of it stand before us as a beacon light for honor and for good. I bid my final farewell to him—my friend—and we are assured—

Behind the dim unknown
Standeth God, within the shadow,
Keeping watch above His own!

William Howard Wheat

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. LEO E. ALLEN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. WILLIAM HOWARD WHEAT, late a Representative from the State of Illinois

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in the passing of WILLIAM HOWARD WHEAT this House lost one who was an outstanding Representative of that quality of citizenship of which his people are so justly proud.

Born in Missouri of God-serving parents, he, in common with the average American boy, attended public school, college, and business college. He settled in Rantoul, Ill., where he married. He became a successful farmer and banker. He was elected to the Seventy-sixth, Seventy-seventh, and was serving in the Seventy-eighth Congress when he passed away.

I feel that all who here knew him share with me difficulty in expressing our real depth of sorrow and our profound regret.

Unassuming, caring little for the spotlight, yet quietly and effectively tireless in his efforts in behalf of his constituents and his country, he was of the mold that is at once great and humble.

His memory will remain a precious heritage to those of us who have been privileged to know him and to serve with him, and he will stand as an example to all who may succeed him.

His clear, intelligent vision, spotless character, calm courage, steadfast devotion to principle, forgetfulness of self, all served as a source of strength to those closely associated with him. His forgetfulness of self was manifested in the fact that though for weeks in ill health, he insisted upon carrying on in the interest of his country and the splendid people he had come here to serve.

BILL WHEAT, as we affectionately called him, moved with measured strength to the sanest end; worked with perfect poise to the surest point; held a glorifying faith in enduring things; was honest without getting excited about it; patriotic without bragging about it. A true American. A true friend. A true man.

Mr. Speaker, there is a delicacy which forbids a too great intrusion upon the sacred circle of a family sorrow, but perhaps it may be a comfort to those he loved, in the assurance that in his passing he left an indelible impress upon all who were privileged to know him and serve with him. To those near and dear to him, all of us here express the hope that the God of consolation may visit them with the comfort that garrisons the heart against the devastating effect of pain and sorrow, and that in time they may come to feel and know that in his life he typified the most sacred meaning of the soul in life's devotion. With this realization may there come a peace that no black cloud of today's sorrow may obscure, and no lonely threat of tomorrow defeat.

Frederick Van Nuys

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. RAYMOND S. SPRINGER

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. FREDERICK VAN NUYS, late a Senator from the State of Indiana

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, it is with a deep sense of a great personal loss that I rise to express my humble tribute to the life and character of my devoted friend, the late Senator FREDERICK VAN NUYS, of Indiana. It was my happy privilege to have known him throughout his lifetime, and it is a high privilege to bear witness today to the very high esteem and the deep and abiding affection with which our colleague was ever held by all who knew him, and with that treasured memory I speak these few words of my warm friend who was a good citizen, a great patriot, a constant humanitarian, and an outstanding statesman.

Senator VAN NUYS was native of Indiana. He was born in the township in which I spent the formative period of my life; there he received his early education, and there he came to know the people and there he enjoyed the pleasantries of youth. The ambitions of his life were formed there. Later, when he, with his good father, Dr. Van Nuys, and his family, moved into a larger community—they going to Anderson, Ind.—he entered the practice of the law, after completing his education, and there he met the privations and hardships incident to the early practice of his chosen profession. He became deep-rooted in his great affection for all those about him. The people of his State soon learned that he was a staunch and loyal friend in whom was reposed the choicest ideals of life. He was elected to the office of prosecuting attorney, in which office he served with distinction; he was later selected to the post as United States District Attorney, for the District of Indiana, in which office he discharged his duties with outstanding ability; he then came to the United States Senate, by the vote of the people in his native State, and in that high office he exemplified the finer principles of true statesmanship; he was a patriot; he was a stalwart American.

Throughout the years I have known my fine friend, Senator VAN NUYS. In our early association, in the law, I recognized in him those rare qualities which directly appeal to men. I knew him in the intimacies of those very close contacts which are forever reserved by each one of us for but a few. I knew him in the stress and turmoil of contested litigation, and in the multitudinous questions and worries incident to the deliberation on weighty problems of state; I knew him, too, in the solemn meditations of sadness—when the heart bleeds and the somber voice pleads for rest and solace; I knew him when he voiced the prophecy of his mediations and sound logic respecting the future of his country—the land he loved and the form of government he professed with unerring devotion. He was gentle and he was brave. Thus I knew my fine friend in the days gone by.

My colleague, whose memory I will long cherish, lived as he died—and he died as he lived—with the weight of the livid problems of the people before him. He continued with his duties to the very end. He was unafraid. He cautiously stole away from his labors, going to his home where he could be alone with God, and there he wrapped the draperies of his couch about him and laid down as if to peaceful, happy dreams.

Thus the life work of my friend was ended. The brilliant career of a brilliant man was thus terminated. But the fruit of his labors will continue throughout the coming ages.

FREDERICK VAN NUYS needs no encomium. His life and his living of it stand before us in beauty and in splendor. As my farewell tribute to him—my friend—I give in the words spoken of a great hero—in the days gone by—"This was a man."

Our Departed Colleagues

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. WILLIAM LEMKE

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, we are met here today to honor the memory of our departed colleagues and friends—to listen to the roll call of those who have been taken from our midst. It has been the good fortune of each of us to know some of these Members intimately—our misfortune to know others not so intimately. We all know that they all strove to make their State and Nation a better place to live in; to make this a better world for their having been.

We know that they were but human—part of us. They did not claim to be infallible. They knew that human wisdom was limited. They strove with the light they had in a war-mad world. They, too, hoped for a just and permanent peace. They strove for perfection knowing that that goal could not be reached—but approached.

In honoring these dead we honor ourselves. We honor them not as partisans but as colleagues and fellow citizens of a great Nation. Partisanship ends at the grave. All earthly strife and difference of opinion comes to an end at the tomb. When the line that divides life and death has been passed, strife ends and there is perfect and permanent peace.

Let us hope that the spirits of our departed friends are present with us here today. Let us hope that they will guide us to ever higher ideals not only here on the floor of this House, but throughout the Nation and throughout the civilized world.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. JAMES M. FITZPATRICK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. JAMES ALOYSIUS O'LEARY, late a Representative from the State of New York

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, once again death has stilled the hand and mind of one of our most beloved members of the New York delegation, my warm friend and colleague, JAMES A. O'LEARY, affectionately known to his legion of friends as Jim.

I had the pleasure of meeting JIM O'LEARY when he first became a Member of this House. During many years of association with him in this Chamber I found him to be a sincere and honest legislator, conscientious and untiring in his efforts here. On his work here in Congress I need not dwell. We are all familiar with his fine grasp of legislative procedure and his ever constant desire to serve his constituents. JIM O'LEARY always gave the best that was in him to the problems of his people and his country. I am sure that every Member of this body who served with him held for Jim an affectionate regard, and appraised him as a man of outstanding ability, integrity, and patriotism.

JIM O'LEARY will be greatly missed by the Members of this Chamber as well as his neighbors and friends whose interest he always had at heart.

When he died not only did his family suffer a great loss, but his community, the people of his district, and the State of New York lost a faithful and sincere public servant. I have lost one of my best friends and colleagues.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. ROBERT F. ROCKWELL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. LAWRENCE LEWIS, late a Representative from the State of Colorado

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, on this occasion of our meeting together to pay final tribute to our colleagues who have been taken from us during the past year, it is my wish to speak of my good friend, the late Representative LAWRENCE LEWIS, who represented the First District of Colorado.

LAWRENCE LEWIS served in the Congress of the United States from January 1933 until the time of his death in December 1943. He was an able lawyer and industrious public servant, having served as legal adviser to the adjutant general of Colorado and on the civil-service commission of that State. His experience in business and newspaper work helped to make him a most capable and efficient Representative.

Men by their achievements may gain a place in the annals of history. However, it is by their character and consideration of their fellow men that their memory is lovingly revered in the hearts of all who knew them. LAWRENCE LEWIS did not seek fame—he preferred to accomplish what he thought was best for his people in a modest manner; he sought no reward—except the personal satisfaction of a job well done; he sought no acclaim; he directed his energies in service.

His gentle and kindly demeanor, his innate courtesy, his honesty in his dealings, his great ability, and high intelligence all contributed to make him the very fine gentleman we respected and loved. Not only his native State of Colorado has felt his loss but those of us here who were privileged to work with him and know him well miss him and the assistance and cooperation he cheerfully gave when called upon. He accomplished much for the people he represented, and he had the interests of his country at heart.

A conscientious statesman and true friend has left us. The example he set—the pattern of unselfish endeavor which he created, remain for us to emulate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS LUDLOW

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by Hon. SAMUEL D. JACKSON, of Indiana, on the life, character, and public service of Hon. FREDERICK VAN NUYS, late a Senator from the State of Indiana:

With the passing of Senator FREDERICK VAN NUYS, the Nation lost one of its most colorful characters and Indiana one of its greatest Senators.

Senator VAN NUYS at the time of his passing, January 25, 1944, was the senior Senator from Indiana and chairman of the Judiciary Committee and one of the Senate's most influential and beloved Members.

FRED VAN NUYS was long known in Indiana as an exponent of the Democratic Party. He had been State senator, prosecuting attorney, county chairman, State chairman, United States district attorney, and was finishing his second term in the Senate at the time of his unfortunate demise. He was born at Falmouth, Rush County, Ind., and grew up in the smaller towns and cities of central Indiana. His father was a country doctor and the Senator was fond of telling how, when a boy, he used to ride with his father over the country roads, and delighted to relate that his father used to say that all the medicine people needed to keep well was plenty of quinine and voting the straight Democratic ticket.

He was educated at Lebanon and attended Earlham College at Richmond, where he was graduated in 1898. He later attended Indiana University Law School and was admitted to the bar at Shelbyville in 1900. His political career began at Anderson several years later with his election as Madison County prosecutor. He also served as chairman of the county Democratic committee. He was a member of the State senate from Madison County in the 1913 and 1915 sessions, and became president pro tem of the senate in 1915. The Indiana Democratic State Central Committee elected him as State chairman in 1918, and he was named United States district attorney at Indianapolis by President Woodrow Wilson at the completion of that campaign. FRED VAN NUYS was a lawyer at Lebanon and at Indianapolis, practicing in the best tradition of his profession. At one time he was a partner of Samuel M. Ralston, former Governor and Senator. The stocky, forceful Senator VAN NUYS had long been connected with the liquor problems of America, having won election in 1932 as an advocate of repeal of the eighteenth amendment and modification of the Volstead Act. At the time of his death he was conducting a Senate investigation of the current liquor shortage. Throughout his career he retained his interest in State politics, acting as keynote speaker at a number of State conventions and as a member of the State Democratic executive committee in several campaigns.

Senator VAN NUYS' death was mourned by Democrats throughout Indiana. Outstanding members of both parties paid high tribute to his service. All Indiana had faith in his fidelity to duty, his unswerving patriotism, and his personal independence.

Senator and Mrs. Van Nuys, the former Marie Krug, had one son, a lieutenant in the Naval Air Corps serving overseas.

Senator VAN NUYS was buried at Anderson, Ind., after appropriate and beautiful services in Indianapolis conducted by the Reverend Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate, and attended by a large delegation of Senators and Congressmen and a host of loyal friends.

The Fort Wayne Journal Gazette, during the years of Senator VAN NUYS' most active participation in Democratic politics, was published by two of his most intimate friends, Edward G. Hoffman, former Secretary of the Democratic National Committee, and Lew G. Ellingham, former secretary of state. It is now published by William A. Kunkel, Jr., and its editor is Frank Roberts. Both these men were great admirers of Senator VAN NUYS, and following is the editorial run in the Fort Wayne Journal Gazette a few days after his passing. It speaks the sentiment of all of Indiana:

"SENATOR FREDERICK VAN NUYS

"FREDERICK VAN NUYS, senior United States Senator from Indiana, whose death occurred early Tuesday morning in Washington while he slept, was one of the Hoosier State's most distinguished sons.

"His ancestry, his ability, his education, his character, and his personality, all combined to fit him for the high role he was to play in the affairs of State and Nation.

"Senator VAN NUYS was a descendant of Johannes Van Nuys, a Dutch immigrant who came to America and settled on Long Island nearly 300 years ago. His father, David H. Van Nuys, was a country doctor who was widely known and respected.

"The Senator was a graduate of Earlham College and Indiana law school. From his youth he was a profound student and a leader.

"His first public office was prosecutor of Madison County, which he held for 6 years. He was elected to the Indiana State Senate in 1913 and became the Democratic leader. In 1917-18 he served as Democratic State chairman and was then named United States district attorney for Indiana by President Woodrow Wilson. As a legislator he displayed great common sense and progressive tendencies, as a district attorney he was able and fearless.

"In the meantime he had moved his residence from Anderson to Indianapolis and became a member of the law firm of which the late Gov. Samuel M. Ralston was the senior partner. He was one of the outstanding lawyers at the Indiana bar.

"Soon the former district attorney became a legend in Democratic politics in the State. He was regarded as one of the most authentic spokesmen of the party, serving as keynote speaker at State conventions and helping to write party platforms. He was often importuned to seek elective public office, but refrained from doing so until 1932. In that year when the Nation faced the never-to-be-forgotten internal crisis growing out of the depression, he offered himself as a candidate for United States Senator and was elected over the veteran Republican James E. Watson, by a plurality of landslide proportions.

"His ability was quickly recognized in the Senate when he was named chairman of the powerful Judiciary Committee. He was also a member of the important Foreign Relations Committee. Senator VAN NUYS was re-elected to the Senate in 1938.

"His career in the Senate was marked by independence. His guides on all legislative matters were his own conscience and his own judgment. He never hesitated to join with the opposition because he feared it might affect his popularity. He was never a mere yes-sayer to President Roosevelt. He was a firm believer in the principles of Jeffersonian democracy, and they were his chart and compass throughout his politica. life.

"He was, as we have said, a profound student. His knowledge of law and his understanding of human nature were matched by few of his colleagues in the world's greatest law-making body. He was forceful in debate and wise in his counsel in committee rooms.

"No one ever questioned his integrity or his patriotism, for honesty of purpose and love of country were the ruling forces of his heart and mind.

"In personal relationships he was kind and courteous. His many admirable qualities brought him respect, admiration, and love.

"Senator FREDERICK VAN NUYS fought a good fight. His life is crowned with many years of notable public service. Citizens of Indiana regardless of party affiliations, are proud of him."

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. DEAN M. GILLESPIE

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. LAWRENCE LEWIS, late a Representative from the State of Colorado

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Speaker, it was not my privilege to serve in this House with LAWRENCE LEWIS, but I did have the pleasure of knowing him for over 30 years. During this time I learned to honor and respect him, first as an eminent lawyer, and for the past 12 years as a statesman of unquestioned honesty, ability, and integrity.

LAWRENCE LEWIS was a quiet, friendly gentleman of the old school. Born in St. Louis, Mo., June 22, 1879, he received his early schooling in the atmosphere of the busy, young western city of Pueblo, Colo. He attended the University of Colorado for 2 years and received his A B. and L. L. B. degrees from Harvard. He started practicing law in Denver, Colo., in 1909 and in his long and active law practice had the reputation of having never lost a case, preferring to settle matters out of court in his fine diplomatic way rather than resorting to lengthy and expensive court action.

LAWRENCE LEWIS was always ready and willing to help his fellow man with any difficult situation and did it in such a gracious manner that one would almost get the impression that he himself was the beneficiary.

On December 9, 1943, when the saddening news of the death of LAWRENCE LEWIS was flashed to the Nation, we in Denver, Colo., felt a pang of deep sorrow and regret. His passing was a distinct loss to this House and the country as a whole, as well as to the First Congressional District of Colorado, comprising his beloved Denver. Many of the Members here have spoken to me about him and always have the finest things to say about his wisdom, loyalty, and the tireless work which he performed in his duties here.

Although of different political faiths, I consider it a privilege and an honor to serve in this House as a successor to as grand and good a man as LAWRENCE LEWIS.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. C. W. (RUNT) BISHOP

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. WILLIAM HOWARD WHEAT, late a Representative from the State of Illinois

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, we pause in these troubled days to pay tribute to a beloved colleague and friend, the late WILLIAM HOWARD WHEAT, of Illinois, known to all as Bill.

Congressman WHEAT, whose home was in Rantoul, Ill., was serving his third congressional term at the time of his passing. His quiet willingness to aid and assist when within his power endeared him to all with whom he came in contact.

His memory is dear to thousands who delighted to call him a friend. He has reared by his conscientious public service an enduring monument. No greater tribute can we pay to any man than that we believe is justly due our departed colleague, when we say that he was faithful to the trust committed to him by a people whom he delighted to serve.

He was an able statesman; he loved his country and took pride in serving it, according to his convictions as to what was best for the country.

While we shall mourn his loss from our midst, our loss will be his gain. For he has gone to that Congress of Saints, where toil and strife are no more and where all is peace, happiness, and rest.

Our memory is enriched for having had the pleasure and privilege of associating and working with Bill.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. MATTHEW J. MERRITT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. JAMES ALOYSIUS O'LEARY, late a Representative from the State of New York

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, God in His wisdom has seen fit to reach out and take from our midst one of our very dear and loyal friends, a valuable asset to the House of Representatives. JIM O'LEARY was a true friend and a good American, a man who at this moment has one son giving his very best so that we can continue in this deliberation in which we are taking part this afternoon. The things that Jim stood for were pronounced by his every deed and his every action up until this present moment. His suffering was tremendous, not only his physical suffering but his mental suffering as well, having just suffered the loss of his dear wife. I am sure his son and daughters will be happy in the knowledge that he has left behind him many, many friends. We stood here no more than 2 weeks ago and uttered practically the same words in behalf of another departed colleague. But, just as often as we repeat those words, just as often are we that much more sincere in our eulogy of the passing of a great and dearly beloved friend.

JIM'S absence is a tremendous blow, not only to the constituents in his district, and to his family, but especially to his friends, among whom I am happy to know that I was numbered.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. MATTHEW J. MERRITT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. THOMAS HENRY CULLEN, late a Representative from the State of New York

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, we were born to die and we die that we may live. This is the whole philosophy of human existence. I dare say that the passing of our dear friend, TOM CULLEN, will be just that, and his memory will be eternal.

A man possessing the soul of wit, an Irish gentleman such as our dear friend, was bound to have many, many loving friends. I am very happy to think that I could be considered in that category.

Even before I had the opportunity of taking my first oath in this House 10 years ago, and upon my election, he called at my office. Being a young man, realizing that he had an abundance of knowledge and experience, I was indeed proud to know that he would suffer himself to come to my office and offer me the benefit of his experience in this great body.

Yes, his voice has been stilled, but I am sure that I speak not only for myself but for the other Members of this House and his friends when I say that his very kindness, his memory, will linger in our hearts forever.

Frederick Van Nuys

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. GEORGE W. GILLIE

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. FREDERICK VAN NUYS, late a Senator from the State of Indiana

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, on this Memorial Day, the Congress of the United States pauses to honor the memory of those Members who have gone to the Great Beyond. It is with pride that we Hoosiers pay tribute to a noble son of Indiana, Senator FREDERICK VAN NUYS. On January 25, 1944, death took Senator VAN NUYS from our midst, and the Nation lost a true American, his State a loyal and efficient representative. By his colleagues he will always be remembered as a worthy example of true statesmanship, the bulwark of constitutional government. His loyalty to principle, his devotion to duty, and his untiring efforts on behalf of those he represented are the cornerstones of a monument which will remain long in the memory of the people of Indiana.

Senator VAN NUYS was born at Falmouth, Ind., April 16, 1874, the son of Dr. David H. and Katherine Custer Van Nuys. He was graduated from Earlham College in 1898 and from the Indiana Law School in 1900, and received the degree of doctor of laws in 1930 from Earlham College. He began the practice of law at Shelbyville, Ind., in 1900. He later filled with distinction the office of prosecuting attorney, was a member of the State senate, and was appointed United States attorney for the district of Indiana. He was elected to the United States Senate in 1932 and reelected in 1938. While serving in the Senate, Senator VAN NUYS was honored with two of the most important committee assignments in that body, and served as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee and of the Judiciary Committee, of which he was chairman at the time of his death. He is survived by his wife and one son, William, who is serving his country as an officer in the United States Navy.

Senator VAN NUYS gave his best to the cause of good government, and lived, studied, and worked for the welfare of his fellow countrymen. We mourn his passing today, and we shall continue to mourn his loss as long as we cherish the principles and ideals of government he served and upheld so faithfully and so well.

There is great comfort in the realization that though men like FRED VAN NUYS be gone, their good works live on, and this great Nation of ours is an everlasting monument to their devoted and selfless efforts in the fight for the preservation and extension of liberty.

To the end of the road with a course well run, what epitaph more could say?
That he held to the faith as he journeyed through and smiled as he won his way.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. PHILIP ALLEN BENNETT, late a Representative from the State of Missouri

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, on this day we are commemorating the memory of such distinguished Members of the House of Representatives, I want to pay my respects to the late Congressman PHIL A. BENNETT, of Missouri.

Throughout his term of service in the House, Mr. BENNETT was my sincere friend. I learned to love and respect him with increasing admiration. I never knew him to cast a vote on any great issue without first consulting his conscience. His votes reflected conviction rather than political expediency.

Although his distinguished son, Congressman MARION T. BENNETT, now represents his district ably and well, his loss will long be felt in Congress. When the people choose more men like PHIL A. BENNETT our country will be sure of direct and genuine representation in Washington.

John William Ditter

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN R. MURDOCK

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Senator JAMES J. DAVIS, of Pennsylvania, on the life, character, and public service of Hon. JOHN WILLIAM DITTER, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania:

This past year has seen many of our colleagues taken from us. In both Houses of the Congress, the fell clutch of death has stilled the labors of outstanding public servants in both major parties. And these losses lay not lightly on a Nation faced with the problems of grave emergency.

The State of Pennsylvania was not spared by the invasion of death, for it yielded up one of its most beloved and gifted sons—J. WILLIAM DITTER—to that timeless conqueror of all men.

J. WILLIAM DITTER represented the Seventeenth Congressional District of Pennsylvania with an ability and sincerity known to few men. His labors were always in behalf of the best interests of this great Nation which he knew and loved. And it is indeed fitting that he met his death while in the active service of his country.

The untimely passing of BILL DITTER, in the very flower of his life, was and will be deeply mourned by all those who knew him; for with his passing, the Congress lost one of its outstanding Members, the people of Pennsylvania lost a faithful and an earnest Representative, and the Republican Party lost an ardent and a fearless standard bearer.

Representative DITTER was above all else a straightforward American citizen, a sincere and tireless servant of the American people, in whose cause and whose behalf he was always proud to labor and to serve.

The inspiring example of service and honor which was J. WILLIAM DITTER will long outlive the earthly years of a life which he willingly gave to the public service and to the progress and stability of the America which he loved.

The memory of BILL DITTER'S good name and fine deeds will live forever in these Halls and in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania which gave him to the service of America.

How the People Feel About the O. P. A.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY D. LARCADE, JR.

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 25, 1944

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am in receipt of a concurrent resolution from the Legislature of Louisiana calling upon me, and upon the other members of our delegation to "vote against any further appropriation for the continuance of the Office of Price Administration unless the Office of Price Administration fix higher ceiling prices on rough rice and strawberries."

Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that the fact that such a resolution should be enacted by the legislature of any State indicates conclusively the temper of the people in respect to the Office of Price Administration, and shows the widespread dissatisfaction and resentment of the people in regard to the high-handed and bureaucratic administration of that agency.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents are not only disappointed with the administration of O. P. A. in the rice and strawberry sections of Louisiana, but also in the entire State where there are great oil, cattle, potato, and fur industries. Notwithstanding the protests of our people, as well as those of the Members of the Senate and Congress, the O. P. A. has failed to give us any consideration in the administration of their programs in connection with the industries named. This is especially true of the oil business. Our people cannot understand why the O. P. A. is able to ignore two-thirds of the Members of Congress who represent the people, when two-thirds of the membership vote for a bill to give a small increase in price to the oil industry to save the industry as well as furnish oil which is so critically needed in the prosecution of the war.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the O. P. A. is of the opinion that the Members of Congress cannot vote against them—that they—the O. P. A.—are supreme and not the representatives of the people, and it may be that when the legislation for appropriations for the O. P. A. is presented, someone is going to get a surprise. I desire to include in these remarks a copy of the house concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 8

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Members of Congress from this State not to support any further appropriation to the Office of Price Administration, unless the Office of Price Administration fixes higher ceilings on rough rice and strawberries

Whereas the farmers of the State of Louisiana are doing all within their power to assist in the prosecution of the war against our enemies, but that the producers of rice and strawberries are handicapped by the existing ceiling prices on rough rice and strawberries: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of Louisiana (the Senate of the Legislature of Louisiana concurring), That this legislature do request and recommend to the United States Senators and Members of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States from the State of Louisiana that they vote against any further appropriation for the continuance of the Office of Price Administration, that the Office of Price Administration fix higher ceiling prices on rough rice and strawberries; be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house of representatives be, and he is hereby, directed to forward official copies of this resolution to each Senator and Representative of the State of Louisiana in the Congress of the United States.

Ulysses Samuel Guyer

MEMORIAL ADDRESS

OF

HON. ERRETT P. SCRIVNER

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

On the life, character, and public service of Hon. ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER, late a Representative from the State of Kansas

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, no person can fill the vacancy left by the death of ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER. One can but succeed him—succeed him on the floor of this House in humbl recognition of inadequacy.

In succeeding U. S. GUYER, his achievements, record, and conduct are the star upon which my course has been, and will be, guided.

At home, in Kansas City, Kans., which city he at one time served as mayor, he was affectionately known as "Judge," "Sam," or "U. S." He loved mankind, and was beloved by all who knew him. I have seen him on many occasions, as he made his way up and down our streets, stopping for a kind and pleasant word with all he met—in the shops and stores, on the corners, at the court house, with always a pleasant greeting whether it was the laborer in overalls, or the man in business. SAM GUYER was a friendly man, as you who served with him well know.

Upon my graduation from Kansas University Judge GUYER took me into his law office—and his heart—putting it all at my disposal and asking no favor in return. It was there, from him, that I first learned to really know the Constitution—to know it as a live, vital force. Thus knowing it I came to love it, and, loving it, I have determined, as Judge GUYER before me had done, to defend it to the fullest of my ability against all attackers.

As a student of history, and especially of American history, he was without peer in this body. To him every historical character was a personal friend. I am sure that upon many occasions he must have held converse and communion with Washington, Hamilton, Franklin, Madison, Lincoln.

Before the days of the microphone, I have heard Judge GUYER hold huge audiences spellbound with the power of his oratory—his mastery of diction and the music of his voice—bringing smiles and tears, joy and sadness, and deep conviction to his listeners. He was an artist with words—more than that, he was a virtuoso.

As a Christian gentleman, SAM GUYER never felt any hesitancy about rejoining his Master. His death was merely the return of the son to his Father's house.

In the passing of ULYSSES S. GUYER, Congress and the Nation lost a statesman; Kansas—though he was born in Illinois—lost a great Kansan. Mrs. Guyer lost a loving husband; all of us who knew him lost a sincere friend; and, added to that, my personal loss was that of a wise counselor and guide.

Lawrence Lewis

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN R. MURDOCK

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, May 31, 1944

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Senator EDWIN C. JOHNSON, of Colorado on the life, character, and public service of Hon. LAWRENCE LEWIS, late a Representative from the State of Colorado:

On a winter day at high noon we laid him to rest in Cincinnati beside the parents who bore him—the parents whose memory he revered and worshiped; and we said with feeling and with truth, "Well done, good and faithful servant." LAWRENCE LEWIS set a high mark indeed in public service. He thought little of his own comfort and welfare when there was a public job to do. Midnight oil was his companion and every step he took was measured with meticulous study and care lest the slightest error creep in.
